Patna — the relevant provisions whereof have been quoted in extenso by my learned brother. On the basis of those provisions, the learned Advocate-General contended — (1) that the agreement of 1899 was a mere license for "the free use" of a portion of the road, which license came to an end on 24-6-1950 ; or (2) that it was in the nature of a contingent lease (the words used in the document are "grant to the Company in perpetuity subject to cl. 5" which automatically came to an end when the contingency happened ; that is, the District Board exercised the right of purchase conferred upon them by S. 41, Bengal Tramways Act, 1883 ; or (3) that the jural relation between the District Board of Patna and Railway Company was analogous to that of partners, which relation came to an end as soon as the District Board intimated that it would exercise its right of purchase with effect from 25-6-1950. On these contentions, which were elaborately and very strenuously canvassed, the learned Advocate General founded his main argument that the purchase, to which the District Board claims to be entitled, was legally complete on 25-6-1950, within the meaning of cl. (2) of the agreement of 23-6-1950. I do not think, speaking for myself, that the aforesaid contentions are well-founded. The agreement clearly enough, was a grant in perpetuity, as the document expressly states, subject, however, to the right of purchase conferred by S. 41, Bengal Tramways Act. There is, I think, a well-understood distinction in law between a "right of purchase" arising out of a contract for sale, and a "sale" as defined in S. 54, T. P. Act. That section itself makes it clear that a contract for sale does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on the property. In my opinion, the agreement of 1899 was a perpetual lease, with a contract for sale of the undertaking on certain conditions. It is not in dispute that the requirements of S. 54 have not been fulfilled in this case. The contention of the learned Advocate General is that S. 54 has no application. I am unable to agree. By merely informing the Company that the District Board are going to exercise their right of purchase with effect from a particular date and expressing their willingness to pay the price calculated in the manner laid down in cl. (5), the purchase cannot be said to have been legally completed.

[24] My view, therefore, is that there has been in law a breach of the agreement of 23-6-1950 ; but it is not a breach of an undertaking to this Court; nor does it constitute contempt of this Court. It is, I think, well settled that any and every breach of an agreement embodied in an order or decree of the Court does not constitute contempt. There must be an element of defiance; a wilful disobedience to an order or process or in the breach of an undertaking given to Court. In dealing with what is called contempt in procedure, the position is thus summarised in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 1, p. 24, para. 37 :

"Misconduct of this kind consists in disobedience to such orders for the payment of money as are excepted from the general provisions of the Debtors Act, 1869, abolishing imprisonment for debt, or in wilful disobedience to any order or process or in the breach of an undertaking given to the Court."

As has been observed in State of Texas v. George W. White, 89 U. S. 819; 22 Lawyer's Edn. 157, punishments for contempt of Court have two aspects, namely, (1) to vindicate the dignity of the Court from disrespect shown to it or its orders; (2) to compel performance of some order or decree of the Court, which it is in the powers of the party to perform and which he refuses to obey In the present case, there is no order of the Court to which disrespect has been shown, or the performance of which should be compelled.

[25] It is, however, the last question which has caused me the greatest anxiety in this case, and I confess to a feeling of hesitation as to the appropriate action to be taken. In Misc. Jud. Case No. 120 of 1950, the petitioner Company had, inter alia asked for an order restraining the District Board from taking possession of the undertaking except in due course of law. The allegation made in para. 40 of the petition of that case was that the chairman of the District Board had declared that he would assume control of the Railway on 24-6-1950 irrespective of whether the present management of the Company was willing or unwilling to transfer such control. On the 23rd June, the application was disposed of on an agreement between the parties, and no decision was given on merits. On the 25th June, the District Board assumed control. Prima facie, it looks as though the District Board, at any rate the Chairman, has taken possession under cover of the agreement and in breach thereof; and Mr. P. R. Das has indignantly characterised the conduct of the Chairman as "sharp practice." I must say that the impression left on my mind on a perusal of the petitions and affidavits is that the conduct of the District Board or rather of the Chairman, has not been straightforward or ingenuous. The agreement of 23-6-1950 did not have much meaning, if it were entered into with certain mental reservations. In para. 17 of the reply of the opposite party it is stated that the Chairman took steps, as advised, in accordance with a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Railway Company dated 16-6-1950. My learned brother has referred to that resolution. The action of the Chairman was not quite in accord with that resolution; nor is it stated on whose advice the Chairman acted. If, therefore, the District Board derived an advantage, probably an undue advantage, by reasons of a breach of the agreement of 23-6-1950, what should be the appropriate action? This is the question which has given me the greatest trouble.

[26] Mr. P. R. Das has contended that there must be an order or direction for restoration of possession by means of a writ of mandamus under Art. 226, Constitution of India, irrespective of the question of contempt. He has relied on several Indian and English decisions (Narayan Sahu v. Thakurji Ramji, 106 I. C. 194: (A.I.R. (15) 1928 Pat. 49); Daniel v. Forguson, (1891) 2 Ch. 27 : (39 W. R. 599) ; Krehl v. Burrell, (1877) 7 Ch. D. 551 : (47 L. J. Ch. 353) ; Von Joel v. Hornsey, (1895) 2 Ch. 774: (65 L. J. Ch. 102) and Krehl v Burrell, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 146 : (48 L. J. Ch. 252). Most of those decisions related to cases where in a pending action for an injunction, the defendant on being served with notice tried to steal a march by completing a construction in respect of which the complaint was made, or evaded service of notice in order to present the Court with a fait accompli. In those circumstances the Court having seisin of the action issued orders to undo what was done to defeat the purpose of the action. In Narayan Sahu's case, 106 I. C. 194 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 49), a delivery of possession obtained by a party to the appeal under what was described as a "questionable move" was set aside by the appellate Court. None of those decisions are any authority for the proposition that a party who has entered into an agreement with another party can ask a superior Court for a writ of mandamus under Art. 226 when illegally dispossessed by the latter party in breach of the agreement, instead of going to the ordinary Civil Court of competent jurisdiction for the necessary reliefs. I have great doubt if Art. 226 of the Constitution can be invoked in a case of this nature. The aggrieved party in this case can get an effectual and adequate remedy by an ordinary action in the Civil Court—for enforcement of the agreement, for recovery of possession and damages, if any. The power to issue writs under Art. 226 of the Constitution is an extra-ordinary power, and in several recent decisions of this Court it has been held that where there is an alternative adequate remedy, this Court will be reluctant to exercise its powers under Art. 226 (See Misc. Jud. Case No. 142 of 1950 decided on 24-7-1950; Misc. Jud. Case Nos. 53 and 155 of 1950 decided on 5-4-1950). Speaking of the nature of the high prerogative writ of mandamus, the position is thus stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 9, para. 1269, p. 744 :

"Its purpose is to supply defects of justice ; and accordingly it will issue, to the end that justice may be done, in all cases where there is a specific legal right and no specific legal remedy for enforcing such right ; and it may issue in cases where, although there is an alternative legal remedy, yet such mode of redress is less convenient, beneficial and effectual."

I can see no reason for thinking that the alternative legal remedy available to the aggrieved party in this case is less convenient, beneficial and effectual, except perhaps for the fact that the aggrieved party will have to pay fairly heavy court-fees for bringing an action in the ordinary Civil Court. Article 32 (1) of the Constitution of India gives a guaranteed right to move the Supreme Court for the enforcement of fundamental rights. Article 226 gives the High Court power to issue directions, orders or writs for the enforcement of fundamental rights and for any other purpose. In a sense, the power under Art. 226 is wider, because the power can be exercised for any other purpose : but that itself makes the exercise of the power discretionary for any other purpose. In England, the grant of a writ of mandamus is, as a general rule, a matter for the discretion of the Court, and is not a writ of right (Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 9, para. 1270, p. 744). I do not think that the position is different under Art. 226, Constitution of India.

[27] Then, there is another aspect of the matter. It is very doubtful if on the petition filed originally in Misc. Jud. Case No. 120 of 1950, the petitioner Company would have got any order in their favour under Art. 226. They were then in possession; and I greatly doubt if a mere apprehension of an illegal disturbance or dispossession which they would be justified in resisting, would have been a good ground for the issue of a writ in their favour—this in spite of the argument that a month's notice was required before an action against the District Board could be instituted. The decisions on which Mr. P. R. Das relied in Tan Bug Taim v. Collector of Bombay, A I.R (33) 1946 Bom. 216: (47 Cr. L. J. 594) ; Dintai Petit v. M. S. Noronha, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Bom. 407: (225 I. C. 577) and Municipal Corporation for the City of Bombay v. Govind Laxman, A I. R. (36) 1949 Bom. 229 : (51 Bom. L. R. 190), related to different facts where the alternative remedy could not be as effectual as the one asked for.

[28] A very important consideration in this connection is the way the District Board got possession or assumed control on 25-6-1950. My learned brother has examined the affidavits on this part of the case, and has come to the conclusion—a conclusion with which I agree—that possession was taken, or rather control was assumed by the District Board, not by use of any force, but by reason of the fact that the working of the Railway was at a standstill by reason of the strike of the railway employees and these employees voluntarily went over and agreed to work under the District Board. Such assumption of control may be, and probably is, a breach of the agreement of 23-6-1950; but I do not think that such a breach is contempt of Court or is a mischief for the remedy of which the power of this Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution can be invoked.

[29] I have referred to the conduct of the District Board, and said that it has been disingenuous. The conduct of the petitioning Company has also been far from strictly correct. If the District Board has shown an anxiety to assume control of the undertaking before all the formalities of the purchase have been completed, the petitioning Company has in its turn obstructed at every step the speedy termination of the arbitral proceeding in connection with the settlement of the price which the District Board have to pay (see in this connection the proceedings before the arbitrators, copies where of have been filed before us). I have expressed my views on some of the contentions raised, for the disposal of the present applications; but in view of the conduct of the parties there is no reason why they should not be left to fight out their battle in a properly constituted suit in a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction. I do not think that this is a proper case for the issue of a writ of mandamus under Art. 226.

[30] For these reasons, I concur in the orders proposed to be passed by my learned brother.

Inderdeo Singh and others— Petitioners v. The State.

Criminal Revn. No. 488 of 1950, D/- 17-8-1950.

(a) Public Safety—Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance (IV [4] of 1949), S. 6 (2) —Public procession—What constitutes.

Where a procession is taken out at a public place, it is going along a public thoroughfare to a meeting which is admittedly public, the purpose of procession is public i. e., a purpose of a party as opposed to a private purpose, and it is open to the public or a class of the public to join in the procession, the reasonable inference from the proved facts is that the procession is public. [Para 6]

(b) Public Safety—Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance (IV [4] of 1949), S. 6 — Holding of procession—What amounts.

Where certain persons, who were members of Communist party led a procession arranged by the communist party, carried communist flags and were most vociferous in the slogans which the processionists shouted it must be held that such persons held the procession. [Para 7]

(c) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (b), (3) — Unreasonable restrictions—Public Safety — Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act (III [3] of 1950), S. 9.

The restriction imposed by the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, so far as it relates to public processions, etc. was not unreasonable. [Para 8]

(d) Public Safety—Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance (IV [4] of 1949), S. 6 — Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act (III [3] of 1950), S. 9—Whether ultra vires.

The words 'public safety' and 'public order' are interchangeable terms in the context in which they have been used and S. 6 of the Ordinance or S. 9 of the Act was not ultra vires the State Legislature. [Para 9]

Basanta Chandra Ghosh and D. K. Sinha — for Petitioners; Standing Counsel—for the State.

Das J.— The five petitioners have been convicted of contravening an order passed under S. 6, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance, 1949, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year each. Section 6 of the said Ordinance, so far as it is relevant for our purpose, reads thus:

"The Provincial Government may, for the purpose of securing the public safety or the maintenance of public order, by general or special order, prohibit, restrict or impose conditions upon, the holding of or taking part in public processions, meetings or assemblies."

On 25-6-1949, the Provincial Government passed the following order purporting to act under the provisions of S. 6:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of S. 6, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance, 1949, and for the purpose of securing the public safety and the maintenance of public order, the Governor of Bihar is pleased to direct that no public meeting or procession shall be held without the permission of the District Magistrate or the Additional District Magistrate of the district;

Provided that this order shall not apply to marriage and funeral processions or to condolence meetings and public meetings held for purely literary purposes."

[2] The allegation against the petitioners was that on 15-8-1949, a day set apart for the celebration of independence of this country, the petitioners along with other members of the communist party took out a procession in order to join a public meeting convened by the said party near a lower primary school of village Kazi Fatu Chak, for the purpose of proclaiming the creed of the party and condemning those in charge of the Government of the country. The Sub-Inspector of Police of Barbigha police station, received an information that such meeting was going to be held, and having received that information on 14-8-1949, he went to the place on 15th, saw the procession and dispersed it before any meeting could be held. The five-petitioners, it was alleged, headed the procession, carried communist flags and shouted slogans condemning capitalism and praying for the destruction of what had been termed as "Jawahar Raj" meaning probably the authority of the Prime Minister of India.

[3] The Courts below found the petitioners guilty of contravening the order quoted above, inasmuch as no permission of the District Magistrate or the Additional District Magistrate was taken for holding the procession in question.

[4] Learned counsel for the petitioners has addressed us at great length on the legality or otherwise of the conviction. He has raised several points, and I propose to deal with them briefly in view of the order which we are passing in this case.

[5] The first point urged before us is that there is no finding that the procession in question was a public procession. It is stated that in the charge or in the judgment of the trying Magistrate, there is no mention of the word "Public". It is argued that though the learned Sessions Judge who heard the appeal of the petitioners, stated in the concluding part of his judgment that the procession was a public procession, he did not really apply his mind to the question, nor did he find the necessary facts which would lead to the inference that the procession was a public procession. It is to be observed that s. 6 (1) of the Ordinance, which I have already quoted, refers to public procession, meeting or assemblies. Sub-section (2) of the said section explains what is meant by a pubic procession. That sub-section is in the following terms :

"For the purpose of sub-s. (1), any procession, meeting or assembly which is open to the public or to any class or portion of the public, whether held in a public or a private place and whether admission thereto is restricted by the issue of tickets or otherwise, shall be deemed to be a public procession, meeting or assembly, as the case may."

Learned counsel for the petitioners contends that the real test according to the explanation given in sub-s. (2), is whether the procession in question was open to the public or to any class or portion of the public. It is contended that no evidence was led on that point, and no finding arrived at by the Courts below that the procession in question was open to the public or to any class or portion of the public. In the circumstances, it is contended that the conviction of the petitioners was bad in law.

[6] Learned counsel for the petitioners has taken us through the evidence in the case. He has also referred us to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Shankar Papayya v. Emperor, A. I. R. (30) 1948 Bom. 177 : (44 Cr. L. J. 580). Having examined the evidence, we find that the following facts are sufficiently clear and established. The procession was being taken out or held at a public place. It was going along a public thoroughfare to a meeting which undoubtedly was public meeting, though called by the communist party in furtherance of the objects of that party. Learned counsel does not dispute that the meeting called for that day near the lower primary school was a public meeting. He has confined his argument to the question whether the procession was a public procession. It is clearly proved that the processionists were going to that public meeting. Secondly, the purpose of the procession, as also of the public meeting, was a public purpose,—the purpose of a party, as opposed to a private or individual purpose, the purpose being the furtherance of the objects of the communist party and the condemnation of the powers that be. The slogans which the processionists shouted, make that sufficiently clear. Thirdly, there is clear evidence, of at least, one witness, if not of more, that the procession was a procession of the communist party. There is clear evidence in the record that besides the five petitioners, there were others. There is also evidence that there were sight seers by the side of the road, as the procession went along a public thoroughfare. It is to be observed that the test laid down is not whether sight-seers actually joined the procession ; but that test is whether it was open to the members of the public or of a class of the public, to join in the procession. There is no evidence that the procession, while it was proceeding along a public thoroughfare, had imposed any restriction on the joining of any outsider in the procession, or of any sympathiser in the procession. In my opinion, the question is one of a reasonable inference from the facts established. I am of the view that the only reasonable inference from the facts proved in the case is that the procession was a public procession within the meaning of sub s (2) of S. 6 of the Ordinance. I may observe here that sub-s (2) of S. 6 of the Ordinance enlarges, rather than restricts, the ordinary concept of a public procession. Learned counsel for the petitioners has very vehemently contended before us that it would be throwing the onus on the accused person to draw an inference from the negative, namely, that there was no restriction against anybody joining the procession. His contention is that it was for the prosecution to prove affirmatively that a member of the public or a class of the public could join in the procession. As I have already said, the question is not really one of onus of proof, but of a reasonable inference to be drawn from the facts proved in the case. On that evidence I am satisfied that the procession in question was a public procession within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 6 of the Ordinance.

[7] Secondly, it is contended that S. 6 makes a difference between holding a public procession and taking part in a public procession. I agree that the distinction is between holding a procession and taking part in a procession; but, let it be remembered not between holding a procession and taking out a procession. Taking out a procession may mean the same thing as holding a procession. The juxtaposition in S. 6 of the Ordinance is between holding a procession or taking part in a procession. The distinction between the two is, I think, quite appreciable. A person walking along a street sees a procession passing if he is a person who is hesitant or of quiet disposition, he may merely look at the procession, and let it pass by. A person who is not so quiet, may join the procession, either for fun or because he sympathises with the object of the procession. That, in my opinion, would be taking part in a procession. But holding a procession imports, in my opinion, some idea of leading, arranging. convoking, etc. The facts proved in this case show that the procession was arrarged by the communist party. The petitioners are members of that party. The petitioners led the procession. They carried communist flags and were most vociferous in the slogans which the processionists shouted. In these circumstances, I do not think that the Courts below were wrong in finding that the petitioners held the procession in contravention of the order to which I have already made a reference. The entire set of circumstances has to be kept in mind; namely, a public meeting had been called for that day at the lower primary school by the same party which had arranged the procession, and the petitioners were leading the procession to that place. The words 'to hold' have innumerable shades of meaning. With regard to processions, public meetings, etc. the meaning given in the Oxford Dictionary is "to keep together, to keep in being, existence, or operation, to carry on; to convoke and preside over (a meeting assembly, council, or the like); to go through formally, perform (any proceeding or function); to keep. observe, celebrate (a festival); to carry on, sustain, etc." If the expression "to hold" is read in the context in which it occurs in S. 6 of the Ordinance and the ordinary meaning of the word, I do not think that it can be argued with success that the petitioners were not holding a public procession within the meaning of S. 6 of the Ordinance.

[8] This brings me to the last contention. The Ordinance in question was repealed by the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, which came into force on 4-1-1950. The conviction in this case was recorded on 7-12-1949. The relevant portion of S. 26, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, is in these terms :

"All proceedings commenced, officers appointed or authorised, rules and orders made, sentences passed or acts ordered or done, in exercise of any jurisdiction or power conferred by or under the provisions of the said Ordinance, shall be continued and be deemed to have been respectively commenced, appointed or authorised, made, passed, ordered or done under this Act and any enactment or document referring to any of the said provisions shall be construed to refer to this Act or to the corresponding provision thereof."

It is contended that the sentence which was passed on the petitioners under the ordinance will, under S. 26, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, be deemed to be a sentence passed under the latter Act. The next step in the argument of learned counsel for the petitioners is that on 26-1-1950, the day on which the Constitution of India came into force, the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act was rendered void so far as the relevant section relating to the banning of public processions, etc. was concerned; because that section came in conflict with Art. 19 (1) (b), Constitution of India. Article 19 (1) (b), Constitution of India is in these terms :

"19 (1) All citizens shall have the right—

* * * * *

(b) to assemble peaceably and without arms."

It is contended that as the relevant section of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, became void on 26-1-1950, the sentence must also fall on that very day, and the petitioners could not be detained beyond that date under any sentence passed against them. This argument of learned counsel for the petitioners overlooks, in my opinion, an important clause, namely, cl. (3) of Art. 19, Constitution of India. That clause is in these terms :

"Nothing in sub-cl. (b) of the said clause shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevent the State from making any law imposing, in the interests of public order, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by the said sub-clause."

Therefore, the question is whether the relevant section of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act relating to the banning of public procession, etc., was an unreasonable restriction in the exercise of the right conferred by Art. 19 (1) (b), Constitution of India. In my opinion, it is sufficient to state that the restriction imposed by the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, so far as it related to public processions, etc., was not unreasonable; and therefore, it cannot be held that on 26-1-1950, the sentence passed against the petitioners fell along with the relevant section of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949. The restriction actually imposed cannot be said to be unreasonable — judged by any standard (see in this connection Dr. N. B. Khare v. The State of Delhi, (A. I. R. (37) 1950

S. C. 211) : this apart from the question whether a sentence legally passed can be void by reason of repeal of the law under which it was passed.

[9] There is another branch of the argument. It is contended that in S. 6 of the Ordinance as well as in S. 9, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, the expression used is "for the purpose of securing the public safety or the maintenance of public order." It is contended that under the Government of India Act, 1935, the Provincial legislature had no authority to make a law with regard to the public safety, but had authority to make a law with regard to the maintenance of public order only. It is contended that inasmuch as S. 9, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, refers both to public safety or maintenance of public order (the word "or" being used in a disjunctive sense, it is contended), that particular section was beyond the Legislative competence of the Provincial legislature. In my opinion, the words "public safety" and "public order" are inter-changeable terms in the context in which they have been used. I am unable to agree with the contention that S. 6 of the Ordinance or S. 9, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, was ultra vires the Provincial legislature.

[10] The contention raised on behalf of the petitioners fail. The only other question for consideration is the question of sentence. It is stated by learned counsel for the petitioners that they have already been in jail for more than six months, probably seven or eight months. It appears that the maximum sentence which could be imposed under the law was awarded against the petitioners. I do not think that the ends of justice require that in the present case the maximum sentence should be imposed. I think that the ends of justice will be fully met if the conviction of the petitioners is upheld, but the sentence is reduced to the period already undergone. I would accordingly, reject the petition, subject to the modification of the sentence referred to above. The petitioners should now be released from custody.

Bashir and another — Petitioners v. The State.

Cri. Revn. No. 842 of 1950, D/- 16-8-1950.

Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (1946), Ss. 4, 7 and 8—Notification No. 538 P. C. of 9-1-1948 of Bihar Govt., has no effect of prohibiting transport of essential commodities from Bihar to place outside India.

According to the order, under S. 4 of the Central Government delegating its power of regulating or prohibiting production, supply or distribution of essential commodities, to the Provincial Government, the delegation was made subject to an important restriction, namely, "No order made in the exercise of the aforesaid powers shall have effect so as to prohibit or restrict the export, from any place in the province to any place outside India, of any articles or things." [Para 3]

Consequently, Notifn. No. 538 P. C., dated 9-1-1948 issued by the Bihar Government under the delegated powers, prohibiting the export of the essential commodities outside the limits of Bihar does not operate to prevent the transport of essential commodities from the Province to a place outside India (to Nepal) A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 158, Rel. on. [Para 3]

S. Sarwar Ali—for Petitioners; The Advocate-General—for the State.

Reuben J.—The petitioners have been convicted by the 1st Class Magistrate of Kishanganj under S. 7, read with S. 8, Essential Supplies (Temporary powers) Act, 1946, (Central Act XXIV [24] of 1946), and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for four months. Also, the essential commodities, namely, paddy and rice, in respect of which the offence, of which they have been convicted is said to have been committed, have been forfeited under the provisions of the Act. The conviction, the sentence and the order of the forfeiture have been upheld in appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge of Purnea.

[2] The offence is found to have been committed by the petitioners by attempting on the night of 17-11-1948 at Baisabari Ghat, police station Thakurganj, to carry rice and paddy beyond the permitted limit to Nepal, in contravention of a notification (Notifn. No. 538 P. C., dated 9.1-1948) issued by the Bihar Government.

[3] It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that the order of the Government of Bihar in question does not operate to prevent the transport of essential commodities from the Province to a place outside India and, therefore, the action of which the petitioners have been found guilty was not in contravention of the Government order. Paddy and rice are essential commodities within the provisions of Act XXIV [24]. Under S. 3 of the Act, the Central Government is empowered by notified order to provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution of essential commodities, and trade and commerce therein. Under S. 4 the Central Government is empowered to delegate its powers under S. 3, among others, to a Provincial Government; this delegation to be subject to such condit ons, if any, as may be specified in the direction under S. 4. The delegation of powers in the present case was made under the Essential Supplies (Temporary powers) Ordinance, 1946, and under S. 17 of Act XXIV [24] is to be treated as delegation made under the Act. The delegation was made subject to an important restriction, namely,

"No order made in the exercise of the aforesaid powers shall have effect so as to prohibit or restrict the export, from any place in the province to any place outside India, of any Articles or things."

The order of the Provincial Government which is found to have been contravened is as follows:

"No person shall export or carry or cause to be exported or carried by rail, river or road any quantity of any of the commodities specified in the schedule annexed hereto or any product thereof from any district in the Province of Bihar to any place outside the Province of Bihar except with the written permission of the Chief Controller of prices and supplies, Bihar:

Provided that a bona fide traveller may, without such permission, carry as part of his personal luggage any quantity not exceeding ten seers of each of the said commodities:

Provided further that nothing in this order shall apply to the export or carriage of commodities booked or despatched under Military Credit Notes."

It is admitted that the petitioners had no written permission from anybody and that they do not come within either of these provisos. But it is urged that the effect of the restriction placed on the powers of the Provincial Government is to prevent the order operating as against export from India into a foreign country.

[4] It has been strenuously argued in support of the conviction that the essence of the offence consists in the attempt which the petitioners were making to take the essential commodities outside the province. It does not matter, it is said, whether the articles were going to a place inside India or outside it; what is forbidden by the Provincial Government order is the removal of the prohibited articles from any place in the Province to any place outside. This order, however, must be read subject to the condition imposed by the Central Government when delegating power to the Provincial Government. That limitation says that the Government order shall not have effect to prohibit or restrict export from a place in the Province to a place outside India. Here we are concerned with articles which were in the act of being transported from Purnea into the adjoining country of Nepal. If it be held that the order of the Provincial Government applies to prevent the passage of these articles, it clearly contravenes the restriction aforesaid.

[5] It has been urged that the object of the restriction was to prevent a conflict between such order as might be passed by the Provincial Government and a permit for export that might have been issued by the Central Government allowing the transport from the Province to a foreign country. In other words, the argument is that the powers of the Provincial Government are limited to the restriction of export which is not sanctioned by a lawful permit. This interpretation involves the reading of the word "lawful" before the word "export" in the limitation as contained in the Central Government notification. I see no justification for reading this word into the notification.

[6] Thirdly, it was urged that the word "export" in the Central Government notification relates to export in the commercial sense, that is export for the purposes of trade; whereas the defence of the petitioners was that they were taking the paddy and rice for their own consumption. The word "export" has a well accepted dictionary meaning. It is derived from two Latin words; ex, meaning from, and portare, meaning to carry. In the context in which it occurs in the Central Government notification there is no reason for understanding it to be used in a special sense. The dictionary sense is the sense in which we find the word used in the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act of 1914. We find this also in the Dangerous Drugs Act, 1930, (Central Act II [2] of 1930).

[7] The present case is to my mind, exactly covered by a decision of this Court reported in Kumanchand v. Emperor, 24 Pat. 685: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 158: 47 Cr. L. J. 945).

[8] On the above grounds I would allow this petition, set aside the conviction and sentences of the accused petitioners and direct that they be acquitted. They will now be discharged from their bail. The articles confiscated shall be returned to them. This will apply to the price, if the articles have been sold.

SHEARER AND DAS JJ.

Sir Kameshwar Singh — Plaintiff v. Province of Bihar—Defendant.

Title Suit No. 1 of 1949, D/ 24-1-1950.

(a) Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act (IX [9] of 1950)—Act is intra vires.

The Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. The Repealing Act does not create any repugnancy, on the contrary it removes the repugnancy, if any, created by the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act. The Act having been enacted by the proper legislative authority of the Province viz., the two Chambers and His Majesty represented by the Governor, is perfectly valid and the absence of assent of the Governor-General does not invalidate it. [Paras 4 & 8]

(b) Government of India Act (1935), S. 107 — Scope of.

Section 107 does not set up any enacting authority, nor does it deal with competency or power to legislate in the strict sense of the term. It merely states what will happen in the case of inconsistency between Dominion law and Provincial Law, and in sub-s. (2) lays down how to get over a repugnancy of a particular character. It does not deal with the question of ultra vires, which is far more fundamental than mere repugnancy. [Para 8]

A Provincial law even with regard to a matter enumerated in the Concurrent List does not become bad, merely because the assent of the Governor-General has not been taken. The only effect of S. 107 is that, in the absence such assent, the Provincial law will be void to the extent of the repugnancy, may be in part or entirety. But S. 107 can have no application when there is no repugnancy. [Para 8]

Anno. Gov. of India Act, S. 107, N. 1.

(c) Constitutional Law—Ultra vires—Impugned Act repealed—Effect.

Where during the pendency of a suit for a declaration that a certain Act is unconstitutional and for an injunction restraining the Government from enforcing it the impugned Act, is validly repealed and is no longer on the statute book, the effect is to deprive the plaintiff of his cause of action for the suit and it is unnecessary to pronounce on its validity or otherwise. A Court will not decide a constitutional question which is merely academic and has no live relation to the rights of the parties: A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C. 53, Rel. on; (1871) L.R. 4 H. L. 661 and (1837) 112 E. R. 360, Distting. [Paras 4, 10 and 11]

Shearer J.— The object of the British Parliament in enacting sub-s. (2) of S. 299, Government of India Act 1935, and of His Majesty the King in inserting in the Instruments of Instructions, which were issued under the Royal sign Manual to the Governor-General and to the Governors of Provinces, a direction not to assent to any bill regarding which they felt doubt, whether it did or did not offend against that section, was to secure owners of property in the enjoyment of their rights and to ensure that, in the event of the State, in exercise of the right known to American jurists as the right of eminent domain, depriving them of their property, they should receive compensation, meaning thereby the value in money of the property to the owner at the time at which he is called upon to relinquish it On 6-7-1949, the Governor General gave his assent to an Act entitled the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948 (Bihar Act XVIII [18] of 1948). That Act empowered the Provincial Government to deprive proprietors and tenure-holders of their estates and tenures It provided or purported to provide, for the payment of compensation to them, but the compensation was not, and perhaps, in the circumstances of the case, could not be, compensation within the meaning of the term as used in such statutes as the Consolidation of Lands Clauses Act in England or the Land Acquisition Act in India. The plaintiff who is the owner of the largest and one of the oldest zamindaris in Bihar, thereupon instituted a suit in which he asked for a declaration that the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, was an unconstitutional law and for an injunction restraining the Government of Bihar from putting it into operation. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Darbhanga, and on 25 11-1949, was removed to this Court to be tried by it in exercise of its extra-ordinary original civil jurisdiction on 9-12-1949, a bill, entitled the Bihar Land Reforms Bill, 1949, was published, and was later introduced in the Bihar Legislative Assembly. Many of the provisions contained in this bill are provisions which were contained in the Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948. Clause 44 of the bill contained the following: "The Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, is hereby repealed." Subsequently, however, this clause in the bill was deleted and a separate Act, entitled the "Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act, 1950 (Bihar Act IX [9] of 1950)", was passed by the Bihar legislature. This Act was assented to by the Governor of Bihar on 18-1-1950, that is, on the day before that on which this suit was set down for hearing. A preliminary issue has therefore been framed as to whether, in consequence of this enactment, any cause of action, which the plaintiff had or may have had, has not been taken away and whether or not the suit can or ought to proceed.

[2] As I have just said, while assent to the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, was given by the Governor-General, assent to the Act which repeals, or purports to repeal it was given by the Governor. The main argument which had been addressed to us by Mr. P. R. Das for the plaintiff, on the preliminary issue is based on this circumstance and is, in short that the legislative body or authority which has purported to repeal the Act is not the legislative body or authority which enacted it. The legislative body or authority, it is said, consisted, in the former case, of the Governor and the two Chambers of the legislature, and, in the latter case, of the Governor-General and the two Chambers of the legislature. It is, Mr. P. R. Das said, axiomatic that the legislative body or authority which is competent to repeal an act must be the same legislative body or authority as enacted it, or a legislative body or authority having powers co-extensive with the powers of the legislative body or authority which enacted it. It necessarily follows, it is suggested, that the repealing Act is null and void, that, in consequence, the impugned Act still remains on the statute book and that the plaintiff is entitled to show and, if he succeeds in showing, to obtain, a declaration, that the impugned Act is an unconstitutional law. The short answer to the contention put forward by the learned counsel for the plaintiff is, in my opinion, that the legislature which has repealed the Act is the same legislature as enacted it, namely, the legislature consisting of His Majesty and of the Bihar Legislative Assembly and the Bihar Legislative Council. Section 60 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, states:

"There shall for every Province be a Provincial Legislature which shall consist of His Majesty, represented by the Governor, and ..... in the Province of Bihar, two Chambers."

Section 75 of the Act states:

"A Bill which has been passed .... by both Chambers of the Provincial Legislature, shall be presented to the Governor, and the Governor shall declare either that he assents in His Majesty's name to the Bill, or that he withholds assent therefrom, or that he reserves the Bill for the consideration of the Governor-General."

Section 76 (1) states:

"When a Bill is reserved by a Governor for the consideration of the Governor-General, the Governor-General shall declare, either that he assents in His Majesty's name to the Bill, or that he withholds assent therefrom."

His Majesty is as much a branch of the legislature in each of the Dominions and of the Legislature in each of the States or provinces comprised in each Dominion, as he is a branch of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, which consists of His Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons. The circumstance that each of the Constitution Acts of the Dominions contain, or at one time contained, provisions authorising or requiring a Governor to reserve bills for the consideration of the Governor-General, and provisions authorising or requiring the Governor-General to reserve bills for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure, itself goes to show that the assent of the King to proposed laws is His Majesty's assent as a separate, independent and co-equal branch of the legislature in which the proposed law has been introduced (Vide Quick and Garran on the Constitution of the Australian Commonwealth, p. 689). In order to understand how provisions of this kind came to be inserted in the Constitution Acts of the Dominions, it is necessary to go back into history. The right of His Majesty to assent to, or withhold his assent from, any legislation proposed to be passed by a Colonial legislature is part of the royal prerogative. It would obviously have been in the highest degree inconvenient that, before any proposed law could be enacted and given effect to, the proposed law should actually be laid before His Majesty for his assent to be formally given to it. His Majesty's assent to a proposed law in some distant colony could not be so easily obtained as His assent to a bill which had passed through both Houses of the Imperial Parliament. Yet delay in obtaining His Majesty's assent might have had disastrous consequences. Powers were, therefore, given to the Governors of colonies to assent in His Majesty's name to proposed laws, their discretion in this matter being, however, limited by the Instrument of Instructions issued to them (vide S. 4, Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865). In the first decade, after the passing of the British North America Act, 1867, no fewer than twenty-one bills were reserved by the Governor-General for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure (vide Egerton on Federations and Unions in the British Empire, p. 137). Shortly afterwards, however, the practice of reserving bills was abandoned, it being considered that the power of His Majesty to disallow Acts passed by a Dominion Legislature was sufficient for the protection of imperial interests. Finally, as a result of the resolutions of the Imperial Conference of 1930, a convention was established that Dominion Acts cannot constitutionally be disallowed by the Crown on the advice of British Ministers, nor can assent be refused to reserved bills, nor bills be reserved save on Dominion advice. By the Indian Independence Act, 1947, India became a Dominion, and sub-s. (3) of S. 6 of the Act provided that

"so much of any Act as relates to the disallowance of laws by His Majesty or the reservation of laws for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon or the suspension of the operation of laws until the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon shall not apply to laws of the Legislature of either of the new Dominions."

Nevertheless, although the Governor-General directly, and the Governors of Provinces indirectly, are no longer required by any Instrument of Instructions to reserve bills for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure, Governors are still required or authorised to reserve certain bills for the consideration of the Governor-General under sub-s. (2) of S. 107, Government of India Act. Section 90, British North America Act, 1867, similarly empowers the Lieutenant Governors of Canadian Provinces to reserve bills for the consideration of the Governor-General of Canada. A device invented by British statesmen a century ago for the protection of imperial interests and the prevention of international incidents has been made to subserve another and very different purpose. The provisions in the Constitution Acts of India and Canada, to which I have just referred, are now used for substantially the same purpose, namely to ensure that a Provincial Legislature does not enact a law which is illegal or unconstitutional in whole or part, or a law clashing with the legislation of the Federal Legislature. The necessity for a provision of this kind in the Indian Constitution Act is the greater, as in a large number of matters the Federal and Provincial Legislatures have concurrent powers. Mr. P. R. Das, is, of course, correct to this extent, that an Act of the Provincial Legislature may be unconstitutional if it has received the assent of the Governor and yet would have been constitutional if it had received the assent of the Governor-General. It does not, however, at all follow that the criterion to be adopted in deciding whether a law is or is not unconstitutional, is to see whether it has been assented to in the name of His Majesty by the one representative of His Majesty or the other representative. The criterion must, in each case, be whether the Provincial law deals with a matter enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List and, if so, whether it contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier Dominion law or an existing law with respect to that matter. It may well be that the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, dealt with matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List and contained provisions repugnant to the provisions of an existing law, or existing laws, of the Federal Legislature with respect to these matters. Presumably, it did, in fact, contain such provisions, or was believed to contain such provisions, as the object of reserving the bill for the assent of the Governor-General was to ensure that the bill should be subjected to scrutiny by the legal advisers of the Government of India in order that the Government of India might decide whether, if the effect of it was to make the law in certain matters in Bihar different from the law in these matters prevailing in other provinces, there was, on grounds of policy, any objection to this. It is important to notice that the checks on, or safeguards against, a clash between laws passed by the Federal and the Provincial Legislatures which were devised by the British Parliament and embodied in S. 107 (2) and other connected sections of the Government of India Act were twofold. In the first place, when a proposed law of a Provincial Legislature has the effect of altering or repealing an Act of the Federal legislature, it has to be reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General. Secondly, when the Governor-General has given his assent to such a proposed law and, in consequence, the law which obtains in that province is different from the law, which prevails in other provinces, no proposed law which has the effect of again altering that law, can be introduced in the Federal Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor-General. While, however, the Federal Legislature cannot repeal the Provincial law unless the repealing bill has received the previous sanction of the Governor-General before it is introduced in the Federal Legislature there is clearly nothing to prevent the Provincial Legislature itself repealing it. The effect of the repeal is merely to restore the status quo ante and to bring the law in that province once more into conformity with the law prevailing in the rest of India. There is, on principle, no reason why, before such a course is taken by a Provincial Government, the Government of India should be consulted. In fact, as the original object of His Majesty in delegating to the Governors of Provinces authority to assent in His name to proposed legislation was to avoid unnecessary delay in His assent being obtained, there is every reason why an Act which merely repeals an existing Act, and does not purport to do anything more, should not be reserved

[3] Mr. N. C. Chatterji, who followed Mr. P. R. Das, for the plaintiff, put forward an argument which, I must confess, I had some difficulty in comprehending. The question or one of the questions, raised in the preliminary issue is as to whether the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act, 1950, is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. If, Mr. Chatterji said, the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, is itself void and of no effect the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act, 1950, is similarly and necessarily void and of no effect. In other words, if I understood the argument correctly, Mr. Chatterji contended that it was impossible to distinguish between the two Acts and that, in consequence, we must consider and could not avoid deciding, whether the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, was or was not an unconstitutional law. There is, in my opinion, no substance in this argument. It is, of course, true that an unconstitutional law has no validity whatever, and that rights which it may purport to take away from individuals continue to exist to the same extent as they would have existed if the law had never been enacted. On the other hand, a law is not an unconstitutional law unless and until it has been so decided by a judicial tribunal competent to pronounce on its validity. Moreover, unless and until a question as to its validity is directly raised and a Court of law has no option but to decide it, the Courts must proceed on the assumption that the law is a valid law. In that situation, it appears to me that, if the validity of the repealing Act can be questioned at all, it can be questioned only on the ground raised by Mr. P. R. Das, namely, that in enacting it the proper procedure was not followed, and for the reasons just given, that ground must fail. There is another and more cogent reason for our declining to go into the question which Mr. Chatterji asks us to, namely, that as the impugned Act has been repealed, the Government of Bihar is debarred from taking any action under it. If, however, no action can be taken under the impugned Act, the question as to whether that Act was or was not an unconstitutional law becomes a question of purely academic interest. Sir Alladi Krishnaswamy Ayyar, for the defendant, cited a number of authorities to show that the Courts will not decide such questions. One of these decisions namely, Attorney-General for Alberta v. Attorney General for Canada, 1939 A. C. 117 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C. 53), is very much in point. That was an appeal against an opinion expressed by the Supreme Court of Canada that two bills which had been introduced in the legislature of the Province of Alberta were ultra vires of that legislature. If the proposed laws had been enacted, no action could have been taken under them except under and in accordance with certain provisions contained in another Act, known as the Alberta Social Credit Act. During the pendency of the appeal this Act was, however, repealed. Lord Maugham, after observing that the bills could no longer be brought into operation, said:

"Since nothing can be done thereunder, the appeal from the order of the Supreme Court is one of no practical interest. It is contrary to the long established practice of this Board to entertain appeals which have no relation to existing rights created or purported to be created ; and their Lordships have, therefore, found it necessary to decline to hear arguments on this appeal in so far as it relates to the bills."

The other decisions cited were Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada v. Jervis, 1944 A. C. 111 : (113 L. J. K. B. 174), and Lawrence P. Mills v. W. Briggs Green, 159 U. S S C. R. 651.

[4] Paragraph 10 of the plaint is as follows :

"The plaintiff is further advised and submits that his title to the said properties will subsist notwithstanding any notification that may be issued by the defendant declaring that the estates or tenures of the plaintiff have passed to and become vested in the Crown. He further submits that the promulgation of the said Act by the defendant constitutes an infringement, or a threatened infringement, upon his title to the properties collectively known as "Raj Reyasat Darbhanga" and that as a cloud has been thrown upon his title, he is entitled to a declaration that the said Act is wholly void and inoperative."

As I have already said, while the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948, has been repealed, a bill which contains precisely the same provisions has been introduced in the Provincial Legislature. Mr. P. R. Das, for the plaintiff, made a great deal of this and said, more than once, that the cloud which had been cast on his client's title and which constituted his cause of action had not been dissipated. The defendant, however, does not deny the title of the plaintiff and the suit cannot be said to be a suit falling under Ill. (g), S. 42, Specific Relief Act. The intention of the Crown, as manifested in the bill now pending in the Legislative Assembly, is to deprive the plaintiff of his property in exercise of its sovereign powers. That the right or power of the State to deprive a citizen of his property is one of the incidents of sovereignty, there can be no question. In most democratic countries, the Constitution imposes on the exercise of this power a twofold limitation. In the first place, it is to be used only for the enjoyment and exercise of the powers conferred on the executive and, secondly, when it is used, it is to be used "on just terms", to borrow the expression used in the Australian Constitution Act (vide cl. XXXI of S. 51, Commonwealth of Australian Constitution Act). The people of India have adopted a Constitution and that Constitution is to come into operation in the course of this week. What limitations the Constitution imposes on the exercise of the right of eminent domain is a matter to be determined hereafter. For the present, it is enough to say that the Bihar Abolition of Zamidaris Repealing Act, 1950, is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature and that the effect of that Act is to deprive the plaintiff of the cause of action on which he sued. Mr. P. R. Das suggested that, as we were not a final Court of appeal, we ought to decide the other issues. We have, however, a discretion in the matter and, in my opinion, we would be exercising it wrongly if we went into the other issues. In the events which have happened, the suit cannot and ought not, in my judgment, to proceed. I would accordingly, dismiss it but would make no order for costs against the plaintiff. In order to avoid any misapprehension I wish to say that, as at present advised, I am not prepared to say that when a law is enacted and before it is put into operation or any action is taken under it, a person who may be prejudicially affected by it, is entitled to ask the Courts for a declaration that it is an unconstitutional law.

[5] Das J.—I agree.

[6] In view of the importance of the questions raised I would like to state, briefly and in my own words, the conclusions I have reached with regard to the preliminary issue—an issue raised by way of a bar to the suit being proceeded with, on the decision of which, I think, the fate of this suit depends. Mr. Setalvad appearing for the defendant has, I think, rightly pointed out that the preliminary issue consists of three parts. As a matter of logical sequence, the questions involved in this issue may be stated in the following order—(1) Is the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Repealing Act, 1950 (Bihar Act IX [9] of 1950), hereinafter to be referred to as the Repealing Act, validly enacted ; (2) if so, does it take away the plaintiff's cause of action based on the Bihar Abolition of Zamindaris Act, 1948 (Bihar Act XVIII [18] of 1949), hereinafter referred to as the Abolition Act; and (3) should the suit proceed to trial on the other issues?

[7] As to question (1), Mr. P. R. Das appearing for the plaintiff has contended that the Repealing Act is not validly enacted. His main thesis is that the Abolition Act was passed by a different authority, and on the principle that the repealing authority must be the same as the enacting authority, the Repealing Act is bad for want of assent of the Governor-General, which assent was given to the Abolition Act on 6-7-1949. Mr. Das has developed his argument in the following way. He states that from Ss. 99 to 107, and in particular S. 107 (2), Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, follows the conclusion that the Governor-General is an integral part of the machinery for legislation when the Provincial Law relates to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List, particularly to a field already occupied by an earlier Dominion law or existing law. The Abolition Act, according to him, contained provisions repugnant to or in conflict with, provisions of (a) the Civil Procedure Code, (b) the Transfer of Property Act, (c) the Contract Act, (d) the Trusts Act etc. : therefore, under the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 107, the Abolition Act required the assent of the Governor-General for its validity. If with regard to the Abolition Act the assent of the Governor-General was necessary, such assent is also necessary for the Repealing Act this, in substance, is the contention of Mr. Das.

[8] In my opinion, the contention has no sound foundation in law. Section 107, Government of India Act, 1935, does not set up any enacting authority, nor does it deal with competency or power to legislate in the strict sense of the term. It merely states what will happen in the case of in consistency between Dominion law and Provincial Law, and in sub-s. (2) lays down how to get over a repugnancy of a particular character. It does not deal with the question of ultra vires, which is far more fundamental than mere repugnancy. The position becomes, I think, quite clear, if one examines the provisions in Chap III, Part III, and Chap. I. Part V, Government of India Act, 1935 The former deals with the Provincial Legislature, and the latter with the Distribution of Powers. Under S. 60, the Provincial Legislature of Bihar consists of two Chambers and His Majesty represented by the Governor. That is the legislative body, or the enacting authority Section 73, etc. deal with legislative procedure. Section 75 states that a Bill which has been passed by both Chambers shall be presented to the Governor, and the latter shall declare either that he assents in His Majesty's name to the Bill or that he withholds assent therefrom or that he reserves the Bill for the consideration of the Governor General. Section 76 says that when a Bill is reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General, the latter shall declare either that he assents in His Majesty's name to the Bill or he withholds assent therefrom. It is to be observed that the Governor or the Governor-General, as the case may be, acts in the name of His Majesty. Then come Ss. 99 to 107. Section 99 lays down the extent—territorial extent—of different legislatures. Section 100 delimits the field or subject-matter of legislation, with reference to three lists, respectively called the Federal Legislative List (List I), Concurrent Legislative List (List III), and Provincial Legislative List (List II). Under sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 100, the Provincial Legislature has power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List III and List II. Then there is S. 107, which as I have already said, deals with inconsistency or repugnancy of a particular character. It would, I think, be wrong to assume from the provisions of S 107 that the Governor-General as representing His Majesty is part of the legislative machinery of a Province. The legislative machinery is indicated by S. 60, and not by S. 107. A Provincial law even with regard to a matter enumerated in the Concurrent List does not become bad, merely because the assent of the Governor-General has not been taken. The only effect of S. 107 is that, in the absence of such assent, the Provincial Law will be void to the extent of the repugnancy may be in part or entirety. But surely S. 107 can have no application when there is no repugnancy. The short answer to the argument of Mr. Das, based on S. 107, is that the Repealing Act does not create any repugnancy ; on the contrary, it removes the repugnancy, if any, created by the Abolition Act, the latter Act itself not being either a Dominion law or an existing law as defined in S. 311. The absence of the assent of the Governor-General does not, therefore, invalidate the Repealing Act, which has been enacted by the proper legislative authority of the Province, viz., the two Chambers and His Majesty represented by the Governor. The two decisions Mr. Das relied on are Rev. Robert Dobie v. The Temporalities Board, (1881) 7

A. C. 136 : (51 L. J. P. C. 26) and Watson v. Winch, (1916) 1 K. B. 688 : (85 L. J. K. B. 537). In the former the question raised was whether the Legislature of the Province of Quebec had power, in the year 1875, to modify or repeal the enactments of a statute passed by the Parliament of the province of Canada in the year 1858. It was held that the powers conferred by the British North America Act, 1867, S. 129, upon the legislature of Quebec to repeal and alter the statutes of the old Parliament of Canada were co-extensive with the powers of direct legislation with which the said Legislature was invested by the other clauses of the Act of 1867. The question was considered with reference to Ss. 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, which enumerate and define the various matters which are within the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, as well as those in relation to which the Legislature of the respective provinces have the exclusive right of making law. If it cannot be disputed in this case that the Provincial Legislature has power to make laws with regard to compulsory acquisition of land (Item 9 of List II) or land and land tenure, including rights in or overland, (Item 21 of List II) or even with regard to matters enumerated in List III, then on the principle of the decision in Rev. Robert Dobie v. The Temporalities Board, (1881) 7 A. C. 136 : (51 L. J. P. C. 26), that Legislature will have power to repeal, modify or alter such laws. The question of the assent of the Governor-General will come in, not with regard to the competency or power to legislate but in case there is any repugnancy of the kind mentioned in S. 107.

[9] The second decision on which Mr. Das relies does not lays down any proposition which is of any assistance to him, and it is not necessary to examine that decision.

[10] It remains now to consider another argument urged by Mr. Das but developed more fully by Mr. Chatterji who followed Mr. Das on behalf of the plaintiff. So far as I have been able to understand the argument, its constituent parts may be stated thus: (1) let it be assumed that the Abolition Act was ultra vires, being in contravention of the provisions of S. 299, Government of India Act, 1935; (2) on that assumption, the Repealing Act is also a nullity, because that which is ultra vires does not exist in law and cannot be repealed ; (3) therefore, it is necessary in this suit to decide whether the Abolition Act was ultra vires. In fairness to Mr. Chatterji I must make it clear that he did not state the constituent parts in the way in which I have stated them for the purpose of understanding the implications of his argument. So stated, I think the argument has the obvious fallacy that it assumes the very question to be decided. The Abolition Act was Provincial law till it was repealed, and the effect of the repeal is as if it never existed except as to transactions past and closed. Even assuming that the Abolition Act was bad, it is no longer in the statute book and no judicial intervention is called for with regard to something which does not exist, there being no past transaction under the Act which was never brought into force.

[11] We have been referred to a large number of decisions, some of which my learned brother has noticed, on the point that a Court will not decide a constitutional question which is merely academic and has no live relation to the rights of the parties. I think that it would be otiose on my part to re-examine those decisions, except two on which Mr. Das has relied. The point is summarised at pp. 338-339 of Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (Edn. 8) as follows :

"Neither will a Court, as a general rule, pass upon a constitutional question, and decide a statute to be invalid, unless a decision upon that very point becomes necessary to the determination of the cause. While Courts cannot shun the discussion of constitutional questions when fairly presented, they will not go out of their way to find such topics. They will not seek to draw in such weighty matters collaterally, nor on trivial occasions. It is both more proper and more respectful to a co-ordinate department to discuss constitutional questions only when that is the very lis mota. Thus presented and determined, the decision carries a weight with it to which no extra-judicial disquisition is entitled. In any case, therefore, where a constitutional question is raised, though it may be legitimately presented by the record, yet if the record also presents some other and clear ground upon which the Court may rest its judgment, and there by render the constitutional question immaterial to the case, that course will be adopted, and the question of constitutional power will be left for consideration until a case arises which cannot be disposed of without considering it, and when consequently a decision upon such question will be unavoidable."

In the present suit the plaintiff asks for two reliefs—(1) a declaration that the Abolition Act is ultra vires and void ; and (2) an order of injunction restraining the defendant and its officers from issuing any notification under S. 8, Abolition Act, in respect of the properties of the plaintiff. The Abolition Act, having been validly repealed, does not exist, and it is unnecessary to pronounce on its validity or otherwise, because the plaintiff has now no cause of action.

[12] The two decisions on which Mr. Das relied are The Duke of Newcastle v. Robert Morris, (1871) L. R. 4 H. L. 661 : (40 L. J. Bk. 4) and Hitchcock v. Way, (1837) 112 E. R. 360 : (6 Ad. & E. 942). In the latter case the action was brought against the acceptor of a bill of exchange by a bona fide holder. The bill was drawn and originally accepted in part payment of a wager on horse-race. It was urged for defence that the bill was void by statute, 9 Ann., c. 14, sec. 1. For the plaintiff stat. 5 and 6, W. 4, c. 41, secs. 1 and 2 was relied upon. The latter Act repealed that part of the earlier statute which made the bill void, and enacted that any bill which, if the latter Act had not passed, would have been void, "shall be deemed and taken to "have been made, drawn" etc., "for an illegal consideration," and the same consequences shall ensue. In those circumstances it was held that the law as it existed when the action was commenced must decide the rights of the parties in the suit, unless the Legislature express a clear intention to vary the relation of litigant parties to each other. In the case before us the very cause of action is taken away by the legislature, and the question of determination of the rights of the parties cannot possibly arise. The other decision rested on the principle thus stated in the head-note :

"Where persons having, as a class, certain privileges, are by statute subjected to certain liabilities, their privileges being expressly reserved to them and other persons having the same privileges, are afterwards, as a class, subjected to the same liabilities, but nothing is said of their privileges, their privileges still continue to exist."

That principle has no application to the facts of the present case.

[13] There has been some argument before us as to the continued threat to the right of the plaintiff in the almost identical clauses of the Land Reforms Bill now pending before the legislature. Mr. Das has suggested that the intention of the defendant is to take advantage of S. 31 (4), Constitution Act, when it comes into force on 26-1-1950, so as to make the acquisition of the plaintiff's property, without payment of adequate compensation, not liable to question in any Court. We are, however, not concerned with questions of motive, expediency or policy, nor with legislative ethics. It may even be doubted if the introduction of a Bill by itself constitutes any threat: the Bill may or may not be passed, or may be passed with different clauses. These are all speculative matters, and, in my opinion, quite outside the province of judicial enquiry on the present occasion. Obviously, what the position of the plaintiff may be when some new law is made cannot be determined now.

[14] For these reasons, my conclusion is that all the three questions involved in the preliminary issue must be answered against the plaintiff, and the suit must fail on that ground.

[15] I also agree with my learned brother as to costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 737 of 1950, D/- 28-8-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144 (4)—Order under —Clause (4) contemplates only change in nature of order and not a change in party against whom the order is made—Order changing party is without jurisdiction. [Para 3]

Anno : Cr. P. C., S. 144, N. 11, Pt. 3.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Order under — Revision—Interference with spent order—Practice of Patna High Court.

It is not the usual practice of the Patna High Court to interfere with an order of the Magistrate under S. 144, Criminal P. C., which has spent its force by lapse of time. But where the order affects the future rights of the parties, the High Court will interfere if it is illegal, even if the order has spent its force. Thus, where an order purported to have been passed under S. 144 (4) was without jurisdiction and, if it were not set aside, the parties would have been under misapprehension as to their rights to the crops which were standing, the order was set aside in revision though it had spent its force. 19 P. Nawal Kishore Prasad I and Devendra Prasad — for Petitioners; R. S. Sinha and A. K. Mitter — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The dispute in this case relates to 2 bighas being a portion of plot No. 537 in village Chak Pitambarpur. The petitioners claimed that the entire plot was recorded in the name of their ancestors, that they had been paying rent to the landlords for which they had obtained receipts and that they were in possession of the plot for a long time. The opposite party, on the contrary, asserted that in 1326 their ancestor Garib Das Singh had purchased the land by a sada sale-deed from Imrit Mahto. After the purchase of Garib Das Singh and after him the opposite party had come into possession of the land. On 17-3-1950, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate issued notice under S. 144, Criminal P. C., against one of the parties restraining them from going near the disputed land. On 9-4-1950, both the parties showed cause, and on 25-4-1950 the learned Magistrate made the order absolute in favour of party 1 and vacated the order against party 2.

[2] Party 1 moved the Additional District Magistrate of Patna who set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Purporting to act under S. 144 (4), he rescinded the order made against party 1 and "made the order under S. 144 absolute against the petitioners."

[3] The first question in this case is whether this order made by the Additional District Magistrate is within his jurisdiction. In support of this rule, learned counsel argued that under S. 144 (4), the Additional District Magistrate cannot substitute an order of his own forbidding the petitioners from going to the land and such an order was without jurisdiction. In my opinion, this argument is well-founded In Ganpat Singh v. Emperor, 3 Pat. L. J. 287 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 672 : 19 Cr. L. J. 880) a similar order passed by the District Magistrate of Gaya was held to be without jurisdiction. Learned counsel for the opposite party sought to distinguish this case on the ground that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had made a conditional order in the first instance against the petitioners, but it is material to notice that on 25-4-1950 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had expressly vacated the conditional notice against the petitioners. It is manifest that on 19-5-1950 the Additional District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order under S. 144 absolute against the petitioners, for S. 144 (4), Criminal P. C., contemplates only a change in the nature of the order made and not a change in the party against whom it is made. In my opinion, that portion of the order of the Additional District Magistrate by which he has made the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., absolute against the petitioners, is without jurisdiction.

[4] For the opposite party, it is pointed out that in any event the order of the Additional District Magistrate has spent its force by reason of expiry of two months to which its effect is confined, and the High Court ought not, therefore, to interfere in this case. This argument is correct for there are authorities to the effect that, it is not the usual practice of the Patna High Court to interfere with an order of the Magistrate which has spent its force by lapse of time. Learned counsel for the petitioners has pointed out that there are exceptional reasons in the present case. He has pointed out that the order was in the first place without jurisdiction, and, secondly, that there are crops standing, and if the order was not interfered with, parties may be under misapprehension as to their rights to the crops on the land. There are several authorities of this Court to the effect that where the order under S. 144 affects the future rights of the parties, the High Court will interfere if it is illegal, even if the order has spent its force. (See Panchkesar Kuar v. Madho Singh, 19 P.L.T. 796 and the Joint Agents I. G. N. & R. S. N. Co. Ltd., Digha v. Chandra Ketu Narain Singh, 14 P.L.T. 379 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 185 : 34 Cr. L. J. 717). In my opinion, there are circumstances in the present case which make it necessary for the High Court to interfere with the order of the Additional District Magistrate.

[5] On these grounds, I would make the rule absolute and set aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate dated 19-5-1950 by which he makes the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., absolute against the petitioners with respect to the land in dispute.

(a) T. P. Act (1882), S. 100—Creation of charge—Requirements.

The creation of a charge does not require the use of a particular form of words and a charge may be created even though the word "charge" is not used. All that is required is that the intention that the property shall be security for the payment of money is made clear and that the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, that is to say, there is no transfer of an interest in the property. A compromise between the plaintiff and the defendant in terms of which a decree is passed and which embodies an agreement that the property in question shall remain attached by the civil Court until the decretal debt is satisfied and shall be liable to be sold for that debt does not show an intention to make the property the security and therefore does not create a charge. Reuben J.—This appeal by the plaintiffs has been filed in the following circumstances.

[2] The plaintiffs are members of a joint Hindu family. Braja Nath Marwari, a former karta of the joint family, filed Money Suit No. 753 of 1928 against Ram Chandra Singh Modak and others. During the pendency of the suit, under the provisions of O. 38 of the Civil P. C., he obtained attachment of three villages Dhargram, Aria and Bamadih, belonging to the Modaks. The attachment was effected on 15-7-1928. On 14-10-1928, the suit was decreed on compromise, the plaintiff getting a decree for Rs. 1,700 payable in certain instalments. The petition of compromise which was made part of the decree contained a provision:

"That on the defendants failing to pay other instalments by the due date the whole of the unpaid balance of the decretal amount shall fall due and shall be realised by execution with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of default till realisation of the said sum, by sale of the attached property. The order of the attachment before judgment to subsist till the decree money is not satisfied."

The decree was put in execution in the year 1930 and the three attached villages were sold in execution of the decree on 18-8-1931. The purchase was made by the joint family of the plaintiffs as decree-holders and the sale was confirmed on 5-12 1931. The property was sold subject to a simple mortgage executed on 2 4-1922, by the Modaks in favour of the defendants of the present suit. Previous to the execution sale and during the pendency of the execution proceedings, the defendants of this suit had, on 10-4-1931, sued the Modaks on the foot of the simple mortgage bond of April 1922. In this suit, the joint family of the plaintiffs was not impleaded, nor was it made a party to the suit after the auction-sale. The mortgage suit was disposed of on compromise between the Modaks and the defendants of the present suit on 6 1-1932. The defendants put the mortgage decree in execution (Ex. Case No. 537 of 1932) and, on 17-1-1933, purchased the three mauzas in execution of the mortgage decree. The sale was confirmed on 18-2-1933, and the decree-holders auction-purchasers took delivery of possession on 9-9-1933. On 24 4-1944, the plaintiffs brought the present suit to redeem the mortgage of April 1922, contending that they were necessary parties to the mortgage suit of 1931 and that, not having been impleaded, they still have the right to redeem the mortgage. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordidate Judge. Hence, the present appeal.

[3] The purchase by which the plaintiffs became the owners of the property concerned (was ?) during the pendency of the mortgage suit. As such, it is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. The present right of the plaintiffs to redeem, therefore, depends on whether in the circumstances preceding their purchase of the property they were necessary parties to the mortgage suit of 1931. It is contended that they were necessary parties on two grounds, firstly, that by the compromise between Braja Nath Marwari and the Modaks, a charge on the property was created in favour of the joint family, and, secondly, that under S. 91 (i), T. P. Act, as it stood when they purchased the property in the execution sale, they were entitled to redeem the simple mortgage; this right cannot be taken away from them by any transaction or litigation between third parties.

[4] A charge is thus defined in S. 100, T. P. Act:

"Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law, made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property."

Charges, therefore, may be divided into two classes, those created by an act of parties and those created by operation of law. According to the plaintiffs, the charge on which they rely was created by an act of the parties, namely, the agreement embodied in the compromise of 1928. It is well settled that the creation of a charge does not require the use of a particular form of words and that a charge may be created even though the word "charge" is not used. All that is required is that the intention that the property shall be security for the payment of money is made clear and that the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, that is to say, there is no transfer of an interest in the property, and it is contended strenuously that the intention is manifest that the property in question should be security for the decretal debt.

[5] I find myself unable to accept this contention for the simple reason that by the agreement no liability on the property was imposed beyond the liability already imposed upon it by law. The relationship between the parties was not merely that of creditor and debtor but of decree-holder and judgment-debtor. The property in question had been attached under the provisions of O. 38, Civil P. C. Under the provisions of R. 11 of this Order, the attachment would, in ordinary course, continue after the passing of the decree and the property was liable to sale in execution of the decree without re-attachment. This is all that is provided for in the first portion of the passage which I have cited above.

The second portion of the citation provides that the attachment shall subsist till the decree is satisfied. That, again, is merely a reproduction of the provisions of O. 38, R. 11. There is, therefore, no new liability which has been created by this compromise. All that has happened is that the judgment-debtor has agreed that the decree-holder may proceed in execution of the decree against certain property of the judgment-debtor. That such an agreement does not amount to a charge is clear from a perusal of the judgment in Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, 18 Pat. 155 : (A.I.R. (36) 1939 Pat. 7.) Their Lordships were concerned with the question whether an attachment of property in execution of a decree creates a charge on that property. The reason given by them for answering this question in the negative apply mutatis mutandis to the present case. They pointed out, first of all, that all that is effected by an attachment is that the judgment-debtor is prevented from alienating it by a private transaction. This, however, does not affect court sales; for instance, where two decree-holders have attached the same property in execution of their money decrees but for some reason the decree-holder whose attachment is later succeeds in selling the property, the other decree-holder whose attachment is prior cannot again bring the property to sale. Had an attachment of the property created a charge, the later attachment would have been subject to the earlier one. So also the contention that an attachment creates a charge is inconsistent with the provisions of S. 73 of the Code relating to rateable distribution. This liability to court sales in execution of other decrees and to rateable distribution exists in the present case, and there is nothing in the compromise to avoid the liability. For the creation of a charge, it is necessary that the property in question should be made a security for the payment in question. This requires something more than an agreement not to alienate the property until the debt is satisfied in fact, a charge does not prevent alienation and a purchaser for value without notice of the charge gets a good title. It requires that the debt in question should be given a priority so far as this property is concerned. Such a priority is not created by a mere agreement that the property in question shall remain attached by the civil Court until the decretal debt is satisfied and shall be liable to be sold in execution for that debt. Hence, in my opinion, the compromise in this case does not show an intention to make the property the security and it did not create a charge.

[6] Reliance for the appellants was placed on the decision in Sheo Narain v. Lakhan, 24 Pat. 345 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 434). There, in addition to the agreement that the property would remain attached until the satisfaction of the entire decree, there were the words "and liable". It was these two words, imposing a liability on the property as distinct from a mere agreement that the property should remain attached and subject to execution, which were relied on by Beevor J., who delivered the leading judgment, for distinguishing the case from P. Sivanna v. Venkatakrishnamurthi, 19 I. C. 478 : (24 M. L. J. 474). Their Lordships in this latter case had to consider the effect of the following words in a compromise decree :

"Until the said amount of Rs. 13,000 is paid the items 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 of these immovables of Sch. A should not be dealt with by defendants 1 and 2 in any manner."

They decided that these words did not create a charge, observing :

"The promise contained in the compromise not to alienate the property to third persons till the payment of the plaintiffs' debt is only a covenant not to create any interest in it in favour of others, there is no expression of an intention to create an interest in the plaintiffs' favour. It is quite possible that a debtor, if he is unwilling to create any charge over his property, may enter into a covenant not to charge it in favour of others while declining to create a charge in favour of a particular creditor."

With respect, I may observe that the term "an interest" has been used somewhat loosely. The distinction between a simple mortgage and a charge is that the former creates an interest in the property and the latter does not. The term "interest" as used here by their Lordships merely refers to the effect of the charge, which is that the chargee's debt gets, as regards the charged property, priority over other debts. The loose use of the term makes no difference to the reasoning with which I agree, namely, that unless the intention to make the property a security appears a charge is not created.

[7] Reference has been made to Murat Singh v. Pheku Singh, 7 Pat. 581 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 587) ; Shiva Prasad Singh v. Beni Madhab, 1 Pat. 387 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Pat. 529) and Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal, 35 Cal. 837 : (7 C. L. J. 492) cases which are clearly distinguishable on the facts. In Murat's case : (7 Pat. 584 : A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 587) the relevant words occurred in a usufructuary mortgage bond :

'In the case of the aforesaid creditor being dispossessed of the holding in any way in that case he shall realise his dues from my one anna share in mauzas Dharwali and Gosainpur."

The intention to make this property security for the debt is evident. The relevant words in Shiva Prasad Singh's case : (1 Pat. 387 : A.I.R. (9) 1922 Pat. 529) are :

"This settled coal land, mines, ... shall ever be regarded as a security for the payment of the rent and cesses due, together with interest thereon due to you.

I shall not be competent by the sale gift, or remove the same, so long as the rent etc., due to you will remain unpaid."

Here, the property is expressly made security for the debt. This remark applies equally to the case of Gobind Chandra Pal : (35 Cal. 837 : 7 C. L. J. 492) where the relevant words are :

"That the properties specified in the schedule below shall be hypothecated for the realisation of the aforesaid money and that (we) the defendants shall not be able to create any incumbrance in the same."

Maina v. Bachchi, 28 ALL. 655 : (3 A.L.J. 551) which was also cited, relates to a consent decree for the payment of maintenance by the plaintiff and her representatives to the defendant. The relevant words in the petition of compromise were :

'If the plaintiff or her representatives should fail to pay to the defendant the aforesaid monthly sum at the end of each month, the defendant shall have power to recover monthly sum with interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from the property decreed by instituting a suit as she should like."

Here, too, the intention to make the property a security is manifest and, by adding the words "by instituting a suit", the plaintiffs made it clear that they were creating a liability outside the ordinary liability of the judgment-debtor's property to be taken in execution of a decree for money.

[8] Some support for the proposition contended for on behalf of the appellants is afforded by the case of Jawahir Mal v. Indomati, 36 ALL. 201 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 ALL. 187) The relevant words occurred in a decree inter partes on which the plaintiffs tried to base a suit for sale They were :

"I will not transfer this property by way of sale, a mortgage or gift, etc. so long as I do not repay this loan and if I do the transfer shall be void."

Their Lordships Richards. C. J and Banerji, J. differed as to the exact effect of the document, the former holding that it created a charge and the latter that the transaction amounted to a simple mortgage. Both, however, agreed that the intention of the executant of the document to make the property a security for the debt should be inferred. This inference was drawn by their Lordships, however, on the special circumstances of the case. Banerji, J. pointed out that the opening portion of the document is meaningless except on the assumption that the person who engrossed the document omitted to insert the word "mortgage" or "hypothecate" and in fact, the translators of the Court had inserted the word in order to give some meaning to the clause. This decision was followed by a Division Bench of Oudh Chief Court in Narain Dass v. Murli Dhar, 121 I C. 81 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Oudh 539). where their Lordships considered a stipulation in a consent decree in a money suit:

"That the defendant will not dispose of in any way his share in the Premier Aerated Company at Hazratganj until the satisfaction of the entire decretal amount."

Their Lordships differed from the decision in P. Sivanna v. Venkatakrishnamurthi, 19 I. C. 478 (24 M. L. J. 474), apparently, on the ground that that decision proceeded on a wrong idea that the creation of a charge requires the creation of an interest in the property. I have referred to this above. In my opinion, there is no reason to think that their Lordships of the Madras High Court were under a wrong impression on this point. The term "interest" was used by them in a non-technical sense, and this use does not in any way affect the correctness of their reasoning. Coming back to the facts of Narain Dass v. Murli Dhar, 121 I. C. 81 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Oudh 539), it must be noted that the property in that case was not under attachment. By the agreement in the compromise, therefore, the defendant placed upon himself some restriction as regards that property which did not exist from before. The agreement, therefore, was not like the agreement in the present case which imposed no new restriction either on the property or on the judgment-debtors. The remark I have just made applies also to the decision of a single Judge of the Nagpur High Court reported in Ganga Prasad v Ratanchand, I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 356 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Nag. 118), in which Niyogi, J. followed the decision in Jawahir Mal v. Indomati, 36 ALL. 201 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 187). The defendants judgment-debtors in a consent decree in the Court of Small Causes, Jubbulpore agreed not to alienate certain immovable property "till satisfaction of this decree" His Lordship pointed out that under S. 7, Civil P. C. the Small Cause Court is precluded from either issuing an injunction or attaching immovable property. He drew a distinction between a charge imposed by a decree of Court and a charge imposed by a private agreement. In view of the limitation on the powers of the Small Cause Court, he treated the case before him as governed by the principle relating to private agreements. From the facts of the case, it is clear that when the agreement between the parties was entered into, there was no restriction by operation of law or action of the Court on the right of the defendants to transfer the property. Such restriction as was placed on that power subsequently was due to the agreement alone. For the reasons I have given, the three decisions just referred to do not affect the view which I have expressed about the effect of the compromise of 1928.

[9] The conclusion to which I have arrived is supported by the decision of that learned Judge, Varadachariar J., in Ayyappa Naicker v. Tha- yammal, A. I. R. (23) 1935 Mad. 17 : (154 I. C. 736). His Lordship was concerned with a compromise in an execution proceeding relating to property already attached in the proceeding. It specifically referred to the attachment and provided that the attachment should continue to remain in force. It went on to say that, if the instalments agreed on in the compromise were not duly paid, the decree-holder would be entitled to recover the full amount due under the decree by bringing the properties to sale without fresh attachment. His Lordship pointed out that the language used must be construed with reference to the circumstances as they stood at the time of the compromise, namely, that the property was already attached and formed the subject-matter of the execution proceeding. He referred to O. 20 R. 11 (2), Civil P. C., which provides that, when a judgment-debtor is given an indulgence by way of instalments, the Court may grant that indulgence on such terms as to the attachment of the property or taking of security from him or otherwise as it thinks fit. This only carries out, he observes, the probable intention of the parties when the decree-holder is willing to oblige the debtor by postponing the payment. In the absence of expressed words creating a security, he saw no reason to think that the parties would have preferred such protection as the creation of a security would have afforded to the advantages arising from the continuance of the attachment which had already been made. These are observations which apply exactly to the present case. The terms of the compromise with which we are concerned provided nothing beyond the liability already existing at the time when the compromise was entered into. Therefore, there is no reason to think that the intention was to substitute for the protection given by the Civil Procedure Code the protection afforded by the creation of a charge. In the course of his decision, his Lordship makes an observation which supports the distinction drawn by Niyogi, J. between private agreements and other agreements and thus furnishes an explanation applicable to the decision in Jawahir Mal v. Indomati, 36 ALL. 201: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 187). His Lordship observes:

"It may be conceded that ordinarily when parties refer in a document to particular properties, as a source from which debt is to be paid or by the sale of which a debt is to be realised, there is some indication of an intention to make the property more directly liable than on a mere enforcement of a personal liability".

His Lordship adds in words which apply exactly to the case before us :

"Where, however, as in the present case, the facts recited in the document itself clearly show why the document refers to particular properties, and it also appears in what manner the properties are to be made available for the obligations arising under the document, it will not be right to ignore these circumstances and imply a kind of general intention to create security".

An attempt has been made to distinguish the present case from the reported cases on the ground that there was here a combination of two rights given to the decree holders, namely, a right under the compromise and a right by reason of the attachment of the property by the civil Court. I have already explained that under the compromise the decree-holders got nothing in addition to the rights they already had under the attachment, and this is one of the reasons which I have given for holding that no charge was created by the compromise.

[10] I come now to the second point urged on behalf of the appellants, that they had a statutory right to redeem the simple mortgage and this right cannot be taken away from them by any transaction or litigation between third parties. The statutory right is claimed by them under S. 91 (f), T. P. Act, as it stood on the date of the compromise. The section then read:

"Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of the mortgaged property;

(f) the judgment-creditor of the mortgagor, when he has obtained execution by attachment of the mortgagor's interest in the property. . . . . ".

When the mortgage suit was instituted, this section stood in its present form, and the only clause which can possibly apply is Cl. (a) :

"any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) who has any interest in, or charge upon, the property mortgaged or in or upon the right to redeem the same."

It is not necessary for the purposes of the present case to decide whether S. 91, in its original or in its amended form applies. We may assume that the original form of this section which expressly mentions the judgment-creditor who has obtained execution by attachment applies It has been held in Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, 18 Pat. 155: (A. I R. (26) 1939 Pat. 7), that, even where the original form of S. 91, applies, such a judgment-creditor is not a necessary party in a suit based on the mortgage The correctness of this decision has been sought to be questioned on the ground that their Lordships did not consider the aspect of the matter which has been formulated as the second point urged on behalf of the appellants. A complete answer to this objection is furnished by the following passage from the judgment of Chatterji J. at p. 168 of the report:

"There is a still greater difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs. Whatever rights they might have as attaching decree-holders, their attachment and with it those rights came to an end when they became the purchasers of the attached properties on 9 9 1918. After their purchase, they could no longer exercise their right of redemption as attaching decree-holders".

Here, the right of the decree-holders to redeem the mortgage under the old S. 91 (f), remained in existence till their purchase of the property in August 1931—I am assuming for the purposes of argument that the old section applies to the present case. When they became the purchasers of the property, however, that right was extinguished by their own act. After the purchase, they could only seek to redeem the mortgage as being the owners of the equity of redemption. But, as their purchase was pendente lite, they acquired the property subject to the pending litigation and their interest was extinguished by the sale in execution of the mortgage decree.

[11] In passing, a reference was made to Mt. Fatima Begam v. Bansidhar, A. I. R. (19) 1932 ALL. 356: (136 I. C 810). The decision in that case is set out in the following head-note:

"C, who held a simple money-decree against B, attached the property mortgaged by B, in favour of A, in execution of his decree before the institution of the mortgage suit by A, and purchased same in auction-sale held in execution of his decree after the institution of the mortgage suit, and subsequently A, obtained a decree in the mortgage suit (in which C, was not impleaded) and purchased the same property in execution of his decree but was resisted in taking possession by C. Held: that A, was entitled to the property purchased by him as against C but C, had the right to redeem the property and should have been made a party to A's suit".

This is exactly contrary to the view taken in Baiju Lal v. Thakur Prasad, 18 Pat. 155, (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat 7). Their Lordships held that a person entitled under the old S. 91 (f), T. P. Act to redeem a mortgaged property is a necessary party under O. 34, R 1, Civil P. C. In the Patna case, however, it was pointed out that O. 34, R. 1, speaks of persons "having an interest. . . . . in the right of redemption" and they have given reasons for holding that this expression is not identical with "persons having the right to redeem". I am bound by the previous decision of this Court, which accepted the view of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts in preference to that of the Allahabad High Court.

[12] On the above findings, this appeal fails, and I do not feel called upon to consider a point of limitation urged on behalf of the defendants-respondents, which is that the plaintiffs have not obtained a sale certificate for their purchase on 18-8-1931, that they have not obtained delivery of possession in pursuance thereof and have never been in possession of the property, and that, therefore, by the time they instituted the suit on 24-4 1944, they had no subsisting interest in the property.

[14] Jha C. J. — I agree. The question whether a charge was created by "act of parties" under the petition of compromise depends upon the construction of the document itself. I read the document as a whole and construe the words in the context in which they have been used. It does not appear to me from the language used that there is any word or expression appearing in the four corners of the instrument itself from which it can be inferred that a charge was created by the parties on the properties under attachment. We were referred to some decisions, which have been discussed by my learned brother, where it was held on the interpretation of certain words that a charge had been created but those decisions cannot be used by us as a guide in deciding what the true meaning of the words used in the compromise petition is. It is well settled that in construing a document two cardinal rules of construction have to be borne in mind.

[15] (1) In construing a written instrument the plain meaning of the express words are to be rigidly adhered to irrespective of the question of the intention of the parties. In elucidating this principle, Lord Wenslevdale in the case of Monypenny v. Monypenny, (1861) 9 H. L. C. 114 at p. 146: (31 L. J. Ch. 269) has laid down the rule of construction thus:

"The question is not what the parties to a deed may have intended to do by entering into that deed, but what is the meaning of the words used in that deed: a most important distinction in all cases of construction, and the disregard of which often leads to erroneous conclusion."

[16] (2) When the question is one of pure construction of a written instrument, decision based upon the construction of another document, couched in similar but not the same language, is not binding as an authority. In support of this rule, I may quote the observation of Jessel, M. R., in the case of Aspden v. Seddon, (1875) 10 Ch. 394 at p. 397: (44 L. J. Ch. 359):

"No Judge objects more than I do to referring to authorities merely for the purpose of ascertaining the construction of a document; that is to say, I think it is the duty of a Judge to ascertain the construction of the instrument before him, and not to refer to the construction put by another Judge upon an instrument, perhaps similar, but not the same. The only result of referring to authorities for that purpose is confusion and error, in this way, that if you look at a similar instrument, and say that a certain construction was put upon it and that it differs only to such a slight degree from the document before you, that you do not think the difference sufficient to alter the construction, you miss the real point of the case, which is to ascertain the meaning of the instrument before you. It may be quite true that in your opinion the difference between the two instruments is not sufficient to alter the construction, but at the same time the Judge who decided on that other instrument may have thought that that very difference would be sufficient to alter the interpretation of that instrument. You have, in fact, no guide whatever . . . . . There is, first document A, and a Judge formed an opinion as to its construction. Then came document B, and some other Judge has said that it differs very little from document A -- not sufficiently to alter the construction—therefore he construes it in the same way. Then comes document C, and the Judge there compares it with document B, and says it differs very little, and therefore he shall construe it in the same way. And so the construction has gone on until we find a document which is in totally different terms from the first, and which no human being would think of construing in the same manner, but which has by this process come to be construed in the same manner."

[17] He reiterated the same principle in the case of In re New Callao, (1883) 22 Ch. D. 484 at p. 488 : (52 L. J. Ch. 283) and put the proposition thus :

"Nothing is better settled than that the construction put upon an instrument by a Court of law or equity is not binding on another Court of law or equity, even of inferior jurisdiction, as regards the construction of an instrument couched in somewhat similar language."

Collins, M. R. in the case of Foulger v. Arding, (1902) 1 K. B. 700 at p. 704 : (71 L. J. K. B. 499) has also put the canon of construction thus :

"It appears to me that a lamentable waste of judicial time and power is often involved in examining decisions with regard to the meaning of words which, with one context, are capable of one meaning, and, with another context, of another meaning."

Therefore, bearing in mind these cardinal canons of construction, I find myself unable to agree with the contention of the appellant that the three items of properties mentioned in the petition of compromise were made security for the payment of the debt due to the appellant.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 30 (1) (a)—Defective order—Appeal.

Although an order of the Commissioner is defective in form in that the amount of compensation is not specified as a lump sum, the appellant cannot be deprived of his statutory right of an appeal on account of this defect. [Para 3]

Anno. Workmen's Comp. Act, S. 30 N. 4.

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 30 (3)—Appeal filed in time—Delay in filing certificate—Condonation—Sufficient cause.

Where the appeal was filed in time but it was not accompanied by the certificate of the Commissioner and by the time it was filed the appeal had become time-barred, and it was urged that the time occupied in taking a certified copy of the order appealed against should be taken into consideration in applying S. 5, Limitation Act and that the appeals under the Act, not being very common, the procedure of filing a certificate was unknown to the counsel:

Held that these were sufficient grounds for extension of time in order to condone the delay in filing the certificate. [Para 5]

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 19 (1)—Question whether person is workman—Commissioner's jurisdiction to decide—It and when ousted.

All that S. 19 means is that if there is an agreement between the parties in regard to the question whether the injured person is or is not a workman, the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to decide it is ousted. But the section does not provide that even if there is no agreement between the parties on this point, and even though the materials might indicate that the employee was not a workman at all as contemplated by the law, yet the Commissioner should assume that he was a workman and proceed to award compensation. G. P. Das and Shambhu Nath—for Appellants ; Basanta Chandra Ghose—for Respondent.

Sarjoo Prasad J.—This is an appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act (VIII [8] of 1923) preferred on behalf of the employer against whom an award of compensation has been made by the Commissioner appointed under the Act. The appellant has been directed to pay a sum of Rs. 2,400 by way of compensation to the respondent who happens to be the widow and dependent of the deceased Farid Khan said to be a workman employed by the appellant.

[2] The facts giving rise to this appeal are that Farid Khan, the husband of the respondent, Mt. Mariam, was employed as a mason by the appellant in construction of a building. The case of the appellant is that this building was a residential building, the appellant himself being a trader in mica. The said mason was employed on a wage of Rs. 2/8 per day. He had worked for five or six days on the said construction, when he fell down from the roof of the house which was under construction and received injuries as a result of which he subsequently died by midnight of the same day. This unfortunate incident happened on 4-12-1948. On 5-12-1948, the appellant informed the police about the death of the respondent's husband, and on 14-12-1948, the appellant is said to have paid a sum of Rs. 1900 and another sum of Rs. 500, in all Rs. 2,400 to the respondent for which he obtained a receipt duly signed by her. This receipt is dated 14-12-1948, and has been produced by the appellant. It shows that the widow received Rs. 2,400 by way of compensation and by agreement waived all claims against the appellant for compensation. The respondent Mt. Mariam does not specifically dispute the genuineness of the receipt but she alleges that she received only a sum of Rs. 500 on the death of her husband and was not paid any more money. It appears that the police thereafter submitted a final report in which they stated that Farid Khan was working as a mason over the building of the appellant and he fell down from the roof of the building which is 14′ high from the level of the ground while he was setting bricks on the northern wall of the building. The report also shows that Mt Mariam is alleged to have been paid Rs. 500 out of a sum of Rs. 2,400 and it was further reported that the proprietor might be asked to pay compensation to the widow. On this report, it appears that a proceeding for payment of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act was started and subsequently on 23.12-1949, a petition was also filed on behalf of the respondent claiming compensation to the tune of Rs. 2,000. On this application having been filed which was, as the Commissioner says, to "regularise the demand," the appellant was ordered by an order dated 27-12-1949, to deposit the amount into the sub-treasury which may be found on calculation payable to the widow of the deceased, the respondent in this appeal.

[3] This appeal has been accordingly filed against the order of the Commissioner, dated 27-12-1949, which purports to be an order awarding compensation. Now, S. 30 (1) (a), Workmen's Compensation Act is that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from an order of the Commissioner awarding as compensation a "lump sum." The order does not indicate that any lump sum has been fixed in the order in question, but there is no order on the record showing that any lump sum had been fixed except the previous order in which tentatively the appellant had been asked to deposit a sum of Rs 2000 by way of compensation. The appellant submits that in pursuance of this order dated 27-12-1949, a sum of Rs. 2400 calculated to be payable as compensation he has been called upon to deposit. Therefore the defect in the form of the order cannot deprive him of a right to appeal which is available to him under the law. There is no doubt that this appears to be the final order passed in the case, and although the order is defective in form, yet the appellant cannot be deprived of his statutory right of an appeal on account of this defect in the garb in which the order has been clothed. It is under this order that he has been directed to pay the lump amount of compensation of Rs. 2400. Therefore, this order is undoubtedly an appealable order provided it conforms to the other requirements of the law, namely that the appeal involves a substantial question of law and that it is not otherwise barred.

[4] On behalf of the respondent, a preliminary objection has been raised as to the maintainability of the appeal, though of course in reply to the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellant The contention is that the appeal is time barred. According to the contention of the respondent, the appeal was filed on 25-2-1950. It is urged that the appeal could not have been against the order dated 27-12-1949, and that it was really against the order dated 28-11-1949, under which the amount of compensation was fixed. The respondent says that the appeal, beyond 60 days from the date of this order dated 28-11-1949 is hopelessly barred under S. 30 (2) of the Act. The order dated 28-11-1949, is not the order appealed against and could not have been the order appealed against. The memorandum of appeal quite clearly shows that the appeal is directed against the order of the Commissioner dated 27-12 1949. That apart, it is quite clear that the order dated 28-11-1949 was not a final order. The order reads thus :

> "It appears that the amount of Rs. 2,000 compensation was calculated roughly. Call second party to file papers regarding service length and other particulars regarding service of the deceased by 10.12."

[5] Evidently this order was not a final order because the Commissioner required further evidence to determine the amount of compensation paid and it was only when the further materials were produced before him that the final order was passed on 27-12-1949. It cannot, therefore, be contended with any show of reason that the appeal should be taken as against the order dated 28-11-1949, and not the one dated 27-12-1949. I have already pointed out that even this order is defective in form because even here the amount of compensation has not been a specified as a lump sum, but it is the only final order on the record in pursuance of which the appellant has been directed to pay the amount of compensation and there is no other final order. Therefore I am bound to assume that this is the order which fixed the lump amount of compensation, and is, therefore, appealable. The appeal is, therefore, within 60 days from the order appealed against and is not barred by limitation. The respondent has, however, raised another argument in support of her contention that the appeal is barred even if it is held that the appeal is directed against the order dated 27-12-1949. Section 30 (1) in its last proviso enjoins that no appeal by an employer under cl. (a) shall lie unless the memorandum of appeal is accompanied with a certificate by the Commissioner to the effect that the appellant has deposited with him the amount payable under the order appealed against. It is contended that no such certificate accompanied the memorandum of appeal at the time when it was filed but subsequently when the attention of the appellant was drawn to this fact, he produced a certificate and filed it in Court after making the necessary deposit on 2-3-1950. By that time, the contention of the respondent is that the appeal had become already time barred. This contention is undoubtedly a serious contention. On the language of the section it is doubtful whether when an appeal has been filed within the period of limitation allowed by law, it would be time-barred merely because it is not accompanied with a certificate by the Commissioner to the effect that the appellant has deposited with him the amount payable under the order appealed against. It says that no appeal by an employer under sub-cl. (a) shall lie unless the certificate is given. In other words, if the certificate is not produced at some stage before the hearing of the appeal, the appeal will not be entertained. The limitation of 60 days applies to the preferring of an appeal. It is no doubt true that the certificate in question may be a very material document which the law enjoins to be filed in order that the appeal may be entertained, but I feel doubtful whether merely because of the non-production of this certificate within the period of limitation the appeal will become barred. In this case, the certificate was produced on 2-3-1950, and the appeal itself had been filed within the period of limitation. But even if it is assumed for the sake of argument that the memorandum of appeal without being accompanied by the certificate in question was incompetent, the question arises whether time could be extended by this Court and the delay in the production of the certificate in question condoned. There is no doubt that under S. 30 (3) of the Act the provisions of S 5, Limitation Act, apply to appeals under this section. The appellant has, therefore, asked us to condone the delay, if any, on the ground that there was sufficient cause for doing so. It is urged that there was some time occupied in taking a certified copy of the order appealed against, and that time should be taken into consideration in applying S. 5, Limitation Act, and it is also urged that appeals under the Workmen's Compensation Act, not being very common, the procedure of filing a certificate was unknown to the learned counsel, Mr. G P. Das, (who himself is a counsel of long standing and experience), until the matter was brought to his notice by the stamp report. In my opinion, these are sufficient grounds for extension of time in order to condone the delay in filing the certificate of the Commissioner as required by the law. There is no doubt no formal application before us under S. 5, Limitation Act, but these undisputed facts are there; and we can take into consideration these factors in deciding the question of limitation. That being so, I hold, in the first place, that the appeal is not barred, and even if it were taken to be so, the delay, if any, should be condoned under S. 5, Limitation Act.

[6] Turning to the merits of the appeal, the learned counsel for the appellant has urged three points for our consideration. He contend's that the deceased was not a workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act; (2) that the amount of compensation was not properly determined as required by S. 5, Workmen's Compensation Act; and (3) that there being already an agreement under which the liabilities of the parties had been adjusted and a memorandum filed in Court, the Commissioner acted with material irregularity in not recording the memorandum in a register prescribed by law under S. 28, Workmen's Compensation Act. I will deal with these points in the order in which they have been urged.

[7] The word "workman" has been defined in S. 2 (n) of the Act. I shall refer only to the relevant portion of the definition. "Workman" means any person (other than a person whose employment is of a casual nature and who is employed otherwise than for the purposes of the employer's trade or business) who is: (ii) employed on monthly wages not exceeding three hundred rupees, in any such capacity as is specified in Scb. II. For the appellant it is contended that the employment of Farid Khan, the deceased, was of a casual nature and he was employed otherwise than for the purpose of the employer's trade or business. The deposition of witness 1 on behalf of the appellant is that Farid Khan commenced work in the house of his master only 5 or 6 days before he died, and his malik deals in mica, and that Farid Khan did not do any work in the mica business. It is, therefore, argued that he did not come within the definition of the word "workman" under the Workmen's Compensation Act. It is further to be noticed that Scb. II provides the following as answering the definition of "workman" within S. 2 (1) (n) of the Act subject to the provision of that section. It provides under Art. (viii) of Scb II that "any person employed in the construction, repair or demolition of (a) any building which is designed to be or is or has been more than one storey in height above the ground or twenty feet or more from the ground level to the apex of the roof is a "workman" under the Act."

Now, there is no evidence here that the building from which Farid Khan fell and received the injuries was a building of this type. On the contrary, the final report submitted by the police on the basis of which the proceedings appear to have been started shows that the deceased fell down from the roof of a building which was only 14 feet high from the level of the ground while he was setting bricks on the northern wall of the building. Neither party has argued before us that this report has not been properly brought on the records of the case and has not been proved by the person who made the report. But as it appears to have been the basis of the proceedings about which I presently have to make my comments, it seems to have been admitted in the record by the Sub-divisional Magistrate who also happens to have the power of a Commissioner under this Act. Now, there is no finding by the learned Commissioner as to whether Farid Khan, the person employed, answers the description of a workman having regard to these material considerations urged on behalf of the appellant. The respondent, however, contends that it is not open to the appellant to raise this question now before this Court. The respondent points out that when notice was issued to the appellant to show cause why he should not deposit a sum of Rs. 2000 by way of compensation by the Commissioner, he did not urge before him that the deceased Farid Khan was not a workman within the meaning of the Act, and that, therefore, no action could be taken against the appellant. But, on the other hand, he filed a petition in reply stating that Mt. Mariam, widow of the deceased Farid Khan, the present respondent, had amicably settled up the matter with the appellant and the appellant in pursuance thereof had paid a sum of Rs. 2400 instead of Rs. 2000 to her in presence of respectable gentlemen for which she had granted a written receipt of the payment. It is, therefore, urged that the appellant having failed to raise this contention before the learned Commissioner, it was not necessary for him to determine whether the deceased Farid Khan was or was not a workman within the meaning of the Act. Reliance is placed on S. 19 (1) of the Act which says :

"If any question arises in any proceedings under this Act as to the liability of any person to pay compensation (including any question as to whether a person injured is or is not a workman)...the question shall, in default of agreement, be settled by a Commissioner."

[8] It is argued that there being apparently no disagreement in regard to this question, it was not for the Commissioner to settle it. Section 19 does not altogether bar the consideration of the question as to whether a person injured is or is not a workman. All that it means is that if there is an agreement between the parties in regard to this question, then the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to decide it is ousted. But the section does not provide that even if there is no agreement between the parties on this point, and even though the materials might indicate that the employee was not a workman at all as contemplated by the law, yet the Commissioner should assume that he was a workman and proceed to award compensation. Here the contention of the appellant in evidence appears to have been that he was a casual employee and not employed for the purposes of the mica trade or business which is really the trade and business of the employer. This does not appear to have been challenged in the evidence of the respondent, yet the matter was left undecided by the learned Commissioner who proceeded to assess the amount of compensation. I can quite understand a case where parties have definitely agreed both as to the person for whom compensation is claimed being a workman and also as to the amount of the compensation. In such a case undoubtedly the jurisdiction of the Commissioner is ousted, and it would not be necessary for him to decide this question. But on the language of S. 19, it is difficult for me to hold that even where the point is a moot point, and even where the evidence might indicate that the employee was not a workman as required by the law, the Commissioner will have no jurisdiction to decide those points. In fact, the very object of the Act is for payment of compensation in respect of an injury caused to a "workman," and if an individual is not a workman at all, he may have his remedies under some other law for recovery of damage, but not under the Workmen's Compensation Act. In the petition which was filed by the appellant in answer to the show cause notice it is not anywhere shown that the appellant admitted that Farid Khan, the deceased was a workman as understood by the Workmen's Compensation Act. It is true he says that the matter had been settled between the widow of the deceased and the appellant amicably in presence of respectable gentlemen, but it is nowhere admitted that the deceased was a workman as understood by the Workmen's Compensation Act. The question, therefore, in my opinion, was an important question and should have been considered by the learned Commissioner before deciding about the compensation payable to the respondent.

[9] The next contention is also important. Section 5 of the Act deals with the method of calculation of wages. Clause (a) of the section applies to those cases where the workman has, during the continuance of not less than twelve months immediately preceding the accident, been in the service of the employer who is liable to pay compensation. This clause will not evidently apply to the present case because the employee had been working in the building only 5 or 6 days before he died. Clause (b) of the section applies to those cases where the whole of the continuous period of service immediately preceding the accident during which the workman was in the service of the employer who is liable to pay the compensation was less than one month, and cl. (c) applies in all other cases where the monthly wages shall be thirty times the total wages earned in respect of the last continuous period of service immediately preceding the accident from the employer who is liable to pay compensation divided by the number of days comprising such period. Now from the language of the section it is plain that the specific clause applicable to the present case would be cl. (b) because the whole of the continuous period of service immediately preceding the accident was less than one month. It is true that the employee in this case had not been on monthly wages. From the evidence it appears that he was getting Rs. 2-8-0 a day. It was pointed out by Beaumont C. J., in Ellermans' City and Hull Lines v. Asis Thomas, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Bom. 110 : I. L. R. (1938) Bom. 44 that

"the reference to employment on monthly wages in S. 2 (1), sub cl. (n), means employment at wages which do not exceed an average of Rs. 300 a month. It seems to me quite impossible, reading this Act as a whole to say that it was limited to workmen who are employed by the month so that it would not include workmen employed by the day or by the week or by the year. If that were the meaning of the Act, every employer could get out of it by employing his workmen otherwise than by the month. I feel no doubt whatever that the meaning of the expression 'monthly wages not exceeding three hundred rupees' means wages which do not exceed an average of Rs. 300 a month."

From this it follows that a daily wage earner also may be regarded as a workman provided he fulfils the other conditions of the definition. I am at present on the question of method of calculation of wages and I was saying that cl. (b) is the specific clause of S. 5 which would apply to the present case. Now, if this is a provision under which the assessment should be calculated, then the assessment does not appear to have been legally made. Under cl. (b), it should be either on the basis that the monthly wages of the workman should be deemed to be the monthly average amount which during the twelve months immediately preceding the accident was being earned by the workman employed on the same work by the same employer, or, if there was no workman so employed, by a workman employed on similar work in the same locality. For the appellant it has been rightly contended that there is no evidence given in this case to prove either of the two factors on which the wages may be calculated in the case of the deceased worker with whom we are concerned. The Court below appears to have proceeded to assess the amount of compensation on the basis of the calculation as provided in cl. (c) of S. 5. This, in my opinion, was an incorrect basis. As I have said, the calculation should have been made under cl (b) of S. 5 and the materials required to be proved in making that calculation should have been called for, if available.

[10] I shall now come to the third contention advanced by the appellant which, in my opinion is the most substantial contention. The appellant contends that the amount of a lump sum payable as compensation had been settled by agreement between the widow of the deceased worker, the present respondent, on the one hand, and the appellant, on the other, and a memorandum of the same had been prepared in the form of a receipt which bears the thumb impression of the respondent and has been witnessed by six other witnesses, one of them being a District Board overseer. The document has been produced and has been marked as Ex. B in the case. As this is a very material document I may as well reproduce the whole of its contents. It runs as follows :

"I am Mariam Nissa, widow of Farid Jan deceased, resident of Kharagdiha, P. S. Jamua, district Hazaribagh and I admit as follows :

That my husband died on 4-12-48 meeting an accident.

That I am fully satisfied that the Company which employed him is quite innocent.

That having received Rs. 2400 (twenty four hundred rupees) by way of compensation I put my signature and pen mark. In future I will have no claim against the company."

(His Lordship referred to the evidence and proceeded : The evidence of these witnesses which I have no reason to doubt in the least very clearly indicates that the document in question was a genuine document and contained an agreement between the parties in regard to the amount of compensation and the payment thereof. The agreement ought to have been recorded by the learned Commissioner as provided in S. 28, Workmen's Compensation Act. The learned Commissioner, however, refused to record the same. In doing so he made the following observation:

"Though evidence has been recorded, I do not find it necessary to go into it. I find from perusal of S. 8 (1), Workmen's Compensation Act (VIII [8] of 1923) that payment should be made through the Commissioner and any payment made directly by an employer shall not be deemed to be a payment of compensation. In this case the payment, if at all made, has definitely not been made through the Commissioner. The opposite party says that there was mutual agreement and as such the payment was made outside the Court. But in that case the opposite party should have at least informed the Court or should have executed a memorandum of agreement as required under Ss. 28 and 29 of the Act . . . . "

[11] Now, this, in my opinion, seems to be a clear misconception of the provisions of the law.

The document (Ex. B) is clearly a memorandum which shows that the compensation payable had been settled by an agreement between the parties, and the memorandum in question had been produced before the Commissioner. The law then requires that the Commissioner shall on being satisfied as to its genuineness record the memorandum in a register in the prescribed manner. I do not understand what the Commissioner means by saying "in that case the opposite party should have executed the memorandum of agreement as required under Ss. 28 and 29 of the Act."

The memorandum was already there executed by the respondent and bearing her thumb mark witnessed by several witnesses most of them being disinterested residents of the place, and having considered the evidence, I feel no doubt in my mind that it was a genuine agreement If the learned Commissioner had applied his mind to the provisions of the law and proceeded to consider the evidence as I have done, I have no hesitation in thinking that he would have come to the same conclusion, namely, that the memorandum regarding the agreement was a genuine memorandum, and, therefore, the Commissioner was bound to record the same in a register as prescribed by the law. The Commissioner has not proceeded to do so. I have, therefore, no option but to set aside the order of the learned Commissioner and to direct that the memorandum in question should be registered by him as required by Ss. 28 and 29 of the Act. I consider it unnecessary to send the case on remand for the purpose of determining the genuineness of the document when on a consideration of the evidence, I feel that there is no doubt as to its genuineness. In this view of the matter it would be unnecessary now for the Commissioner to decide the other two questions raised by the learned counsel for the appellant inasmuch as the agreement in question concludes the matter.

[12] I cannot, however, part with this case without making a few observations in regard to the irregularity of the procedure adopted by the learned Commissioner even from the very stage of the initiation of the proceedings. A reference to the order sheet shows that the proceedings were initiated as early as 5-1-1949, not on any claim for compensation filed by the respondent as required by S. 10 (a) of the Act but upon the report of the police. It is true that in rare cases the Commissioner may decide any claim to compensation in any case notwithstanding that notice had not been given or the claim had not been preferred in due time as provided in sub-s. (1) of S. 10, if he is satisfied that the failure to give notice or to prefer a claim was due to sufficient cause. There is no such case here. In fact the lady, the respondent, never moved in the matter at all and very probably never intended to move in view of the settlement between the parties. But the Sub-divisional Magistrate who was also the Commissioner issued notice on the police report directing the appellant to show cause why he should not pay Rs. 2,000 by way of compensation to the dependent of the deceased worker. When no reply was received to this notice, he directed an acknowledgment due registered letter to be sent to the appellant to deposit the money by 30-4-1949. Then on 30-4-1949, the appellant filed a petition to which I have already referred in course of my judgment. In this petition the appellant stated that the matter had been amicably settled between the parties, and that the widow of the deceased Farid Khan had been paid Rs. 2400 as compensation and filed a receipt (Ex. B) in support of the same. This petition accompanied as it was with the memorandum Ex. B must be treated as one under S. 28 of the Act. The Commissioner then directed notice to be issued on the widow to appear before him for verification. He does not appear to have been conscious at this stage of the existence of S. 28, Workmen's Compensation Act, as his subsequent order shows, yet it must be assumed that the order of 30-4-1949, asking the widow to appear for verification purports to have been under S. 28 of the Act. On the next date the respondent did not appear, and the Commissioner directed the Sub-Inspector of police to make her appear before him on 10-6-1949, and on 10th of June the respondent appeared for the first time when she denied having received the entire Rs. 2400 but admitted receipt of only Rs. 500. She was then called upon to produce her witnesses to prove her case. It should be noted that on this date when she appeared she did not prefer any claim for compensation. After two adjournments on 8-8-1949, she produced a witness. But as this was not sufficient, she was asked to produce all the witnesses on the next date, that is, 20-8-1949, when her witnesses were examined and the case was adjourned to 13th of September for the evidence of the opposite party, that is, the appellant. The second party, meaning the appellant, produced his witnesses on 5-10-1949, when his witnesses were examined. The Commissioner then directed the matter to be put up for hearing on 8-11-1949, which was again adjourned to the 23rd of November when he heard the parties and directed that the matter should be put up on the 10th of December for orders. Thus he should have proceeded to decide on the evidence whether the memorandum Ex. B was or was not a genuine agreement between the parties. This he did not do but in the mean time on 23-11-1949, a claim petition for the first time was filed by the respondent which the learned Commissioner says was "to regularise the demand". Now, the Commissioner having heard the evidence in regard to the genuineness of the agreement should have proceeded to decide this matter. But as I have shown from his order he refused to do so and then on the application filed on 23 11-1949 he passed the order of compensation. If the learned Commissioner had observed the procedure laid down under the law, the parties would have been saved much of the unnecessary cost and harassment caused to them. I do not mean to suggest that the claim petition filed on the 23rd November was beyond time because the workman's death occurred on 4-12-1949. But even this claim petition was not a regular claim petition. It is quite apparent that it had been filed at the end of the proceedings when the parties had been heard in regard to this matter of genuineness of the settlement, and adduced their evidence on the point. There is an allegation made in the petition that some notice of claim was served upon the employer but no such notice has been produced on the record. In my opinion, therefore, most of the procedures adopted by the learned Commissioner appear to have been illegal and misconceived. The procedure which may be deemed to be regular is from the stage of his order dated 30-4-1949, up to the stage of his order dated 23 11-1949, when he again erred in entertaining the petition for compensation dated 23-11-1949, filed by the respondent which he erroneously thought was to regularise the demand. I have held that there was a genuine agreement between the parties as required by S. 28 of the Act, and, therefore, the agreement should be registered by the Commissioner as it was his bounden duty to do so.

[13] In the circumstances, I would allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Commissioner directing the payment of compensation by the appellant, and I would order that the settlement by agreement as embodied in Ex. B being a genuine settlement, this memorandum should be recorded by the Commissioner in a register as prescribed by law and the case disposed of accordingly. I do not think that it would be proper in this case to award any costs to the appellant, and I would, therefore, direct that each party should bear its own costs throughout.

P. R. Das, Arun Chandra Mitra, A. K. Bose and S. N. Bose for Petitioner; K. K. Verma, P. N. Gour, R. P. Katriar, Thakur Guru Sewak Singh and Advocate-General—for Opposite Party.

Das J. — On the application of Sri Subodh Gopal Bose, whom I shall hereafter call the petitioner, this Court issued a rule on the opposite parties, eight in number, to show cause why they should not be proceeded against for contempt of Court, either for wilful disobedience of an order of injunction passed by this Court on 16-12 1949, or for aiding or abetting the said disobedience. The opposite parties are (1) Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., a Company registered under the Companies Act, 1913, and carrying on business with their registered office at Dalmianagar, Police Station Dehri in the district of Shahabad ; (2) Sri R. N. Pandey. Sub divisional Magistrate, Sasaram; (3) Sri B Singh, Sub-Inspector of Police, Police Station Rohtas, district

Shahabad; (4) Sri Hari Dutt, described as Attorney for Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd.; (5) Sri K. B. Upadhaya, described as Secretary of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co, Ltd. and of Messrs. Rohtas Quarries Ltd.; (6) Sri Fakirchand Maheswari, Quarry Manager, Rohtas Quarries Ltd.; (7) Sri Shanti Prasad Jain, alleged to be the managing Director of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd.; and (8) the Rohtas Quarries Ltd., a company registered under the Companies Act, 1913, and carrying on business with their registered office at Dalmianagar, Police Station Dehri in the district of Shahabad.

[2] The facts and circumstances which led to the order of injunction referred to above, have been set out in detail in Subodh Gopal Bose v. Provinces of Bihar, A.I.R. (37) 1950 Pat. 222 :(31 P.L.T. 100). It is, I think, unnecessary to set out again those facts in detail. There have been a series of protracted litigation with regard to upper and lower Murli hill, and the facts relating to that litigation have been stated and re-stated in several reported decisions, to some of which a reference was made by us in Subodh Gopal Bose v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat 222 : (31 P. L. T. 100). All that is necessary in the present case is to give a very brief resume of the facts so far as they are relevant here.

[3] On 1-4-1908, Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co., Ltd., obtained leases from Government in respect of Murli hill. Messrs. Octavius Steel Co. were then the managing agents of the Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd. The two leases were for twenty years, and related one to upper Murli hill and the other to lower Murli hill. It may be noted that in the lower Murli hill, Government did not have any right in the surface. On 10-12-1910, in Notification No. 3050-L. A. of that date, Government delaclared its intention to aquire a semi-circular piece of land in lower Murli hill, within village Sambauta, comprising an area of 30.97 acres for the construction of sidings of the Dehri Rohtas Tramway Co., now known as the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. The acquisition was completed and possession delivered on 12-7-1912. The position of this semi-circular piece of land will appear from the map which was prepared at the time of the acquisition. This map is marked 'Y' and is part of the annexure to the affidavits filed on behalf of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., Messrs. Octavius Steel Co. were also the managing agents of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. at the time. In 1913, the record-of-rights was finally published; but the survey maps of the two villages Baknaur and Sambauta, within which lower Murli hill was comprised, were prepared in the years 1911-12. They are Exs. A-1 and A2 forming part of the annexures of the affidavits filed by the petitioner. In 1916-17, a further acquisition was made of 1.533 acres within lower Murli hill, for a re-alignment of the Murli siding in village Sambauta. The map relating to this second acquisition is marked 'X.' I should have stated that in the declaration relating to the acquisition of 1910-12, it was made clear that only the surface land was being acquired and > "only such parts of the mines and minerals as may be necessary to dig or carry away or used in the construction of the work for the purpose of which the land was being acquired."

On 31-3-1928, the leases of 1908 came to an end. On 1-4-1928, Government granted two fresh leases in favour of Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd. In between 1908 and 1928, Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., had purchased the rights of the tenants and the maliks in the surface land of lower Murli hill as also such other rights as the tenants had. There is a reference to this aspect of the matter in Para 3 of our judgment in Subodh Gopal Bose v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 222: (31 P. L. T. 100). What exactly was purchased will be referred to in greater detail when I deal with the arguments of the parties. On 15-5-1929, the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd., gave in lease to Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., their rights in the acquired land except a very small portion. This lease is Ex. K, and the relevant map, which has been called the lease map, is Ex. K1. Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., went into voluntary liquidation in 1933. On 30-9-1933, there were two documents in favour of the present petitioner, and that is the date on which the petitioner first comes into the arena One was an agreement with the petitioner for sale of the lessee's right which Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., held in upper and lower Murli hill. The other was a conveyance in favour of the petitioner in respect of certain grants, estates and lands described in sch. A to the deed. So far as the present case is concerned, the important items are items 7, 8 and 9 of Sch. A. Items 7 and 8 relate to village Baknaur, and item 9 relates to village Samhauta. In item 7, all rights of the vendor in plot No. 168 of village Baknaur were conveyed, and by item 9, all rights of the vendor in 59 bighas 13 kathas and 18 dhurs, more or less, of certain survey plots in village Samhauta including plot No. 44, were conveyed. It is important to bear in mind these two plots, plot No. 168 of village Baknaur and plot No. 44 of village Samhauta; because the acts which, it is alleged, constitute contempt of this Court are stated to have been committed on those two plots. The deed of agreement gave rise to litigation which went up to the Privy Council. With the details of that litigation we are not concerned, and I am omitting those details, except merely to state that the petitioner started quarrying operations in upper and lower Murli hill as the local agent of Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co Ltd., pending sanction of Government of the proposed assignment of the lessee's right in favour of the petitioner. This sanction was not, however, given. An attempt was made to stop the petitioner from carrying on the quarrying operations, and Government purported to forfeit the leases in favour of Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., and agreed to grant leases in favour of another party known as Kalyanpur Lime Works Ltd This resulted in litigation, the details whereof I am omitting. The upshot of it all was that the petitioner, after a short break, resumed possession and continued the quarrying operations. On 10-8-1943 Messrs Dalmia Jain and Co Ltd. became the managing agents of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co On 31-3-1948 the leases in favour of Messrs. Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., came to an end. Trouble again arose between the petitioner and the local khasmahal officers to which a reference has been made in our judgment in Subodh Gopal Bose v. Province of Bihar, A I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 222 : (31 P. L. T. 100). On 10-8-1949, Government granted leases of upper and lower Murli hill to Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. On 11-8-1949, the petitioner instituted a suit (Title Suit No. 51 of 1949) against (1) the State of Bihar, (2) the Collector of Shahabad, (3) the Additional Sub-divisional Officer, Sasaram, and (4) Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. On the same day, the petitioner prayed for an order of injunction against the defendants. The prayer was rejected by the Subordinate Judge of Sasaram. There was an appeal to this Court, and on 16-12-1949, this Court passed an order of injunction.

[4] It is necessary now to state what order this Court passed. After stating the principles which the Court has to keep in mind in granting or refusing to grant a temporary injunction, we considered the claim of the petitioner separately with regard to upper and lower Murli hill. With regard to upper Murli hill, we did not accept the case of the petitioner, and refused the prayer for injunction. With regard to lower Murli hill, however, we stated:

"The claim of the appellant with regard to lower Murli hill stands on a different footing. On the materials placed before us the appellant has made out a prima facie case of title to the surface land of lower Murli hill...It is clear to us that the appellant has made out a prima facie case of title, both with regard to the surface land of lower Murli hill and the right to quarry lime-stone and manufacture lime in the area of lower Murli hill."

On the question of possession we said:

"As to the possession of the surface land of lower Murli hill, there is very little doubt. The appellant is in possession and has kilns, buildings, bungalows, dwelling houses, tram lines, railway sidings, fixed plant and machineries, etc., thereon. It is obvious that very serious injury would be caused to the appellant if he is asked to remove them pending the hearing of his suit. It would be irreparable injury for the avoidance of which he is entitled to ask for an order of injunction—both on the grounds of prima facie title and balance of convenience."

The operative portion of the order reads thus :

"The prayer for an order of injunction in respect of upper Murli hill is refused; but the appellant will get an order of injunction, pending the decision of his suit, restraining the respondents from dispossessing or disturbing the possession of the appellant in respect of lower Murli hill."

We made an exception as to one matter to which a reference must now be made. There was some argument before us as to whether upper Murli hill could be approached by an old District Board road thus avoiding the necessity of going over any part of the surface land of lower Murli hill owned and possessed by the petitioner. With regard to this matter, we said:

"It is possible, however, that on some occasions the men of Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., did some work on upper Murli hill. Whether they approached by an old District Board road, the existence of which has been disputed before us, or went over the surface land of lower murli hill in order to reach upper Murli hill cannot be decided on the materials before us."

Therefore, we made an exception in the operative portion of our order and said:

"We are giving no decision as to the existence or otherwise of an old District Board road to reach upper Murli hill. But under the order of injunction which we are passing, the respondent will have no right to go to upper Murli hill over any part of the surface land of lower Murli hill owned and possessed by the appellant."

The expression "owned and possessed" by the appellant has given rise to much argument before us. I think that the proper way of interpreting that expression is to find out what an ordinary person will understand upon a plain reading of it in the context in which it has been used; in other words, the question is—is there anything in that expression which is likely to mislead the person who is to obey the order upon a plain reading of it? It is clear that the order must be read as a whole, and a party to the order cannot take the plea that he does not know the whole of the order. It is sufficiently clear from the extracts which I have quoted above that we found that the petitioner had made out a prima facie case with regard to the surface land of lower Murli hill as also the right to quarry lime stone and manufacture lime in the area of lower Murli hill. On the question of possession also, we gave a finding in favour of the petitioner. Having given those findings, we made an exception with regard to the old District Board road, provided such a road was in existence and in use at the relevant time. But we made it clear that under the order of injunction which we passed the respondents had no right to go to upper Murli hill over any part of the surface land of lower Murli hill owned and possessed by the appellant. The contention raised on behalf of the opposite parties before us is that we did not give any finding as to possession or title over every bit of land within lower Murli hill, and we left at large the question of such title and possession over particular pieces of land within lower Murli hill, to be determined if and when an occasion arose: in other words, the contention is that even with regard to lower Murli hill, the petitioner had to prove his prima faice title and possession over any bit of land regarding which a dispute might arise as to whether the order of injunction related to it or not. In my opinion, such a contention is not tenable. The order of injunction would be meaningless if the land or area to which it related were to be left in a state of uncertainty; for, that would be the result of the contention urged on behalf of the opposite parties. The expression "owned and possessed" in the operative part of the order can have only one meaning to an intelligent reader, namely, that it related to the surface land in the area of lower Murli hill over which we found that the petitioner had made out a prima facie case of title and possession, with the only exception of the old District Board road. It was necessary to use the expression "owned and possessed," which expression must, however, be read in the light of and in consonance with the findings given by us—because we were making an exception with regard to an old District Board road the existence or location of which could not be determined on the materials which we had before us at the time when we passed the order. I do not think that there is anything in the expression "owned and possessed" which is likely to mislead any person who reads the whole order with ordinary commonsense and intelligence. I find it very difficult to understand how there can be an order of injunction with regard to a piece of land unless there is a finding that the party which seeks the order of injunction has satisfied the Court about his prima facie title to, and possession of the land. Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., who were a party to the suit, as also a party to the injunction order, can have been under no misapprehension with regard to this matter. The schedule to the plaint of the suit thus described the area of lower Murli hill regarding which the petitioner claimed his right of title and possession:

"All that surface, subsoil and mineral rights in the portion of land known as lower Murli hill comprising an area of about 250 bighas within the Banskati Mahal situate in pergana Rohtas Touzi No. 4771 Tahsil Circle Sasaram Thana and Sub-District Sasaram, District Shahabad bounded on the North by the fields of Dullay Singh Achaibar Nau, Barhuhi Nala and field of Mangru Dusadh, on the East by Old District Board Road, on the West by Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Line, on the South by Old District Board Road field of Hira Singh, house and field of Jagdhari Ahir, house of and field of Ratan Ahir, house of Badhai Ahir, house of Budhi Ahir, house and field of Gopi Nau, Road leading from Barhuhi to Baknaur."

We have checked the boundaries with reference to the maps filed before us, and there can be no doubt that the area in question included both plots, Plot No. 168 of Baknaur and Plot No. 44 of Samhauta. In the course of the arguments before us in the appeal relating to the injunction order, it was not admitted by the respondents that the entire extent of the surface land was owned by the petitioner. We stated as follows in our judgment:

"As to lower Murli hill, it is not admitted that the entire extent of the surface land is owned by the appellant."

In spite of that, we found that the petitioner had made out a prima facie case of title and possession in respect of lower Murli hill. In my opinion, there is no scope for any misunderstanding.

[5] One point may be made clear at this stage. The question whether our injunction order was erroneous or not cannot be a question at issue at this stage. The matter has been thus put in Kerr on Injunctions, Edn. 6, p. 668:

"An order for an injunction must be implicitly observed, and every diligence must be exercised to obey it to the letter. However erroneously or irregularly obtained the order must be implicitly observed so long as it exists. A party affected by it cannot disregard it or treat it as a nullity, but must have it discharged on a proper application."

The point is obvious and need not be laboured. If the order of injunction was erroneous in any particular, the proper procedure for the party against whom it was made was to move us for rectification of the error. The party against whom the order is made cannot disregard the order on the ground that it is erroneous in any particular. Right or wrong, the injunction order binds him, and he disregards it at his peril.

[6] I now propose to set out in detail the acts of disobedience which are alleged by the petitioner against several members of the opposite party. It would, I think, be convenient if these acts are classified under four heads—(1) the act or acts on Plot No. 168 of village Baknaur relating to the alleged old District Board road; (2) the act or acts alleged with regard to the acquired land of 32 acres and odd in Plot No. 44 of village Samhauta; (3) the act or acts alleged with regard to the construction of a siding, which for the sake of convenience I shall hereafter refer to as the new siding, on Plot No. 44 between the main line of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway and the acquired land near the Directors' bungalow ; and (4) the act or acts alleged with regard to the old Murli hill siding, stated to be the outer boundary of the land acquired in 1910-12.

[7] I would first take up the case of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., with regard to the aforesaid acts, and then consider separately the cases of the other members of the opposite party; because the position of all the members is not the same with reference to the acts alleged.

[8] It seems to me that the position is quite clear with regard to Plot No. 168. This plot is undoubtedly a part of the area of lower Murli hill. Item 7 of Sch. A of the conveyance of 30-9-1933, in favour of the petitioner refers to this plot. The maps which show the existence of an old District Board road are Ex. H, a plan of Murli hill showing the khasmahal and the Banekati portion of the Murli hill proposed to be leased out to Messrs. Octavius Steel Company in 1908, Ex. J; a plan of Murli hill prepared in 1908 by the khas mahal authorities, and Ex. Y, the plan of the acquisition of 1910-12. The existing position of this alleged road is shown in Ex. M, a map prepared by an amin on behalf of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co., Ltd. The two survey maps of Baknaur and Samhauta do not show the existence of any District Board Road going up to upper Murli hill. It is, however, clear from a comparison of the maps which have been filed that what is now claimed to be the old District Board road was not an old District Board road at the time when the maps of 1908 and 1910 were prepared. Those maps show that the old District Board road passed along the boundary of Plot No. 168 and did not cut through it. It entered upper Murli hill near boundary pillar 1. The road which Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co., are now claiming and using as the old District Board road cuts right through Plot No. 168 and enters upper Murli hill between boundary pillars 2 and 3. Obviously, the road which is now claimed as the old District Board road is not the same as the old District Board road shown in the maps of 1908 and 1910-12. As a matter of fact, the later maps show that lime quarries had been dug on or near the site of the old District Board road. Probably, that is the reason why the survey maps do not show the existence of any old District Board road. It is probable that Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., who were the undoubted lessee at the time of both lower and upper Murli hill, made some sort of a road for their own use which cut through Plot No. 168. Be that as it may, it is clear that the old District Board road, as shown in the maps, is not the one which Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., are now claiming and using. It has not been disputed before us that Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., have used this road which cuts across Plot No. 168. Such user of Plot No. 168 amounts to a contravention of the injunction order, as it does not come within the exception of the old District Board road which we made in our order for injunction. Jagadish Prasad, the amin, who prepared the map, Ex. M, said in para. 5 of his affidavit :

"That I have shown in the map the old District Board road in Plot No. 168 through which Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., is going to upper Murli hill. There is no other passage other than the said District Board road to go to upper Murli hill in Plot No. 168".

It is obvious that if the road which Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., are now using be not the old District Board road, as the maps on the record show that it is not, then Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. are not entitled to use that road, which cuts through Plot No. 168 owned and possessed by the petitioner. Such user amounts to a contravention of the order of injunction.

[9] The learned Advocate-General has referred us to two orders of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Sasaram in respect of this road. One order is dated 24-9-1949, which we had seen before passing the order of injunction. The other order is dated 26-12-1949, made absolute on 13-2-1950 The preliminary order mentioned "old District Board road which passes by the south-eastern boundary of lower Murli hill near Plot No. 168". The final order proceeds on the assumption that the road used was the old District Board road—an assumption which is clearly wrong. These orders of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate cannot exonerate Messrs Dalmia Jain and Co. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate cannot by an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., determine questions of title or possession; nor can such an order afford protection to a party against whom the order of injunction is passed. Taking the most favourable view possible, it can only be said that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as also Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. wrongly thought that the existing road was the old District Board road, though it was not so. Even then it would be a breach of the order of injunction, though not that kind of misconduct which involves wilful disobedience. (After dealing with other acts of disobedience by opposite party 1, his Lordship proceeded.)

[10] Having dealt with the acts which are stated to constitute contempt of this Court's order of injunction, I now turn to an important question of law. The learned Advocate General has very strenuously contended before us that except for the act or acts committed on Plot No. 169, the other acts have been committed by the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd., which was not a party either to the suit or to the injunction matter. As a matter of fact, the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd., is not a party even to this proceeding. It is stated that Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., as lessees, and Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., as managing agents of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd., are two separate entities. The argument of the learned Advocate-General is that if there has been any disobedience by Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., as managing agents of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co., the disobedience is really by the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co., against whom there was no order of injunction. It is contended that disobedience by a person who was not a party to the proceeding does not constitute contempt, and even if Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., as lessees, incited or aided the disobedience, they are not liable for contempt of Court. The learned Advocate-General relied on the decision in S. N. Banerjee v. Kuchwar Lime & Stone Co. Ltd., A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 295: (17 Pat 770). That was a case in which Government and its servants were restrained by an injunction from disturbing the possession of the Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd. There was an appeal to the Privy Council which was dismissed. The Kalyanpur Company contended that they were not bound by the injunction, and resumed quarrying operations on 2-3-1936, and on the next day informed the Chief Inspector of Mines and the Collector that they had done so. The Collector replied on 16 3-1936 that they were taking this course at their own risk. On the 18th of March, the solicitors of Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co., sent a letter to the Collector, to the Commissioner and the Chief Secretary to Government protesting against the trespass committed by the Kalyanpur Co. On 28-3-1936, the Collector of Shahabad wrote a letter in which it was stated that the Kalyanpur Company were not parties to the suit which was brought against Government by the liquidators of the Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., and the decree passed by the High Court did not give Government authority to eject their present lessees. The Collector requested the Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., to take such legal action against the Kalyanpur Company as they were advised. It was in respect of this letter that this Court found Government, the Managing Director and the Manager of the Kalyanpur Company guilty of contempt—Government being in contempt by direct breach of the injunction, and the other two by aiding and abetting Government. The Privy Council held that the letter of the Collector dated 28-3-1936, did not constituts a breach of the injunction order. Their Lordships stated:

"But the surface of Lower Murli belonged to Mr. Bose and the immediate right to possession of the surface of Upper Murli and of the minerals in both belonged to the respondents. It was for the respondents who either had the immediate right to possession or were in possession under the order of the Court and not for the Government who were not in possession to eject the Kalyanpur Company, if ejection was to be effected. Indeed the respondents might at any time have made that Company defendants in the original action. The Government was under no duty to act; their duty was to leave those who claimed to be entitled to possession of the soil to take the appropriate measures."

Their Lordships further pointed out that the letter was a statement of fact necessitated by the Communication to which it was a reply and set out considerations which weighed with the Government in deciding to take no action. Dealing with the question of aiding and abetting, their Lordships pointed out that where the party enjoined has not broken the injunction it is impossible to hold that any other person has aided or abetted them in breaking it. Their Lordships did not accept the wide proposition that the doing by any one of an act which was forbidden by the injunction was itself an offence. In my opinion, the facts of the case on which the learned Advocate-General has relied are quite different from the facts before us. Here the case is that Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., have committed a breach of the order of injunction. It is true that Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., had two capacities—one as lessee from Government and the other as managing agent of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Therefore, the question in the present case is not whether a person who is not a party to the injunction order has disobeyed it and another person is stated to have aided or abetted the disobedience. The question is whether a party to an order of injunction can, with impunity, disobey the order of injunction by assuming, or taking on, a different capacity in respect of the act or acts which constitute a breach of the order of injunction. Mr. P. R. Das has referred to the observation of an American author, Spelling in his Treatise on Injunctions and other Extraordinary Remedies. The observation which will be found at p. 937 of Vol. II (Edn. 2) reads as follows:

"Defendants duly served with an injunction are personally responsible for a violation of the order, in whatever capacity they acted, and from whatever motives."

I have underlined (here italicised) the words on which Mr. P. R. Das has relied. The observation is based on certain decisions of State Courts of America which are not available to us. There is an English decision to the same effect to which Mr. Das has drawn our attention. The decision is Avery v. Andrews (1882) 51 L. J. Ch. 414 : (46 L. T 279). It appears that an order of injunction was passed against three persons, Andrews Lely and Mogg, restraining them from dividing amongst the members of the Loyal Brunswick Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Manchester Unity Friendly Society, the sum of £ 2000. On the 2nd of November, three other gentlemen were appointed trustees that is to say there being an injunction against three gentlemen in their character of trustees to prevent their doing a certain act, they immediately upon that injunction retired, and three other members of the society stepped into their shoes in their places in the character of trustees. Then, on a subsequent date, the sum of £.2000 was divided amongst the members of the society. Kay J. made the following observations :

"If anybody, though not a person actually named in the injunction, chooses to step into the place of the man who was named, and to do the act which he was enjoined from doing, he has committed a very gross contempt of this Court".

His Lordship treated the old and the new trustees all alike, and held them all guilty of contempt. In my opinion, the same principle should apply in the present case. Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Company Ltd., were the party against whom the order of injunction was made; they were well aware of the order and its contents. I do not think that it is open to them to say that they disobeyed the order of injunction in another capacity, and therefore, are not liable for contempt. If that were the law, then it would be easy for a party to disobey an order of this Court by merely assuming a different capacity in respect of the acts which constitute a disobedience of the Court's order. The legal contention raised by the learned Advocate-General must therefore, be overruled.

[11] There cannot be any doubt that Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., opposite party 1, has been guilty of contempt of Court.

[12] I now proceed to consider the cases of the other members of the opposite party. The case of opposite party 8, the Rohtas Quarries Ltd., and opposite party 6, Quarry Manager, Rohtas Quarries Ltd., can be disposed of in a few words. No definite allegation has been made against the Rohtas Quarries Ltd., and Mr. P. R. Das has frankly conceded that he does not press his case against them.

[13] Sri Hari Dutt, opposite party 4, and Sri K. B. Upadhyay, opposite party 5, are constituted Attorney and Secretary respectively of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. The allegations against them are contained in paras 39 and 50 of the affidavit of Mr. Medan Lal. As against opposite party 5, it is stated in para. 39 that he tried to cross through the new road on Plot No. 168 on 23-12-1949. In para. 40, it is alleged that opposite parties 4, 5 and 6 have gone into lower Murli hill on 5-1-1950, when the Sub-Divisional Magistrate inspected the locality. In my opinion, these allegations, even if accepted as correct, do not make them liable for contempt of Court.

[14] There is a further point in connection with these members of the opposite party. It appears that in accordance with the practice of this Court, no formal order of injunction was drawn up in this case. Messrs Dalmia Jain and Co. cannot plead ignorance of the terms of the order of injunction, because they were a party to the order. But other members of the opposite party may not have been in a position to know the exact terms of the order of injunction, and it cannot be said that by going into lower Murli hill when the Sub Divisional Magistrate visited the locality, they committed a breach of the order of injunction.

[15] Against Sri Shanti Prasad Jain, opposite party 7, the allegation in para. 41 of the affidavit of Mr Medan Lal is :

"That opposite party 7 who is the Managing Director of opposite party 1 is the man who is directing all the operations to flout the order of injunction of this Hon'ble Court."

This allegation has been stoutly denied. In the affidavit of Mr. M. L. Burman, it has been stated that opposite party 7 is not the Managing Director of opposite party 1, and that the allegations are false. On the materials before us it cannot be held that Sri Shanti Prasad Jain is either the Managing Director of Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., or was directing the operations which constituted a breach of the order of injunction. Our attention has been drawn to O 39, R. 5, Civil P. C., but I do not think that it has any application, in the absence of any reliable evidence, that Sri Shanti Prasad Jain was guilty of any personal action which the order of injunction sought to restrain.

[16] Then, remain the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sasaram, opposite party 2 and the Sub-Inspector of Police, police station Rohtas, opposite party 3. The allegations against them are contained in paras 31 to 38 of the affidavit of Mr Medan Lal. In paras. 20 to 29 also allegations were made that opposite party 1 got reports submitted by opposite party 3, and on these reports, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed orders in contravention of the order of injunction. I have carefully examined the affidavits filed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as also by the Sub-Inspector of Police. I do not think that any collusive reports were submitted by the Sub-Inspector of Police, nor am I prepared to hold that the orders under S. 144, Criminal P. C., passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate were mala fide. Mr S. N. Bose, who argued this part of the case on behalf of the petitioner, conceded before us that the Sub-Inspector of Police was not guilty of any bad faith. He reported about the apprehension of a breach of the peace, when such an apprehension actually arose. As to the orders passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, I have only two comments to make. My first comment is that some of the orders were passed after the order of injunction, and it was the duty of the Sub-divisional Magistrate to find out what the order of injunction was. Secondly, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, when he did know the terms of the order of injunction, failed to notice our finding as to prima facie title and possession. But to say that the orders of the Sub-divisional Magistrate were incorrect is not the same thing as to say that he was actuated by bad faith in respect of the orders which he passed. I do not think that the Sub-divisional Magistrate can be held guilty of having aided or abetted the disobedience of the order of injunction.

[17] The net result, therefore, is as follows: Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd., opposite party 1, are guilty of disobeying the order of injunction which we passed on 16-12-1949. I would accordingly pass an order, under the provisions of sub-r. (3) of R. 2 of O. 39, Civil P. C., that the property of Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Company Ltd. in upper and lower Murli hill be attached. I would discharge the rule as against the other members of the opposite party. Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. must pay the costs of the petitioner, and we assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs. Opposite parties 3, 6 and 8 will be entitled to their costs from the petitioner, as they were unnecessarily made parties : hearing fee, three gold mohurs. There will be no order for costs in favour of other members of the opposite party.

[18] There is one other matter which should be mentioned. When we passed the order of injunction, we had the possibility in mind that it might be impossible for Messrs. Dalmia Jain and Co. Ltd. to work on upper Murli hill without any right of access through lower Murli hill. It is somewhat unsatisfactory that the work on upper Murli hill should stop because of the absence of any right of access. But this unsatisfactory result is inherent in the situation, in which the conflicting rights of the parties with regard to upper and lower Murli hill are so inextricably entwined. There was an attempt at compromise, but nothing came out of it. It is, however, very necessary that this unsatisfactory state of affairs must not be allowed to continue a day longer than is necessary. In connection with an injuction matter in which the Kalyanpur Lime Works Ltd. were the petitioner, we passed an order that the suit must be taken up for hearing within one week of the re-opening of the Civil Courts after the Puja holidays. In this case also, there should be a direction by this Court so that the hearing may be expedited as far as possible. We accordingly direct that the Subordinate Judge of Sasaram give precedence to this suit and take up the hearing immediately after the hearing of the suit by the Kalyanpur Co. Ltd., so that the hearing of both these suits may be concluded before the end of the year. It is stated at the bar that issues have been framed and the suits is ripe for hearing. The learned Subordinate Judge will direct the parties to get ready with their evidence, oral and documentary, as soon as possible. All interlocutory matters should be finished as expeditiously as possible, so that the suit may be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the suit by the Kalyanpur Works Ltd.

[19] Reuben J. — I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother and the reasons given by him. There is very little to add.

[20] The area in dispute in Misc. Appl. No. 303 of 1949, the case in which we passed the order of injunction, was specified in detail at the foot of Subodh Gopal Bose's plaint, and in the miscellaneous appeal there was no doubt as to the extent of the land covered by the dispute. Lower Murli referred to in our order in that case includes the land in Plot No. 44 which was acquired for the Debri Bohtas Light Railway. Bose expressly claimed title and possession over the entire surface of lower Murli throughout the proceedings (vide his plaint, his petition filed before the Subordinate Judge for a temporary injunction and his petition for an ad interim injunction in the miscellaneous appeal before this Court). Our finding in the miscellaneous appeal was in his favour, the only exception being as to the "old District Board Road". Hence, it was not open to Dalmia Jain & Co., Ltd. (for convenience I shall hereafter refer to them as Dalmia Jain) to treat the acquired area as not in the possession of Bose. Stress was laid before us in the present proceeding on the use of the words "owned and possessed" in para. 18 of our order as reported in Subodh Gopal Bose v. Province of Bihar, A.I.R. (37) 1950 Pat. 222 (31 P.L.T. 100). Our finding as to possession precedes this paragraph, and there can be no doubt that it relates to the whole surface of lower Murli. The exception to the finding was dealt with in para. 18, namely, the "old District Board Road," and it was only in contrast to this that the words "owned and possessed" were used.

"for carrying on quarrying operations, erection of plaints, buildings, office, quarters etc. in village Samahuta and village Baknaur," although this map shows o .er roads. The conclusion I have suggested is supported even by the map dated 10-8-1949 prepared in the office of the Collector of Shahabad and showing the area of 82.766 acres of lower Murli leased out by Government to Dalmia Jain. The road shown in that map by broken lines corresponds to the position of the "old District Board road" as it was depicted in the earlier maps referred to by my learned brother, which position is different from that occupied by the existing track which Dalmia Jain claim as the "old District Board road." The fact that the other roads on this lease map are drawn in continuous lines suggests that the "old District Board road" is no longer in existence as such. The name "old District Board road" is itself significant and suggests the reason why no records are produced from the office of the District Board to support its existence; the reason is that the road has been abandoned.

[22] That the old Murli siding was existing before the acquisition of 1910-1912 appears also from the map of the Survey and Settlement Department, which shows the siding but not the acquisition. It was the only siding on the land before October 1949 and would, therefore, appear to be the siding mentioned in sch. B appended to the sale deed executed by Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd. on 30-9-1933 in favour of Bose. It seems probable also that this is the siding referred to by the Collector of Shahabad in his letter No. 690 dated 14-7-1949 directing the Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd., to vacate possession of lower Murli in favour of Dalmia Jain and to remove their movables including the "siding", therefrom. The mala fides of the claim now set up to the siding would appear from the fact that the case originally made out was that the siding was leased to Kuchwar Lime and Stone Co. Ltd. by the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd., which lease, according to Dalmia Jain, has been terminated by notice with effect from 1-1-1950 (vide para. 18 of the affidavit of M. L. Burman). In the argument before us, it was admitted by the learned Advocate-General that the siding was outside the lease.

[23] My learned brother has given reasons for rejecting the defence that Dalmia Jain are protected because they acted as the managing agents of the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway Co. Ltd. I would add that on the facts the defence has no merits. It is Dalmia Jain who have taken the lease of the underground rights from Government; the Railway Company has nothing to do with these rights. M. L. Burman expressly admits in para. 15 of his affidavit that Dalmia Jain are quarrying in the acquired area, that is to say, within the area covered by our injunction. Again, with reference to the two sidings, the learned Advocate-General argued, inter alia, that Dalmia Jain have admittedly the right to quarry in upper Murli and, therefore, the Railway Company was entitled to transport the quarried materials consigned by Dalmia Jain To my mind, this is exactly where the trouble arises with reference to these sidings. The new siding has been opened and the old one has been seized by the Railway Company solely to enable Dalmia Jain to send away the stuff quarried by them. But Dalmia Jain cannot get their stuff to either of the sidings without passing through lower Murli which is forbidden by our injunction. The list of despatches, Ex. J, filed with the petition of Bose shows that Dalmia Jain have sent several consignments of quarried materials by the railway since the order of injunction was passed. It cannot be pretended that this was done by them as agents of the Railway.

D.H. Order accordingly.

A. F. O. D. No. 324 of 1946, D/- 21-3 1950.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115 — Estoppel by conduct.

Where a purchaser of a share of property which was subject to a mortgage was allowed apparently without question to get his name mutated in respect of the share and in the batwara proceedings, in the presence of the mortgagee, and was similarly allowed without question to get a patti corresponding to the share:

Held, that these facts did not mean anything more than that the mortgagee and the other co-proprietors thought that the purchaser by the purchase acquired the entire share. If, however, they were under a misconception, and in fact the purchaser only acquired a smaller interest by the purchase, their conduct in not opposing the mutation and in not questioning the correctness of the purchaser's share in the batwara proceedings would not create an estoppel against them. [Para 9]

Anno. Evidence Act, S. 115, N. 3.

(b) Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (VII [7] of 1914), S. 25 (1) — Certificate sale — Representation.

A property belonging to five persons was sold in execution of a certificate filed for the recovery of cess under the Act. In the certificate, three certificate-debtors were mentioned. It was apparently assumed that the entire property was vested in the three certificate-debtors and there was no idea then that there were other persons also interested in it. Subsequently, the property was sold in execution of a simple mortgage decree and was purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff who had purchased the property in execution of the certificate and who was not impleaded in the mortgage suit brought a suit for a declaration that his title was unaffected by the mortgage and for recovery of possession of the property :

Held*, that the idea that the three certificate-debtors were there in a representative capacity could not have been present in the certificate proceedings and hence they did not represent the entire property sold.

[Para 12]

Held further, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession of the entire property but only the interest of the certificate-debtors. [Para 14]

Reuben J.—This is an appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya.

[2] In village Kusahan Pipra there was a Tauzi No. 2578, comprising several separate accounts. We are concerned here with a share of two annas recorded in separate account No. 7 which formerly belonged to one Gajraj Singh, and on his death passed to his widow Pachhlari Kuer. It is common ground that on her death the property passed to Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram, sons of Gajraj's divided cousin Uttim Singh, whose other sons Bishwanath and Bhondu were then dead. In the year 1923, a certificate under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914, was filed for the recovery of arrears of cess due in respect of separate account No. 7. In execution of this certificate, the share was sold on 29-10 1923 and was purchased by Harbans Prasad Dubey, the original plaintiff in the suit. By this time Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram were dead. Three certificate-debtors were named in the certificate, Mathura and Matukdhari, sons of Fateh Bahadur, and Parichhit, son of Bishwanath. The sale was confirmed in due course and Harbans took delivery of possession on 23-8-1924 and got himself recorded as proprietor of this share on 6-5-1925. At that time, a batwara proceeding was pending in respect of Tauzi No. 2578. Harhans intervened, was allotted a new Tauzi No. 11210, in respect of the two anna interest purchased by him, and got delivery of possession over it on 2-5-1928. In the meantime, Mortgage Suit No. 66 of 1927 had been instituted in respect of the two annas share on the foot of a simple mortgage bond executed by Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram. For some reason, Jwala Prasad Dubey, father of Harbans, was impleaded in the suit instead of Harbans, and although a decree was obtained against him in the Court of first instance, the suit was dismissed against him by the High Court in appeal on the ground that Harbans was the real purchaser in the certificate sale. On 8-1-1937, Tauzi No. 11210 was sold in execution of the decree in mortgage Suit No. 66 of 1927 and was purchased by Mahabir Prasad, defendant 1 in the present suit, from whom the appellant before us derives his title, and the purchaser obtained delivery of possession in June 1937. The present suit was brought for a declaration that Harbans Dubey's title was unaffected by the mortgage, and for confirmation of his possession over the suit property, and in the alternative for recovery of possession.

[3] The defence taken was that Harbans purchased the property as benamidar of the certificate-debtors and that the real owners of the property were fully represented in the mortgage suit; secondly, that even conceding that Harbans was the real purchaser he acquired merely the right, title and interest of the certificate debtors.

[4] The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected the first contention but has accepted the second. As regards possession he has found that Harbans was dispossessed. Relying on Ganga Prasad Singh v. Mt. Ganeshi Kuer, A.I.R. (31) 1944 Pat. 119 : (22 Pat. 761), he has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of the entire property.

[5] In appeal, the issue of benami was not seriously pressed before us, but it was urged that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession only of the portion of the property representing the right, title and interest of the certificate debtors. On the other side, it was urged, firstly that the question of the passing of only a share by the certificate sale should not have been allowed to be raised, secondly that the certificate-debtors represented the entire interest and so the entire interest passed, thirdly that the batwara proceedings cannot be reopened, and that if by the batwara a larger patti has been given to Harbans than his real interest warrants this cannot be helped; the mortgagors must seek their remedy against the portion allotted in the batwara to the proprietors who are entitled to the remaining fraction of the two anna share. Before the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff also set up the case that Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram threw the two-annas share into the joint family stock, and that in a subsequent partition of the joint family property this two-anna share was allotted to Matukdhari, Mathura and Parichhit. The Subordinate Judge disbelieved the story of partition. According to him the descendants of Uttim are still joint, and Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram did not throw the two-anna share into the joint family stock; this property therefore descended to their sons and grandsons, and Partichhit had no share in it at all. This finding has not been challenged before us.

[6] Thus, four points arise for consideration ; (1) Were the defendants entitled to contend that only a fraction of two annas passed by the certificate sale? (2) Can the batwara proceedings be reopened ? (3) Did the certificate-debtors represent the entire interest ? and (4) Are the plaintiffs entitled to recover possession of the whole two annas even though their interest is confined to a fraction ?

[7] As regards the first point, it is urged that on the plaint and the written statement originally filed in the suit the question does not arise. This is true, but the question is raised by an amendment of the written statement which was allowed by the Subordinate Judge in April 1946. It was within the discretion of the Subordinate Judge to allow the amendment, and I am unable to say that he has not exercised his discretion in a judicial manner.

[8] Coming to the second point, there might have been some force in it if the patti allotted to Harbans in the batwara had been intended to represent a smaller share, corresponding to the interest of the certificate-debtors. In such a case, apart from considerations such as fraud or collusion, it may not have been open to the civil Court to go behind the batwara. Here, however, the patti was admittedly intended to represent the whole two-annas interest. There can be no question, therefore, of looking for substituted security elsewhere.

[9] For the third point much stress has been laid on the fact that Harbans Dubey was allowed apparently without question to get his name mutated in Register D in respect of the two-anna share, and that in the batwara proceedings, in the presence of the mortgagee Lal Narayan Singh, he was similarly allowed without question to get a patti corresponding to this share. These facts do not mean anything more than that the mortgagee and the other co-proprietors thought that Harbans by the purchase acquired the entire two anna interest. If, however, they were under a misconception and in fact Harbans only acquired a much smaller interest by the purchase, their conduct in not opposing the mutation and in not questioning the correctness of Harban's share in the batwara proceedings would not create an estoppel against them, and the question of representation is still open to investigation.

[10] The position here is that Fateh Bahadur and Tika Ram inherited the property in equal shares when Pachhlari Kuer died. After them their shares would pass to their sons. The sons of Tika Ram, whose branch is still in existence, are not among the certificate debtors. Fateh Bahadur had four sons, of all whose branches are still in existence; of them only two sons, Mathura and Matukdhari, were named as certificate-debtors. As the property came to them from their father it would be ancestral property between them and their sons, of whom Mathura had three and Matukdhari four at the time of the certificate sale (vide p. 32, Parts I and II of the Paper Book); their interest in Tauzi No. 11210 was therefore $16 \times \frac{1}{2} \times \frac{1}{4} \times \frac{1}{4}$ annas=10 dams and $16 \times \frac{1}{2} \times \frac{1}{4}$ 1/5 annas=8 dams respectively. As I have already mentioned, the third certificate-debtor had no interest in the property. So, unless it can be held that the certificate-debtors represented the entire interest the certificate sale was operative to pass only an interest of 18 dams in the Tauzi.

[11] It has been decided in several reported decisions that the principle of representation does not apply to the procedure of realising public demands by means of certificates (Vide Sheaat Hosain v. Sasi Kar, 19 Cal. 783, Mohammad Abdul Hai v. Gujraj Sahai, 20 Cal. 826 : (20 I.A. 70 P.C.) Rupram Namasudra v. Ishwar Namasudra, 6 C. W. N. 302 and Mt. Raja Kuer v. Ganga Singh, 13 C. W. N. 750 (1 I. C. 197). In spite of this, we find that the Legislature in S. 26 (1), Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914, enacted that by a certificate sale merely the right, title and interest of the certificate-debtor passes even if the property itself is mentioned. It was pointed out in Baijnath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh, 23 I. A. 45: (23 Cal. 775 P. C.) that the provisions for the recovery of public demands by means of certificates are very stringent. They must therefore be strictly interpreted. Our attention has been drawn to Kameshwar Singh v. Ishwari Pd. Singh 21 P. L. T. 503: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat 692) and Manrup Mandal v. Badri Sao, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 383: (202 I. C. 62), but these are both case, of certificates for the recovery of arrears of rent, which are excluded by S. 26 (3) from the provisions of S. 26 (1) vide, Hari Prasad Singh v. Lal Behari Saran Singh, 19 Pat. 618: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 328 F B.). There is one reported case in which seemingly the principle of representation was applied to certificate procedure, Bindeshwari Prasad v. Shiva Datt, 19 P. L. T. 328: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 315 F.B.) but that was on the special circumstances of the case (vide Hari Prasad Singh v. Lal Behari Saran Singh, (19 P. L. T. 618: A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 328 F.B.) ante at pp. 635-69).

[12] Here, on the facts and on the case set up by the plaintiff, the case of representation cannot stand. According to the plaintiff, the entire property was vested in three certificate-debtors, and it was apparently assumed in the certificate proceeding that this was so. There was no idea then that there were other persons also interested in it. Hence, the idea that the three certificate-debtors were there in a representative capacity cannot have been present. This distinguishes the case from Binaesnwari Prasad v. Shiva Dutt Singh, (19 P. L. T. 328: A I. R (25) 1938 Pat. 315 F.B.) ante where the Certificate Officer investigated the point and held in the certificate proceedings that the certificate-debtor represented the entire interest.

[13] For the last point, reliance is placed on Ganga Prasad Singh v. Mt. Ganeshi Kuar, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 119: (22 Pat. 761). This is the authority which was also relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge. But the facts are different in one important particular. Here, although Harbans was in possession of the entire tauzi, his title extended only to a fraction of it; as regards the rest he was a trespasser. By the mortgage sale the title of Harbans remained unaffected, but the title to the remaining portion of the tauzi passed to the auction-purchaser. As regards this portion, the plaintiff is in the position of a trespasser seeking possession against a rightful owner, and cannot succeed. He cannot set up a title by adverse possession, because his adverse possession did not affect the mortgagees, the mortgage being a simple one Aditya Kumar Ray v. Dhirendra Nath, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 92: (53 C. W. N. 899). Nor can he rely on the fact that he acquired the title to the entire equity of redemption by prescription because, his adverse possession having started in 1924, his title by prescription became perfected during the pendency of the mortgate suit. On the principle laid down in Ganga Prasad Singh v. Mt. Ganeshi Kuer, (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 119 : 22 Pat. 761) ante the plaintiff cannot be asked to redeem his share of the tauzi, and to this extent he is entitled to succeed.

[14] In the result I would allow the appeal in part and modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge by directing that the plaintiff recover only a share of 18 dams in tauzi NO. 11210. The parties will get costs proportionate to their success throughout.

(a) Hindu law — Partition — Evidence of — Unregistered deed of partition—Admissibility in evidence—Registration Act (1908), S. 49.

The word "partition" involves two concepts; (i) change of status and (ii) division of property to prove either or both of which no documentary evidence is required at all. On evidence of actual division of property between the parties, and possession of respective shares in accordance with that division by them accompanied by their conduct which is inconsistent with anything except the factum of separation, the Court of law can hold, apart from any instrument of partition, that the parties had separated in status and effected partition of the family properties.

An unregistered deed of partition and deeds purporting to be sale-deeds between various parties to the partition, though not admissible to prove partition, can be referred to under S. 49, Registration Act, 1908, for the purpose of showing that the parties were dealing with properties in their separate possession on the footing that there had been a partition: A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 51, Rel. on Case law discussed. [Para 13]

Anno. Regn. Act, S. 49, N. 29.

(b) Stamp Act (1899), S. 35 — Registration Act (1908), S 49—Comparison.

Section 35, Stamp Act, enacts that no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence "for any purpose." Section 49, Registration Act, is not rigorous in its application. It only says that the document required by S. 17 to be registered shall not be received as evidence of "any transaction affecting such property." This contrast in the language is further stressed in the proviso to S 49 under which an unregistered document affecting immovable property may be received as evidence (i) of part performance of contract, or (ii) as evidence of any collateral transaction not effected by the instrument. Shambhu Prasad Singh and Bishun Kumar Singh —for Appellants; Lalnarain Sinha, Ramananda Sinha, Shyam Nandan Prasad Singh and Harsans Kumar—for Respondents.

Sarjoo Prasad J. — This appeal has been presented by the plaintiffs in a suit for partition in which the plaintiffs claimed partition of certain raiyati lands comprised in Khatas NOS. 109, 177 and 178 in village Jamri, pargana Pahra, District Gaya.

[2] The facts giving rise to this appeal may be indicated as follows: One Jiyan Singh had five sons. The plaintiffs are sons of Ambica Singh, one of the sons of the said Jiyan Singh, whereas defendant 1, Girdhari, is another son of Jiyan. and defendants 2 and 3 are the sons of defendant 1. Defendants 4 to 11 are the descendants of the other three sons of Jiyan. It is the admitted case of both parties that the other sons of Jiyan became separate during the lifetime of their father, but Ambica, the plaintiffs' father, and defendant 1 continued to be members of the joint family governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu law. The plaintiffs' case is that subsequently the plaintiffs' father Ambica, also became separate from the defendants but the disputed lands continued to be jointly in their possession, and consequently, they were entitled to a partition of those lands. The plaintiffs further stated that these lands were the exclusive property of the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 with which defendants 4 to 11, the descendants of the other sons of Jiyan, had no connection whatsoever. It may be stated here that Khatas Nos. 109 and 177 have very small areas but Khata No. 178 comprises the largest area and consists of several plots.

[3] Defendant 1 who filed a separate written statement denied that the lands belonged to him and Ambica jointly. According to him, the lands were partitioned between him and the father of the plaintiffs in 1325F., shortly after the survey. He further stated that his father Jiyan who remained joint with him and his brother Ambica died, and on his death defendants 4 to 11 also contributed to the expenses of his sradh, and in consideration thereof both Ambica and himself agreed to give to them Plots Nos. 1407, 1438, 1600 and 1646 of Khata No. 178. These plots, therefore, according to him belong to defendants 4 to 11 with which neither defendants 1 to 3 nor the plaintiffs have any concern. Defendants 4 to 11 filed a separate written statement in which they claimed that the lands of the four Khatas jointly belonged to all the parties, and that they were wrongly recorded in the survey only in the names of Ambica and Girdhari. They claimed that the khatas were privately partitioned amongst the parties in the year 1330F, and as a result of this partition they got the lands of Khatas Nos. 178 and 109 as described in their written statement Their written statement shows that they claimed Plots Nos. 1438, 1646 and 1407 appertaining to Khata No. 178 as a result of this partition along with two other plots which did not include Plot No. 1600. At the trial, however, it appears, defendants 4 to 11 gave up their case in the written statement and accepted the case of defendant 1 to the effect that the lands of the three Khatas in dispute belonged actually to the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 but defendants 4 to 11 were subsequently allotted the four plots of khata No. 178 as stated in the written statement of defendant 1. They further accepted the case of defendant 1 that the lands of the disputed Khatas had been already partitioned between the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3.

[4] It may be also stated that the case of defendant 1 was that at the time of the alleged partition in 1325F., two schedules were prepared by way of memoranda in respect of the lands allotted to each party, namely, the plaintiffs' father Ambica and defendant 1. On this memoranda, the arbitrators put their signatures and handed over one copy to this defendant and another copy to the plaintiffs, and that since the date of partition both the parties entered into separate possession and occupation of the lands allotted respectively to them and have been appropriating the produce thereof. He accordingly contended that the plaintiffs' suit for partition in respect of the disputed lands was not maintainable.

[5] The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case held: (1) that the branches of the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 had before the survey separated from the other sons of Jiyan Singh, and that the disputed Khatas came to be allotted to the branches of the plaitiffs and defendants 1 to 3 only; (2) that subsequently in 1333F. on the death of the widow of Jiyan Singh, Ambica, the father of the plaintiffs, and defendant 1 allotted four of the plots of khata No. 178, as mentioned in the written statement of defendants 1 to 3, to defendants 4 to 11; and (3) that ever since 1325F. the plaintiffs or their father and defendants 1 to 3 have been in separate possession of the plots respectively alloted to them on partition of the disputed lands. He accordingly found that there had been a partition between the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 as far back as the year 1325F., and that the parties were in separate possession of the lands allotted to them on partition, and accordingly he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

[6] On appeal, the Additional District Judge of Gaya affirmed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. He held:

"In view of the important rent receipts and the facts and circumstances I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge and accept the defendants' case that the lands were already partitioned and fractional parts out of them as alleged have been given to the three brothers and their descendants."

He, therefore, dismissed the appeal, and it is against this concurrent decision of the Courts below that the present second appeal is directed.

[7] Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh who argued the appeal on behalf of the appellants has presented three points for our consideration: (1) that Ex. C series were inadmissible in evidence and the decision of the Courts below is vitiated because it depends very largely upon a consideration of these materials; (2) that Ex. C. series which were intended to prove partition in 1325F and the allotment of four of the plots of khata 178 to defendants 4 to 11 being inadmissible under Ss. 91 and 92, Evidence Act, no other evidence could be given to prove the said partition and allotments and (3) that in any case Plot No. 1600 not having been claimed in the written statement of defendants 4 to 11, the Courts below should have decreed partition of this plot when admittedly the disputed khatas originally belonged exclusively to the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 alone, defendants 4 to 11 having no interest therein.

[8] I shall deal with the first two points together they being corelated (sic). To appreciate the argument of the learned Counsel, it may be useful to state the nature of the impugned documents. It may be observed at the outset that their inadmissibility was never raised before either of the two Courts below. It may also be observed that the learned counsel has not placed the documents before us or any translated copy thereof to enable us to decide for ourselves from the contents of the documents in question as to whether they are or they are not admissible. We have, therefore, to gather the nature of the documents from the judgments under appeal. The impugned documents are Ex. C to C-6. The Courts below have relied upon these exhibits as genuine and there is no doubt in my mind that the documents are genuine, and the learned counsel for the appellants has not disputed the fact of their genuineness, Ex. C is said to have been prepared at the time of the partition of the lands in 1345F between Girdhari and the father of the plaintiffs, Ambica Singh, Exs. C-1 to C-3 are said to have been prepared and given to the respective three brothers the other sons of Jiyan and their descendants signed by Girdhari Singh when subsequently the four plots were given to them, whereas Exs. C-4 to C-6 are said to have been prepared and given to the respective brothers the ancestors of defendants 4 to 11, signed by the plaintiffs' father, Ambica Singh, in respect of the aforesaid plots allotted to them out of khata 178. These Exs. C-1 to C-6 purport to be sale-deeds conveying the interest in four of the plots in khata 178 to defendants 4 to 11. All these documents were unstamped and unregistered. We are informed that these documents were impounded and stamp duty in respect of these documents have already been realised; therefore, these documents cannot be said to be defective or inadmissible under the Stamp Act.

[9] The appellants' argument in regard to Ex. C is that Ex. C being a partition deed to show different allotments to the branches of the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3 should have been duly registered inasmuch as it is conceded by the respondents' counsel that they related to property of a value more than Rs. 100. Reliance is placed on S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, which requires that non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to or in immovable property shall be registered. In regard to the alleged sale deeds, Exs. C-1 to C-6 it is not conceded that the value of the subject-matter of properties respectively affected by them was Rs. 100 or upwards. We, therefore, cannot assume in the absence of any evidence on the point that the said documents necessarily require registration under S. 17 (1)(b), Registration Act. In regard to them reliance is, however, placed on S. 54, T. P. Act, which provides that a transfer of immoveable property of a value of less than one hundred rupees, may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property. It is contended that as the transfers in the present case were under the documents in question, the documents had to be registered. Therefore, the alleged deed of partition Ex. C as also the alleged sale deeds Ex. C 1 to C 6 required registration under the law, and they not having been registered by operation of S. 49, Registration Act, they could not affect any immovable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property.

[10] The question therefore, which arises for consideration is whether the aforesaid documents were inadmissible under S. 49, Registration Act, and whether, if they were inadmissible under S 91 and S. 92, Evidence Act, any other evidence could be given to prove the partition and the allotments in question. A large number of decisions have been cited at the Bar in support of the respective contentions of the parties. The appellants' learned counsel contends that the documents aforesaid being inadmissible, it was not permissible for the Courts below to look into any other evidence for the purpose of proving partition and allotments as alleged by the defendants, and therefore, the plaintiffs' suit for partition had to be decreed. The learned counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, contended that even if the said documents may be held to be inadmissible as evidence of the transaction affecting such immovable property, the documents could be certainly used for the collateral purpose of proving the nature and character of the possession of the parties in respect of the properties in dispute. It may be that for the purpose of proving the title to the property the documents may be inadmissible, but there is nothing to debar the Court from looking into those materials in deciding the question of possession as exclusively claimed by the defendants in respect of the lands which were the subject-matter of that partition. In regard to Ex. C-1 to C-6, the further argument available to the defendants is that the said documents which purport to be sale-deeds could also be relied upon by the defendants under S. 53A, T. P. Act as permitted by the proviso to S. 49, Registration Act, the defendants in consideration of the sale-deeds in question having been put in possession of the disputed four plots allotted to them by way of part performance.

[11] I have examined the decisions cited at the Bar with great interest, and I confess to a feeling of confusion and bewilderment in the maize (sic) of conflicting judicial pronouncements on the point.

[12] Fortunately for me a recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council throws a good deal of light upon the problem, and that also because the facts appear to be parallel to the facts in the present case. I refer to the decision in Ram Rattan v. Parma Nand 73 I. A. 28 : (A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 51). The appeal arose out of a suit for partition in respect of joint family properties. The defendants contested the suit alleging previous partition and referred to certain memoranda in their written statement which constituted an instrument of partition. The documents were unstamped and unregistered. One of the issues framed in the case was whether there was a previous partition as alleged by the defendants. The trial Judge held that the said memoranda were inadmissible, and in the absence of written evidence between the parties, he could not rely upon other evidence on their part. In appeal, the High Court held that the oral evidence proved partition as alleged by the defendants, and even if the documents, the memoranda in question, were inadmissible they could be used to corroborate the oral evidence for the purpose of proving the factum of partition as distinct from its terms. The Judicial Committee did not agree with the opinion of the High Court that the documents which required to be stamped and registered could be used to corroborate the oral evidence for the purpose of proving partition because under S. 35, Stamp Act, no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose.... Their Lordships, therefore paid no regard to the documents in question, but nonetheless agreed with the High Court in thinking that the oral evidence proved partition as alleged by the defendants I may quote their own words :

"In their Lordships' view the evidence establishes a physical division of much of the joint property in February, 1939, and this is only consistent with a severance in the status of the parties having taken place."

This their Lordships did in spite of the fact that counsel for the appellant contended on the strength of S. 91, Evidence Act, that the factum of partition could not be proved by oral evidence, when the terms of the alleged partition had been reduced to writing. It is true that S. 91, Evidence Act, is not specifically referred to in their judgment but that their Lordships did not consider it as a bar to looking into the other materials on record for the purpose of proving partition is more than apparent from their findings.

[12a] It is important to remember that in the above case the Privy Council was dealing with the wider prohibition contained in S. 35, Stamp Act. They make it quite explicit in observing :

"It is unnecessary to consider the effect of S. 49, Registration Act, because the documents in question not being stamped the wider prohibition contained in the Stamp Act applies...."

In the present case we are concerned not with the "wider prohibition" under S. 35, Stamp Act, but if I may use the expression the "narrower prohibition" as contained in S. 49 Registration Act, the documents impugned in this case having been impounded and the stamp duty realised, as already pointed out by me Section 35, Stamp Act, enacts that no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence 'for any purpose". Section 49, Registration Act is not so rigorous in its application. It only says that the document required by S. 17 to be registered shall not be received as evidence of "any transaction affecting such property" and this contrast in the language is further stressed in the proviso to S. 49, Registration Act, under which an unregistered document affecting immovable property may be received as evidence (i) of part performance of contract, or (ii) as evidence of any collateral transaction not effected by the instrument. That unregistered documents have been so used for collateral purposes in evidence is borne out by a very large number of decisions. I may incidentally refer to two other decisions of the Judicial Committee by way of illustration: Varada Pillay v. Jevarathnammal, 43 Mad. 244: (A.I.R. (6) 1919 P.C 44), in which a registered deed of gift was referred to for ascertaining the nature and character of the possession held by the donee though the documents could not be used as evidence of title. In that case their Lordships pointed out that where the donor did not effect a registered deed of gift but allowed the donee to enter into possession of the gifted property for over 12 years, the donee's title became perfected as against the heirs of the donor. I may quote here the observation of Viscount Cave who delivered the judgment of the Board in that case :

"In other words, although the petitions and order do not amount to a gift of land, they lead to the inference that the subsequent receipt of the rents by Duraisani was a receipt in the character of donee and owner of the land and, therefore, in her own right and not as trustee or manager for her mother and aunt."

Again in Rajangam Ayyar v. Rajangam Ayyar, 46 Mad. 373: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 266), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that an unregistered deed of partition could be put in evidence for the purpose of proving a division of status in a joint Mitakshara family. It would be needless to multiply authorities on the point.

[13] The word "partition" involves two concepts (i) change of status and (ii) division of property. Severance of status does not require to be proved by any documentary evidence at all, nor is it necessary that for the purpose of proving actual division of property between the members of a joint family a written instrument is essential. Where, therefore, there is evidence that there was an actual division of property between the parties, and that they went into possession of their respective shares in accordance with that division, and there are also circumstances to show that the conduct of the parties are inconsistent with anything except the factum of separation, a Court of law may very well hold, apart from any instrument of partition, that the parties had separated in status and effected partition of the family properties. This, in my opinion, would be a perfectly legitimate course to adopt, and this is the course which has been adopted in the present case by the Courts below in coming to their findings on the question of partition. I may again refer here to a passage in the judgment of the lower appellate Court on the point. It says :

"Therefore Exs. C-1 to C-6 had lost the primary importance in face of the large body of the rent receipts which by themselves very definitely gave support to the case of the defendants. But supported by the receipts the documents Exs. C series also were reliable."

It is not therefore, that the lower appellate Court has primarily relied upon the impugned documents in coming to a finding of partition. It has relied upon the receipts and other materials on the record to prove this disruption of status and division of property between the plaintiffs and the defendants based as it was upon the separate possession of the parties and their separate dealings with the properties ever since 1326 F., as alleged by the defendants. In my opinion, the documents in this case could be referred to for the collateral purpose of showing that the parties were dealing with the properties in their separate possession on the footing that there had been a partition between the members of the family as stated by defendant 1 to 3 in their written statement

[14] I must, however, briefly refer to some of the other cases on which reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the appellants who, I must say, has argued the case with great care and perseverance. He relies upon a decision of this Court in Ramautar Singh v. Juthi Tatma 18 P. L. T. 1012. I must say at first sight that the decision in question lends a plausible support to his argument. There a plaintiff had sued for possession of land basing his title on an unregistered patta. The Courts below allowed the plaintiff to prove his title by the production of rent receipts and by general circumstances and by using the unregistered patta for a collateral purpose. The High Court set aside the decree holding that the patta was inadmissible being unregistered, and the other evidence in the case could not be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving the plaintiff's title to the lands in suit. Their Lordships in their judgment sought to rely upon a previous decision of this Court in Janki Kuer v. Brij Bhukan, 5 P L T. 541: (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Pat. 641), which is really the crux of the above decision. On an examination of the earlier decision, it appears if I may say so with respect, that it does not fully support the conclusions of their Lordships. In the earlier case in question Sir Dawson-Miller C. J. who delivered the judgment of the Court quite clearly laid down that a document which is inadmissible in evidence for the purposes mentioned in S. 49, Registration Act, may nevertheless be admitted in evidence for a collateral purpose, as for example, to explain why a transferee under a deed imperfect through lack of registration was in possession or to prove the nature of that possession. They also held that, if the acts of the parties disclose a state of affairs consistent with the existence of an agreement mutually recognised and acted upon as if the instrument were binding upon the parties, then, although the written document may be defective as a valid and finally concluded agreement, such defects may be supplied by the subsequent actings and conduct of the parties, and their Lordships relied upon, amongst other cases, the decision of the Judicial Committee in Varada Pillai v. Jeevaratnammal, 43 Mad. 244 : (A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 44), already referred to by me above the other weakness of the decision in Ramautar, Singh v. Juthi Tatma, 18 P. L. T 1012 is, if I may point out, that there is no reference to an earlier decision of this Court which is also a Division Bench judgment in Keshwar Mahton v. Sheonandan Mahton, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 620 : (10 P. L. T. 449). In that case also their Lordships held that where a contract of the sale of the immovable property has been reduced to writing and is followed by delivery of possession, a party is not debarred under S. 91, Evidence Act to prove his possession as a means of conveying the property. This decision shows clearly that the fact that there was an unregistered instrument did not stand in the way of proving title by delivery of possession where under the law title could pass in that manner. To a similar effect is another Division Bench decision of this Court in Mt. Besar Kuar v. Ramhit Singh, 21 P. L. T. 1063 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 167).

[15] Another case on which very strong reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the appellant is Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Ramayya v. Achamma, I. L. R. (1945) Mad 160 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 550 F.B) in which case it was definitely held that where a deed of partition is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration the partition cannot be proved by evidence apart from the deed. It appears that a reference to the Full Bench was occasioned in view of a conflict between the decision of Kumaraswami Sastri, J. sitting with Venkatasubba Rao, J. in Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal, A I. R (13) 1926 Mad. 402 : (92 I. C. 1028) and that of Patanjali Sastri, J. in Veera Raghava Rao v. Gopalarao, 1941-2 M. L. J. 707 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad 125). In the latter case Patanjali Sastri, J. held that where a deed of partition is inadmissible by reason of the fact that it has not been registered, a co-sharer who happened to be in sole enjoyment of a particular property could not sue to eject another co-sharer who had disturbed his possession when he based his title on the partition deed. The judgment of Patanjali Sastri J. was approved in Letters Patent Appeal to which Leach C. J was himself a party; and Leach C J. when delivering the decision of the Full Bench approved of the view which he took in agreement with Patanjali Sastri J in affirming the latter's decision in Letters Patent Appeal. The Full Bench decision does not assign any other material reason for the purpose of not adopting the decision in Ramu Chetty v. Panchammal, A. I. R (13) 1926 Mad. 402 : (92 I. C. 1028) as good law when that decision was based upon the earlier decisions of the Judicial Committee in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal, 43 Mad. 244: (A.I.R.(6) 1919 P. C 44) and Rajangam Ayyar v. Rajangam Ayyar, 46 Mad. 373. (A. I. R (9) 1922 P C 166). There is also no consideration in the Full Bench judgment of S. 49, Registration Act and the proviso to the section. It is interesting to refer in this connection to a subsequent decision of the Madras High Court in Subba Naidu v. Varadarajulu Naidu, I. L. R. (1947) Mad. 694 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Mad 26). I say it is interesting because the judgment in this case has been delivered by Patanjali Sastri J. himself whose decision was approved by the Full Bench. This was also a case of partition between members of a joint family. In order to establish that there was a complete partition, the defendant in the suit relied upon an unregistered 'koorchit' or instrument of partition purporting to evidence a partition arrangement among the members of the family including the plaintiff and the defendant. The trial Judge held that the document not having been registered could not be "looked into for any purpose." An application was made before the High Court for admission of the rejected 'koorchit' as additional evidence under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C. It was contended for the appellant that the Court below had erred in holding that the unregistered 'koorchit' was inadmissible "for any purpose." His Lordship upheld the contention and observed :

"This contention is clearly right. Unlike the Stamp Act which renders an instrument not duly stamped inadmissible 'for any purpose' the Registration Act prohibits its admission only for certain purposes (S. 49). Ramayya v. Achamma, I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 160 (A I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 550 F. B.) relied on by the learned Judge lends no support to this view."

His Lordship also upheld the appellant's contention that the document was admissible to prove the adverse character of the possession of defendant 1 in respect of the lands which were allotted to him under the 'koorchit' though such allotment was ineffectual for want of registration. When the attention of his Lordship was drawn to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ram Rattan v. Parmanand, 73 I. A. 28 : (A.I.R. (33) 1946 P. C. 51) his Lordship observed :

"It will thus be seen that the oral evidence considered by their Lordships was in support of the plea that, there having been a previous partition, the suit 'in the present form' i. e. framed as one for partition did not lie. In other words, their Lordships considered the oral evidence to find out whether the fact of a partition prior to the suit was established."

In that view, his Lordship drew a distinction between the Full Bench decision in Ramayya v. Achamma, I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 160 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 550 F. B.) and the decision of the Privy Council in Ram Rattan v. Parma Nand, 73 I. A. 28: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 51). I may refer to another decision of the Madras High Court in Koyatti v. Imbichi Koya, A I. R. (33) 1946 Mad. 534: (1946-1 M. L. J. 454) where Somayya J. observed as follows :

"The Judicial Committee did not refer to the difficulty of admitting other evidence when the transaction was admittedly reduced to writing and that writing was inadmissible either under S. 35, Stamp Act, or under Ss. 17 and 49, Registration Act. But there is no doubt that the Judicial Committee had no difficulty in finding a partition on other evidence. But whether other evidence is admissible to prove the details of the partition is still open to doubt. It is not clear whether oral evidence was accepted only in proof of the division in status or to prove the details of the partition. When the question directly arises hereafter in this Court, we may have to consider whether the Full Bench decision in Ramayya v. Achamma, I L. R. (1945) Mad. 160 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 550 F. B.) is good law after the decision of the Judicial Committee."

[16] Whatever the position may be in regard to suits for ejectment and recovery of possession based upon a claim of partition, it is quite clear that in the present case we can safely follow the principle as already indicated by me above that the documents were admissible for a collateral purpose to determine the nature and character of possession, and that the other materials on the record could also be taken into consideration for the purpose of coming to a decision that the possession in question was referable to a division of properties between the parties concerned. In doing so I prefer to rest my decision on the judgments of the Judicial Committee and the Division Bench judgments of this Court, all of which I have already discussed above.

[17] I may also refer to another decision cited by the appellants' counsel in support of his contention. I mean a decision in Subramanian v. Lutchman, 50 I. A. 77 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 50). In that case the Judicial Committee observed :

"The rule with regard to writings is that oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put into writing. And the reason is that the writing is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. If this memorandum was of such a nature that it could be treated as the contract for the mortgage and what the parties considered to be the only repository and appropriate evidence of their agreement, it would be the instrument by which the equitable mortgage was created and would come within S. 17 of the Registration Act."

This was a case of an equitable mortgage where a mortgage could be created by depo-it of a document of title without writing, but it was held that the general rule was inapplicable when a deposit was made accompanied with an actual written charge. In that case their Lordships said :

"You must refer to the terms of the written document, and any implication that might be raised, supposing there was no document, is put out of the case and reduced to silence by the documents by which alone you must be governed."

The other case relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellants Bhukan Mian v. Radhika Kumari Debi, 19 P. L. T. 489 : (A.I.R. (25) 1938 Pat. 479) is also a case of mortgage. In a case to enforce a mortgage one may well be required to prove the terms of the contract, and that can only be done by production and proof of the document itself in which the terms are embodied and not by evidence aliunde.

[18] In view of the findings indicated by me above that the parties have been in separate possession of the properties ever since 1325 F, as alleged by the defendants, the suit for partition filed by the plaintiffs is not maintainable. I have, therefore no hesitation in accepting the finding of the two Courts below in this appeal and in my opinion, there would be no useful purpose served in remanding the case to the Court below for a fresh finding on the question of adverse possession or ouster as suggested by the learned counsel for the appellants. The evidence which has been accepted by the Courts below quite clearly indicates that the parties have been in separate possession of their respective lands.

[19] As to his last contention that in any case Plot NO 1600 should be divided, I find that there is no substance in this contention. It is true that in the written statement defendants 4 to 11 opened their mouth a little too wide; but, as observed by the Court of appeal below, at the trial they accepted the case set out in the written statement of defendant 1, and confined their claims only to the four plots of khata 178 mentioned in the said written statement which included Plot NO. 1600. It has been found on the evidence that these plots were actually allotted to defendants 4 to 11 sometime in the year 1333 F. after the death of the widow of Jiyan Singh. This fact, as held by the Courts below, is borne out by the receipts; as also by the documents Exs. C-1 to C 6 which, in my opinion, are admissible not only for the collateral purpose of proving separate possession but also admissible in proof of part performance under S 53A T. P. Act; and also by the oral evidence on the point. That being so, on this point again the appeal is concluded by a finding of fact against the appellants.

[20] In the result, the decision of the Courts below is maintained, and the appeal fails, and it must be dismissed with costs.

Lalnarain Sinha and S. P. Srivastava—for Petitioners; K. D. Chatterji and Pratap Narain Sinha —for Opposite Party.

Order. — The question to be decided in this case is whether the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to substitute opposite party Chandi Singh and sons of Ramgovind Singh in place of Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh whom he had already substituted by a previous order in place of Mt. Jamurata Kuer, who had instituted the appeal.

[2] The material facts are that Kailash Singh had obtained a decree against Mt. Jamurata Kuer in a suit for specific performance of contract. Jamurata Kuer filed an appeal against the decree but on a subsequent date, that is, 11-2 1949, she died. On 24 2-1949 one Jagat Singh filed a petition for being substituted in her place alleging that he had been adopted by the deceased Jamurata Kuer and claimed to be her legal heir and representative. On the same date, Rajkishore Singh filed another petition claiming that he is the daughter's son of Sahebjada Singh, husband of Mt. Jamurata Kuer, and asked to be substituted in place of the deceased appellant. On 4-3-1949 one Sheolakhan Singh filed a petition claiming that he was the nearest agnate of Sahebjada Singh. On 13-5-1949 Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh filed a petition asking that they should be substituted since they were the nearest agnates of Sahebjada Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge fixed 13-8-1949 for hearing substitution matter. On that date Sheolakhan Singh, Rajkishore Singh and Jagat Singh filed separate petitions praying for permission to withdraw from the case and alleging that Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh were really the next reversioners of Sahebjada Singh and they should be substituted in place of Jamurata Kuer, the deceased appellant. After hearing lawyers the learned Subordinate Judge ordered that Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh should be substituted.

[3] On 31-8-1949, Ramgovind Singh applied for substitution claiming that he was the nearest agnate of Sahebjada Singh and Sheopujan and Rampujan were strangers and ought to be removed from the record of the case. On 5-9-1949 Chandi Singh filed a petition containing allegations to the similar effect. On 25-10 1949 Ramgovind Singh died and his sons were permitted to prosecute the petition on his behalf. After hearing the evidence adduced the learned Subordinate Judge cancelled his previous order dated 13 8-1949 by which he substituted Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh in place of the deceased Jamurata Kuer. On the contrary he ordered that Chandi Singh and the sons of Ramgovind Singh had a better claim and they ought to be substituted in place of the deceased appellant.

[4] In support of this rule, Mr. Lalnarain Sinha argued that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to cancel the previous order of substitution made on 13-8-1949 nor was he entitled to reopen the matter and hold upon further evidence that Chandi Singh and the sons of Ramgovind Singh had a better claim to be subsituted in place of Jamurata Kuer. In my opinion this argument is well founded and must succeed. It is manifest that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 13-8-1949 is one made under O. 22, R. 5 which enacts as follows:

"Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or a deceased defendant, such question shall be determined by the Court."

From the narrative of facts, it will be seen that after the death of Jamurata Kuer separate petitions were filed on behalf of different persons claiming to be substituted in place of the deceased appellant. It is true that on 13-8 1949 Sheolakhan Singh, Rajkishore Singh and Chandi Singh filed petitions praying for permission to withdraw from the case and admitted that Rampujan and Sheopujan were really the sole reversioners of Sahebjada Singh. Upon this the learned Subordinate Judge made an order that Sheopujan and Rampujan should be substituted. Even so it is apparent that this order is made under O. 22, R. 5 and not under O 22 R. 3 which applies only where there is no dispute as to who is legal representative of a deceased party to the appeal. Reference may be made to Oula v. Bepathee, 17 Mad. 210 : (3 M. L. J. 289) in which it was held that S. 365 presupposes that the party claiming to represent a deceased plaintiff is his legal representative. But if there is a dispute as to whether any person is or is not legal representative of the deceased party it should be determined by the Court under R. 5 of O. 22. If the order dated 13-8-1949 is not a mere formal act but it is a judicial determination that Sheopujan and Rampujan were the legal representatives of the deceased appellant it must be held that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to cancel that order and to reopen the question merely on the subsequent allegation of Chandi and Ramgovind that fraud had been practised by Jamuna Singh. On behalf of the opposite party, Mr. K. D. Chatterji placed reliance upon Vatsalabai v. Sambhaji Pandurang, 43 Bom. 168: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Bom. 100). But the facts of that case may be clearly distinguished. A suit had been filed by five persons, one of whom R died while the suit was pending. Thereupon an application was made on behalf of minor G, son of the plaintiff 1 that he should be brought on the record as heir and legal representative of the deceased R relying upon an alleged adoption. The Subordinate Judge granted the application and amended the record by substituting G's name for that of R. Subsequently, the minor daughters of R having learnt of the application applied that G's name should be deleted and their name should be brought on the record in his place as G's adoption was fictitious. The Subordinate Judge held that he could not alter his previous order in view of R. 3 of O. 22, Civil P. C. The High Court interfered on the ground that under R. 5 of O. 22 the Subordinate Judge had the power to correct the order previously made and to determine who were the real legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. It is patent that the Subordinate Judge had made the previous order under R. 3 of O. 22 and since the subsequent petition was filed within the period of limitation it is obvious that the Subordinate Judge was bound to determine the question as to who were the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. In the present case, the facts are manifestly different for the Subordinate Judge had made the previous order dated 13-8-1949 under R. 5 since the dispute had already arisen as regards proper persons to be substituted in place of the deceased Jamurata Kuer.

[5] Mr. K. D. Chatterji also tried to support the order of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that under S. 151 he had inherent jurisdiction to cancel the previous order to meet the end of justice. But the principle is well settled that a Court has no inherent power to do that which is prohibited by the Code. In Sadho Saran Rai v. Anant Rai, 2 Pat. 731: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 483) it was held by a Division Bench that a Court was not competent either in review or under its inherent powers to set aside a compromise decree on the ground that the consent of the parties to the compromise was obtained by fraud. A distinction was drawn in cases where fraud is practised upon a party and where fraud is practised upon Court. There are authorities to the effect that a Court has inherent power to correct its own proceedings when it is satisfied that in the passing of a particular order it was misled by one of the parties. But where one of the parties alleges not a fraud upon the Court but only that his consent to compromise was procured by fraud the Court cannot investigate the matter either in review or in exercise of its inherent power and the only remedy of the party is to institute a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud. Applying these principles to the present case, it is obvious that there is no allegation that the Court was misled by any fraud practised upon it and the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction under S. 151 to cancel his order dated 13-8-1949 by which he substituted Sheopujan Singh and Rampujan Singh in place of the deceased Jamurata Kuer.

[6] For these reasons I would set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 4-2-1950 and restore his previous order dated 13-8-1949 by which Rampujan Singh and Sheopujan Singh were substituted in place of the deceased appellant.

Criminal Revn. No. 760 of 1950, D/- 12-9-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 539B and 144 — Decision, if can be based merely on local inpection — Local inspection in proceeding under S. 144 of Code.

A person disposing of a judicial proceeding should never base his decision on merely a local inspection. There is, no doubt, some amount of latitude in S. 144 proceeding. But even then it is a judicial enquiry and if a Magistrate makes a local inspection, that may be only for the purpose of appreciating the materials produced by the parties and not for making extra-judicial assumptions of his own. P. K. Bose—for Petitioner; B N. Mitter and A. K. Mitter — for Second Party to the Section 144 proceeding.

Order. — This application relates to the expunging of certain remarks made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad in an order disposing of a proceeding under S. 144, Criminal P. C. The petitioner was not a party to the said proceeding and yet it is said that the learned Magistrate made those unwarranted and unjustified remarks without making him a party to the proceeding or giving him an opportunity to explain his conduct. The petitioner is an Honorary Magistrate of the sub-division and he is also the Manager of the Kunda Estate, known as the Bengali Estate in the district of Gaya. The circumstances which led to the proceeding under S. 144, relate to a dispute with regard to an area of about 66 bighas of land situate in village Sansha, police station Daudnagar, in the sub division of Aurangabad. The petitioner states that 19 bighas and odd of these lands belonged to one Rameshwar Gosain, of which the Kunda Estate and other co-sharers were the landlords. The Estate obtained a decree for rent against this Rameshwar Gosain and, in execution of the said decree, the lands in question were sold and purchased by the decree-holder landlord of which the landlord obtained delivery of possession sometime in 1939. It is then stated that in 1940-41, the landlord, of which the petitioner is the Manager, settled the said lands measuring 19 bighas and odd along with the other lands which have been recorded as ghairmazruamalik with Ramchander Ahir, Bharat Ahir and others. It appears that subsequently in August 1949 there was a proceeding under S. 144 between these settlees under the landlord and the outgoing tenants Rameshwar Gosain and others, in which proceeding the settlees were party 1 while Rameshwar Gosain and others were party 2. In that proceeding, an application was filed on behalf of the Kunda Estate by the petitioner supporting the settlement in favour of party 1 to the preceeding. The learned Magistrate disposed of the proceeding on making a local inspection, and the entire finding appears to have been based upon the local inspection made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate himself. The petitioner alleges that a few months before the initiation of the 144-proceeding, party 2, Rameshwar Gosain and others had filed a complaint against the settlees and also against the men of the landlord in which they complained that the members of party 1, the settlees, were trying to dispossess Rameshwar Gosain and others by force. In that case, the complaint was dismissed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate himself in which he found that the outgoing tenants, Rameswar Gosain and others had no right and interest in the lands in question and that they should if at all, have recourse to civil Courts. The petitioner alleges that, in view of that decision, the 144-proceeding should not have been decided against the new settlees, who were party 1 in that case, and the learned Magistrate did so merely because he was inimical to the petitioner and, in the course of his order made those unwarranted observations. It appears that party 1, to the 144-proceeding had moved the District Magistrate against the order under S. 144, but the learned Additional District Magistrate, while disposing of the application, refused to interfere because the order under S. 144 had spent its force, though the Additional District Magistrate realised that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had been passed without properly or duly considering all the facts and circumstances relating to the dispute. The petitioner appears to have moved the District Magistrate also for expunging the remarks in question and for making a reference for the purpose to this Court. But the learned Additional District Magistrate of Gaya, who heard the said application, rejected the same on 11-4-1950, observing that it would be immaterial to take any action on those observations, because he had already found when rejecting the application against his order under S. 144, that the findings of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate were not correct. The petitioner has, therefore, now moved this Court for expunging the remarks made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The remarks complained of are to be found at various places in the course of the order and they have been stated in para. 7 of the application. Paragraph 7 (A) refers to the remark which runs as follows:

"There was no sign of habitation within a few miles except the lonely houses of these Gosains who have lived in this jungle and sandy tract for years and years and have now become a victim of the wrath of the absentee landlord Bengal Kunda Estate in this case and their powerful Manager Babu Harnedra Nath Pathak who also happens to be a Honorary Magistrate of the place and who are bent upon driving out these powerful Gosains tenants from their lands."

7 (B): "I am surprised that the Manager who happens to be a Hony. Magistrate should file such a false petition making false allegation which is contrary to facts and farthest from truth."

7 (c). "The intention of the Kunda Estate is now to settle lands of these Gosains tenants with other tenants of the village and to make them fight and cause bloodshed and riot which is most reprehensible conduct of the proprietor and his Manager. I am convinced from my local inspection and I am constrained to remark that the conduct of the Manager of Kunda Estate has been most reprehensible in acting in this manner."

A rule was issued by this Court calling upon the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate to show cause why these remarks should not be expunged from the order in question, but it appears that the learned Magistrate has been either transferred or has gone on leave, and no explanation has been submitted by the Magistrate who passed this order. A notice was also served upon the State of Bihar who are the opposite party to this application, but, on their behalf also no one has appeared to oppose this application. The application is, however, opposed by Mr. B. N. Mitter, counsel appearing on behalf of the persons who were party 2 to the proceeding under S. 144.

[2] I should like to say as little as possible against the order of the learned Magistrate disposing of the proceeding under S. 144, because I have no desire to prejudice the case of party 2, but I must observe that the procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate in disposing of the proceeding under S. 144 was really extraordinary. The dispute related to a large area of land and it was a dispute as to the possession of immovable property. He himself observed that some of the tenants were on the side of the landlord while some of the tenants whose interest is said to have been sold off were opposing the landlord and the other set of tenants. In such a case, if there was an apprehension of breach of the peace, the proper proceeding was a proceeding under S. 145 and the matter should have been decided in such a proceeding, but the Magistrate, instead of adopting the proper procedure known to the law in the circumstances of the case, proceeded to dispose of the matter under S. 144 and that also not upon any material but largely and mainly upon his local inspection. I do not find from the record that there was any memorandum prepared by the learned Magistrate of this local inspection nor has such a memorandum been referred to in the order itself. It appears that, in connection with a previous dispute between the parties in respect of some of these lands, the matter was decided by the same learned Magistrate on 7-1-1949. There, it appears, party 2 to the proceeding had alleged that they were likely to be dispossessed of the lands in question by the new settlees, that is, the members of party 1 in collusion with the landlord and, therefore, action should be taken against them. On this complaint, there was an enquiry by the Magistrate and the said learned Magistrate himself dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C. In dismissing the complaint, the learned Magistrate himself observed as follows :

"The landlord has appeared and he has produced the Dakhaldehani papers showing that the lands of the complainant were sold for arrears of rent and purchased in court auction sale and delivery of possession was obtained on several occasions in the years 1938 and onwards .... it is admitted before me by the complainant that he has not paid any rent for the lands up to the year There is no case worth the name which the complainant can claim in this Court. His remedy lies in the civil Court. The complainant s allegation does not disclose any criminal offence nor is it plausible story."

[3] After this emphatic observation made by the learned Magistrate himself, it was singularly inappropriate on his part to proceed under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and what is worse to dispose of this proceeding not by taking any evidence in the case or after making the landlord a party but on his local inspection. I am, however, not concerned with the 144-proceeding itself, except, incidentally, to show that the remarks made in his order as to the petitioner and his conduct were quite unjustified, because the learned Magistrate had not made the petitioner a party to the proceeding nor had he called for the production of evidence in support of his allegation in the petition filed by him that the Estate had settled the land with party 1. If he had called for these documents and made the petitioner a party, he would have found, presumably, as he himself did find on a previous occasion, that the allegations were correct. The Additional District Magistrate, while disposing of the proceeding, observed that "the dispute related to possession over a vast tract of lands, measuring about 66 bighas which should not have been dealt with and disposed of by a summary proceeding under S. 144, Criminal P. C.... the proper course for the Magistrate in such disputes was to decide the question of possession once for all in a regular proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. It appears that the landlords, after having obtained dakhaldehani, settled the lands with the applicants who are armed with hukumnama and rent receipts in respect of the lands and whose documentary evidence of possession cannot easily be brushed aside. There was furthermore a criminal case in respect of some of these very lands and between the same parties. The same Magistrate had by his order dated 7-1-1949, dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., and in that substantive case of O. P. Rameshwar Gossain who was directed to Civil Court for the remedy of his claim, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate had accepted the delivery of possession in favour of the landlords from whom the applicants base their claim."

[4] Either these materials were before the Magistrate or these materials which were produced before him on the previous occasion were not before him. If these materials were before him, as the order of the learned Additional District Magistrate appears to indicate, then indeed it is very surprising that he should have disposed of the 144-proceeding without reference to them and yet he should have suggested in his order that the conduct of the Manager of the Estate was most reprehensible and that he had filed a false petition making false allegations which were contrary to facts and farthest from truth. These strong observations should never have been made by the learned Magistrate without either consulting the materials which were placed before him and on which on a previous occasion he had himself been convinced, or at least without giving an opportunity to the petitioner be present before him to explain the allegations made in the petition. Indeed, in the circumstances of the case it is most remarkable that he should have made these remarks and he should have gone back upon his own findings on a previous occasion. Mr. B. N. Mitter, appearing for party 2 to the S. 144 proceeding suggested that probably at the time of the passing of his order, the learned Magistrate was not aware of the order which he had passed on a previous occasion, that is, on 7-1-1949. In the first place, I cannot imagine that, at least, party 1 who were the settlees under the landlord would not have drawn the attention of the Magistrate to his previous order; but, even if it were so, the Magistrate should have realised the risk of making these ex parte assumptions against the conduct of the petitioner, who was an Honorary Magistrate of the locality and was the Manager of a fairly big estate in the Sub-division as it appears from the materials and whose apparent respectability could not be lightly questioned. Prima facie, there was no reason to distrust the allegations made in the petition. It is true that the learned Magistrate made his own local enquiry. But it has been repeatedly pointed out that a person disposing of a judicial proceeding should never base his decision on merely a local inspection. There is, no doubt, some amount of latitude in a S. 144-proceeding. But even then the learned Magistrate should have remembered that it is a judicial enquiry and if he makes a local inspection, that may be only for the purpose of appreciating the materials produced by the parties and not for making extra-judicial assumptions of his own. I, therefore, see not the slightest justification for the remarks which have been made by the learned Magistrate in the course of that order. The Additional District Magistrate did not think it fit to make a reference to this Court because in his opinion the order had already spent its force, and he had observed that the findings of the learned Magistrate were incorrect. The petitioner has a just grievance in this matter. It was quite wrong on the part of the Magistrate to have made those remarks against him and, in my opinion, this is a fit case in which the remarks should be directed to be expunged. The petitioner has alleged that the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate made those remarks because he was inimically disposed towards him and that he also disposed of the 144 application contrary to his own findings on a previous occasion on account of this enmity. Be that as it may, the Magistrate has not submitted any explanation, and it would be unnecessary for me to decide as to what the motives of the learned Magistrate actually were, though his order, to my mind, appears somewhat incomprehensible in view of the previous order which he had himself passed. In any case I consider that this application for expunging the remarks of the learned Magistrate must be allowed. That this Court has the power to do so in a case like this can hardly be questioned in view of the provisions of S. 561A, Criminal P. C., and, if reference to any decision is necessary, reference may be made to the decision in Karamat Ullah v. Emperor, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 42: (41 Cr. L. J. 380).

Where in a suit for recovery of house rent and ejectment the question as to title of the plaintiff is directly and expressly raised by the defendant, the decision on the question of title will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for rent even though the suit is decreed ex parte due to absence of the defendant on the date of final hearing: A. Order.—The question involved in this case is whether the Small Cause Court committed any error of law in refusing to return the plaint for being filed in proper Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title.

[2] The plaintiff brought the suit claiming rent of a house which he alleged the defendants had taken on monthly rent. The main ground of defence was that the plaintiff had no title and the defendants had not taken settlement of the house from him. The learned Munsif held that it was not open to the defendants to raise question of title since the doctrine of res judicata will operate. In 1946 the plaintiff had previously brought a title suit against the defendants for recovering house rent and for ejectment. In that suit the defendants appeared and filed written statement but on the date fixed for final hearing the defendants were absent and the suit was decreed ex parte. The defendants preferred an appeal which was dismissed by the District Judge. In second appeal the decree was modified by the High Court. The claim for arrear of rent was granted but the plaintiff was not granted a decree for ejectment since the notice to quit was held to be invalid in law. The Small Cause Court held that the decision in the previous suit would operate as res judicata and it was not open to the defendants to agitate again the question of title. Accordingly, he refused to return the plaint under S. 23, Small Cause Courts Act.

[3] In support of this rule, Mr. Prem Lall contended that the Small Cause Court was erroneous to hold that the question of title was barred on the principle of res judicata. In my opinion, this argument is not correct. Learned counsel referred to Pardip Singh v. Ramsunder Singh, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 510: (30 P.L.T. 434) and contended that the question of title had been gone into only incidentally and collaterally in the previous suit and so the decision would not be res judicata. The principle is well settled that the decision in a rent suit is not res judicata on the question of title unless the question of title was expressly raised and was expressly decided between the parties and in each case it is necessary to examine carefully the decision in the rent suit before any opinion can be formed as to whether it operates as res judicata on the question of title or not. The difference will be apparent from two Privy Council decisions, viz., Ruh Bahadoor Singh v. Mt. Lucho Kuer, 12 I. A. 23: (11 Cal 301 P. C.) where it was held that the decision was not res judicata as the question of title had been gone into only incidentally and collaterally, and Radhamadhub Holdar v. Manohar Mookerji, 15 I. A. 97: (15 Cal. 56 P. C.) where the question of title was directly decided in a rent suit and the decision was held to be res judicata. As explained in Gnanada Gobindo Choudhur's case, 43 C.L.J. 146 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 650). "the essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a proper Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to the right or title claimed by one of them against the other, the same question cannot be agitated by them again in another suit. In the case of suits for rent or other recurring liability the cause of action for suits for successive period are different. In the case of such suits, for the doctrine to apply, it will have to be shown that the question of right or liability not merely for the period in the previous suit but that for all times or once for all was directly and substantially in issue and was tried and determined. If a direct issue on the point was raised and decided, the decision would be res judicata in respect of any suit for subsequent period."

Applying the principle in the present case I am of opinion that in the previous suit question of title was directly and expressly raised and decided between the parties and the decision will operate as res judicata. It should be noticed at the outset that the previous suit was not only for recovery of arrears of rent but also for ejectment of the defendants. In the judgment of the trial Court the following passage is material:

"The suit is heard ex parte. Exhibit 1 is the patta dated 13-12-44 which proves the settlement of the aforesaid land with the plaintiffs. Exhibit 2 is the office copy of the notice and Ex. 3 is the postal receipt. P. W. 1 has proved that the plaintiffs made the hut and let it out to the defendants at a monthly rental of Rs. 5."

In the course of the appellate judgment the learned District Judge states:

"To substantiate their story of settlement of the disputed hut with defendants on monthly rental of Rs. 5 and to show that the defendant did not pay rent for the disputed hut for eleven months, the plaintiffs examined plaintiff 2 and got the original patta (Ex. 1) by which the land on which the disputed house stands was settled with plaintiffs by the previous owner Parmeswar Pd. Choudhary, duly proved. The deposing plaintiff has stated on oath that after taking settlement of the land on which the disputed hut stands, they constructed the disputed hut on it, and then let it out to the defendants on a monthly rental of Rs. 5 on the 1st Fagun, 1352 Fs. This deposing plaintiff has further stated on oath that after paying rent for one month, the defendants stopped payment of rent from Chait, 1352 fs. The plaintiffs also got the notice of eviction which they sent to the defendants by registered post before the filing of this suit, duly proved, and there being no rebutting evidence to falsify the plaintiffs' claim the learned Munsif, I think, was quite justified in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit on the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, and hence I hold accordingly and decide this point too against the appellant."

[4] In second appeal the High Court affirmed the decree for rent but set aside the decree for ejectment since there was no valid notice to quit.

[5] It is manifest that the question of title was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit and the learned Munsif was, in my opinion, correct in holding that the decision would operate as res judicata in the present suit. The learned Munsif, therefore, committed no error of law in declining to return the plaint under S. 23, Small Cause Courts Act.

[6] For these reasons I would dismiss this application with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohar.

Criminal Revn. No. 231 of 1949, D/- 2-8-1949.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 478, 482—Trade mark—Infringement of—Mark not registered—Evidence to establish ownership—Trade mark in surname.

What the Court has to determine is whether the trade mark claimed by the complainant is distinctive mark, that is to say, a mark which is adopted to distinguish the goods of the proprietor of the particular trade mark from those of other persons. For that purpose it is necessary to ascertain the extent to which the user of that mark has rendered it in effect distinctive of the goods in question. [Para 2]

A declaration of ownership for the purpose of registration is not evidence of legal ownership of a trade mark, for such a declaration represents nothing more than the opinion and claim of the declarant. [Para 2]

The right to a surname that a man uses is shared with every person who elects to use the same name and consequently he has no monopoly in it. [Para 2]

Where the complainant was a manufacturer of a fever mixture which had acquired a reputation in fever cases and was sold by the name of Burman's Juri Tap in a red coloured carton with a design which had not been registered, the evidence that is required is that the complainant had established a trade mark in the name Burman and that persons bought the complainant's medicine because it was contained in his carton, that is to say a person who received the complainant's carton would rely on finding in it the medicine which he intended to purchase. If there was no such evidence then any one selling medicine in a carton so similar to that of the complainant as to mislead a purchaser into believing that he was actually purchasing the complainant's medicine would not be infringing the complainant's Trade Mark. Baldeva Sahay and Shivanugrah Narain—for Petitioner ; Nageshwar Prasad and S. R. Ghoshal — for Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 on a conviction for an offence under S. 482, Penal Code. The complainant is a manufacturer of a patent medicine which has apparently acquired a reputation in fever cases and calls it by the name of Juri Tap. This is sold in a red-coloured carton which, on one side has the figure of an emaciated man with the caption "Before Use", and, on the opposite panel, the figure of a healthy looking individual with the "caption", "After Use." On the third panel is the name "Juri Tap" and a five pointed star. On the same panel the name and address of the manufacturer, that is to say, the complainant, is given. This is "Dabur Dr. S. K. Burman Limited, Calcutta." The accused sells a similar medicine in a carton very much like that of the complainant's carton. It is the same colour ; it has the same pictures of the emaciated and the healthy man. On the third side of the carton is the name "Juri Tap," but above this name there are the words "Amritsudha." On this panel the name and address of the manufacturer is given as S. P. Burman and Company, Benares, Cawnpore." There is also under the name "Juri Tap" a six-pointed star. Near the star on the complainant's carton are the initials S. K. B., whereas in the centre of the star of the petitioner's carton is the word "Om" in Hindi. To a casual observer the cartons are so alike that unless one took the trouble to examine it more than cursorily it would be difficult not to be deceived into accepting the medicine in the petitionsr's carton for the medicine in the complainant's carton.

[2] Section 432 renders punishable the use of any false trade mark or any false property mark unless the user is able to prove that he acted without intent to defraud. The expression trade mark is defined in S. 478, as amended by the Merchandise Marks Act, 1941, as including a trade mark registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1940, and any mark used in relation to goods for the purpose of indicating, or so as to indicate, a connection in the course of trade between the goods and some person having the right to use the mark. At the relevant time no part of the design on the carton of the complainant or the petitioner had been registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1940, although I am told applications for registration were pending. This case, therefore, has to be decided with reference to the second part of the definition of trade mark given in S. 478, Penal Code. The complainant relied on declarations which had been made in his application for registration which referred to a previous declaration made in 1905 and also to catalogues which he had issued over a course of many years for the purpose of establishing that he had been using this particular carton and device on it for a very long time. It has, however, been pointed out in the case of Loke Nath v. Ashwini Kumar De, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 665: (A.I.R. (25) 1938 Cal. 216 : 39 Cr. L. J. 537) that a declaration of ownership for the purpose of registration is not evidence of legal ownership of a trade mark for such a declaration represents nothing more than the opinion and claim of the declarant. What the Court has to determine is whether the trade mark claimed by the complaint is distinctive mark, that is to say, a mark which is adopted to distinguish the goods of the proprietor of the particular trade mark from those of other persons. For that purpose it is necessary to ascertain the extent to which the user of that mark has rendered it in effect distinctive of the goods in question. For that purpose the evidence that is required is that persons bought the complainant's medicine because it was contained in his carton, that is to say, a person who received the complainant's carton would rely on finding in it the medicine which he intended to purchase. If there was such evidence then any one selling medicine in a carton so similar to that of the complainant as to mislead a purchaser into believing that he was actually purchasing the complainant's medicine would be infringing the compalinant's Trade Mark. But in this case there is no such evidence. In fact, the only person who appears to have given any relevant evidence in that matter at all says that this medicine is mostly used by illiterate villagers and that what they ask for is "Burman's Juri Tap." If the complainant had established a Trade Mark in the name Burman, the petitioner would, in my opinion, be guilty under S. 482 in this case. But, as was pointed out in In re Cadbury Brothers Application, (1915) 1 Ch. 331: (84 L. J. Ch. 242) the right to a surname that a man uses is shared with every person who elects to use the same name, and consequently, he has got about as much monopoly in it as he has in the air that he breathes. It is true that the surname of the petitioner is not Burman, nor is he a Burman by caste, but he does apparently use that name for his trade purposes and is entitled to do so, so long as he does not infringe the right of anybody else, that is to say, the Trade Mark of anybody who has secured a right to the use of the name Burman as a Trade Mark, which it is very difficult to prove in the case of a surname. I would have been compelled and been happy to uphold the conviction of the petitioner in this case if there were evidence on record to satisfy me that for any considerable time the public who bought fever mixture under the name 'Juri Tap" did so on the strength of its being sold in the complainant's carton. But as I have already indicated, the evidence in that respect is lacking. The conviction and sentence of the petitioner must, therefore, be set aside.

Where on a petition for adjournment being rejected the counsel for the appellant withdraws on the ground that he is not ready to argue the appeal and the appellate Court dismisses the appeal for default of the appellant, the dismissal is one within the ambit of O. 41, R. 17. The mere presence of the appellant in the Court does not make any difference for unless he is there for the purpose of conducting his case, there is no appearance. [Paras 5, 7]

D. N. Varma and Chandra Sekhar Prasad — for Appellant; Gorakh Nath Singh and Ugrah Singh — for Respondents.

Ramaswami J. — This appeal is presented against the order of the District Judge of Shahabad refusing to restore an appeal which had been dismissed for default.

[2] The plaintiffs had brought a suit for redemption of a rehan bond alleging that they had deposited the amount in Court under S. 83, T. P. Act and had also caused a notice thereof served upon the defendant. In spite of the service of notice the defendant refused to give possession of the land and the plaintiffs therefore claimed mesne profits for the period subsequent to the date of the deposit of the rehan money. The defendant contested the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had no right to redeem. The trial Court granted a decree for redemption but rejected the claim for mesne profits on ground that there was no evidence adduced to prove that plaintiffs had made the deposit on the alleged date. Against this decree the defendant filed an appeal. The plaintiffs filed a cross objection with respect to the claim for mesne profits which had been disallowed by the trial Court.

[3] The learned Judge fixed 16-9-1947 for hearing the appeal. On that date counsel for the appellant stated that his client reached Arrah at 11 A. M. and so he was not ready to argue the appeal. Learned counsel asked for a short adjournment but the Court rejected the petition and also dismissed the appeal for default of the appellant. The Court heard the cross-objection of the respondents ex parte and granted him a decree for mesne profits which should be ascertained in future proceedings. The defendant then applied under O. 41, R. 19 for rehearing the appeal. The learned District Judge rejected this application on the ground that no sufficient cause was shown for the non-appearance of the appellant on the date fixed for hearing.

[4] On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection is related (debated?) that this appeal is incompetent since the learned District Judge had not dismissed the appeal for default and O. 41, R. 19 was therefore not applicable. It was pointed out on the respondents' behalf that both the appellant and his counsel were present in Court and after the petition for adjournment had been rejected the counsel for the appellant withdrew on the ground that he was not ready to argue the case. In support of his argument learned Counsel cited Mathura Das v. Narain Das, A. I. R. (27) 1940 ALL. 248 : (I. L. R (1940) ALL. 220), and Raghubar Singh v. Gouri Charan Singh A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 259: (46 I. C. 492). In the Allahabad case, Mathura Das v. Narain Das, A. I. R. (27) 1940 ALL 248 : (I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 220), there is no doubt an observation that in the case of an appearance by an appellant who was not prepared to argue the appeal O. 41, R. 17 would not be applicable. But this authority is inconsistent with the current decisions of the Patna, Calcutta and Madras High Courts as will be presently shown. Raghubar Singh v. Gouri Charan, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 259 : (46 I. C. 492) the question to be decided was whether a compromise petition according to which the parties had agreed that the suit should be dismissed could be set aside by an application under O. 9, R. 9. It should be added that according to the terms of the compromise petition the Subordinate Judge had dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs alleging that by practice of fraud their thumb-marks were taken on the compromise petition had applied for setting aside the order of dismissal. A Bench of this Court of dismissal in accordance with the terms incorporated therein could be set aside or reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in O. 9, R. 9. Obviously the material facts in the present case are different. On the other hand in Lalji Sahu v. Lachmi Narain Singh, 3 Pat. L. J. 355 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 351), it was held that the presence of the plaintiff in Court was not an appearance within the meaning of O. 9, R. 8 if the pleader of the plaintiff is absent. In Muhammad Bakar Ali v. Chulhai Mahton, 4 Pat. L. J. 712 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 589), the defendant was ready on the date to which the suit had been adjourned but the plaintiff's pleader appeared and stated that he was unable to adduce any evidence and it was ordered that the suit be dismissed for default of the plaintiff. Upon these facts the learned Judges held that the dismissal was a dismissal under O. 17, R. 2 and not under R. 3, and therefore, no appeal lay from the order. In order that there may be an appearance within the meaning of O. 9 or O. 17 by a pleader the pleader must be duly instructed and able to answer all material questions. If a party to a suit is represented by a pleader the presence of such party in Court would not constitute an appearance. In Damodar Das v. Rajkumar Das, 1 Pat. 188 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Pat. 485), the facts are almost parallel with the present case. In that case the defendant was personally present at the hearing but his pleader took no part in the trial save to ask for an adjournment which was refused. Thereafter the Court after hearing the plaintiff's evidence and argument sdeereed the suit. Dawson-Miller, C. J. held that the decree was ex parte and was liable to be set aside for sufficient cause under O. 9, R. 13. The eminent Judge observed that the mere presence of a party in Court, unless he is there for the purpose of conducting his case, is not an appearance within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure; nor does the presence of his pleader who has been instructed to represent him on previous occasions constitute an appearance unless he is instructed to represent him on the occasion in question and attends for that purpose.

[5] The cursus cures of the Patna High Court is consistent with Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai, 30 Mad. 274 : (17 M. L. J. 225) in which the plaintiff's pleader appeared on the date on which the (case ?) was posted for hearing. He applied for adjournment which was refused by the Court. The pleader declined to proceed with the suit and the plaintiff who was present in Court took no steps. Thereupon the suit was dismissed. It was held in these circumstances that the dismissal of the suit was a dismissal for default and that the plaintiff could apply for restoration of the suit. The High Court observed that a plaintiff "fails to appear" within the meaning of S. 102 (of the old Code) when his pleader declines to proceed with the suit and it made no difference that the party was present in Court. A similar view was taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Satish Chandra v. Apara Prasad, 34 Cal. 403 : (5 C.L.J. 247 F.B.).

[6] It should be stated that a similar rule has been adopted in English Courts. In Robinson v. Chadwick, (1878) 7 Ch. D 878 : (47 L.J.C.H. 607) the plaintiff did not appear in person, but counsel appeared on his behalf and asked for an adjournment; the application was refused; thereupon counsel for the plaintiff declined to proceed. Fry J. held that he could only deal with the case as if the plaintiff had not appeared at the trial, as indeed, in substance, he had not; and the learned Judge made an order for dismissal under R. 19 of O. 36 of the old Supreme Court Rules.

[7] For these reasons I hold that the appeal is competent under O. 41, R. 19 and the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the respondents must fail.

[8] For the appellant it was contended that sufficient cause had been shown for restoring the appeal. It was pointed out that the cross-objection was admitted on 26-6-1947 and the appeal was adjourned to 21-8-1947, for hearing; on this date the Court was engaged in sessions and so the hearing adjourned to 16-9-1947. For the appellant evidence was given that he missed railway train on the previous date and the morning train by which he reached Arrah on 16-9-1947 was three hours late. The appellant met his pleader at about 12 noon. As the appeal was called on for hearing soon after, it was argued for the appellant, that the pleader was not ready to argue the appeal. The learned District Judge has not specifically disbelieved the plea of the appellant that the morning train was late. If this part of the case be true it is obvious that the appellant cannot be held responsible for delay in reaching the Court for giving instructions to his pleader. There may be some amount of negligence on the appellant's part for having missed the train on the previous date. But upon the whole I consider that sufficient cause has been made out by the appellant for restoration of the appeal.

[9] For the respondents however an important objection is raised that no appeal had been preferred by the appellant from the order of the learned District Judge allowing the cross-objection with respect to the mesne profits. It was contended for the respondents that in the absence of such an appeal the order of District Judge granting mesne profits has become final and cannot be interfered with by the High Court. Learned counsel relied upon Hira Nand v. Mahbub Elahi, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Lab. 174 : (213 I. C. 217). In that case the District Judge had dismissed an appeal for default and had allowed cross objection preferred by the respondent. The plaintiff appellant then made an application for restoring the appeal but this was disallowed by the District Judge. Against this order dismissing his application for restoring the appeal the plaintiff moved the High Court and Beckett J. held that there was sufficient ground for restoration. The appeal was therefore restored and sent to the District Judge for decision on its merits. When the appeal came for rehearing before the District Judge an objection was raised on behalf of the defendant-respondent that, inasmuch as the Court had, at the time of allowing his cross-objection, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to establish the contract and that order had not been set aside, the decision allowing the cross-objection must be held to have become final and operated as res judicata between the parties. This objection prevailed before the District Judge and the appeal was dismissed. A second appeal was preferred in the High Court which held that the order for restoration of the appeal would not have resulted ipso facto in setting aside the order of dismissal passed in the cross-objection. Unless steps were taken to get rid of the order passed on the cross-objection that order continued to be binding upon the parties and was bound to affect the decision of the appeal if in disposing of the cross-objection it was necessary for the Court to come to a decision on facts which would affect the merits of the appeal itself. But this case is not quite relevant for the present appeal for the question in debate is not what would be the effect of an order which does not set aside the decree of the learned District Judge allowing mesne profits to the respondents, but the question is whether we should in exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by O. 41, R. 33 direct not only that the appeal should be reheard but also that the cross-objection should be reheard after we had previously vacated the order of the learned District Judge passed thereon.

[10] Order 41, R. 33 is to the following effect :

"The appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or cross-objection."

The rule has been newly introduced in the Code of 1908. Its object is clearly to enable the Court to do complete justice between the parties. Its terms are very wide and in a proper case it gives the appellate Court ample discretion to pass any decree or make any order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated. Having regard to the wide language of the rule it is not expedient to lay down any hard and fast rule regarding its true scope. Involving as it does an exercise of judicial discretion the question whether the Court should exercise the powers in a particular case would no doubt depend upon the special facts and circumstances of the case. It may be conceded that the discretion is not to be exercised in an arbitrary manner nor in such a way as to abrogate the other provisions of the Code with respect to the institution of appeals and cross-objections and the like. But there is ample authority for the view that the power contained in R. 33 extends to those cases where as a result of the appellate Court's interference with the decree in favour of the appellant further interference is required in order to adjust the rights of the parties in accordance with justice, enquity and good conscience (see for instance, Jawahar Banu v. Shujaat Hussain Beg, 43 ALL 85 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 ALL 367) and Gangadhar v. Banabashi, 22 C. L. J. 390: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 722). In the latter case Jenkins C. J. observes: "There is no doubt that the words of that rule are widely expressed, but they must be applied with discretion" and later on the learned Judge adds that no hard and fast rule could be laid down. A similar opinion was pressed by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in Abjal Majhi v. Intu Bepari, 22 C. L. J. 394: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 260). In a Full Bench case Subramania Chettiar v. Sinnammal, 53 Mad. 881: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Mad. 801 F B.) it was held that R. 33 conferred wide powers upon the appellate Court and there was no warrant for limiting the application of the rule only to cases where further interference was required to adjust rights between the parties. In any event upon the facts disclosed in the present case I am satisfied that the orders of the District Judge dismissing the appeal and allowing the cross objection was interdependent and incapable of being dissociated from each other. That being so, it is manifest that we ought in this case to exercise the discretion conferred by R. 33 for further interference is required in order to adjust rights between the parties, which further interference has been rendered necessary because the ex parte order dismissing the appeal is set aside and it is being restored for rehearing.

[11] For the reasons set forth I should allow this appeal, set aside the orders of the learned District Judge dated 16th and 17th September 1947, dismissing Title App. No. 162 of 1947 ex parte and allowing the cross-objection filed by the respondents. Both the appeal and the cross-objection are restored and the learned District Judge should dispose of them according to law after further hearing. It is desirable that the rehearing should be done with as great expedition as possible.

[12] Sarjoo Prasad J.—I agree. Even if it be assumed for the sake of argument that O 41, R. 33 has no application to the case, there is no reason why under our inherent powers we could not direct all orders passed subsequent to the order under and depending thereon to be set aside.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 32, R. 7—Application of —Application for reference to arbitration—Recording of reason under rule, if necessary.

The principle of O. 32, R. 7 applies to an application for reference to arbitration pending the suit. The rule does not expressly require that the Court must record reasons for granting the permission. All that it requires is that the Court should apply its mind to the matter before granting such leave. [Para 3]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 32, R. 7, N. 15.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 32, R. 7—Application on behalf of minors made on later date—Effect.

Where in a suit the parties who are majors agree to refer the matter in suit to an arbitrator it is not necessary that the application on behalf of the next friend of the minor plaintiffs and the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant should be along with the joint petition for reference to arbitration. In such a case where the application on behalf of the minors is made on a later date, it is enough if the permission under O. 32, R. 7 is actually given before an order of reference is made by the Court. [Para 4]

Ratikant Choudhury—for Appellants; Baidyanath Jha—for Respondents.

Sarjoo Prasad J.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs and is directed against an order refusing to set aside an award. Mr. Rati Kant Choudhury who appears on behalf of the appellants has put forward two contentions before us. First is that the award is invalid because it was passed upon a reference to which minors were parties but there was no proper compliance with the provisions of O. 32, R. 7 granting permission to the guardians of the minors to enter into the agreement for reference to arbitration. The second point urged on behalf of the appellants is that the case should be remanded because no opportunity was given to the plaintiffs to examine the arbitrator who gave the award. I shall deal with the two objections seriatim.

[2] It appears that plaintiffs 3 and 4 who are the sons of plaintiff 1 were minors and they were represented by their father and natural guardian plaintiff 1 in the suit. On the side of the defendants, defendant 2, the son of defendant 1, was a minor and he was represented in the suit by a pleader guardian ad litem. On 3-7-1947 an application was filed praying that the suit be referred to the arbitration of one Babu Janki Raman Prasad Misser. On that date it appears that there was no application filed on behalf of the minor plaintiffs and the defendant for permission to enter into the compromise. On 7-7-1947 the next friend of the minor plaintiffs and the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant filed a petition praying for permission to enter into the agreement to refer the matter to arbitration. On that petition having been filed the Court recorded an order granting permission and thereafter the Court passed an order for referring the case to the arbitration of the arbitrator concerned. Learned counsel for the appellants submits that there has not been sufficient compliance with O. 32, R. 7 first because in granting permission the Court merely observed "permitted" without recording any reasons for granting such permission. In the second place he submits that this application for leave to enter into the agreement for reference to arbitration should have been made along with the application itself which was filed on 3-7-1947 and that not having been done the order is illegal. In my opinion both these contentions are without any substance. Under O. 32, R. 7 no particular formula is necessary and the Court is not bound to give reasons for granting permission to the guardian ad litem to enter into the agreement for reference or for compromise. If any authority is needed for this purpose we may refer to a decision of this Court in Ishan Chandra v. Nilratan, 2 Pat. 538; (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 375) which has been followed in a number of other cases by this Court. Kulwant Sahay J. who delivered the judgment in that case observed as follows:

"In order to attract the provisions of O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C. it is enough to show that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that a minor was a party to the compromise and that the leave of the Court was obtained on petition or in some way not open to doubt. No particular formula is necessary to be used by the Court in order to grant the leave and when it is shown that an application was made by the guardian to the Court asking for leave to enter into the compromise and the Court makes a note of that application and passes a decree in terms of the compromise, it must be held that the leave of the Court was expressly recorded within the meaning of O. 32, R. 7 of the Code."

The learned Judge relied upon a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh, 33 I. A. 128: (28 ALL. 585 P. C.) for the principle which he laid down in that decision. I with great respect concur with the view expressed by his Lordship in that case.

[3] In this case there was an application filed on behalf of the guardian ad litem as well as the guardian of the minors to enter into the agreement to refer the dispute to arbitration. That petition is referred to by the Court in the order to which reference has been made by me above and after that the Court recorded the order permitting the guardians to enter into the agreement on behalf of the minors. Learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon an earlier decision of this Court in Ramgulam Sahu v. Durga Pershad, 6 Pat. L. J. 190: (A. I. R. (18) 1921 Pat. 14). But that case has been fully discussed in Ishanchandra v. Nilratan, 2 Pat. 538 (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 375), and distinguished there. In distinguishing the decision in Ramgulam Sahu v. Durga Pershad, 6 P. L. J. 190: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Pat. 14) Kulwant Sahay J. pointed out that on the evidence in that case the Judges came to an express finding that there was evidence on the record to suggest an inference that the Court never intended to exercise its judgment on the question whether the settlement was for the benefit of the minor and under those circumstances it was held that the compromise decree was not binding on the minors. In this case it is quite clear that the Court was conscious of the interest of the minors and the Court did apply its mind to the application which was presented to him seeking permission to enter into the agreement for reference to arbitration on behalf of the minors. If under these circumstances the Court granted the permission required, the Court evidently applied its mind to the matter and I have no reason to think that in recording the permission the Court did not act as provided by the law under O. 32, R. 7. I may here refer to the language of the rule itself which requires that a next friend or guardian for the suit shall not without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit. The principle of the rule applies with equal force to an application for reference to arbitration. The rule does not expressly require that the Court must record reasons for granting the permission. All that it does require is that the Court should apply its mind to the matter before granting such leave and in this case we find that the Court did apply its mind to the petition on which the permission was granted to the guardian ad litem of the minor plaintiffs and to the guardian ad litem of the minor defendants.

[4] As to the second part of his contention under O. 32, R. 7, learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon certain observations made in a Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court in Marian Bibi v. Amina Bibi, I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 317 : (A. I. R. (24) 1937 ALL. 65 F.B). In that case the second point which was referred to the Full Bench for consideration was formulated as follows: If the answer to the above question, (viz., "whether Para. 1 of Sch. 2, to Civil P. C., is subject to the provisions of O. 32, R. 7") is in the affirmative, should the leave of the Court for the agreement to refer the suit to arbitration be obtained before an application for an order of reference is made, or leave can be granted by the Court even after the award has been delivered? Mr. Choudhury contends that the leave of the Court should have been obtained before the application for an order of reference was made. It is true that the question has been a bit widely formulated if I may say so with respect to the learned Judges who decided the case. But it simply means that the permission should be granted under O. 32, R. 7 before an order of reference is made by the Court. In that case, as it appears from the facts, there was no order granting such a permission to the guardian ad litem of the minor to enter into the agreement for reference to arbitration at all. That being so their Lordships held that the reference was invalid and could not bind the minors. In the present case it is clear from the order sheet that the order granting permission to the guardians on behalf of the minors was made before the Court finally passed order directing the case to be referred to the arbitrator. The observations made by the learned Judges in Mariam Bibi v. Amina Bibi, I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 317: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 ALL. 65 F.B.) have been explained by a Division Bench of this Court in Dharnidhar v. Phulkumari, 24 Pat. 529: (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 391). That was a case which related to the validity or invalidity of a compromise arrived at between the parties to the suit. The compromise took place on 30.1.1943 and the application for getting it recorded was filed in April 1944. An argument was advanced before their Lordships that after the adult members had entered into the compromise and filed terms thereof in Court it was not open to the guardian ad litem to make an application for leave to compromise on behalf of the minors on those terms. Their Lordships repelled that contention and held as follows:

"The prohibition contained in R. 7 of O. 32 against a next friend or a guardian ad litem entering into an agreement or compromise without the leave of the Court being expressly recorded, in my opinion, does not go to the length of saying that a compromise entered into by the adult members may not be sanctioned by the Court even if the application for recording the compromise is accompanied by an application on behalf of the guardian ad litem for the leave of the Court. . . . . It is only when negotiation has reached the stage of settlement that the guardian-ad litem would be in a position to know the exact terms on which the contending parties would agree to settle their differences. Only when that stage has been reached, it is possible for the guardian ad litem to obtain the necessary sanction of the Court. Hence, in my opinion, if the leave of the Court is granted to the guardian-ad litem before the compromise is actually recorded, the terms of R. 7 of O. 32 of the Code would be substantially complied with, because until the compromise has been recorded, it does not become operative between the parties so far as the pending litigation is concerned."

These observations would apply with equal force to the present case. It is true that in this case the application on behalf of the next friend of the minor plaintiffs and the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant was filed a few days later after the joint petition for reference to arbitration had been filed on 3-7-1947. Nevertheless the direction to refer was not made until the permission had been granted to the guardians concerned. That being so, in my opinion, there has been sufficient compliance with the law and I do not think that there was any illegality in the reference to arbitration which is binding upon the minors concerned.

[5] I will next come to the other point raised by the learned counsel for the appellants, viz., that he was not given sufficient opportunity to examine the arbitrator. In his petition of objection to the arbitration he made certain vague allegations about misconduct on the part of the arbitrator. The award is a sufficiently long document in which the arbitrator appears to have fully considered the pros and cons of the matter. But in any event we find from the order-sheet that sufficient time was given to the appellants to examine the arbitrator concerned. If the appellants were actually serious in establishing their case of misconduct they could have examined themselves or any other witness on the point which they have failed to do. The learned Subordinate Judge therefore was fully justified in eventually rejecting their application for time on 23 2-1948 and in the passing order which he did in adopting the award given by the arbitrator. The learned Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out that there was no evidence adduced on behalf of the objector to show that the arbitrator failed to examine any or all the materials placed before him nor was there evidence to show that he was guilty of any misconduct. In the circumstances I do not see any merit in this appeal which must fail and is dismissed with costs.

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 — Recovery of stolen goods from house belonging to co-owners — Accused eldest in household, present at time of recovery — Presumption.

Where a bag containing stolen goods is recovered from a house, it is not enough to show that the accused were co-owners of the house. But where, one of the accused who was the eldest of the family was present at the time of the recovery and the bag was recovered from such a place that he must have been aware of its existence, it can be presumed that he had control over the bag and was therefore in law in possession of it either exclusively or jointly with other members of the household. S. C. Chakravarty—for Appellants; Standing Counsel—for the State.

Shearer J.—This is an appeal by five men who have been convicted by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of Monghyr under S. 412, Penal Code. Three of them have been sentenced to undergo R. I. for 5 years, while the other two have been sentenced to undergo R. I. for 3 years. In addition, each has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or, in default, to undergo R. I. for 3 months more. On 1-2-1949, a young Brahmin, Achhutan and Pathak, who is an employee of a firm of cloth dealers in village Bakhri, went to Begusarai to purchase cloth for his firm and for two other firms at Bakhri. An employee of one of the other two firms went to Begusarai with him. A considerable quantity of cloth was purchased, and was put up in eleven bags and afterwards Achhutanand Pathak hired a bullock cart driven by one Bankey Gope. The bags were put on this bullock cart, and Bankey Gope and Achhutanand Pathak set out for Bakhri in the latter part of the night. When the cart had reached a point on the road two miles or so away from Begusarai, it was stopped by a number of men armed with lathis. These men assaulted Achhutan and Pathak and took away six of the bags. They also deprived Achhutanand Pathak of his personal belongings and of a not inconsiderable sum of money. Achhutan and Pathak went on along the road for another mile until he met a dafadar, and then went back with this dafadar to Begusarai where he lodged a first information at 7 A. M. The appellants Mahabir and Basudeo are brothers, and the appellant Balmiki is a son of the former. The other two appellants, Ramautar and Borham, who are also brothers, are related to, and are neighbours of, Mahabir. On 16-2-1949 it is said that the houses of these appellants were searched and the greater part of the property taken away by the dacoits was recovered. It was not, and could not be, denied that Achhutanand Pathak was the victim of a dacoity and that the cloth, which was produced in Court at the trial, was part of the property taken away by the dacoits. The defence set up was the very extraordinary one that the cloth had been recovered in quite different circumstances and that the appellants had been victimised by the police at the instigation of one Bishwanath Singh Sharma who is an honorary Magistrate at Begusarai and also a zamindar of Harakh, the village to which the appellants belong. It is true that there has been some litigation between this honorary Magistrate and some of the appellants, and it is also true that some of the persons, who attended as witnesses at the search, were shown to have some connection with Bishwanath Singh Sharma. No fewer than four sub-inspectors of police and an assistant sub-inspector took part in the searches, and the searches were witnessed by as many as four persons belonging to the neighbourhood. There is, clearly, no reason to distrust the evidence of the sub-inspector and of the search witnesses as to what occurred on 16-2-1949, in Harakh. The suggestion that the police, having recovered part of the stolen property, allowed some of the real culprits to go scot free and fabricated a mass of evidence to procure the conviction of men they knew to be quite innocent is preposterous. Assuming, for the moment, that there is evidence to show that each of the two sets of appellants was in possession of so much of the cloth as was recovered from their respective houses, the question that arises is whether or not the learned Assistant Sessions Judge was correct in convicting them of receiving. On this point, the Court below has, in my opinion, misdirected itself. When, soon after the commission of a theft, a person is found in possession of the stolen property, the presumption that ordinarily arises is not that he has received it knowing it to be stolen but that he has stolen it—Reg. v. Langmean, (1864) L. & C. 427: (10 L. T. 350). The inference that he is a receiver ought not to be drawn unless there is some circumstance going to show that he did not obtain it direct from the owner or the person in possession, but from some other person who was himself the actual thief. Such a circumstance may, for instance, be that the person found in possession of it is a woman who is not likely to have been the principal offender or a pawn broker or similar individual to whom the actual thief may have turned for assistance in getting rid of his booty. In this particular case there was no reason why the Court below should have inferred that any of the persons found in possession of the stolen property was a receiver and every reason why it should have inferred that he was one of the dacoits. In the first place, the appellants Mahabir and Balmki were picked out at a test identification by Achhutanand Pathak who said at the trial that he remembered seeing them among the decoits. Mr. S. C. Chakraverty, for the appellants, has said that it must still have been dark when the dacoity was committed and a matter of great difficulty and perhaps quite impossible, for Achhutanand Pathak to have recognized any of his assailants. The first information was lodged at 7 A. M., and, having regard to the distance which Achhutanand Pathak had to travel before reaching the Police station, it looks as if he had made a mistake in saying, as he did in the first information, that the occurrence took place, at 4 A. M. In point of fact, it must, I think, have taken place, as he said at the trial, somewhat later. The dacoits had, to unyoke the bullocks and upset the cart, and Achhutanand Pathak was, quite certainly, in close contact with them for an appreciable time. I see no reason why he should not have been in a position to recognize some of the dacoits again, and his conduct in picking Mahabir and Balmiki out at the test identifications can only be reasonably explained on the assumption that he had in fact seen them among the dacoits. It is true that, at the test identification at which the appellant Mahabir was put up. Achhutanand Pathak picked out four non-suspects. There were two other suspects besides the appellant Mahabir, and it is not at all clear from the report of the honorary Magistrate, who held it, that the mistakes, which Achhutanand Pathak made, were mistakes as to the identity of Mahabir or as to the identity of the other suspects. In any case, the recovery of part of the stolen property from premises occupied by the appellants Mahabir and Balmiki goes to show that, in picking them out at the test identifications, Achhutanand Pathak can scarcely have mistaken them for other persons who were not present at the test identification. If he, in the first instance, picked out a non suspect instead of Mahabir and it is not at all clear to me that he did—the reason, presumably, was that there was some resemblance between the two men. The real question which arises in the appeal, and which has been argued with much ability by Mr. S V. Chakraverty, is as to whether or not there is evidence to show that any of the property which was recovered was in the possession of the other three appellants. Mr. S. C Chakraverty, relying on Emperor v. Santa Singh, I. L. R. (1945) 26 Lah. 137: (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Lah. 339: 46 Cr. L. J. 1 F.B.), which decision was followed by a Division Bench of this Court in Sahendra v. Emperor, 26 Pat. 46: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 222: 49 Cr. L. J. 445), contended that it was not enough for the prosecution to show that the appellants were co-owners of the houses from which the stolen property was recovered. That, in my opinion, is a correct statement of the legal position. The appellant Ramautar was, however, at his house when the sub-inspector went to search it. The sarees and dhotis, which were recovered, were in a sack which was of such a size, and was found in such a position, that Ramautar must have been perfectly well aware of its existence. Ramautar was the eldest member of the family in the house at the time, and it must, I think, in the circumstances be presumed that he had control over the sack, and was, therefore, in law, in possession of it either exclusively or jointly with other members of his household. There is no reason to suppose that he has at any time said that it was brought into the premises by some other member of the family and, even if he had, one might safely presume that Ramautar had ratified this man's action and had adopted his possession as his own also. At the trial, as I have already said, the defence set up by Ramautar and his relations was that the stolen property was not in fact recovered from them at all. Borham Singh, the brother of Ramautar, was not in the village when the search took place, nor was the appellant Basudeo. There is so far as I can ascertain from the record no evidence to show when they had last been in their respective houses prior to the search. in this situation, while the prosecution can point to conduct on the part of Ramautar which shows that he was in possession of the stolen property, It cannot point to similar conduct on the part of either Borham or Basudeo. The mere circumstance that these two appellants are co-owners of the premises from which the stolen property was recovered is by itself wholly insufficient to establish any criminal liability. The appeals of Basudeo Singh and Borham Singh ought in my opinion, to be allowed. The convictions and sentence imposed on them ought to be set aside, and the fines, if already paid, ought to be refunded to them. The convictions of the remaining appellants ought, in my opinion, to be altered from one under S. 412 to one under S. 395, Penal Code, the sentences, however, being maintained. The appellant Balmiki Singh must now surrender to his bail and serve out the unexpired portion of his sentence.

[2] Mr. S. C. Chakravarty, for the appellants contended that this Court had no jurisdiction to alter an order of acquittal to one of conviction and that, if it was not satisfied that these three appellants were receivers, it had no option but to direct that they should be released and set at liberty forthwith. This would be a most extraordinary result. The decisions on which Mr. Chakravarty relied for this part of this argument were Kishan Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1928 P. C. 254: (29 Cr. L. J. 828), Mohammad Sharif v. Rex, A. I. R. (37) 1950 ALL 380:

(51 Cr. L. J. 1040) and Malak Khan v. Emperor, A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 16: (47 Cr. L. J. 489). These decisions do not, however, support the view for which Mr. Chakravarty has contended. In fact, one at least of the decisions namely Mohammad Sharif v. Rex, A. I. R. (37) 1950 ALL. 380: (51 Cr. L. J. 1040) is an authority to the contrary. Bhargava J. there referred with approval to an earlier Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Zamir Qasim v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 ALL. 137:(46 Cr. L. J. 38 F. B.). It was there pointed out that, while a Court of appeal may alter a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, it cannot, in doing so, enhance the sentence and that, in consequence, where a person has been convicted of culpable homicide and ought, in the opinion of the appellate Court, to have been convicted of murder, the appellate Court cannot set aside the conviction for culpable homicide and substitute a conviction for murder. The reason, however, as was there stated, is that, if a conviction for culpable homicide is altered to a conviction for murder, the sentence must be enhanced if the sentence imposed by the trial Court is a sentence of imprisonment and not a sentence of transportation for life. Section 423, Criminal P. C., however, while empowering an appellate Court to alter a finding imposes a condition that, in doing so, it should not enhance the sentence. Apart from this, it must, in my opinion, be presumed that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, in trying the appellants on two charges one under S. 395 and the other under S. 412, Penal Code, was adopting the course sanctioned by S. 236, Criminal P. C. That being so, instead of recording a formal order acquitting the appellants on one of the two charges, the learned Assistant Sessions Judge ought to have stated that, in his opinion, the facts showed that the appellants were receivers and not dacoits. The purely technical error committed by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge in recording a formal order of acquittal cannot, possibly, result in a man who, through another error committed by the Court below, has received a far less severe sentence than he deserved, escaping any punishment at all.

A. F. O. O. No. 276 of 1947, D/-21-3-1950.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23, R. 3 — Lawful compromise of suit— Each party blaming other for its breach —Power of Court to inquire into question as to who was at fault.

Where both parties to a suit invite the Court to record a compromise adjusting the dispute between them, as embodied in their joint petition, but each party blames the other for not carrying out the terms of the compromise, the Court does not act illegally in investigating as to who was at fault in commiting breach thereof. [Para 8]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 23, R. 3, N. 6.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 107, O. 41, R. 1— Question whether there is completed agreement between parties—Question of law or fact—Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 100-101.

The question whether or not there has been a completed agreement between the parties is largely a question of fact and depends also upon how the parties themselves regarded the matter. If they themselves regarded the matter as one of concluded agreement between them, it is not open to the Court to say specially when all the terms have been embodied in the joint petition filed by them inviting the Court to record the compromise as embodied in the petition, that there was no concluded agreement. [Para 10]

Anno. C. P. C., Ss. 100-101, N. 28; S. 107, N. 14; O. 41, R. 1, N. 13.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23, R. 3, S. 151—Consequential orders to give effect to compromise—Jurisdiction of Court to pass.

The Court had complete jurisdiction to make consequential orders in order to give effect to the terms of the compromise and to record the same.

Where a Court, having seisin of the matter, accepts a deposit of money, on the refusal of a party to the compromise to accept the same in accordance with its terms, the Court is acting ex dabito justitiae and has complete jurisdiction to do so whether as an act incidental to recording the compromise itself or under exercise of its inherent powers. [Para 14]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 151, N. 1; O. 23, R. 3, N. 18.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23, R. 3—Subject-matter of suit—Meaning.

The question whether a particular term of a compromise relates to the subject-matter of the suit has to be answered on the frame of the suit the relief claimed and the matters which arose for decision in the case on the pleadings of the parties. The term is comprehensive enough and if the compromise relates to all those matters which fell to be decided in the case, it could not be said that any part of the compromise was beyond the subject-matter of the suit.

Where the compromise is really an adjustment of the rights and differences in respect of all matters in dispute between them whether as framed in the plaint or set up by way of defence in the written statement and the compromise purported to be a final settlement and adjustment of these disputes on a fair and satisfactory basis acceptable to all, it must be held to relate to the suit. Awadh Behari Saran and Amar Nath Singh—for Appellants; Tarkeshwar Nath and Janeshwar Singh—for Respondent.

Sarjoo Prasad J. — This appeal has been preferred against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Chapra adopting a compromise arrived at between the parties under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. In my opinion, it is a very unfortunate litigation and it should not have been allowed to develop. It will presently appear from the facts stated below that a litigation of this character amounts to an abuse of legal processes.

[2] The appeal in question arises out of two title suits which were being tried together before the learned Subordinate Judge, the parties to the suits being common. One of the suits, Title Suit No. 72/7 of 1944/46 was instituted by the plaintiff-respondent, Bindeswari Bai, for specific performance of a contract of sale in respect of a house belonging to defendants 1 and 2 who are the appellants in this Court. These appellants have a house in Mahalla Ratanpura of the town of Chapra. One portion of this house is a two-storied building and other portion is one storied. The plaintiff, Bindeshwari Bai, who carries on the profession of singing and dancing in the town of Chapra, came to occupy the two storied-portion of the house in question as a tenant on rent whereas it appears from the evidence that the other portion of the house, which is one storied, was in the occupation of the defendant Ramjanam Tewary himself. The plaintiff's case in this suit was that on 12-1-1944, the defendants agreed to sell to her the two storied portion of the house in her occupation offering to execute the sale deed within a period of six months, and on 13-1-1944 accordingly a sum of Rs. 2,000 was paid as earnest money to the defendants-appellants. On 21-6-1944, defendant 1 purchased a stamp-paper worth Rs. 112-8-0 for the execution of the sale deed in question, but later on the defendants failed to do so on one pretext or another. The plaintiff thereafter sent a notice to the defendants asking them to execute the sale deed in question, but the defendants sent a rejoinder refusing to do so and making certain counter allegations, one of them being that there was a contract for sale of both portions of the house in question for a consideration of Rs. 10,000. The plaintiff accordingly instituted the suit referred to above for specific performance of contract as alleged by her.

[3] The defendants filed their written statement in the suit. In their written statement they did not dispute the fact that there was a contract on 11-1-1944, in pursuance of which a sum of Rs. 2000 had been paid as earnest money to the defendants on 13-1-1944. They allege, however, that the contract in question was in connection with the sale of the entire house holding No. 512/513/496 old and new, including the pucca portion on the east and the wall to its west and the tiled portion of the house further west, all specified in Sch. B of the written statement for a total sum of Rs. 10,000. They also alleged that the agreement further was that the sale deed should be executed within a period of three months from the date of contract when the balance of Rs. 8000, the consideration money, would be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants and that not having been done, the defendants did not execute the sale deed in question. The other suit, namely, Title Suit No. 249/39 of 1944/45 was instituted by the defendants-appellants against the plaintiff, Bindeshwari Bai, for arrears of rent and for ejectment. As I have said, with the consent of parties the two suits were made analogous and were being tried together by the learned Subordinate Judge.

[4] When the hearing of the suit was proceeding on 17-4-1947, the pleaders of the parties informed the Court that the dispute between them had been settled by a compromise, and that a regular compromise petition would be filed later. On the day following the parties filed a joint petition embodying therein the terms of the compromise which showed that on the payment of a sum of Rs. 7750 to the defendants-appellants by the plaintiff the defendants would execute a sale deed with respect to both the portions of the house in favour of the plaintiff. It is this compromise petition which has been the subject-matter of controversy in this appeal. In this petition the parties further prayed that at least seven day's time should be allowed to them within which the sale deed would be executed and a regular petition filed in Court for disposal of the case. The hearing was accordingly adjourned to 24-4-1947, to enable the defendants to execute the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 7750. It appears, however, that the sale deed was not executed by the defendants, and on the 24th as soon as the Court sat, the Courts then being held in the morning, a petition was filed on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, Bindeswari Bai, stating that the defendants were evading execution of the sale deed, though the plaintiff was ready with the sum of Rs. 7750 for payment to the defendants under the terms of the compromise aforesaid. The Court then called the other party and after hearing both sides, a final draft of the sale deed was approved with their mutual agreement. This draft is Ex. 5 in the case. In spite of all this, it appears that the sale deed was neither executed by the defendants nor presented for registration, and at about 11 a. m. the same day the plaintiff was driven to the necessity of filing a petition in Court stating that although the sale deed had been prepared according to the agreed draft, the defendants-appellants had made themselves scarce and, therefore, she prayed for permission to deposit the sum of Rs. 7750 in Court. The Court tried through the defendants' pleader to secure their attendance before it, but being unable to do so, it finally directed the money to be deposited in Court. This deposit the Court had to accept presumably in view of the terms of the agreement which was to the effect that if the sum of Rs. 7750, the balance of the consideration amount, was not paid by 24-4-1947, the plaintiff Bindeshwari Bai would forfeit her claim to the house and to the earnest money of Rs. 2000 already paid to the defendants.

[5] On the following day, that is, 25-4-1947, separate petitions were filed on behalf of the plaintiff and the defendants in which both parties respectively claimed that the terms of the compromise should be given effect to and the suits should be disposed of in favour of the respective parties. The petition of the defendants filed on that day is rather important. In that petition the defendants stated that in the above two suits already referred to, the parties had come to terms and had accordingly filed a petition of compromise on 18-4-1947, to the effect that the plaintiff in Title Suit No. 72/7 of 1944/46 would buy the disputed house and the western thereof for a sum of Rs. 9750 out of which Rs. 2000 having already been paid, the balance of Rs. 7750 was payable to the defendants on 24-4-1947. They, however, alleged that on 24-4-1947, which was the date, according to them, for the registration of the sale deed in question, the defendants were all along waiting near the registration office to admit execution and to receive the consideration money, but the plaintiff did not either herself present the sale deed or make over any fair copy thereof to the defendants for presentation before the sub-registrar. They, therefore, stated that the plaintiff was responsible for not acting up to the terms of the compromise presumably because she had not the required money in her hands to meet the balance of the consideration amount. The defendants, therefore, prayed in the petition that the failure on the part of the plaintiff to carry out the terms of the compromise could not stand in the way of the enforcement of the terms thereof, and they accordingly prayed to the Court that the compromise should be recorded, and that in view of the plaintiff's failure to carry out its terms, her suit namely Title Suit No. 72/7 of 1944/46 should stand dismissed and Title Suit No. 249/39 of 1944/45 filed by the defendants against the plaintiff should stand decreed. I have referred in some detail to this petition of the defendants as it will have a material bearing upon the contentions advanced before this Court. The plaintiff on the contrary, alleged that the failure, if any, to carry out the terms of the compromise was on the part of the defendants and that she was all along ready with the consideration money and the fair draft for the execution of the sale deed, but the defendants themselves avoided execution thereof by making themselves scarce with the result that she was compelled to deposit the amount in Court. She accordingly prayed that the compromise should be recorded and the terms thereof given effect to in her favour.

[6] The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, confronted with the question as to who was at fault in not acting up to the terms of the compromise as the parties very seriously contended that neither of them was at fault but that the fault lay with the opponent. It was on this point alone that evidence was adduced by both the parties and both of them seemed to be agreed that there was a concluded agreement between them as embodied in the petition filed before the Court on 18-4-1947. The learned Subordinate Judge having fully discussed the evidence on the point came to the finding which is, in my opinion, wholly justified that "there has been a compromise in these cases and that the plaintiff, Bindeshri Bai, has acted upon the terms of the compromise". He also came to the finding, again I must say rightly, that the defendants "themselves made it impossible for the plaintiff to present the document for registration before the Sub-Registrar". Then findings and the evidence on that point has not been assailed before this Court, and, in my opinion, could not be successfully assailed. After coming to this finding, the learned Subordinate Judge held on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd., 47 Cal. 485: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 79) that the entire compromise as embodied in the joint petition of the parties dated 18-4-1947, should be incorporated in the decree, and that the operative part of the decree should be confined only to the subject-matter of the suit which in his view was only a portion of the house, namely, the portion in occupation of the plaintiff herself. In regard to this portion the learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree was executable. In regard to the other portion of the house, he, however, directed that the plaintiff would be at liberty to bring a separate suit for specific performance of the contract on the basis of the compromise decree. The result of recording the compromise was that Title Suit No. 72/7 of 1944/46 instituted by the plaintiff was decreed, whereas the other suit filed by the defendants was dismissed in terms of the compromise petition.

[7] It is against this order of the learned Subordinate Judge that the present appeal is directed, and it is rather unfortunate, as I said in the beginning, that a lawful agreement of this character adjusting the dispute between the parties and validly as between them should be sought to be avoided by the defendants, one of them, Ramjanam Tewari, being himself as I find from the record, a man of some education and a retired Inspector of Police. This is all the more surprising when it is found that the factum of the agreement has not even been impugned by the defendants.

[8] Mr. Awadh Behari Saran who appears for the appellants has contended, in the first place, that the learned Subordinate Judge has acted illegally in going into the question as to who was at fault in not carrying out the terms of the compromise. He submits that all that the learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to do was to enquire whether the suit had been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise between the parties, and to record such a compromise, if any, and pass a decree in accordance therewith in so far as it related to the suit. It was not his business to enter into any investigation as to who was at fault in committing a breach thereof. It is true that under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., the Court's duty is to enquire whether there has been any lawful agreement or compromise adjusting the dispute between the parties and to record such a compromise if found to exist. On the point that there was a lawful agreement, both parties appear to have been agreed and had invited the Court to record the compromise as embodied in their joint petition dated 18-4-1947; but they wanted to take advantage of the term in their favour in having consequential orders passed in their respective suits pending before the learned Subordinate Judge. In doing so, the parties threw the blame upon each other and that necessitated the enquiry by the Court. The learned Subordinate Judge himself points out:

"I may mention in the very beginning that these cases have acquired undue importance in view of the fact that the parties are very seriously contending that neither of them are at fault, and that the fault lies with their opponent."

Parties adduced evidence accordingly, and therefore the Court could not but enter into the question. In one sense the determination of the question was also material because it affected the orders to be passed in the disposal of the two suits pending before him as based upon the terms of the compromise petition itself. I do not, therefore, see that there was anything wrong in the procedure adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge. I may in this connection refer to a decision of Sir George Rankin in Haridas Modak v. Ramdas Modak, 34 C W. N. 1068 : (A. I. R. (8) 1931 Cal 205). This case was relied upon by the appellants' counsel himself in connection with another point. In this decision Sir George Rankin appeals to have deprecated the omission to adopt such a procedure. Criticising the conduct of the learned Judge below his Lordship observed :

"What the learned Judge could have done at the instance of the plaintiff or defendant was to make an enquiry as to whether the defendant had failed to do what he had promised and whether he had failed by reason of some cause afforded by the plaintiff. The learned Judge did not purport to do that at all . . . ."

In my opinion, therefore, the procedure adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge was correct and necessitated by the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the parties themselves.

[9] The next argument on behalf of the appellants is that there was no concluded agreement between the parties, and that the petition filed on 18 4-1947, on behalf of the parties did not contain the terms of any concluded compromise, but that the final agreement adjusting the suit depended upon the execution of the sale-deed and the payment of the consideration money of Rs. 7,750 on 24-4-1947, which contingencies had to be fulfilled before a final compromise could take place between the parties. Reliance is placed upon para. 7 of the said petition to support the contention that the parties asked for seven days' time during which the sale-deed was to be executed and a regular petition was to be filed in Court for disposal of the case. This contention, in my opinion, quite clearly shows that the parties had compromised both the suits and under the terms of the compromise the defendants were to execute a registered sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff, Bindeshwari Bai, in respect of the entire pucca and kutcha houses NOS. 512/496 as per boundaries given in the petition. It further shows that the amount of consideration settled between the parties was Rs. 9,750 out of which Rs. 2,000 having been already paid, the balance of Rs. 7,750 was to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants in one lump sum within seven days from that date, that is, by 24-4-1947, failing which the plaintiff was to forfeit her claims to the house and to the earnest money already paid by her ; and there was a further penalty provided, namely, that she was to be ejected from the house in her occupation and the Title suit filed by the defendants, namely, 249/39 of 1944/45 was to be decreed, whereas Title Suit NO. 72/7 of 1944/46 was to be dismissed. It further appears from the petition that if this money was paid on 24-4-1947, then the sale-deed would be executed and the defendants would not make any claim for the subject-matter of the suit instituted by them which suit in that case was to be dismissed, whereas the plaintiff's title suit was to be decreed and the parties were to bear their own costs. It is not only that the terms have been stated with sufficient clarity in the compromise petition but that the parties themselves intended it to be a final adjustment between them and they regarded it as the final adjustment and compromise of their disputes. I have already referred to their petition dated 25-4-1947, in which the defendants themselves regarded this petition dated 18-4-1947, as a petition of compromise adjusting the dispute between the parties and inviting the Court to accord the said compromise by noting that Title Suit No. 72/7 of 1944/46 should stand dismissed and Title Suit No. 249/39 of 1944/45, namely, the suit filed by the defendants should stand decreed. We further find that in another petition of rejoinder dated 29-4-1947, filed by the defendants, they again reiterated the same position and regarded this petition dated 18-4-1947, as a lawful agreement [between?] them adjusting the disputes in the suits pending before the learned Subordinate Judge. In that rejoinder petition they again prayed that the plaintiff by her non-performance of the terms of the compromise had forfeited her rights, and that therefore the compromise should be recorded in favour of the defendants. Even in the grounds of appeal before this Court there is no ground taken that this was not a concluded agreement between the parties. In view of these facts it is not open to the appellants to raise this contention before this Court.

[10] The learned counsel for the appellants, however, says that this contention raises a pure question of law on the construction of the petition dated 18-4-1947. The question whether or not there has been a completed agreement between the parties is largely a question of fact and depends also upon how the parties themselves regarded the matter. If they themselves regarded the matter as one of concluded agreement between them, it is not open to us to say specially when all the terms have been embodied in the joint petition filed by them that there was no concluded agreement. The question whether the sale-deed was executed or not would not affect the terms of the compromise because there was no penalty attached to it, and this could as well be done in execution of the compromise decree. Paragraph 7 of the petition itself shows that the parties made a prayer for at least seven days' time during which the sale-deed could be executed. The term "at least" indicates that a discretion was left to the Court to grant even a shorter or longer time for the purpose, and it was not a matter entirely in the region of contract made by the parties.

[11] The learned counsel for the appellants has relied in this connection upon a case to which reference has already been made by me in an earlier part of the judgment viz., the decision in Haridas Modak v. Ramdas Modak, 34 C. W. N. 1068 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 205). In that case the question was whether a certain petition filed in Court could be regarded as a completed agreement between the parties. Even as an illustrative case the decision is entitled to great respect being a decision of Sir George Rankin. It is not very clear from the report, however, as to what the contents of the petition were, but it appears that in the last clause of that petition there was a recital to the effect that "the parties will complete everything before Thursday next" and the case was accordingly adjourned to that date. We do not know what this recital actually connotes and whether those things which were left to be completed by the parties had any material bearing upon the other terms contained in the petition. Under those circumstances, it was held that it was not a completed agreement between the parties. But whatever the facts of the case may have been, the principle embodied in that decision entirely supports my view. As his Lordship put it, the real question is :

> "What was the bargain between the parties ? Did the parties mean to commit themselves to the bargain as it was stated on 20th November or did they mean to wait till Thursday and then have a completed settlement . . . . It was abundantly clear to my mind that the intention was the latter."

[12] Now putting the same question here, the answer is obvious that the parties meant to commit themselves to the bargain as contained in their application dated 18-4-1947. There is nothing to show in the whole body of that application that if the sale deed was not executed, it was open to either of the parties to resile from the terms of the agreement as embodied in the petition nor did they ever intend to do so as I have already shown from the various petitions filed by the parties subsequent to this application and from their conduct as stated above. The learned counsel has also relied upon a decision of a single Judge in Shah Nawaz v. Ghulam Mohammad, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Lah. 78 : (223 I.C. 623) in which it has been held that any agreement providing for a decree one way or the other being passed in future on the happening or not happening of a certain contingency cannot in law be regarded as an adjustment. The language though widely framed has to be read in the light of the facts of that case which was a case relating to an agreement between the parties to a suit for its being decided in favour of the plaintiff or the defendant according as the defendant did or did not take oath on the Holy Quran. Such an agreement did not amount to an adjustment within the meaning of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. An agreement of this character cannot prima facie amount to an adjustment of matters in dispute in the suit, and, therefore, could not be given effect to under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. It depends upon a special oath being taken by a certain person which under the law he cannot be compelled to take. That being so, such an agreement cannot come within the meaning of O. 23, R. 3. The said decision, therefore, cannot be any guidance to us in deciding the present appeal. I, therefore, find that there is no substance in this point as well.

[13] The next point taken by the learned counsel for the appellants is that the decree is illegal inasmuch as it purports to decree the plaintiff's suit which in effect means that the plaintiff's claim for the sale in respect of one of the houses only for a consideration of Rs. 6,000 is decreed. This contention is incorrect on the very face of the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. What the learned Subordinate Judge has done is that he has decreed the suit of the plaintiff in terms of the compromise petition. He has not split up the consideration amount at all. He has held that the total consideration is Rs. 9,750 as embodied in the compromise petition, and that the contract refers to the sale of both the houses. But following the decision of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debia's case, (47 Cal. 485 : A. I. R. (6) 1919 P.C. 79) he confines the operative part of the decree which is the executable part only to the house in occupation of the plaintiff, because in his opinion that was the subject-matter of the title suit instituted by her. In respect of the other house, he held that although the entire consideration amount has been paid, the plaintiff would be entitled to bring another suit for specific performance on the basis of the compromise decree, because he thinks that that part of the decree could not be an executable decree. This aspect of the case we will have to consider at a later stage. But I do not see how the decree splits up the consideration at all, and, in my opinion, this contention is wholly misconceived.

[14] The last point urged on their behalf is that the Court had no jurisdiction to accept the deposit of the money made by the plaintiff-respondent, Bindeshwari Bai, on 24-2-1947. The validity or invalidity of the acceptance of this deposit does not in any manner affect the legality of the compromise itself. This position is not contested by the learned counsel for the appellants. His contention, however, is that the acceptance of the deposit was beyond the powers of the Court acting as it did within the four corners of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. It has to be remembered that the deposit was in accordance with the terms of the compromise itself, and the Court having seisin of the matter, it is difficult for me to comprehend why he could not accept the deposit when the defendants refused to take the money or avoided execution of the sale deed. The Court had complete jurisdiction to make consequential orders in order to give effect to the terms of the compromise and to record the same. In doing so, the Court was acting ex debito justitiae and had complete jurisdiction to do so whether as an act incidental to recording the compromise itself or under the exercise of its inherent powers.

[15] I have dealt with all the points urged on behalf of the appellants. As I have shown; there is no substance in any of the points raised, and I see no reason to interfere with the decision under appeal. The only matter which now remains for consideration is whether the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. If the subject-matter of the suit embraces only one of the houses, then I have no doubt that the decree is correct and is in consonance with the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debia's case, (47 Cal. 485 : A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 79) followed by the learned Subordinate Judge. If, on the other hand, the subject-matter of the suit embraces both the houses belonging to the defendants and referred to in the compromise, then the decree of the Court below needs modification. We can make this modification under O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C., notwithstanding the fact that there is no appeal by the plaintiff-respondent. I may as well observe that at one stage counsel for the appellants himself submitted that the subject-matter of the suit covered both the houses.

[16] The question then boils down to this : What is meant by the expression subject-matter of the suit ? No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the meaning of this expression which will inevitably depend upon the facts of each case. The question whether a particular term of a compromise relates to the subject-matters of suit has to be answered on the frame of the suit, the reliefs claimed and the matters which arose for decision in the case on the pleadings of the parties. The term is comprehensive enough and if the compromise relates to all those matters which fell to be decided in the case, it could not be said that any part of the compromise was beyond the subject-matter of the suit. There is a large body of authority to show that where a compromise relating to matters outside the scope of the suit is a part of the consideration for the agreement as to matters in suit, the entire compromise as an integral whole must be recorded and decreed as relating to the suit whether they otherwise relate to the suit or not. But the present case stands on a stronger footing. Here the defendant-appellants themselves contended that the contract for sale related to the sale of both the houses referred to in the compromise petition. That being so, the matter whether the contract for sale related only to one house or to both the houses was entirely within the scope of the suit, and had to be decided in the case. Parties, therefore, could come to an agreement in regard to this matter and agree that the contract in question related to both the houses. In fact that is what they have done and the compromise, therefore, as affecting both the houses falls within the subject-matter of the suit. In Charu Chandra v. Sambhu Nath, 3 Pat. L. J. 255 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 507 F.B.) which is a Full Bench decision of this Court, it has been observed by Atkinson J. at p. 268 of the report that where as in the present case :

"the compromise was really an adjustment of the rights and differences in respect of all matters in dispute between them whether as framed in the plaint or set up by way of defence in the written statement ; and that the compromise purported to be a final settlement and adjustment of these disputes on a fair and satisfactory basis acceptable to all."

it must be held to relate to the suit which expression should receive an extended construction. It must be, therefore, held that the compromise in so far as it relates not only to the house in occupation of the plaintiff but also in respect of the other house referred to therein has to be regarded as forming the operative part of the decree with the result that the entire compromise decree could be executable as such.

[17] Subject to this modification relating to the form of the decree, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

[18] Das J. — I agree entirely. The appeal has no merits ; and it is really an attempt, not very creditable, at getting out of a concluded bargain — possibly because the price of the houses has gone up since the compromise.

Criminal Revn. No. 45 of 1950, D/- 29-6-1950.

(a) Constitution of India, Art. 214 (2)—"Shall be deemed to be"—Meaning of.

Article 214 (2) does not relate to the period of time after the commencement of the Constitution and the words 'shall be deemed to be" indicate that it is not meant for converting the Provincial High Court into a State High Court. [Para 5]

(b) Constitution of India, Arts. 224, 214 (2)—Reappointment of Judge resigning on 24-1-1950.

A Judge of the Provincial High Court who resigned on 24-1-1950 can be appointed as a Judge of the corresponding State High Court under Art. 224 as, though such a person is not a Judge of the Provincial High Court on 25-1-1950 the identity of the Provincial High Court is not changed between 24-1-1950 and 25-1-1950. [Para 6]

(c) Constitution of India, Art. 134 (1) — New plea.

The point that the Magistrate decided under S. 145, Criminal P. C. the question of possession with reference to title which was not raised before the High Court in revision cannot be allowed to be raised at the stage of application under Art. 134 (1) (c). [Para 14]

(d) Constitution of India, Art. 134 (1) (c) — Ground for—Question of fact.

The point that certain evidence should not have been accepted by the Magistrate proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., is a question of fact and cannot be a ground on which a certificate can be granted. [Para 14]

(e) Constitution of India, Arts. 214 (2), 366 (14) and Explanation (b) to Art. 217 (2)—Scope of Explanation (b) to Art. 217 (2).

The Explanation (b) to Art. 217 (2) does not conflict with the definitions in Art. 214 (2) and Art. 366 (14). [Para 11]

Gorakhnath Singh—for Petitioners.

Reuben J.—This is an application for a certificate under Art. 132, Cl. (1) and Art. 134, Cl. (1) (c), Constitution of India. It is directed against an order of Agarwala, J. dismissing a petition in criminal revision directed against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Aurangabad, under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

[2] The constitutional point raised relates to the validity of the appointment of the Hon'ble Judge. Sir C. M. Agarwala retired as Chief Justice of the Patna High Court on 21-1-1950, that is to say, before the commencement of the Constitution of India. He was appointed to sit again as a Judge of this Court, that is to say, of the High Court which came into existence after the commencement of the Constitution of India, under the provisions of Art. 224, Constitution of India, which provides that ". . . . the Chief Justice of a High Court for any State may at any time . . . . . request any person who has held the office of a Judge of that Court or of any other High Court to sit and act as a Judge of the High Court for that State."

The contention is that Sir C. M. Agarwala was never a Judge of the High Court of this State or of any other High Court within the meaning of Art. 224.

[3] The relevant definitions of the term High Court as used in the Constitution of India occur in Art. 214, Cl. (2) and Art. 366, Cl. (14) of the Constitution.

[4] Article 214, Cl. (2), which occurs in the chapter dealing with the High Courts in the States, is as follows :

"For the purposes of this Constitution the Court exercising jurisdiction in relation to any Province immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall be deemed to be the High Court for the corresponding State."

The High Court for the Province of Bihar, of which Court Sir C. M. Agarwala was a Judge, must under this provision be deemed to be the High Court for the State of Bihar. It is contended, however, that this clause relates to the period of time after the commencement of the Constitution of India and that this clause merely provides for the Provincial High Court becoming the State High Court as from that date. Secondly, it is urged that, even if this clause be interpreted as meaning that the Provincial High Court shall be deemed for the purposes of this Constitution to be the State High Court, this will not validate the appointment of Sir C. M. Agarwala under Art. 224, because he resigned on 24-1-1950 and, therefore, was not a Judge of the Provincial High Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution of India.

[5] I am unable to accept the first contention. It is cl. (1) of Art. 214 which provides that there shall be a High Court for each State. Under Art. 216, it shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the President may, from time to time, deem it necessary to appoint, the manner of the appointment of such Judges being provided by Art. 217. Further, Art. 376 provides that the individual Judges of the Provincial High Court, "holding office immediately before the commencement of this Constitution", shall, in the absence of election otherwise, become on the commencement the Judges of the State High Court. Chapter V of Part VI of the Constitution contains other provisions relating to the State High Court which is thus brought into being. Clause (2) of Art. 214, therefore, appears unnecessary for converting the Provincial High Court into the State High Court. Rather, if that had been the intention of this clause, it would have provided that the Provincial High Court exercising jurisdiction immediately before the commencement of the Constitution shall be, not merely shall be deemed to be, the High Court for the State. Such a provision, by the way, would appear to be a contradiction in terms, for the Provincial High Court and the State High Court are necessarily two different entities.

[6] There is also no force in the second contention, namely, that Sir C. M. Agarwala was not a Judge of the Provincial High Court, immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. Article 224 authorises the appointment of any person who "has held" the office of a Judge of a High Court within the meaning of that Article. Under cl. (2) of Art. 214, the Provincial High Court which was exercising jurisdiction immediately prior to the commencement of the Constitution is to be deemed to be a State High Court. Sir C. M. Agarwala, even though he was not a Judge of the Provincial High Court on 25th January had held the office of a Judge of the Provincial High Court, and the identity of that Provincial High Court was not changed between 24th January when Sir C. M. Agarwala resigned and 25th January, the day immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution.

[7] Clause (14) of Art. 366 contains a general definition of the term High Court and is as follows :

"(14) 'High Court' means any Court which is deemed for the purposes of this Constitution to be a High Court for any State and includes

(a) any Court in the territory of India constituted or reconstituted under this Constitution as a High Court, and

(b) any other Court in the territory of India which may be declared by Parliament by law to be a High Court for all or any of the purposes of this Constitution."

It incorporates cl. (2) of Art. 214, which relates only to the position, as regards the Constitution of India, of the Provincial High Courts.

[8] The interpretation which I have placed on the term High Court under the Constitution, namely, that it includes the Provincial High Courts, is supported, in my opinion, by Art. 220, which provides that "No person who has held office as a Judge of a High Court after the commencement of this Constitution shall plead or act in any Court or before any authority within the territory of India."

If this term means a High Court in existence from after the commencement of the Constitution, no one could be a Judge of such a High Court previous to the commencement of the Constitution and, therefore, the words "after the commencement of this Constitution" in Art. 220 would be unnecessary.

[9] Stress has been laid on Art. 220 as showing the unconstitutionality of the appointment in question. It is urged that the intention of the Constitution is that a Judge of a High Court holding office subsequent to the commencement of the Constitution shall not practise as a lawyer in India, whereas Sir C. M. Agarwala resigned on 24th January to avoid this bar of practice. Even if this presumed intention of the legislature was admissible as a guide to the proper interpretation of the Statute, I do not think that this argument helps the petitioners. I have two reasons for saying this. First of all, the corresponding provision in Art. 128 for the attendance of retired Judges at sittings of the Supreme Court permits the attendance of a person who has held the office of a Judge of the Federal Court, although such a person is not subject to the disability regarding practice contained in cl. (7) of Art. 124 of the Constitution. Secondly, both Art. 128 and Art. 224 provide that the person attending the sittings of the Court by request under these Articles shall, while so sitting and acting, have all the jurisdiction, powers and privileges of a Judge of that Court, but shall not otherwise be deemed to be a Judge of that High Court, an exception which appears to be directed to save the right of practice where the person in question has, previous to the appointment, got such a right.

[10] A reference has been made to Expln. I to cl. (3) of Art. 124 of the Constitution as being inconsistent with the interpretation which I have placed on the term High Court. This explanation defines the term High Court with reference to the qualifications necessary for the appointment of a person as a Judge of the Supreme Court, namely, that he must have been a Judge of a High Court for at least five years or an advocate of a High Court for at least ten years. It provides that in this clause the term High Court means

"a High Court which exercises, or which at any time before the commencement of this Constitution exercised, jurisdiction in any part of the territory of India."

This is a special definition of the term and does not conflict with the definitions contained in Art. 214, cl. (2) and Art. 366, cl. (14).

[11] A reference has also been made to the corresponding provisions in Art. 217 relating to qualifications for appointment as a Judge of a High Court. These provisions, it appears to me, do not help the petitioners. Sub-clause (b) of cl. (2) of that Article requires that the person in question must have been an Advocate of "a High Court in any State specified in Sch. I or of two or more such Courts in succession." Reliance is placed on Expln. (b) to this clause, which is as follows:

"In computing the period during which a person has held judicial office in the territory of India or been an advocate of a High Court, there shall be included any period before the commencement of this Constitution during which he has held judicial office in any area which was comprised before 15-8-1947, within India as defined by the Government of India Act, 1935, or has been an advocate of any High Court in any such area, as the case may be."

It is urged that this explanation was unnecessary, if the term High Court in the Constitution includes the Provincial High Court. It is clear, however, from the first portion of this explanation that it is intended to provide for those areas which before 15-8-1947 were included within India as defined by the Government of India Act, 1935, but which passed out of the Dominion of India by the separation of Pakistan from India. The explanation is intended to give the person in question the advantage of any service in a judicial office or as an advocate rendered by him in such an area before the creating of the Dominion. The explanation is, therefore, necessitated by the peculiar circumstances and does not conflict with the definitions in Arts. 214 (2) and 366 (14).

[12] For the reasons given above, I consider that there is no substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution and the application under Art. 132 (1) must be dismissed.

[13] On the merits, three points are urged: (1) that the Magistrate decided the question of possession with reference to title, (2) that the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. were bad ab initio for want of a notice to the parties specifying the area in dispute, and (3) that the finding of the Magistrate regarding the land comprised in holding No 17 is unsupportable.

[14] The first point does not seem to have been raised before Agarwala J., and the petitioners cannot be allowed to raise it at this stage. The second point has been dealt with by Agarwala J., under whose directions as the Chief Justice of the Provincial High Court the Magistrate was required to serve a notice of particulars. He found that, instead of serving a notice the Magistrate called upon the parties to specify the lands claimed by them and that the particulars given by the second party were accepted by the first party, so that there was a specific area of land forming the subject-matter of the proceeding and both parties were fully aware of the details of that land. In these circumstances. Agarwala J., held that there had been a substantial compliance with this direction. The defect, if any, therefore, was of a formal nature and curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C. The third point is purely a question of fact, it being contended that the evidence of possession relating to the land comprised in holding No. 17 should not, in the circumstances of the case, have been accepted by the Magistrate. This is not a ground which the petitioners were entitled to urge in the criminal revision, and is still less a ground on which a certificate can be granted.

[15] For these reasons, I would refuse the certificate asked for under Art. 134 (1) (c).

Order.—This is an application filed by the petitioner, who was the complainant in the case, for setting aside the order of the lower appellate Court in regard to the direction made by the trial Court for restoration of certain property under S. 522, Criminal P. C. The dispute in question related to plot No. 1529, on which, it is alleged, stands the residential house of the petitioner, he having no other place of abode except the house in question. The petitioner's case is that he had been coming in possession of the house and the land since long and had been residing therein with his two minor nephews. On 31-5-1949, when the two minor nephews were away to their nanihal and the petitioner himself had gone to the local Registry Office at Balsand in order to register certain deed after locking the house, the opposite party, in the absence of the petitioner, along with one Loknath Thakur raided the house with deadly weapons, broke open the lock of the house and forcibly entered and occupied the house and looted the articles therein. One of the prosecution witnesses, prosecution witness 2, who saw the occurrence, informed the petitioner about it. On receiving the information, the petitioner rushed back to his house and found the accused persons there sitting armed with deadly weapons. He says that he attempted to go inside the house, when the accused persons threatened to assault him. The petitioner then lodged the first information report and, after investigation, the accused were put on trial under Ss. 380, 448 and 454, Penal Code.

[2] The defence of one of the opposite party and Loknath Thakur was that they had nothing to do with the land or the house and had taken no part in the occurrence whereas the defence of two other accused persons, Chandey Jha and Taranand Jha, was that plot No. 1529 claimed by the petitioner and plot No. 1530 as also the house standing on them belonged to the opposite party and, by partition, plot No. 1529 and the house standing thereon were allotted to the share of opposite party Chandey Jha and that he was in possession of the house accordingly. The accused denied the occurrence as alleged by the prosecution and, on the other hand, stated that the petitioner had forcibly tried to enter the house and committed assault and looted all the properties. There was a counter case also started on the allegations made by the accused opposite party, but it was found to be false and a proceeding under S. 211, Penal Code against Chandey Jha is pending, arising out of that counter case.

[3] In regard to the trial of the accused persons based upon the information lodged by the petitioner, the trial Court found that the prosecution case had been fully established, and convicted the accused opposite parties under Ss. 380, 454 and 448, Penal Code. The trial Court, however, acquitted Loknath Thakur giving him the benefit of doubt. The trial Court further directed that, as the complainant petitioner had been deprived of his house by criminal force, he should be put in possession under S. 522, Criminal P. C. Against that order of sentence and conviction passed by the trial Court, there was an appeal to the learned Additional Sessions Judge, who confirmed the order of sentence and conviction passed by the trial Court. The Court of appeal below held that:

"There was no reason to interfere with the finding of the trying Magistrate regarding the forcible entry by the appellants before him."

And he, therefore, came to the conclusion that the order of sentence and conviction passed against the accused must be upheld. The Court of appeal below, however, relying upon certain decisions of the Lahore High Court thought that, as the possession of the house had been taken in the absence of the petitioner, it was not, therefore, a case for the application of S. 522, Criminal P. C. He accordingly set aside the order of the learned Magistrate passd under S. 522 of the Code under which the trial Court had directed restoration of possession of the property to the petitioner. It is against this portion of the order of the Court of appeal below that the present application is directed.

[4] Counsel for the petitioner has rightly contended that the order of the Court below setting aside the order passed by the trying Magistrate is clearly misconceived and proceeds upon a misapprehension of the principles laid down in the decisions referred to in the judgment of the Court below. He contends that, if at the time of forcible entry the act of the accused is attended with criminal force or show of criminal force, the provisions of S. 522, Criminal P. C. would be attracted. The force may be not only in regard to the complainant, who may be absent at the time, but it may be against the complainant or his men or it may be directed against a neighbour who protests against the conduct of the accused. He also contends that, after the petitioner had been dispossessed of the property in his absence when the petitioner went back to recover possession of the property, if he was forcibly prevented from doing so, even then the provisions of S. 522, Criminal P. C. would be attracted to the case. For this purpose, he relies upon the statement of prosecution witness 2 about the occurrence, which is as follows:

"About two months ago on a Tuesday in the morning I saw all the four accused at the door of P. W. 1 breaking his lock. I protested. They broke the lock and entered the house. They had, on protest, threatened to assault me and I raised hulla. People came including P. Ws. I saw them removing boxes, etc. from the back door. . . .

I then went to Belsand and informed P. W. 1 whom I met at the Registration Office. The others also had intervened and the accused had abused and threatened them."

Learned counsel for the petitioner laid special emphasis on the statement that, when the witness protested, he was threatened with assault and so were the other persons who intervened. He says that this evidence quite clearly indicates that the offence of which the accused were convicted was attended by criminal force or show of criminal force and, by such force or show of criminal force, the petitioner had been dispossessed of the immovable property in question. He also relies upon the statement made by the petitioner himself at the time of trial, the relevant portion of which runs as follows :

"I ran to my house with him and found Chandey Jha, Loknath Thakur, Ram Lal Gope, all sitting at my darwaza. Chandey was armed with garasa, Ram Lal Gope had bhala and Loknath Thakur had lathi. I found lock broken. I attempted to go in when the three persons aforesaid moved to assault me and I then moved away and approached the Mohalla people. The informant had told me that with P. Ws. he had rebuked the accused persons but they had threatened to assault."

Here, it is stated that, even when the petitioner wanted to regain possession of the property, he was threatened with assault and these people were sitting there at the darwaza armed with deadly weapons. It is true that the Court of appeal below has not approached the evidence from this point of view. That Court proceeded to decide the matter merely on the footing that, because the dispossession happened during the absence of the petitioner therefore, S. 522, Criminal P. C. had no application to this case. But the trial Court had considered all this evidence, though, of course, the specific passages had not been referred to in the judgment of the trial Court. It must be assumed that, when the trying Magistrate directed restoration of possession of the property under S. 522, Criminal P. C., he had in mind those features of the evidence. It must be remembered that both the Courts below have fully relied upon the evidence of these prosecution witnesses in coming to their findings in favour of the petitioner's possession and in assessing the guilt of the accused. At one stage, I was inclined to remand the case for a finding on this point, but I think it would be unnecessary to do so, because both the Courts below have accepted the evidence of these witnesses to be correct. In that view, it would now be sheer waste of time to send back the case for a consideration of the case afresh. These materials being there, it cannot but be held that the opposite party accused in this case were convicted of an offence attended by criminal force or show of criminal force, and, as a result of their conduct, the petitioner was deprived of the house and the land in question. I would very briefly refer to the decisions which have been relied upon in support of the case of the petitioner. The two cases relied upon by the Court of appeal below are Bihari Lal v. Emperor, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 454 : (36 Cr. L. J. 59) and Narain Singh v. Panna Lal, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 460 : (42 Cr. L. J. 160). These two cases are merely an authority for the proposition that criminal force contemplated by S 522, Criminal P. C. must refer to force applied to a human body and not to any inanimate object. In Bihari Lal's case, (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 454 : 36 Cr. L. J. 59) what happened was that the accused had taken possession of a certain house by breaking open the lock in the absence of the person in possession. It was argued that the mere fact that the accused had broken open the lock was sufficient to amount to criminal force as required by S. 522 of the Code. This contention was naturally not accepted by the learned Judge who decided the case. The decision in Narain Singh's case, (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 460: 42 Cr. L. J. 160) also, is to the similar effect. These decisions nowhere said that, if at the time of taking forcible possession of the property the accused threatened to assault the complainant or, in his absence, any of his men or even his neighbour, that would not amount to criminal force or show of criminal force as required by S. 522, Criminal P. C. The decision in Rameshwar Singh v. Emperor, 4 Pat. 438 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 689 : 27 Cr. L. J. 137) quite clearly shows that the criminal force may be either against the complainant or against his party, and, if there is such criminal force or show of criminal force, then the trying Magistrate would be justified in taking action under S. 522 of the Code and direct possession to be restored to the person dispossessed. On the other proposition, where a criminal trespasser enters upon property and prevents the rightful possessor from coming into possession of it, dispossession is said to have taken place, and, if the trespasser was guilty of some force or intimidation when he prevented the other party from entering upon the property, a Magistrate would be justified in taking action under S. 522, Criminal P, C.; there are also a number of authorities. Reference may be made to Mt. Chhabia v. Ram Charan, A. I. R. (30) 1943 ALL. 7: (44 Cr. L. J. 164) and Mahatir v. Rex, A. I. R. (36) 1949 ALL. 228: (50 Cr. L. J. 338). In this latter case, their Lordships observed as follows :

"Use of criminal force or show of force, or criminal intimidation must all be with reference to a person and not with reference to property.

Use of criminal force means actual use thereof; criminal intimidation connotes a threat of use of force to another person. Show of force, therefore, must be something different from these two. It may fall short of the use of force or of a threat to use force. Where the accused or his accomplices having entered upon the land do not quit the land when the true owner protests against such unauthorised entry and are ready to fight, the offence can be said to have been attended to by 'show of force'. Show of force may consist in the physical presence of the accused, his servants or companions in such a way that the true owner is put to the fear that if he tried to regain possession by force he will be met by force.

In such a case the dispossession of the true owner is not complete till he appears on the scene, protests and has to go away. The case is covered by S. 522 and an order for restoration of possession can be passed by the Court."

As I have shown from the evidence discussed above, all these elements were present in this case. It would be useless to multiply authorities on the point, because the principles appear to be well settled and in consonance with the right interpretation of the provision of the law.

[5] On behalf of the opposite party Mr. Sahi has very strongly submitted that it is not open to this Court in revision to pass an order of restoration. According to him, there is no application perding before this Court against the order of sentence and conviction passed against the accused and, therefore, it was not open to this Court to entertain an application merely against that part of the order of the Court below which set aside the decision of the trial Court directing the restoration of possession under S. 522, Criminal P. C. In other words, Mr. Sahi's contention amounts to this that this application is in the nature of an independent application made to this Court for taking action under S. 522, Criminal P. C. Mr. Sahi relies for this contention on several decisions but it would not be necessary for me to refer to those cases in detail, because I do not regard this application as an independent application under S. 522, Criminal P. C., filed before this Court. Here, the order under S. 522 was passed by the same judgment by which the accused were convicted by the trial Court. Against that order of conviction as also against the order passed under S. 522, Criminal P. C., the accused had preferred an appeal to the Court of appeal below, and the Court of appeal below, although affirming the order of sentence and conviction passed against the accused, interfered with this part of the judgment of the trial Court. In my opinion, there is absolutely no reason why the petitioner should not be allowed to move against this part of the order of the Court below. Section 522, cl. (3) of the Code is quite clear on the point that the High Court can exercise its power of revision in regard to such an order. The decision on which Mr. Sahi has strongly relied is the decision in Ashwini Kumar Das v. Shashankamohan Basu, 59 Cal. 1153 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 750 : 33 Cr. L. J. 868). Now, this decision, in my opinion, does not help Mr. Sahi and and has no application at all. This was a case where the application under S. 522 was made beyond the period of limitation provided in that section. Their Lordships pointed out that such an application could not be entertained by the Magistrate, as the section specifically limits the powers of the Magistrate to do so to the time when he convicts an accused person or to any time within one month from the date of such conviction. The other case on which reliance has been placed by him is Abdul Mannan v. Raiyab Ali, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 390 : (48 Cr. L. J. 908). The observations made in this case if taken outside the context might lead to an impression that the observations help the contention of the learned counsel. But, if one remembers the facts of the case, then the observations cannot be invoked to the assistance of the contention raised by Mr. Sahi. In that case, neither the Court of first instance nor the Court of Session had passed any order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., when disposing of the appeal or when convicting the accused. Subsequently, the complainant in the case moved the learned Additional Sessions Judge who had heard the appeal and prayed for an order under S. 522 of the Code. The learned Additional Sessions Judge at first referred the matter to the trial Court, but, in the meantime, the presiding officer had been transferred and the officer who succeeded him returned the case to the Additional Sessions Judge observing that he was not the appellate Court and more than one month had elapsed. Thereafter, the Additional Sessions Judge passed the order directing the restoration of possession of the property. This was clearly a wrong order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, and it is in respect of this order that Lodge J. observed :

"In my opinion, the occasion for the exercise of the power conferred upon the Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision by S. 522 (3) arises only when an appeal or reference or revision against the order of conviction is pending before that Court.... But it seems to me that the Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision is subject to the same limitation as the Court of first instance, and the Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision must pass the order of restoration of possession when upholding the conviction or at any time within one month from the date of the order in appeal, confirmation, reference or revision upholding the order of conviction. I am unable to accept the view that a Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision can pass an original order under S. 522 at any time whatsoever."

This case is clearly beside the point and, in my opinion, does not support the contention advanced on behalf of the opposite party. Mr. Sahi then contended that there was no finding of the Court of appeal below as to whether the possession in question was attended by force or show of criminal force and, therefore, this Court should, at any rate, remit the case to the Court of appeal below for such a finding. I have already said that it is not necessary to do so in view of the fact that the evidence of witnesses, relevant passages from which I have quoted above, was relied upon by the Courts below, and it was on their evidence that the order of sentence and conviction was upheld by the Court of appeal below. Learned counsel also contends that, at any rate, it was a matter of discretion and with this exercise of discretion I should not interfere. In my opinion, this argument is also without any substance. I have pointed out above that the decision of the Court of appeal below interfering with the order of the trial Court was based upon a misapprehension of the law as laid down in the two Lahore decisions. If the Court below had appreciated the law aright, I have no doubt it would not have interfered with the decision of the trial Court, and the circumstances of the case are such that if the matter is further delayed the petitioner would be deprived of the use of the residential house, which it is alleged by the petitioner is the only residential house for him and his two minor nephews. In the circumstances, I see no reason why the order of the Court of appeal below setting aside the order of the trial Court under S. 522, Criminal P. C. should not be set aside.

[6] I would accordingly make the rule absolute and restore the order of the trial Court passed under S. 522, Criminal P. C.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 139A — Procedure under.

The procedure laid down in S. 139A requires, first, that the party against whom a provisional order has been made, shall appear before the Magistrate and deny the existence of the public right in question; and, secondly, he shall produce some reliable evidence; and, thirdly, that such evidence shall be legal evidence and shall support the denial. If these three conditions are satisfied, then the Magistrate's jurisdiction to continue the proceeding ceases. He has no jurisdiction to weigh the evidence and decide on which side the balance leans. The criterion is that the Magistrate should find evidence supporting the denial, which he can pronounce reliable. It is only at that stage in the nature of an ex parte prima facie evidence, and if that evidence is per se reliable, then the Magistrate should hold his hands and refer the parties to have their dispute settled in the civil Court. Kameshwar Dayal — for Petitioners ; Rameshwar Prasad—for Opposite Party.

Order. — This application must succeed on the short point that there has been no compliance of the mandatory provisions of S. 139-A, Criminal P. C. The petitioners in the case were second party to the proceeding which was taken under S. 133 of the Code.

[2] A petition was filed in May 1947 by Satyadeo Prasad, party 1, for action under S. 133 against the petitioners with respect to these very plots. In that proceeding it was held that the dispute was of a civil nature and did not come within the purview of S. 133. This order was upheld by the District Magistrate who was moved to make a reference to the High Court. In the meantime, in May 1948, a proceeding under S. 144 was started against the parties on the report of the police. The Subdivisional Magistrate held a local inspection, and on his local inspection he was of the view that plot No. 271 was an alung and plot No. 272 was a garha or a ditch, and although it was recorded as ghairmazrua malik, it was serving the purpose of irrigation and reservoir of water. H also found that portions of plots Nos. 271 and 272 had been settled by the malik with the petitioners who had made certain constructions upon the lands, i. e. plots Nos. 271 and 272. He accordingly discharged the proceeding under S. 144 and advised opposite party to take fresh proceedings under S. 133. To what extent a fresh proceeding under S. 133 would be justified in the circumstances when a previous proceeding in regard to these plots had failed would be a matter for consideration by the learned Magistrate when disposing of the proceeding under S. 139-A. It appears, however, that after a notice to show cause had been issued, party 2 appeared and denied the existence of a public right on 14-6-1949, and then he was called upon to lead evidence under S. 139-A. The proceedings were then transferred for disposal to the learned Magistrate against whose order this application has been filed. The learned Magis rate held a local inspection in December 1949 and he appears to have heard the parties, as he says, on 3-6-1950 and then passed the present order. The order itself discloses that he seems to have taken evidence of the opposite party, as in his order he refers to a fard ab-pasi produced by them, and he also appears to have allowed the opposite party to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the petitioners in the proceeding under S. 139A. In my opinion, there appears to be some misconception about the nature of the procedure to be adopted under S. 139-A. The procedure has been indicated in Thakur Sao v. Abdul Aziz, 4 Pat. 783 : (A.I.R. (13) 1926 Pat. 170 : 27 Cr. L. J 9) where Mullick J. pointed out that the procedure laid down in S. 139-A of the Code, requires, first, that the party against whom a provisional order has been made, shall appear before the Magistrate and deny the existence of the public right in question; and, secondly, he shall produce some reliable evidence: and thirdly, that such evidence shall be legal evidence and shall support the denial. If these three conditions are satisfied, then the Magistrate's jurisdiction to continue the proceeding ceases. He has no jurisdiction to weigh the evidence and decide on which side the balance leans. Ross J. agreed with that decision, and he also observed that the criterion is that the Magistrate should find evidence supporting the denial, which he can pronounce reliable. That is necessary and that is sufficient to oust his jurisdiction. Therefore, it is not open to the Magistrate to balance the evidence at the stage of the proceeding under S. 139A. Here, what the Magistrate appears to have done is that he relies upon the evidence of the witnesses, but he says that their admissions in cross-examination show that there was some kind of a public right in the lands in question. He also refers to the fard ab-pasi in order to support his conclusion a document which was produced by the opposite party. As I have said, at that stage it is not for him to take evidence of the opposite party. It is only for him to see whether there is reliable evidence in support of the denial of the existence of any public right in respect of the disputed lands. That evidence may not be complete for the purpose of negativing the public right claimed if balanced with the other evidence and materials on record adduced by the other side. It is only at that stage in the nature of an ex parte prima facie evidence, and if that evidence is per se reliable, then the Magistrate should hold his hands and refer the parties to have their dispute settled in the civil Court. In this case there is an additional factor that there was already a proceeding under S. 133, and in that proceeding it was found that the dispute was of a civil character, and, therefore, the Magistrate refused to take action under S. 133. It is also pointed out by Mr. Kameshwar Dayal on behalf of the petitioners relying upon a decision of this Court in Harnandan Lal v. Rampalak Mahto, 18 Pat. 76 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 460 : 40 Cr. L. J. 837) that obstruction in respect of a water channel where only some people claim a right of irrigation does not attract the operation of S. 133, Criminal P. C. I would therefore direct that the order of the learned Magistrate should be set aside. He should only consider the evidence adduced on behalf of the petitioner and see if that evidence is reliable to support his denial. He should also consider the other circumstances to which I have referred and then decide whether having regard to those facts it would be desirable for him to proceed under S. 137, Criminal P. C., but in no case should he look to the evidence of the opposite party for the purpose of coming to such a decision. With these observations I would make the rule absolute.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by defendant 1st party. The suit out of which the appeal has arisen was a suit for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession, or in the alternative recovery of possession of two bighas 8 kathas and 19 dhurs out of plot No. 1233 of khata No. 12 of village Dafapur alias Ismailpur bearing touzi No. 10142. The case of the plaintiffs-respondents was that the disputed land was bakasht land of the malik. The old touzi No. of the village was 1070, and in that touzi one Haribar Prasad Singh had one anna five dams interest. The Manjauli concern, an indigo planting concern, was the other co sharer. It is not in dispute that the interest of Haribar Prasad Singh to the extent of one anna and five dams was in thika of the Manjauli concern. In the village there was a large area of bakasht lands. Haribar Prasad Singh executed certain mortgages with regard to his interest in 1914 and 1915. In 1921 and in 1922, Haribar Prasad Singh executed two mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents by which the earlier mortgages were to be paid off. On the basis of the said two mortgages the plaintiffs respondents instituted two suits in 1929. The suits were decreed in 1934, and in execution of the decree the property mortgaged was sold including the bakasht lands which fell to the share of Haribar Prasad Singh. The sale took place on 19-11-1940, and delivery of possession was taken on 7-8-1941. When the mortgage suits were pending there was a partition, and the interest of Haribar Prasad Singh was carved into a separate new touzi bearing No. 10142. It is not in dispute that the disputed land was part of the bakasht lands allotted to Haribar Prasad Singh by the aforesaid partition. The case of the plaintiffs respondents was that they came in possession of the disputed land after the purchase and delivery of possession referred to above. There was an interference with their possession in December 1942, and hence the suit for a declaration of their title and confirmation of possession, or in the alternative recovery of possession.

[2] The defence of the present appellant was that the disputed land was settled with her father by the Manjauli concern some thirty years ago, and her father remained in possession on payment of rent to the Manjauli concern. After the death of her father the appellant remained in possession on payment of rent to the Manjauli concern. During the pendency of the mortgage action by the plaintiffs-respondents the interest of Haribar Prasad Singh was sold in favour of the defendants second party in execution of a money decree. The defendants second party got possession of the proprietary interest of Haribar Prasad Singh from the thikadar, the Manjauli concern, and the defendants second party also recognised the appellant as a tenant in respect of the lands and granted receipts for payment of rent. The appellant claimed that she had acquired a right of occupancy in the lands and was not, therefore, liable to be ejected.

[3] The learned Munsif, who dealt with the suit in the first instance, held that there was a bona fide settlement in favour of the appellant, and the plaintiffs-respondents were entitled to receive the rent only but were not entitled to eject the appellant. On that finding he dismissed the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, who heard the appeal, found that there was a temporary settlement in favour of the appellant's father by the Manjauli concern, but accepted the contention made on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents to the effect that the settlement made by the Manjauli concern could not enure byond the period of the thika and that the Manjauli concern could not by its action bind the lessor. In that view of the matter, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the appellant had not acquired any permanent occupancy right and was, therefore, liable to be ejected by the plaintiffs respondents who had acquired the interest of Haribar Prasad Singh by the purchase in execution of their mortgage decree.

[4] Two points have been urged before me on behalf of the appellant. Firstly, it is contended that in an action in ejectment it was for the plaintiffs-respondents to prove that either they or their predecessors in interest had been in khas possession within twelve years of the suit. Secondly, it is contended that the appellant had acquired a right of occupancy in the lands by operation of law by reason of the provisions of Ss. 20 and 21, Bihar Tenancy Act. I think the second point is decisive of this appeal, and I propose, therefore, to consider the second point at some length.

[5] There is a clear finding by the final Court of fact that there was a temporary settlement of the lands by the Manjauli concern in favour of the appellant's father. In one part of the judgment the appellate Court seemed to think that the lands might have been given to the appellant's father in lieu of services to the Manjauli concern, it being admitted that the father of the appellant was a servant of the Manjauli concern. It was, however, nobody's case that the lands were given to the appellant's father in lieu of services. On the contrary, the clear case of the appellant in Para. 12 of the written statement was that the lands had been settled with her father by the Manjauli concern, which had accepted rent, and that the appellant also paid rent as a raiyat in respect of the lands after the death of her father. The learned Subordinate Judge has expressed the finding of fact in the following words :

"It appears that the respondent was holding the land as a temporary settlee during the thica period of Manjhauli Kothi. She continued her possession over it when the possession of the disputed Touzi went to defendants second party. She seems to be under the wrong impression that the length of possession has given her indefeasible rights in the suit land. Under that impression of consciousness she cut and removed the Simal tree. But as said above the length of possession under the peculiar circumstances of this case can hardly confer valid qaimi right in it upon her."

At another place in the judgment the learned Subordinate Judge has stated that the Manjauli concern as a thikadar of the disputed land could not have settled the land with the defendant or her father beyond the thika period and could not legally bind the lessor by its action. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have lost sight of the provisions of Ss. 20 and 21, Bihar Tenancy Act. Under S. 20, every person, who, for a period of twelve years, whether wholly or partly, before or after the commencement of this Act, has continuously held as a raiyat land situate in any village, whether under a lease or otherwise, shall be deemed to have become, on the expiration of that period, a settled raiyat of that village. Under S. 21, every person who is a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of S. 20, shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village. If, therefore, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the appellant's father and thereafter the appellant continued to hold the lands as a raiyat continuously during the thika period of the Manjauli concern is a correct finding, then the appellant has, by operation of law, acquired a right of occupancy in the lands by reason of the provisions of Ss. 20 and 21, Bihar Tenancy Act referred to above. This aspect of the learned Subordinate Judge seems to have lost sight of.

[6] Mr. Lal Narain Sinha appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents has contended that the learned Subordinate Judge did not correctly appreciate the legal position, and, therefore, did not apply his mind to the question whether there was a temporary settlement by the Manjauli concern and whether the appellant or her father continuously held the land as a raiyat for a period of twelve years. He suggested that as the application of Ss. 20 and 21, Bihar Tenancy Act, was not specifically considered by the learned Subordinate Judge, the case should go back on remand for a finding as to whether the appellant or her father held the land continuously as a raiyat for a period of twelve years. In my opinion, there is no necessity for a remand. I have quoted the exact words in which the learned Subordinate Judge expressed his finding. They show that he found clearly that the appellant was a temporary settlee during the thika period of the Manjauli concern, and she continued her possession over it as a raiyat. We know that the thika period of the Manjauli concern did not come to an end till the defendants second party took possession of the interest of Harihar Prasad Singh by purchase in execution of their money decree. That was some time after 1929 when the mortgage action was brought. The allegation in the written statement was that, the temporary settlement was made by the Manjauli concern in favour of the appellant's father some thirty years ago, which would take one back to the year 1914. If, therefore, the appellant's father and thereafter the appellant was in possession as a raiyat from 1914 to some time after 1929, the period would be much more than twelve years. An attempt was made before me to show that the appellant based her title not on a settlement made by the Manjauli concern, but on a settlement alleged to have been made by the defendants second party during the pendency of the mortgage action by the plaintiffs respondents. It appears that the word 'settlement' has been rather loosely used, and the judgment of the learned Munsif gives one the impression, that the appellant claimed that a final settlement was made with her during the time when the defendants second party were in possession. Learned counsel for the parties have, however, read out the relevant paragraphs of the written statement to me, and it is clear from those paragraphs that the appellant claimed that a settlement had been made in favour of her father some thirty years ago and her father came in possession as a raiyat, as a result of that settlement. Her father continued in possession as a raiyat and thereafter the appellant continued in possession as a raiyat continuously during the thika period, and she continued in such possession even after the defendants second party obtained possession of the interest of Haribar Prasad Singh from the Manjauli concern. That being the position, it is clear to me that the appellant had acquired a right of occupancy by operation of law and was not liable to be ejected by the plaintiffs-respondents who had purchased the interest of Harihar Prasad Singh in execution of their mortgage decree and had obtained delivery of possession in 1941.

[7] The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge are set aside and those of the learned Munsif are restored. The appellant will be entitled to her costs throughout.

A. F. O. D. No. 387 of 1946, D/- 5-1-1950.

(a) Muhammadan law — Gift — Property in possession of mortgagee — Validity.

The gift of land in possession of the mortgagee is valid, as possession in connection with Muhammadan law of gift means only such possession as the nature of the subject of the gift is capable of. A gift of mere equity of redemption in land in possession of the mortgagee is therefore valid and conveys good title to the donee : Case law referred ; 21 All. 165 and A.I.R. (9) 1922 Cal. 422, Foll. [Paras 5 and 6]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 43—Principle of rule of estoppel by deed.

The rule of estoppel by deed is that if a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by a conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes. Thus where a person having a partial interest in certain property transfers a larger interest and subsequently acquires that interest, S. 43 applies and the transferee is entitled to the interest so acquired by the transferor : A. Anno. T. P. Act, S. 43, N. 2, 10.

(c) Co-sharer — Rights of, against trespasser.

Although a co-sharer by himself cannot get against trespasser a decree for ejectment from the whole of the land, he can get a decree for joint possession to the extent of his share. He has to work out his further rights by means of a suit for partition : Case law referred. [Para 9]

(d) Deed — Construction — Sale of property by description — Description partially correct and partially incorrect —Rejection of incorrect portion.

Where in a deed of sale the description is partially correct and partially incorrect and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject-matter intended to be conveyed while the latter does not apply to any subject, the erroneous part should be rejected on the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet. The principle is that so much of the description as has no application being laid aside as mere surplusage what remains should be sufficient to identify the thing really meant. Baldeo Sahay, Shiva Anugrah Narain and Bajrang Sahay—for Appellants; B. C. De, K. D. De and S. C. Ghose — for Respondents.

Ramaswami J.—In the suit, which is the subject of this appeal, the plaintiffs claimed that on 16-2-1938, they had purchased holding NO. 221 of Giridin town, area about 3 bigahs 8 kathas, by registered kobala from defendants 4 and 5, Md. Ishaw and Abdul Jabbar. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree.

MOHAN MIAN

Bulaki (by 1st wife)	Bibban (D. 3)
	Guldasta (D. 2)

Ishaq D. 4.	Jabbar D. 5.	Mt. Jamila D. 1.	Mt. Hasiba D. 6.

The plaintiffs alleged that defendants 4 and 5 had previously sold 3 kathas of holding NO. 224 to Mohammad Qasim who in his turn sold to Guldasta and Mt. Bibban (defendants 2 and 3). After having made the purchase, defendants 2 and 3 encroached upon holding NO. 221, built houses and garages thereon, cut down the trees of the orchard and appropriated the fish from the tank. The plaintiffs, therefore, asked for a declaration of their title to holding NO. 221 described in schedule of the plaint and for possession thereof. Defendants 2 and 3 contested the suit on the ground that defendants 4 and 5 had no title to the land in dispute. When Bulaki died, his father Mohan Mian was alive and so inherited one-sixth of Bulaki's share. In lieu of the share, Mohan obtained $2\frac{1}{4}$ bighas, of which he made a verbal gift to his daughter Mt. Bibban. The latter also purchased about 3 kathas from Md. Qasim and obtained settlement of 2 kathas from Equitable Goal Company. After amalagamating all the portions, Mt. Bibban constructed dwelling houses, garages and sunka well. Defendants 2 and 3 denied that they made any encroachment on holding NO. 221. Mossomat Jamila, defendant 1 alleged that Bulaki made an oral gift of the entire holding in her favour at the time she was married.

[2] Upon these contentions, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to 0/9/4 share of holding NO. 221 and that defendants had made encroachment. As the plaintiffs failed to prove the exact measure of encroachment, the learned Subordinate-Judge refused to grant decree for ejecting the defendants. Against this decree, the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal. A cross-objection has been filed on behalf of defendants 1, 2 and 3.

[3] The first question to be examined is whether Ishaq and Jabbar had legal right to convey the entire sixteen annas share of holding NO. 221 by the registered kobala. On behalf of the respondents, it was argued that Jabbar and Ishaq could make a valid transfer only of their shares and not of Hasiba or Jamila, who did not execute the kobala. It was pointed out that in the petition of compromise (Ex. 7) the two sisters had agreed that the Jharia property should be sold to Md. Qasim, but as regards the Giridih property, the sisters had only authorised Abdul Jabbar to be the manager on their behalf. For the appellants, it was argued that since sisters had been benefited by the sale the brothers had the legal right to convey their shares, that they had implied authority to sell for the benefit of the joint estate. The argument has some attraction but it is invalid, for, the compromise petition expressly confers upon the two brothers the right to manage and not the right to sell the properties. In view of the express stipulation in the compromise decree, it is not possible to hold that there was an implied contract by which the two sisters authorised the brothers to sell.

[4] On behalf of the appellants it was stated that subsequent to the execution of the kobala, Mt. Habiba executed a registered deed of relinquishment with respect to her share, in favour of Jabbar. It was argued that Jabbar acquired through this document the undivided share of Hasiba in property in dispute. But it is apparent that Hasiba executed the deed of relinquishment on 28.3 1938, before Jabbar and Isbaq redeemed the mortgage. The challan (Ex. 20a) shows that the mortgage amount was deposited in Court on 29-11-1938. For the respondents, it was maintained that Mt. Hasiba merely relinquished her share in the equity of redemption, that such a relinquishment was not valid under Mohammadan law. This contention is based mainly on the authority of two Bombay cases, Mohinuddin v. Manchershah 6 Bom. 650 and Ismail v. Ramji Sambhaji, 23 Bom 682: (1 Bom. L.R. 177), in which it was held that property in possession of a mortgagee, and not in the actual possession of the donor was incapable of being the subject of a gift according to the rule of Mohammadan law. But the authority of these cases is highly doubtful. In his celebrated treatise Mr. Ameer Ali observes that the Bombay High Court has misconceived the Mohammedan law:

"This view, it is respectfully submitted, is founded upon an erroneous apprehension of the Hanafi law, under which seisin is requisite for hypothecation. According to the correct view of the Hanafi doctrine on the subject there is nothing in it to preclude the mortgagor from granting his equity of redemption to another. And, as the property forms the security for the debt, the transferee obtains the right to redeem the property subject to the payment of the debt" (Mohamedan Law Vol. I, 4th Edn., p. 66).

[5] In an Allahabad case, Anwari Begum v. Nizamuddin Shaha, 21 ALL. 165 : (1899 A. W. N. 8), the High Court in accordance with this view held that the gift of property attached by the Collector for arrears of revenue and taken possession of by him under a local law was valid :

"There is no doubt that the principle of Mohamedan law is that possession is necessary to make a good gift, but the question is, possession of what? If a donor does not transfer to the donee, so far as he can, all the possession which he can transfer, the gift is not a good one. As we have said above there is, in our judgment, nothing in the Mohamedan law to prevent the gift of a right to property. The donor must, so far as it is possible for him, transfer to the donee that which he gives, namely, such rights as he himself has; but this does not imply that where a right to property forms the subject of a gift, the gift will be invalid, unless the donor transfers what he himself does not possess, namely the corpus of the property. He must evidence the reality of the gift by divesting himself, so far as he can, of the whole of what he gives."

The same principle has been laid down in Tara Prasanna v. Shandi Bibi, 49 Cal. 68: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 422) in which the High Court held that the gift of land in possession of the mortgagee was valid and that possession in connection with Mohammadan law of gift meant such possession as the nature of the subject of the gift is capable of.

[6] In the present case, I am satisfied that the deed of relinquishment (Ex. 3) is, upon its true construction, a deed of gift of Mt. Hasiba of her share in favour of Jabbar. In my opinion, the Calcutta and Allahabad decisions are correct and the gift made by Mt. Hasiba of a mere equity of redemption is valid under the Mohammadan law and effectively conveyed that title of Mt. Hasiba to her brother Jabbar. If this conclusion is correct, it follows that S. 43, T. P. Act would directly operate and the plaintiffs would be entitled to the share of Mt. Hasiba in the property in dispute In Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal, 47 I. A. 239: (A I.R. (8) 1921 P. C. 112) Lord Buckmaster stated the rule of estoppel by deed as follows:

"If a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by a conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes."

The principle of 'feeding by estoppel' is based also on the equitable doctrine that a man who has promised more than he can perform must make good his contract when he acquires the power of performance. In Holroyd v. Marshall, (1860-62) 10 H. L. C. 191 : (33 L. J. Ch. 193) the House of Lords decided that if the future goods which were to form the subject of a future sale or mortgage were sufficiently earmarked at the time of the contract and were such that equity might decree specific performance of it, equity will place the property in a state of anticipatory isolation so as to give the beneficial interest therein to the intended transferee, directly the property comes into existence or falls into the hands of the intending transferor.

[7] It is then necessary to examine the claim of defendants 2 and 3 that they had title to the land in dispute on account of an oral gift said to have been made by Mohan. According to the defence case, Mohan was alive when Bulaki died and acquired one sixth share of the inheritance of Bulaki. The defendants allege that in lieu of his share of inheritance, Mohan obtained 2½ bighas of land of which he made an oral gift to Bibban. In support of their case, the defendants exhibited rent receipts (Exs. E to E5) of which Ex E3 is most important. In this receipt it is stated that after the death of Bulaki, Mohan was mutated for 2½ bighas with the boundaries stated therein. Exhibits E4 and E5 are the receipts granted by Abdul Hamid (D. W. 5) who stated that he was one of the co-sharers entitled to rent. For the appellants, it was maintained that these receipts were forged. It was pointed out that in Ex. E3 the western boundary is described as "pond and land of Bulaki that was given to Jamila Khatoon". It appears unusual in the first place that the area and the boundaries of the land should be specified in the rent receipt. That the description of the western boundary is false is apparent from the fact that Jamila Khatoon did not contest the case though she filed written statement. She alleged that Bulaki had made oral gift of the entire holding No. 221 at the time of her marriage. But her case is falsified by the important circumstance that in the partition suit Jamila asserted that holding No. 221 (Old holding No. 172) was joint property and that she had merely share therein. Since the claim of Jamila is false it is impossible to hold that Ex. E-3 is a genuine document. It follows that no reliance ought to be placed on the rent receipts produced by the respondents. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge rightly held that Mohan was not alive at the time of the death of Bulaki and that Mohan made no gift of the land in dispute to Bibban.

[8] As regards the one-third share of Ishaq, there is evidence that Ishaq executed a baimoqasa deed on 7-11-1930 in favour of his wife Mt. Naboolan in lieu of her dower debt. Soon after, Naboolan died and the share devolved upon her minor daughter Mt. Tahrunnissa, Md. Ishaq husband and Mt. Hajra as sharers and Israil, Nikael and Israfeel three brothers as residuaries. The share of Mr. Ishaq was four annas, but Mt. Tahirunnissa the minor daughter died later on and her eight annas share accrued to Ishaq. At the time Ishaq executed the sale-deed he was, therefore, entitled only to 12 annas out of his one-third share in the property in suit. On behalf of the appellants, it was nevertheless argued that the baimoqasa deed was benami and not acted upon. It was also pointed out that on 23-1-1943 Mt. Hajra, Israil, Nikael and Israfeel executed a deed of release in favour of the plaintiffs (Ex. 9). But it is important to notice that these executants have not been impleaded in the suit and it is impossible to decide in their absence whether the baimqasa deed is benami or whether the deed of release is a genuine document. Upon the facts proved, it must be held that the plaintiffs have acquired title only to 12 annas out of the share of Ishaq.

[9] On behalf of the respondents the argument was stressed that since Mt. Hajra, Israil, Nikael and Israfeel have not been impleaded, the plaintiffs cannot get a decree for ejectment. But this argument is not tenable. Although a co-sharer by himself cannot get, against a trespasser a decree for ejectment from the whole of the land, he can get a decree for joint possession to the extent of his share. He has to work out his further rights by means of a suit for partition. Vide Hulodhur Sein v. Gooroo Das Roy, 20 W. R. 126 ; Radha Proshad v. Esuf, 7 Cal. 414 : (9 C L R. 76) and Naresh Chandra v. Haydar Sheikh Khan, 49 C. L. J. 83 : (A.I.R. (16) 1929 Cal. 28). In the last case Rankin C.J., observed as follows :

"A theoretical and highly important question is raised as to whether or not one co-sharer can maintain a case of trespass in the absence of other co-sharers against the trespasser so as to get an order of eviction as distinct from an order of joint possession with the trespasser. That is a matter which has long been considered in this Court. The position as regards the execution of such an order and that position as regards the theory of the matter have, in practice, been in this Court dealt with by giving a decree for joint possession together with the trespasser and leaving it to the plaintiff to work out his further rights by a suit for partition. I do not think that there is anything unusual in the form of the decree."

In the present case, therefore, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs ought to be granted a decree for joint possession for twelve annas share with defendants 1, 2 and 3 of the land in suit.

[10] The next question to be investigated is, what did the sale-deed (Ex. 1) purport to convey to the plaintiffs ? The document describes the property sold as "a piece of land" within the compound walls, wherein the orchard and the tank, "situate at Giridih within the Municipal area of Giridih," bearing holding No. 221 constituting dar-mokarrari interest of the declarants situate as per boundaries, specified below :

North	South	East	West
House of Sakhawat and others.	Passage for coming in and going out.	Road and house of Sabamat Mian and others.	House of Karu Pandit and others.

On behalf of the appellants it is pointed out that no area is mentioned in the deed, that the respondents have not exhibited Municipal registers to show whether holding No. 221 had the boundaries as stated in the document. The respondents stated that the boundaries to the north, west and south are correct but boundary to the east has been wrongly mentioned. They asserted that holding No. 221 contained no orchard but only a tank and measured less than one bigha. It is apparent on a perusal of the kobala that the land conveyed is described not only (1) as holding No. 221 but (2) as containing an orchard and a tank (3) with the boundaries specified. For the appellants, learned advocate said that the Municipal register was not available. Even if it be assumed that the Municial boundaries are not consistent with the boundaries as described in the sale deed, it does not follow that the holding number will prevail against the other descriptions stated in the document. In this context, it is necessary to reiterate that the land conveyed is described in the kobala as containing an orchard and a tank. In my opinion, the leading description is the statement of the boundaries and the statement that the land is situate within compound walls containing an orchard and a tank. The statement of holding No. 221 is supplementary and is not dominant. Where the description is partly correct and partly incorrect and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject-matter intended, while the latter does not apply to any subject, the erroneous part should be rejected on the maxim false demonstratio non nocet. The principle is that so much of the description as has no application being laid aside as mere surplusage what remains is sufficient to identify the thing really meant.

[11] In the present case, other evidence on the record supports the appellants' case that the land conveyed is about 3 bighas in area and comprises the orchard and tank within the compound walls. In the plaint of the present suit the land is described as comprising an orchard and a tank, holding No. 221, measuring 3 bighas with the boundaries given in the kobala. In the plaint of the partition suit, (Ex. 6), the land is described as "within the compound walls of the orchard and tank, holding No. 172" and with the same boundaries as stated in the kobala. The deed of release (Ex. 9) executed by Mt. Hajra also described the disputed land as laying "within the compound walls of the orchard, holding No. 221, area about 2 bighas" and with identical boundaries. The same boundaries are ascribed to the land in dispute by Mt. Hasiba in the deed of relinquishment (Ex. 3) dated 28 3-1938. In Ex. 9 (a), the deed of release executed by Ishaq and Jabbar also the land is described as comprising 3 bighas with the boundaries stated in the kobala. In this context, reference should be made to the survey Khatian (Ex. 1) in which the land is described as belonging to Skh. Bulaki laying east of the pond of Skh. Bulaki and comprising area of 0.99 acres. Upon a proper construction of the kobala (Ex. 1) therefore, it is plain that the land conveyed included 0.99 acres equal to 2½ bighas, with the boundaries stated therein and comprising an orchard and a tank within the boundary walls.

[12] Upon these grounds, it is manifest that the plaintiffs should be granted a declaration that they are entitled to 0-12-0 annas share of the land in dispute as described in schedule 'kha' of the plaint. The plaintiffs are also entitled to a decree for joint possession of twelve annas share with defendants 1, 2 and 3 of the land in dispute.

[13] Accordingly, I should allow this appeal and order that the plaintiffs should be granted a decree in the above terms with proportionate costs against the contesting defendants in both the Courts. The cross objection is dismissed.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 7—Events happening after suit—Grant of relief on basis of altered conditions.

As a general rule a suit is to be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. As an exception to this rule, a Court may take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions in cases where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate or that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties. Judgment.—In this suit the plaintiffs alleged that they and defendant 2 were members of a joint Mitakshara family; that on 15 6-1945 defendant 2 executed a sale deed in favour of defendant 1 with respect to his undivided share of the joint family properties; that the sale deed was without consideration or legal necessity and defendant 1 obtained no title by virtue thereof. The plaintiffs therefore asked for a declaration that the sale deed dated 15.6.1945 was illegal and not binding upon them. Defendant 1 contested the suit on the ground that the sale deed was for consideration and legal necessity. He further alleged that on 3.11.1945 after the institution of the suit defendant 2 executed another sale deed with respect to the same properties. It was also alleged that on 29-8-1945 defendant 1 had given notice to the plaintiffs that he would separate from the joint family. Defendant 1 therefore pleaded that his title has become perfected in any event. The learned Munsif found that the sale deed was genuine and for consideration. But he held that before the institution of the suit defendant 2 and the plaintiffs were joint and so by executing the sale deed dated 15.6 1945 defendant 2 obtained no title to the undivided share of the joint properties. As regards the second sale deed dated 3.11.1945 the learned Munsif held that by virtue of the notices, Exs. C to C/5, defendant 2 became separate from the plaintiffs and by the execution of the sale deed defendant 2 conveyed a valid title to defendant 1 with respect to the properties in suit. The learned Munsif therefore dismissed the suit.

[2] In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that "the plaintiffs were in possession and defendant 1 was entitled to seek partition" and therefore "modified the judgment of the learned Munsif to that extent."

[3] In support of the appeal the main argument addressed is that the lower Courts committed an error of law in taking notice of events which had happened since the institution of the suit. Reference was made to Raicharan Mandal v. Biswanath, 20 C. L. J. 107 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 103) where Asutosh Mookerjee J. observed that as a general rule a suit was to be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. As an exception to this rule a Court may take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions in cases where it is shown that the original relief claimed has by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate or that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties. In the present case the lower Courts have committed an error of law in holding that the general rule was not applicable. In the plaint the plaintiffs had challenged that the sale deed dated 15 6-45 executed by defendant 2 was illegal and not binding upon them. Having found that the family was joint at the date the kobala was executed it is not clear why the lower Courts held that the grant of the relief asked for in the plaint was inappropriate in the circumstances of the case. It is true that defendant 1 had alleged that by the notices (Exs. C. series) defendant 2 had communicated his intention to separate. He further alleged that on 3.11-1945 after the institution of the suit defendant 1 executed a second kobala in favour of the plaintiffs for the same properties. These facts were not admitted by the plaintiffs who, on the contrary, denied that defendant 1 sent the alleged notices of separation or that the second kobala was genuine or executed for consideration. There was no specific issue raised or decided by the learned Munsif on the question of separation of defendant 2 after the institution of the suit and also on the validity of the second kobala. In the circumstances proved in this case I hold that the Courts ought not to have taken notice of events which are alleged to have happened since the institution of the suit or afford relief to defendant 1 on the basis of the altered condition alleged.

[4] Nevertheless it was argued for the respondents that since the grant of a declaratory decree was discretionary the High Court ought not in second appeal to interfere with that discretion. But it is a well-settled principle that a Court of Justice ought not to exercise its discretion in arbitrary or capricious manner. As I have shown, the lower Courts have committed an error of law in the present case in taking notice of subsequent events and in refusing to grant relief to the plaintiffs for that reason it must be held that the lower Courts have not exercised the discretion in a legal manner.

[5] For these reasons therefore I would allow this appeal and reverse the decree of the lower Courts and decree the suit in favour of the plaintiffs. But in the circumstances of the cases I do not propose to make any order as to costs.

[Para 4]

Anno. Expl. Subs. Act, S. 6, N 1.

Safdar Imam — for Appellant; The Standing Counsel — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellant, Abdul Rahim, has been convicted under S. 6, Explosive Substances Act (VI [6] of 1908) and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Monghyr. The appeal was originally preferred on behalf of three persons, Abdul Rahim, Noor Mohammad and Jainul. The appeal was dismissed as against the two latter persons, but admitted only so far as Abdul Rahim was concerned.

[2] The short facts are these. On 2-6-1947, at about 10.30 P. M. a constable named Lakshmi Singh heard the sound of an explosion from the house of one Qudrat Mian in muhalla Kunjrapati Sadar Bazar of Jamalpur town. The sound which the constable heard appeared to him to be the sound of the explosion of a bomb. The constable informed the officer in charge of the Jamalpur police station. This officer took a police force and, accompanied by the Divisional Inspector and a Magistrate, went to the house in question which consisted of several rooms was occupied by members of many families belonging to different communities. In one of the rooms which was occupied by the present appellant and his brother Noor Mohammad, were found some blood-stained clothes and blood-stained cotton. There were also marks of blood on the floor of the room. Noor Mohammad had some stains of blood on the clothes which he wore. In another room occupied by two other persons, were found two bottles containing explosive powder. Jainul, one of the persons who was arrested as an inmate of the house, had injuries on his person. Next morning one Chamru Mian was found in the room occupied by Noor Mohammad and his brother. Chamru Mian had multiple injuries on his person, injuries caused by the splinters of an exploded bomb. Chamru Mian made a statement, which was recorded by a Magistrate. The two bottles containing powder were subsequently examined by the chemical analyst who found that the powder was explosive powder.

[3] On the above facts 19 persons, mostly inmates of the house, were put upon trial. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted 16 holding that there was no case against them under any of the three sections mentioned in the charge against them, namely, Ss. 4, 5 and 6, Explosive Substances Act. With regard to three of the accused persons, namely, Noor Mohammad, Jainul and Abdul Rahim, the learned Sessions Judge found that they were guilty under S. 6, Explosive Substances Act.

[4] The point which has been urged before me on behalf of the appellant Abdul Rahim is that on the facts found no case has been made out against the appellant. In my opinion, this point is good and should be accepted. So far as Abdul Rahim is concerned, the only fact established by the prosecution is that he and his brother Noor Mohammad occupied a room in the house in which room marks of blood were found. It is not necessary in this appeal to consider the effect of the stains of blood on the clothes of Noor Mohammad. Noor Mohammad's appeal was dismissed, and it is unnecessary to consider whether Noor Mohammad came within the mischief of S. 6, Explosive Substances Act. That section reads as follows :

"Any person who by the supply of or solicitation for money, the providing of premises, the supply of materials, or in any manner whatsoever, procures, counsels, aids, abets, or is accessory to, the commission of any offence under this Act shall be punished with the punishment provided for the offence."

It is not in dispute that there is no evidence in this case that Abdul Rahim either procured, counselled, aided or abetted the commission of the offence; nor is there any evidence that Abdul Rahim, either supplied the money, or solicited for money, or provided the premises, or supplied the materials, for the commission of any offence under the Explosive Substances Act. Learned counsel for the Crown has raised the point for consideration as to whether Abdul Rahim can be said to be an accessory to an offence either under S. 4 (b) or S. 5, Explosive Substances Act. The word 'accessory' has been defined in the Concise Oxford Dictionary as a "helper in any act, or one who is privy to it". It is worthy of note that the words 'procures, counsels, aids, abets or is accessory to' come before the words 'the commission of any offence under this Act'. Therefore, the proper meaning of the section must be, in my opinion, that anybody who procures, counsels, aids, abets or is accessory to the commission of any offence under the Act shall be punished under S. 6. Therefore, the question is: Was the present appellant Abdul Rahim accessory to the commission of an offence either under S. 4 (b) or S. 5, Explosive Substances Act? I have already stated that except one solitary fact that the appellant occupied the same room with his brother Noor Mohammad where marks of blood were found, no other fact has been proved against the appellant. It is also known that the bomb was manufactured or possessed not in the room occupied by Noor Mohammad and his brother, but in some other room. The statement which Chamru Mian, the man who was making the bomb and who later on escaped to Pakistan, made does not mention the name of the present appellant. Chamru Mian had stated there that he and Jainul were making bottle bombs. It seems to me clear on the prosecution case itself that there are no proved facts on which it can be held that the appellant, Abdul Rahim, was an accessory or abettor to the commission of an offence under the Explosive Substances Act. It is true that when the police party searched the house, Abdul Rahim did not say that a bomb had exploded causing injuries to some persons. It is likely that the injured person or persons were brought into the room which the appellant occupied: that would explain the presence of marks of blood in that room. But I do not think that the failure to disclose the explosion of a bomb or that some men have been injured by such an explosion makes the man, who is guilty of such failure, an accessory to the commission of an offence under the Act. Failure to disclose what had happened may be reprehensible, but the question before me is whether such failure necessarily makes the person guilty of such failure, either a helper in the act or a privy to the act which constitutes the offence. In my view, the answer to this question must be in the negative. Further more, there is I think, a well recognised distinction between an accessory to the commission of an offience, and an accessory after the fact.

[5] For these reasons, I am of the view that on the facts of the prosecution case itself Abdul Rahim does not come within the mischef of S. 6, Explosive Substances Act. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside. It is directed that the appellant, Abdul Rahim, be acquitted, and set at liberty forthwith.

Arbitration Act (1940), S. 30 — Misconduct of arbitrator — Omission to give notice to parties and taking evidence behind their backs amounts to misconduct. [Para 4]

1951 Pat./41 & 42

Meredith J.—This appeal is directed against an order rejecting an application for passing a decree in terms of an award in an arbitration held out of Court. The appellant was the applicant. The Court below has rejected the application and set aside the award on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, and the question is whether that finding of misconduct was justified. The alleged misconduct is that the arbitrator took evidence behind the backs of the parties with regard to the most important question in dispute, and based his decision on that evidence.

[2] In the award the arbitrator says:

"The main dispute in this case is regarding one share of Calcutta Stock Exchange the value of which has considerably increased. This was purchased on 15-8-1937, for a sum of Rs. 20,000. . . . . I made enquiries at Calcutta on 7-1-1946, in this connection from Babu Jagannath Gupta and two other gentlemen of share market and fixed the valuation at Rs. 1,01,000."

Later he says:

"The parties did not adduce any oral or documentary evidence except the account books and statements of Babu Nagarmal Modi and Chandi Prasad Modi and Ganga Prasad Modi and Madanlal Modi."

It is admitted that when these gentlemen were examined in Calcutta neither the appellant nor either of the two respondents were present.

[3] In the petition of objection to the application of the appellant, the respondents simply said that the evidence had been taken behind their backs. The arbitrator has not been examined by either party, but the appellant himself gave evidence, and one of the respondents also gave evidence. The appellant in his evidence said:

"I am the sole applicant. The arbitrator informed the opposite party 1 and myself at the same time on 5th or 6th January 1946, that he would be in Calcutta on 7-1-1946, and that he would be in the Stock Exchange at 12 noon on 7-1-46 and that we should meet him there. Opposite Party 1 was appearing for both the opposite parties before the arbitrator."

As against this, the respondent who gave evidence said:

"The arbitrator did not inform the opposing parties that he would be at Calcutta on 7-1-1946 and that he would examine witnesses or take evidence there."

There is no definite finding by the learned Subordinate Judge as to whether the parties were given notice of this Calcutta excursion or not. But this is a first appeal, the evidence is before us, and we can come to our own findings. Having considered the evidence and all the circumstances I am of the opinion that there was no notice given in this case. It is notable that the arbitrator in the award does not say he gave any notice before proceeding to Calcutta. The fact that in the original objection it was not definitely stated that notice had not been given seems to me of little importance because, I think, the assertion that the evidence was taken behind the parties' backs obviously meant that they were not given notice. As for the evidence, it is oath against oath. But, as appears from the award, the question of the valuation of this Stock Exchange share was the main point in dispute, and it is very difficult to believe that, if the parties had had notice, neither of them would take the trouble to be present. The appellant himself in his evidence merely said that he had been informed either one or two days before the visit. Surely, in the circumstances, the parties would have said, if they had been unable to visit Calcutta at a day's notice, that they should be given some further notice and a different date should be fixed, so as to allow them to proceed there. But that is not suggested.

[4] As I hold that the parties did not get notice, it is unnecessary to consider what the legal position would be if the parties had received due notice and had nevertheless remained absent. I desire to express no opinion on that point. But where an arbitrator takes evidence behind the backs of the parties without notice to them, and bases his award on that evidence, the law is well settled that it amounts to misconduct. It is unnecessary to deal with the cases at length. The position has been admirably summed up in Sircar's Tagore Law Lectures on the Law of Arbitration in British India at p. 174 where the learned author says on the question of the necessity of proceeding in the presence of both parties :

"Arbitrators should rigidly follow this rule because departure from it has often been considered to be a substantial ground for setting aside of the award."

He refers to In re Plews (?) and Middleton, (1845) 6 Q. B. 845 : (14 L. J. Q. B. 139) where each of the arbitrators examined the same person separately and came to the same conclusion and made their award, and in setting aside the award it was said by Coleridge J. :

"To uphold this award would be to authorise a proceeding contrary to the first principles of justice. The arbitrators here carried on examinations apart from each other, and from the parties to the reference; whereas it ought to have been conducted by the arbitrators and umpire jointly in the presence of the parties."

He adds :

"How strongly the Courts condemn the practice of examining witnesses or hearing references in the absence of one of the parties is illustrated in Ramsden and Co. v. Jacobs, (1922) 1 K. B. 640 : (91 L. J. K. B. 432), where the arbitrator heard the evidence of each of the parties in the absence of the other. No objection was made by the parties at the time to the procedure, and it was not shown that any injustice had resulted from this improper procedure, and yet in setting aside the award Bray J. stated : 'It is said on behalf of the sellers that no injustice was done, that the issues were quite plain and depended upon no question of fact on which there would be a conflict of evidence. I feel the force of that, but Mr. Goddard for the buyer has urged that we ought to show our disapproval of the procedure that was followed, and, with some reluctance I yield to that argument and say that we ought to set the award aside."

[5] The learned author also refers to Dobson v. Groves, (1844) 14 L. J. Q. B. 17 : (6 Q. B. 63) where the arbitrator explained that all that had happened, when he was closeted with a witness and a pleader, was that the witness merely explained the plans and the pleader was present to give him information in connection with the case, but his opinion was not biased by any of those facts. The Court held that there was an opportunity for the mind of the arbitrator being biased and set aside the award.

[6] Reference is also made to the Calcutta case Toolsimony Dassee v. Sudeni Dassee, 3 C. W. N. 361, where the first meeting of the arbitrators was held behind the back of one of the parties, and it was urged that nothing was done at the meeting. But Maclean C. J. said :

"It is all very well to say nothing was done at that meeting, but how do we know what may or may not have been said by the plaintiffs ? They may, for ought we know, have made ex parte statements to the arbitrators about the case; they may have instilled some poison into the arbitrators' minds to the prejudice of the defendants."

[7] In Ganesh Narain Singh v. Malida Koer, 13 C. L. J. 399 : (10 I. C. 450) the Bench said :

"In arbitration proceedings both sides must be heard and each in the presence of the other. However immaterial the arbitrator may deem a point, he should be very careful not to examine a party or a witness upon it except in the presence of the opponent. If he errs in this respect, he exposes himself to the gravest censure, and the smallest irregularity is often fatal to the award. Where the award recites on the face of it that the arbitrator held, partly on evidence taken before him and partly on private enquiry, that the will executed by a certain person was genuine, it was not competent for him to do so, and the award was vitiated."

[8] Our attention has been drawn to only two Patna cases, both of them single Bench decisions. In Ganga Bhagat v. Sokhi Ram, 15 P.L.T. 693: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 550) Wort J., held that, apart from an agreement to allow the arbitrators to do so, private enquiries behind the backs of the parties is against the ordinary rules of justice. In the other case, Abdul Halim v. Ismail Momin, 86 I. C. 773 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 465) Foster J., said :

"An arbitrator who makes an enquiry or receives confidential information behind the back of the parties is guilty of misconduct."

[9] All the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for his decision may not be sound, but I am nevertheless of opinion that the decision itself was correct, and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

M. Rahman — for Appellants; S. A. Saghir — for Respondents.

Narayan J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for setting aside a decree and the sale held in execution of that decree and also for confirmation or recovery of possession over the land which had been sold in execution of the decree. The decree in question was passed on 31-1-1928 in Rent Suit No. 2378 of 1927, and the sale in execution of the decree was held on 10 7-1928. The decree-holders themselves purchased the property at the execution sale. The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on 9 7-1940 by the two appellants and by two other persons who did not prefer any appeal against the decision of the Court of first instance. The plaintiffs' allegation was that the processes had all been suppressed and that the plaintiffs were not able to know of the fraud perpetrated by the decree-holders until 1-7-1939. Some of the defendants resisted the plaintiffs' claim, firstly, on the ground that there was no suppression of processes and no fraud with regard to the proceedings, and, secondly on the ground that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation.

[2] The Court of first instance negatived the case of fraud set up by the plaintiffs and held that the suit was barred by limitation. There was an appeal preferred against the decision of that Court by these two appellants, but the appeal was dismissed by the First Additional Subordinate Judge of Chapra. Aggrieved by the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge the original plaintiffs 1 and 2, who were the appellants before the learned Subordinate Judge, have preferred this second appeal.

[3] The findings of the Courts below that there was no fraud with regard to the proceedings are binding on us in second appeal, and Mr. Rahman for the appellants had nothing to say before us so far as these findings are concerned. But he strenuously pressed the contention that there was no valid decree against the original plaintiffs 3 and 4, whose interest has now been acquired by plaintiffs 1 and 2, and that the interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4 cannot be deemed to have passed to the decree-holders-auction purchasers by the auction sale. Mr. Rahman has further argued that the lower appellate Court is wrong in holding that the claim of plaintiffs 1 and 2 in so far as it represents the interest originally possessed by plaintiffs 3 and 4 is barred by limitation. In my opinion, the contention of Mr. Rahman is well-founded.

[4] It is common ground that plaintiffs 3 and 4 were minors even at the time when the rent suit was instituted, and that the rent suit was prosecuted against them treating them as majors. These two plaintiffs were minors even up till the time the sale was held, but they were all along treated as majors, and hence the decree as against them and the sale so far as their interest is concerned cannot be regarded as valid in law. But the learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that as the "right, title and interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4 came to be the subject-matter of the suit" on 30-6 1943 and as possession to the decree-holders-auction purchasers was delivered in the year 1930, the claim of the plaintiffs 1 and 2 as purchasers of the interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4 would also be deemed to be barred by limitation. It appears that on 30-6-1943 the plaintiffs 1 and 2 had filed a petition before the trial Court praying that their names should be substituted in place of plaintiffs 3 and 4, as they had purchased the interest of these plaintiffs on 22 1-1941 in a court sale held in Exn. Case No. 6 of 1940, and this prayer of plaintiffs 1 and 2 was allowed by the learned Munsif. Plaintiffs 3 and 4 had attained majority before the date of the institution of the suit, that is, before 9-7-1940, but they were described as minors in the plaint of this suit; and, as pointed out above, it was on 30.6.1943 that plaintiffs 1 and 2 came to be substituted in their place and their names were struck off. The learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that because they were described as minors in the plaint though they were, in fact, majors when the suit was instituted, and that as it was on 30 6 1943 that plaintiffs 1 and 2 were substituted in their place, the interest possessed by them cannot be deemed to have been represented in this suit before 30-6-1943. If the learned Subordinate Judge is right in his view that the interest of these plaintiffs 3 and 4 cannot be deemed to have been represented in this suit before 30 6.1943, then certainly the claim of the plaintiffs, even in so far as it represents the interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4, must be held to be barred by limitation. But if the plaintiffs 3 and 4 would be deemed to have been parties to this suit even on the day this plaint was filed, then their interest must be deemed to have been represented in the suit ever since the filing of the plaint, and because the decree passed in the rent suit and the sale held in execution thereof are not binding on them, plaintiffs 1 and 2 would be entitled to a decree in this suit with regard to the interest which they have purchased from plaintiffs 3 and 4. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in Taqui Jan v. Obaidulla, 21 Cal. 866, that when a suit is instituted by a person alleging himself to be a minor and the suit is brought through a next friend and when it is found that the plaintiff was not actually a minor at the date of the institution of the suit, the Court should not dismiss the suit and that in such a case the proper course for the defendant is to pray that the plaint be taken off the file or be amended. Their Lordships further observed that if the plaint is not amended, the next friend's name should be treated as mere surplusage and the suit should be allowed to proceed. According to the view taken by their Lordships in this case, it cannot be held that because plaintiffs 3 and 4 instituted the suit as minors though they were majors at the time of the institution of the suit, there would be deemed to be no suit on their behalf. The High Court of Madras held in Shanmuga Chetty v. Narayana Ayyar, 40 Mad. 743 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 916) that the law had been laid down correctly in Taqui Jan v. Obaidulla (21 Cal. 866). The case of Taqui Jan was also referred to with approval by the Allahadad High Court in Wali Muhammad Khan v. Ishaq Ali Khan, 54 ALL. 57: (A.I R (18) 1931 ALL. 507 S.B) which was a decision by the Full Bench of that Court. In this Allahabad case the decision of the Madras High Court in Shanmuga Chetty v. C. K. Narayana Ayyar, (40 Mad. 743 : A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 916) was also referred to with approval. Their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court further referred to a decision of the Judicial Committee reported in Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha Das, 17 Cal. 580 (P. C.) and I would respectfully adopt the interpretation which has been placed by their Lordships on this Privy Council decision. The Privy Council decision has been referred to in the following terms in this Full Bench case :

"We may also refer to the case of Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha, 17 Cal. 580 (P. C.), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. There three suits had been filed by one of three joint creditors, the others being named as co-plaintiffs with him in the plaints, which he alone had signed and verified. The record did not show that the other plaintiffs, who had omitted to sign the plaints or to verify them, had repudiated the suits. It does not appear from the judgment that they had given any express approval of the suits to the Court before the period of limitation had expired. The question was whether the other two plaintiffs must be considered to have been plaintiffs to the suits from the very beginning or from the date when certain orders intended to cure the defect were passed. Their Lordships of the Privy Council clearly held that the other plaintiffs became parties to the suits from the time when the plaints were filed and that the suits were not barred by lapse of time. This, in our opinion, is a clear authority for the proposition that the absence of signatures or verification or, for the matter of that, the absence of presentation on the part of some of the plaintiffs out of several, does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, and the suit must be deemed to have been duly instituted on their behalf if it was filed with their knowledge and authority."

I find myself in respectful agreement with their Lordship's view that the Privy Council case is a clear authority for the proposition that the absence of presentation on the part of some of the plaintiffs does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court and suit must be deemed to have been instituted on their behalf as well if it was filed with their knowledge and authority. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have said that there is no rule providing that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint. A Division Bench of this Court held in Mt. Sheorani Kuari v. Kamakshya Narayan Singh, 21 P. L. T. 269 dissenting from the view taken by Jwala Prasad J., in Sekal Singh v. Chanderdip Lal, A. I. R. (6) 1919 Pat. 10 : (49 I. C. 627) that a decree obtained against a person treating him as a minor while in reality he is a major on its date is not a nullity, and their Lordships, Agarwala J., (as he then was), and Rowland, J. relied on a case of the Madras High Court decided by a Division Bench of that Court and reported in Seshagiri Rao v. T. Jagannadham, 39 Mad. 1031: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Mad 318). This Madras case also lays down that a decree obtained against a person treating him as a minor while in reality he is a major on the date the decree was passed is not to be regarded as a nullity. The principle applicable being the same, a suit instituted by a plaintiff describing himself as a minor, though he was a major on the date of the institution of the suit cannot be regarded as a suit to which he was not a party. The several authorities referred to above including the Privy Council case of Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha Das, (17 Cal. 580 P C.) lead us to hold in disagreement with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that this suit which was instituted on 9 7.1940 would be deemed to be a suit instituted on behalf of plaintiffs 3 and 4 as well whose interest was acquired by the plaintiffs 1 and 2 at the court sale held on 22-1-1941. The learned Subordinate Judge was also of the view that because plaintiffs 3 and 4, though they were majors at the time when the sale in Exn. Case No. 6 of 1940 was held were described as minors, plaintiffs 1 and 2 cannot be deemed to have acquired their interest, inasmuch as they would be deemed to be no parties to the execution case. The case of K. Seshagiri Rao, 39 Mad. 1031: (A I. R. (4) 1917 Mad. 318) is a clear authority in support of the proposition that a sale held in execution of such a decree cannot be regarded as a nullity. If this suit can be deemed to be a suit instituted by plaintiffs 3 and 4 as well, then plaintiffs 1 and 2 as purchasers of the interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4, plaintiffs 3 and 4 not questioning their title as purchasers of their interest, would be entitled to a declaration that the sale held in execution of the decree passed in Rent Suit No. 2378 of 1947 does not affect the interest which was possessed by plaintiffs 3 and 4 and which has now been acquired by them. As already pointed out, the Court had allowed the prayer for the substitution of plaintiffs 1 and 2 in place of plaintiffs 3 and 4. The interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4 had been acquired by plaintiffs 1 and 2 during the pendency of the suit, and it is, therefore, that they applied for substitution.

[5] In the result I hold that plaintiffs 1 and 2 are entitled to a declaration, that the decree and the sale do not bind the interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4, which has now been acquired by plaintiffs 1 and 2 and that the claim of plaintiffs 1 and 2 in so far as it represents the interest originally possessed by plaintiffs 3 and 4 is not barred by limitation.

[6] The appeal is allowed in part and the suit is decreed so far as the interest originally possessed by plaintiffs 3 and 4 is concerned, and it is declared that the sale has not affected that interest which has now been acquired by plaintiffs 1 and 2. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

L. K. Jha and Satyanand Kumar—for Appellant; B. N. Mitter. R. K. Chaudhury, Govind Chaudhury and Bishambhar Nath Das — for Respondents.

Sinha J. — This is a defendant's second appeal from the concurrent decision of the Courts below decreeing the plaintiff's suit for possession on a declaration that they were the under-raiyats under the defendants, and had acquired occupancy rights in the lands in dispute by virtue of their continuous possession for more than twelve years before they were dispossessed as a result of proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. It appears, as found by the Courts below, that the plaintiffs were inducted on to the lands in dispute as under-raiyats under the defendants second party who transferred their interest to the defendant first party appellant by virtue of a sale-deed of the year 1938. There was a dispute between the plaintiffs and the appellant-defendant which led to proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. Those proceedings ended in favour of the defendant first party by virtue of the Magistrate's order, dated 2-1-1940. The plaintiffs who had lost before the Magistrate, made an application to the learned Sessions Judge in revision for making a reference to this Court. That application, after hearing the lawyers for both the parties, was dismissed, and the learned Sessions Judge refused to make any reference to this Court. The learned Sessions Judge's order is dated 22-2-1940. The suit leading up to this appeal was filed on 12-2-1943.

[2] In this Court, the only question on which we have been addressed is the question of limitation. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the suit is barred by limitation on two grounds, namely, (1) that it is barred by the three years rule of limitation laid down in Art. 47, Limitation Act, calculating the three years period from 2-1-1940, when the proceedings terminated in favour of the appellant in the Magistrate's Court, and (2) that it is barred by the two years limitation under Art. 3, Sch. 3, Bihar Tenancy Act. The Courts below have negatived these pleas of limitation, holding that the three years rule of limitation applied to the case, and that the period of limitation should be calculated from 22-2-1940, when the learned Sessions Judge refused to make a reference to this Court. The Courts below have also taken the view that Art. 3, sch. 3, Bihar Tenancy Act, had no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case, inasmuch as the dispossession was not by the landlord as such but as a result of the adverse findings by the Magistrate, and by the learned Sessions Judge when he refused to make a reference to this Court.

[3] In my opinion, the decision of the Courts below in relation to the application of Art. 47, Limitation Act, is erroneous in law. Article 47 gives three years for institution of a suit by an unsuccessful party to a 145-proceeding from "the date of the final order in the case." The Courts below have taken the view that the date of the final order in the case must be 22-2-1940, when the learned Sessions Judge refused to make a reference to this Court. It should be noted that the plaintiffs, who had been unsuccessful before the Magistrate and in the Court of Session, did not move this Court in revision. The Court of Session is not competent to pass any final orders in a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the Sessions Judge can only make a reference to this Court, if he were of the opinion that the orders passed by the learned Magistrate were vitiated by any errors of law. Apparently, there were no errors of law in the orders passed by the learned Magistrate, and that may have been the reason why this Court was not moved in revision. If this Court had been so moved whether the orders passed by this Court, after hearing the parties or otherwise, were against the plaintiffs—they would have had the advantage of the extended period of limitation, in view of the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Rampal Singh v. Mansukh Rai, 20 Pat. 735 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 372). In that case, their Lordships took the view that the orders passed by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction against an order passed in a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., are the final orders within the meaning of Art. 47, Limitation Act. We are bound by that decision. But, as already indicated, the plaintiff-respondents did not move this Court in its revisional jurisdiction and, therefore, deprived themselves of the benefit of the orders of this Court and of the extended period of limitation in the event of any orders being passed by this Court. There is no decision of this Court which has been brought to our notice which can directly govern this case. The earlier decision of this Court in the case of Lachman Singh v. Diljan Ali, 43 I. C. 955: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 504) to the effect that Art. 47, Limitation Act, contemplates the final order passed by this Court refusing to interfere with that order has no application to the present case, inasmuch as that was a decision given before the amendment of Criminal P. C. in 1922-23. The decision of the Calcutta High Court relied upon in that case is, for the same reasons, not in point. The only decision which has been brought to our notice, and which is the nearest approach to this case, is the decision of the Letters Patent Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Nagabushanayya v. Kotayya, I. L. R. (1947) Mad. 179: (A. I. R (33) 1946 Mad. 444). In that case, the learned Chief Justice, delivering the judgment of the Court, laid it down that where a criminal revision application against an order of a Magistrate under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C., is dismissed in limine, and the order of the Magistrate if left untouched, it is the Magistrate's order and not the order passed in revision which is the final order within the meaning of Art. 47, Limitation Act. That case was sought to be distinguished on the ground that the application had been dismissed in limine, and not dismissed after hearing both the parties. That, in my opinion, is a distinction without any difference. The Madras decision may, in some respects, be said to be in conflict with the decision of this Court in the case of Rampal Singh v. Mansukh Rai, 20 Pat. 735 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 372), because this Court has laid it down that, whether the application in revision is allowed or rejected, it makes no difference to the question of limitation. But the case before us stands on a higher footing than the case before their Lordships of the Madras High Court, inasmuch as no attempt was made by the unsuccessful party in the 145-proceedings to move this Court in revision. An earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Kangali Churn Sha v. Zomur-Rudonnissa Khatoon, 6 Cal. 709 : (8 C. L. R. 154), presents features similar to the case before us. In that case also, there was an attempt to get favourable orders from the Sessions Judge, but the High Court was not moved. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court held that the orders of the Magistrate declaring the possession of one of the parties to the proceedings was the final order from which the three years rule of limitation began to operate. It was pressed upon us by Mr. B. N. Mitter, appearing on behalf of the respondents, that the orders of the Sessions Judge were judicial in nature, and were the last orders passed in a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. That is perfectly true. But Art. 47, Limitation Act, does not speak of the last order in a judicial proceeding but speaks of the final orders, and the final orders which operate in this case were the orders of the learned Magistrate. Hence, in my opinion, the three years rule of limitation must commence from the date of the Magistrate's orders, that is to say, 2-1-1940, and not 22-2-1940. That being so, the suit was barred by limitation. In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider the application of Art. 3, Sch. 3, Limitation Act, as laid down in the Bihar Tenancy Act.

[4] Another question arose at the conclusion of the hearing of the appeal whether the orders of the Criminal Court in the proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., bound all the plaintiffs. Mr. Mitter, at first, contended that only Babu Narayan Chaudhury was a party to those proceedings, and that the other members, and particularly Achoki Chaudhury, the eldest member of the family, presumably the karta of the family, was not a party to those proceedings. He, therefore, contended that the persons other than those who were parties to those proceedings are not bound by the result of the decision of the learned Magistrate, and, consequently, Art. 47, Limitation Act, is out of the way of those plaintiffs who were not parties to those proceedings. In the first instance, Mr. Mitter is not right in raising this question at this late stage, because it is a mixed question of fact and law. If this question had been raised in the Courts below, the Courts of fact would have had an opportunity of considering this question and recording a clear finding. There is no finding in the judgment of the Courts below on this question, apparently because it was never raised before them. The only question which was raised before the Courts below bearing on the applicability of Art. 47, Limitation Act, has already been dealt with in the earlier part of this judgment. But the real answer to this question appears to be that the leading member of the family, namely, the first plaintiff, Achoki Chaudhury, was, as a matter of fact, a party to the 145-proceedings. That being so, it must be taken that he was representing the entire family, and claiming possession on their behalf in the Magistrate's Court. Hence, the decision of this Court in the case of Lachman Singh v. Diljan Ali, 43 I. C. 955 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 504), already referred to, must govern this case also.

[5] There is another effective answer to this contention which has been given in the course of the argument, by my learned brother. That answer is, that, if Art. 47, Limitation Act, does not apply to the case so far as the plaintiffs who were not parties to the 145-proceedings are concerned, then those persons' claim would come within the mischief of Art. 3, Sch. 3, Bihar Tenancy Act, because in that case those persons, on their own plaint, were dispossessed not as a result of the Magistrate's findings in the 145-proceedings but independently of those proceedings. As a matter of fact, both the Courts below have pointed out that the actual dispossession took place some time in April 1940, that is to say, more than two years before the institution of the suit. Hence, in either view of the matter, whether Art. 47, Limitation Act or Art. 3, Sch. 3, Bihar Tenancy Act, applies, the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time. I regret to have come to this decision, but the law of limitation has been enacted to reject claims which have become too stale, and the plaintiffs have to thank themselves if they allowed their landlords, either as a result of the proceedings under S. 145 of the Code or otherwise, to keep them out of possession for more than two or three years, as the case may be. By doing so, they have rendered their claims too stale.

[6] The result of these considerations is that the appeal is allowed, and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

A. F. A. D. No. 914 of 1947, D/- 21-9-1949.

(a) T. P. Act (1882), S. 60 — Clog on equity of redemption — Stipulation in mortgage to sell property to mortgagee — Clause held invalid as clog on redemption.

A stipulation in the mortgage that after the disposal of title suits in which the mortgaged lands were involved, the mortgagor would execute a deed of sale in favour of the mortgagee failing which the mortgagees could get the sale-deed executed through Court is void and illegal as being a clog on equity of redemption. 1902 App. Cas. 24 and (1903) 2 Ch. 1, Rel. on.

Anno. T. P. Act, S. 60, N. 28, 30.

(b) T. P. Act (1882), S. 58—Mortgage and agreement to sell—Distinction—Deed held mortgage.

A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property as security for the repayment of a debt. The debt subsists in a mortgage whereas a transaction by which a debt is extinguished is not a mortgage but a sale.

Where a deed clearly recited that the executant with a free will borrowed Rs. 700 cash at interest of Re. 1 per month from the person mentioned therein and that in security for the principal amount with interest he mortgaged his land described therein, certain date was also fixed for payment and the executant had used the words 'mortgage,' 'mortgaged land,' 'mortgagee' repeatedly in the deed :

Held that the deed was a mortgage and not an agreement to sell, even though the executant had not specifically given the right to sell the property, as any words pledging the property as security for debt are sufficient to imply the power to sale. Case law referred.

B. N. Mitter, Kanhaiyaji and B. P. Samayar — for Appellant ; P. R. Das D. N. Varma, C. S. Prasad and K. B. N. Singh—for Respondents.

Ramaswami J. — In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiffs alleged that they had lent a sum of Rs. 700 to defendant 1 who had to file a suit against Raghunandan Mahto and Mt. Marachhia with respect to lands described in Schs. 1 and 2 of the plaint. Defendant 1 executed a bond in favour of the plaintiffs by which he mortgaged a portion of these lands, that is, 6 acres 4 decimals of kasht land in villages Chanki and Rutwan. The defendants further agreed that after the disposal of the title suit against Mt. Marachhia and Raghunandan he would execute a deed of sale in favour of the plaintiffs with respect to the lands which had been mortgaged. In case of his not executing the deed of sale, the mortgagees were given option to get the sale-deed executed through Court. The plaintiffs alleged that defendant 1 obtained a decree in the two suits and secured possession of the properties. As defendant refused to execute the deed of sale the plaintiffs brought the suit for specific performance of the contract. The main ground of defence was that the document was farzi and without consideration; that it had been executed merely in order to create evidence of the possession of defendant 1 over the properties in respect of which the suits had been filed. The learned Munsif held that the document was genuine and for consideration and granted the plaintiffs a decree for specific performance of the contract. The decree has been affirmed by the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal.

[2] The main question to be decided in the appeal is whether the stipulation by which defendant 1 bound himself to sell the mortgaged properties was a clog on the equity of redemption and so illegal and void on this account.

[3] Under S. 60, T. P. Act, the right of redemption is a statutory right which as Lord Macnaghten said in Noakes v. Rice, 1902 A. C. 24 : (71 L. J. Ch. 139) is "of the very nature and essence of a mortgage inherent to the thing itself." The right of redemption cannot, therefore, be controlled by any agreement made as part of the transaction of mortgage. In Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation v. Samuel, (1903) 2 Ch. 1 at p. 7 Collins, M. R. approved and adopted the following extract from a judgment in Browne v. Ryan, (1901) 2 Ir. R. 653 :

"It is the right of a mortgagor on redemption, by reason of the very nature of a mortgage, to get back the subject of the mortgage . . . . to hold and enjoy as he was entitled to hold and enjoy it before the mortgage. If he is prevented from doing so, that which he is entitled to on redemption is prevented and to constitute such prevention it is not necessary that the subject of the mortgage should be directly charged with whatever causes the prevention. If he be so prevented in fact, the equity of redemption is affected by what, whether very aptly or not, has been always termed a clog'."

[4] On behalf of the respondents Mr. P. R. Das conceded that if the document was a mortgage the stipulation as to sale of the properties would be a clog on the equity of redemption and could not be enforced. Learned counsel, however, maintained that upon its proper construction the document was not a mortgage but was a mere contract for sale of the properties mentioned therein. In my opinion this argument is not sustainable. A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property as security for the repayment of a debt. The debt subsists in a mortgage whereas a transaction by which a debt is extinguished is not a mortgage but a sale. In the present case the executant clearly recites that he

"with free will borrowed Rs. 700 cash at interest of one rupee per month from Ramkeshar Chaudhury son of Gati Chaudhury of village Habupore" (Is lie ba khus razai wa raghbat apne mubligh sat sau rupia 700/ sikka raejul waqt qarza sudi basharah fisad ek rupia mahwari musammian Ram Keshar Chaudhuri, wald Gati Chaudhury, baiulqaem, sakin mauza Habbupur).

The executant proceeded to state :

"in security for the principal amount with interest I martgage 6 acres 4 decimals kasht kayami nagdi total area cash rental situated in village Chanki and village Intwa pergana Sasaram P. S. Karaghar etc. as given in schedules and in condition detailed below" (Wa baitminan wa diljamai zarqarza, asal mai sud, mawazi chhau (6) acre char (4) decimal· erazi kasht naqdi qaimi minjumla erazlat kasht naqdi qaimi, mahduda babadud arbea mofassila zail, waqe mauza Chauki wa mauza Itwan, pargana Sasaram, thana Karghar makful kia).

That date was fixed for payment is clear from the following recital

"after the end of the civil suit and after obtaining dakhaldehani the principal amount due and adding the interest thereon will form the consideration and for that consideration the mortgaged land will be sold by kebala to the mortgagee (Bad infisal moqadma numbari mazkur wa hasul dakhaldehani, asal zarqarza mazkur wa sud mujtama karke aur usko zarsaman qarar dekar us zarsaman men sbai makiula sadar wa mahduda zall ko bazaria tabrir qebala bai lakalam banam dainan mausufan farokht wa bai lakalam kardenge)."

It is of importance to notice that the executant used the words "mortgage" (makful), "mortgaged land" (shai makfula), "mortgagee (dainan) repeatedly in this document. Mr. P. R. Das argued that the executant has not specifically said that the appellant would have right to cause the property to be sold. But a power of sale is very seldom expressly given in a native mofussil mortgage. Any words pledging the property as security for the debt are sufficient to imply a right of sale: vide Rangasami v. Muttukumarappa, 10 Mad. 509, Ponnuranga v. Thandavaraya, 26 I. C. 274: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 370); Motiram v. Vital, 13 Bom. 90 (F. B.) and Full Bench case Tukaram v. Ramchand, 26 Bom. 252: (3 Bom. L. R. 778). In Gokuldoss v. Kriparam, 13 Beng. L. R. 205: (3 Sar. 279 P. C.) the Judicial Committee held that the following words sufficed to create a simple mortgage:

"If I fail to pay the money as stipulated, I and my heirs shall without objection cause the settlement of the said village to be made with you."

[5] For these reasons it is manifest that in the present case the document ought to be construed to be a mortgage and not a mere contract for sale of land.

[6] It follows that the agreement for sale contained in this document is void and illegal as being a clog on the equity of redemption to which the mortgagor has a statutory right.

[7] Accordingly I would set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and order that the plaintiffs should instead be granted a mortgage decree for a sum of Rs. 700 principal plus a sum of Rs. 700 as interest which the defendants should pay within a period of three months from the date of the preparation of the decree. If the defendants do not pay the amount by that date, the plaintiffs will be entitled to realise the amount by executing the decree. They will be entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the amount of Rs. 1400 from the expiry of three months after the date of the decree till the date of realisation.

[8] Parties will bear their costs throughout.

[9] Manohar Lall J.—I agree. The document can only be construed as a mortgage, all the relevant terms point to that conclusion.

Where the plaintiff states that deed of gift of certain property is fraudulent and executed under undue influence and as such is not binding on him and claims the relief of possession of the property, it is necessary for the Court to set aside the deed of gift, which is voidable and not void, before granting the relief of possession and hence the suit is governed by S. 7 (iv) (c) and not S. 7 (v), Court-fees Act: A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 22 (F. B.), Disting. [Para 2]

Anno. C. F. Act, S. 7 (iv) (c) N. 3, 5, 9.

K. Dayal — for Petitioners; K. N. Varma and Ramanand Sinha—for Opposite Party.

Ramaswami J. — The question at issue in this case is whether the learned Subordinate Judge was correct to hold that the court-fee on the plaint should be computed under S. 7, cl. (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, and not under S. 7, cl. (v), Court-fees Act.

[2] In support of this rule Mr. Kameshwar Dayal addressed the argument that the suit was not one for a declaration in the true sense but the plaintiffs really had asked for a decree for possession; and if there be a claim in the plaint for a declaration it was an unnecessary one. Reliance was placed upon Ramkhelawan Sahu v. Surendra Sahi, 16 Pat. 766 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 22 F. B.) in which a Full Bench held that S. 7, cl. (iv) (c) had no reference to the kind of declaration in the sense of a finding of fact as to the plaintiff's title necessary for granting a decree for possession. But the material facts of that case are clearly to be distinguished. In that case the plaint was very verbose and it proceeded to anticipate the defence and stated that the defendants were claiming under an alleged gift in perpetuity in favour of certain idols and that they were the shebaits of the scheduled properties, and submitted that the so-called gift was invalid. The plaint winded up a prayer for a decree for possession, a decree for mesne profits and a request that if the deed of dedication was really valid the plaintiff should be held to be the legal shebait and that a decree for possession be granted in his favour. As the plaintiff averred that the deed was void the Full Bench held that the defendants obtained nothing under it and it may be ignored and there need be no suit or claim to have it set aside. In support of this conclusion the Full Bench referred to Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai, 35 I. A. 98 : (35 Cal. 551 P. C.). In the present case, however, the plaintiffs have stated that the deed of gift with respect to Sch. 1 property executed by Kashi Prasad, the last male owner, in favour of his daughter-in law Mt. Bhup Kuer was fraudulent and executed under undue influence and so was not binding upon the plaintiffs. With respect to this allegation, it is obvious that the deed of gift upon the allegation in the plaint is voidable and not void and it is necessary for the Court to set aside the deed of gift before granting a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs. The ratio of the Full Bench case in Ramkhelawan Sahu v. Surendra Sahi, 16 Pat. 766 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 22 F. B.) is therefore not applicable and, in my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that court-fee on the plaint should be computed in accordance with S. 7, cl. (iv) (c), Court-fees Act.

[3] Mr. Kameshwar Dayal also complained that the court-fee computed is excessive. But the learned Subordinate Judge has considered all the evidence on the quantum of court-fee and his order cannot be impeached for want of jurisdiction.

[4] Accordingly I would discharge the rule. The application is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

A. F. O. O. No. 373 of 1949, D/- 19-1-1950.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 144, O. 41, Rr. 31, 35—High Court reversing decree under appeal — Formal decree not framed — Application for restitution is maintainable.

Section 144, Civil P. C., does not in terms require a decree by the Appellate Court to give the Court jurisdiction to grant restitution. All that it requires is that a decree is varied or reversed. Where, therefore, the High Court passes a judgment reversing the decree of the subordinate Court, the latter Court can entertain an application for restitution even though a formal decree is not prepared in the appeal. [Para 11]

Mahabir Prasad and Khaleel Ahmad —for Appellant ; Lal Narain Sinha — for Respondent.

Reuben J.—We have already passed our order dismissing the appeal. We are giving below our reasons for the order.

[2] This is an appeal by the plaintiff against an order of restitution under S. 144, Civil P. C., passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge 2nd Court, Patna.

[3] The suit out of which the appeal arises relates to the Math of Rajipore and Dhana in the district of Patna. The plaintiff claims to be the Mahanth as being the initiated Sadhu Chela of the late Mahanth Sri Madhawa Nand Ramji. The defendant-respondent denies that the plaintiff is the initiated Chela of the late Mahanth, and claims to have succeeded himself to the late Mahanth as his Gurubhai. The defendant obtained possession of the estate from the District Judge of Patna by an application under Ss. 192 and 195, Succession Act. Hence, the present suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge and, in execution of the decree, the plaintiff was given possession of the estate. The decision of the Subordinate Judge was set aside by this Court on 6-12-1949, in F. A. No. 8 of 1945, and the suit was dismissed. The appeal is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge allowing the defendant's prayer for restitution under S. 144.

[4] The first point urged is that the application under S. 144 was premature. It is pointed out that such an application is an application in execution, as held by the Full Bench in Bhaunath Singh v. Kedar Nath Singh, 13 Pat. 411 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 246 F. B.) and it is urged that the Civil Procedure Code provides only for the execution of a decree; a decree not having been prepared as yet, that execution will not lie. The Full Bench was concerned with a point of limitation, as to whether an application under S. 144 is governed by Art. 181 or Art. 182 of the Schedule to Limitation Act. They held that Art. 182 applies, inasmuch as an application for restitution is intended to give effect to the decision by which the decree which was challenged is reversed. This does not mean, however, that such an application is governed by all the rules in the Civil Procedure Code relating to execution in the ordinary course. Courtney-Terrell, C. J. in the course of his judgment, pointed out on the contrary that the procedure for dealing with such applications differs in some respects from the procedure for carrying out other decrees of the Court.

[5] The second objection urged was of a technical nature, namely, that the application as made to the Subordinate Judge did not specify the property of which restitution was sought. It is asked how is it possible for the Court to know which property to make restitution of, unless the application specifies the property. This is urged as another reason why an application of this kind, made before the preparation of the decree, must be treated as premature. The answer to this objection is that the defendant-applicant was merely asking for restoration of property, possession of which had been given by the Court itself to the plaintiff; therefore, the records necessary for the Court to ascertain the identity of the property must have been available to the Court. Further, for identifying the property, the decree of the appellate Court would be of no use. It is the decree of the original Court which specifies the subject-matter of the suit, and so, the identity of the property could have been established before the Subordinate Judge, if necessary, by the production of the Subordinate Judge's own decree.

[6] The third contention based on the distinction drawn by the Civil Procedure Code between a judgment and a decree at first impressed me as one of substance. A decree is defined as "the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit," and a judgment as "the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order"; the judgment, therefore, merely gives the reasons and it is the decree which contains the order, and there being no decree yet in F. A. No. 8 of 1945, there is no operative order and the decree of the Subordinate Judge cannot yet be regarded as having been reversed. This contention is supported at first sight by various subsequent provisions in the Code. Under O. 20, R. 4, the judgment

"shall contain a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for such decision," whereas, under R. 6, the decree, in addition to certain other particulars, "shall specify clearly the relief granted and other determination of the suit". Again O. 41, R. 31, provides that the judgment of the appellate Court shall state the points for determination, the decision thereon, the reasons for the decision, and where the decree appealed from is reversed or varied, "the relief to which the appellant is entitled" (the italics are mine), and, under R. 32, the judgment may be "for confirming, varying or reversing" the decree from which the appeal is preferred, and it is only when there is a compromise between the parties that the appellate Court "may pass a decree or make an order". Contrasted with this is O. 41, R. 35, which requires the decree to contain "a clear specification of the relief granted or other adjudication made."

[7] On a closer analysis of these provisions, however, and on a consideration of the general scheme of the Code, I do not find it possible to accede to the contention that it is the decree and not the judgment which disposes of the case. It is true that the judgment is defined as a statement of the grounds of the decree or order, but it is required to contain the points for determination and "the decision thereon" (O. 20, R. 4). One of the points for determination in every case is whether the plaintiff or the petitioner, as the case may be, is entitled to relief, and, if he is, what that relief shall be. The word "decision" will cover the finding on this point, and that finding would amount to a decision of the suit or other proceeding before the Court. The word "decision" is clearly used in this sense in O. 20, R. 5, which speaks of "the decision of the suit" and in O. 41, R. 34, which requires a dissenting Judge to state in writing "the decision or order" which he thinks should be passed on the appeal. Coming to the definition of a decree, I would point out that it is stated to be "the formal expression of an adjudication"; it is not the adjudication but is merely indicative of what that adjudication is. In the course of argument before us, it was pointed out that execution is provided for, of the decree and not of the judgment, and that, in the event of a discrepancy between the decree and the judgment, it is not open to the executing Court to proceed on the decree, but it is necessary for the party prejudicially affected thereby to get the decree amended by the Court which passed it. This does not mean, however, that it is the decree which is the real adjudication. If it was, there would be no question of amending it. It is not open to the executing Court to go behind the decree and act upon the judgment because, by its definition, a decree conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matters in controversy in the suit. The legislature has placed upon the Court which passed the decree the duty of embodying its decision in the form of a decree. Obviously, it is not always possible for the Court when disposing of a case to pass an order complete in all its details so that, when it becomes necessary to act on that decision, it will be clear to the executing Court or other authority acting on the decision what that decision is. One simple item which ordinarily forms part of the decree is the item of costs. This is an item which has to be ascertained by a careful examination of the record. To take another instance, the decision may involve a matter of accounting. It will not always be possible for the Judge to make the necessary calculations himself and to arrive at a definite figure. He may merely indicate the lines on which the accounting should be made, and the result so arrived at will be incorporated in the decree. Other details required in the decree are the names and particulars of the parties and specifications of the subject-matter of the litigation. Obviously the Court which passed the decree is in the best position to give these particulars and to determine what is the real effect of the decision contained in the judgment. It is, therefore, that, in the case of discrepancy between the judgment and the decree, the executing Court cannot go behind the decree, and the party aggrieved must seek amendment of the decree. As I have remarked, the question of amendment would not arise if the decree was itself the adjudication. It is true that S. 152, Civil P. C., provides for amendments in judgments, but this is confined to clerical or arithmetical mistakes; but, if there is a mistake of substance, the remedy is by "review of judgment". This incompleteness of the judgment and the necessity for a decree giving a formal expression to the adjudication explains why the Code has provided for the execution of decrees and for an appeal against a decree; to give effect to the decision, the executing Court must know exactly what the decision is, and, to deal with the appeal, the appellate Court must know who the parties are and what the subject-matter of the suit is. That the decree is subordinate to the judgment and that it is the judgment and not the decree which disposes of the case is made clear by the fact that the decree is required to be in agreement with the judgment and to bear the date of the day on which the judgment was pronounced although, ordinarily, it is not possible for the decree itself to be drawn up and signed on that very day. The validity and effect of the decision are not affected by a Judge vacating office after pronouncing judgment or by the Court itself ceasing to exist (Vide O. 20, R. 8).

[8] That the Code itself regards the decision as operative from the moment of the pronouncement of the judgment appears from sub-r. (1) of R. 11 of O. 21, under which the Court at the time of pronouncing judgment for the payment of money may order immediate execution by the arrest of the judgment-debtor. It is noticeable that the sub-rule provides for this action to be taken by the Court "at the time of the passing of the decree", although it is not likely, nor is it contemplated by the forms of decrees prescribed in App. D of the Code, that a decree will have been drawn by at that time. Therefore, the Court pronouncing judgment may proceed as if there is an operative decree although a formal decree has not been drawn up. In Golam Gaffar v. Goljan Bibi, 25 Cal. 109. Banerjee J., went so far as to suggest that, in the unlikely event of a decree not having been prepared during the period of three months following the pronouncement of judgment, it would be open to the successful party to save limitation by applying for execution without the decree. Some support for this suggestion may be found in sub-r. (3) of R. 11 of O. 21, which indicates that a Court may entertain a petition for execution without a copy of the decree sought to be executed. For the purposes of the present case, however, it is unnecessary to express an opinion on the correctness of the view expressed by Banerjee J. My view, that the adjudication is made by the judgment and not by the decree, is supported by the fact that limitation for the execution of a decree runs not from the date on which the decree is signed but from the date of the pronouncement of the judgment.

[9] What I have said above regarding the meaning of the word decision, applies also to O. 41, R. 31. Where the appellate Court is not interfering with the decree of the Court below, all that is necessary is that it should be stated in the form of a decision that the appeal be dismissed or that the decree of the Court below be confirmed. In the case of a decree of the subordinate Court being reversed or varied, it becomes necessary that the relief which the appellant is to get should be specified. This is, therefore, provided for in the rule. What the rule contemplates is not merely a specification of what relief the appellant should get but that the judgment, in fact, purports to grant that relief. It is in the light of these observations that O. 41, Rr. 32 and 35 should be read.

[10] The contentions on behalf of the appellant have even less force with reference to a decision of this Court than they would have with reference to a decision of a subordinate Court. This is by reason of O. 49, R. 3, under the provisions of which a chartered High Court is not affected, in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, by Rr. 1 to 8 of O. 20 and, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, by R. 35 of O. 41. The provisions as regards the preparation of decrees in this Court are contained in Chap. VIII of the Rules of the High Court, to the rules in which Chap. I shall refer for what immediately follows. Under R. 5, every judgment delivered and every order passed by the Court shall be recorded by a judgment writer except when the Court delivers a written judgment. The judgment or order so recorded is required to be filed with the paper-book and, at the end of the record so prepared, is to be entered the date of the passing of the order or the delivery of the judgment (R. 6). The Bench Clerk is then to submit the judgment or order which has been recorded for signature by the Judge or Judges who delivered or passed it,

"unless such Judge or Judges otherwise order or have resigned or proceeded on leave, or are absent on account of illness or any other cause (R. 7)."

There is no provision as to what will happen in these exceptional cases, and it is not necessary for the present case to consider what will happen. Then come the provisions for the preparation of "decrees and orders;" apparently, all decisions of this Court are to be given a formal expression. The responsibility for doing this is placed on the Deputy Registrar. He will give the parties an opportunity of objecting to the decree or order which is drawn up and, in the case of such an objection being made, will obtain the orders of the Bench. The decree or order, when drawn up, will be signed by the Deputy Registrar, and will bear the date of the day when the judgment was delivered (R. 14). The formal decree in this Court, therefore, need not even come before the Bench and will not bear the signature of any Judge. In these circumstances. I do not find it possible to hold that it is the decree and not the judgment which is the adjudication in the case.

[11] Our attention has been drawn to Gola Ram v. Ganga Ram, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Lah. 395: (1 Lah. 223), in which Scott-Smith and Le Rossignol JJ., following the observations of Piggot J. in Dulin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari, 19 Cal. 463 (F.B.), held that a paragraph in a judgment not drawn up in the form of a decree, and not embodied in a separate form, is not a decree within the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question before their Lordships was whether an appeal lies against an order in a judgment not drawn up in the form of a decree. Under the express provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, it does not, because O. 41, R. 1 expressly requires that

"the memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded."

It is a point for remark that Dulhin Golab Koer's case, 19 Cal. 463 (F.B.) was itself a case of this kind and that, in the absence of objection on the point, the Full Bench held that an appeal lay. These decisions, however, do not concern us. We are dealing with a proceeding under S. 144, which section does not in terms require a decree to give the Court jurisdiction to act. All that it requires is that "a decree is varied or reversed." In the view which I have taken of the effect of the pronouncement of judgment, it must be held that the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been reversed. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, had jurisdiction to make restitution under the provisions of this section.

Anno. C. P. C., O. 21, R. 50, N. 6.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 11 and 47 and O. 21, R. 22 — Objection to execution under S. 47 — No objection as to want of notice under O. 21, R. 22 raised—Property sold in execution—Suit to declare sale null and void—Suit, if barred—Objection as to notice, if can be raised — Sale without notice, if without jurisdiction.

A decree was passed against a firm and it was sought to be executed by the sale of the properties of the plaintiff who was a partner of the firm. The plaintiff contested the decree-holder's claim in the execution proceeding by raising objections under S. 47 and after sale by making an application under O. 21, R. 90. But neither in S. 47-proceeding nor in the proceeding under O. 21, R. 90 did he raise the point that the execution case was not maintainable because no notice under O. 21, R. 22 had been issued. The plaintiff having raised this point in a suit for a declaration that the execution sale of his property was null and void :

Held, (1) that a proceeding under S. 47 can be treated as a suit and a suit can be treated as a proceeding, and because there was a determination under S. 47 of the objection raised by the plaintiff the present suit could be said to be barred ;

(2) that as objection regarding the non-issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22, was not raised in the S. 47-proceeding, it could not be raised in the present suit ;

(3) that even if it was open to the plaintiff to raise the point, it could not be said that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property, because no notice had issued by it according to the provisions of O. 21, R. 22. [Para 8]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 11, N. 23, Pt. 11; O. 21, R. 22 N. 5, Pt. 18.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 22 (3) (Bihar amendment)—Sub r. (3) if retrospective.

In enacting sub-r. (3) the Legislature contemplated to explain their intention with regard to the provisions contained in O. 21, R. 22, which had been the subject-matter of interpretation in various cases decided by the High Courts and also by the Judicial Committee. The sub-rule is, therefore, retrospective. [Para 9]

(d) Interpretation of statutes—Retrospective operation—Statute dealing with procedure.

The provisions of a statute cannot be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. But the provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them. No person can have a vested right in a course of procedure, and it is an elementary principle that a plaintiff or a defendant has the right of prosecution or defence in the manner prescribed, for the time being, by or for the Court in which he sues, and if there is an act which alters that mode of procedure he has no other right than to proceed according to the altered mode. [Para 9]

Anno. C. P. C., Preamble N. 3, Pts. 7 to 12.

(e) Interpretation of statutes — Retrospective operation—Alteration in procedure.

The general principle is that alteration in a procedure is retrospective unless there be some good reasons against it. Where a statute is passed for the purpose of supplying an omission in a former statute or for explaining a former statute, the subsequent statute relates back to the time when the prior statute was passed. [Para 9]

S. C. Mazumdar—for Appellant ; N. N. Sen—for Respondent.

Narayan J. — This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit in which a declaration was sought that the execution sale of the properties which are the subject-matter of the suit was null and void and that the defendant firm had acquired no title to them by virtue of the purchase at the court sale. There was also a prayer for recovery of possession of the properties in question in case the plaintiff was found to be out of possession. The decree in execution of which the properties were sold had been obtained by the firm Pirthiraj Ganesh Das (the respondent in this appeal) against the firm Ganpatrai Balabux in Suit No. 56 of 1926 of the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, and on leave having been obtained from that Court, according to the provisions of sub.r. (2) of R. 50 of O. 21, Civil P.C., and on the decree having been transferred to the Ranchi Court, it was executed in that Court against the appellant, and the properties in suit were sold on 3-9-1936 and purchased by the respondent firm who were the decree-holders. Thereafter this appellant filed an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., for setting aside the sale, but his application was dismissed after contest by the respondent. He then instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises and sought to impugn the sale on various grounds.

[2] The defendant firm resisted the plaintiff's claim and contended that the sale at which they had purchased the properties was a valid sale and that the present suit was barred according to the provisions of O. 21, R. 92 (3), Civil P. C.

[3] The appellant in this Court was constrained to abandon the several contentions which he had pressed with vehemence in the Court below, and his counsel confined his argument only to the following two points : (1) That there was no decree against this appellant at all and his separate properties could not, therefore, be sold in execution of that decree; and (2) that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to sell the properties in question, because no notice had been issued by it according to the provisions of O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C.

[4] Before I give my finding on the two issues canvassed in this Court, it is necessary to state some more facts. The decree that had been passed by the High Court of Calcutta had been transferred to the Ranchi Court for execution, and the first application for execution had been filed some time in the year 1928. In that execution case, which was Ex. Case No. 80 of 1928, the decree-holders sought to execute the decree against this appellant as a partner of the judgment-debtor firm. The appellant appeared in that execution case and filed an objection which was registered as an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. That execution case was, however, dismissed on 4-1-1932 and along with the execution case the objection case was also dismissed without adjudication. While these execution and miscellaneous cases were pending in the Ranchi Court, this appellant filed a title suit in the High Court of Calcutta to set aside the ex parte decree that had been passed in 1926. It appears that this suit was dismissed according to the provisions of O. 9 R. 8, Civil P. C., and an application for rehearing filed by this appellant according to the provisions of O. 9 R. 9, Civil P. C., was also dismissed Thereafter, an application was filed by the decree-holder firm for leave to execute the decree against this appellant under the provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (2), Civil P. C., and leave was granted. The appellant then moved the Court for revoking the order granting the leave, but his application was dismissed. In September 1934 the execution case in which the properties in suit were sold was filed in the Ranchi Court and in this case the appellant filed a petition of objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. This application was disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge after a keen contest by the decree-holder, and the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is Ex. A in this case. All the contentions raised by this appellant were rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge, and the execution case proceeded with the result that the properties in suit were sold on 3-9 1936. After the sale of the properties the appellant filed an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., which was dismissed on 14 6-1938 after contest by the decree-holder-auction-purchaser. The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed on 15-1-1944, and naturally one of the most important pleas taken up by the defendant was that the suit was not maintainable in view of the bar provided by R. 92 of O. 21, Civil P. C.

[5] In my opinion, there is no substance in the contention of this appellant that there was no decree against him which could be executed in Ex. Case No. 61 of 1934 in which his properties were sold. Order 30, Civil P. C., contains the provisions according to which suits by or against firms can be prosecuted, and R. 3 of O. 30 lays down that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, the summons shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners, or at the principal place at which the partnership business is carried on within British India upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the partnership business there. The provisions for the execution of a decree passed against a firm are contained in R. 50 of O. 21, Civil P. C. According to sub-r. (1) (c) execution may be granted against any person who has been individually served as a partner with a summons and has failed to appear. There are two sub-rules under R. 50 and they are in the following terms:

Sub-rule (2)—"Where the decree-holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub-r. (1), cls. (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave, and where the liability is not disputed, such Court may grant such leave, or, where such liability is disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue in a suit may be tried and determined."

Sub-rule (3)—"Where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub-r. (2), the order made thereon shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree."

As already pointed out, it is common ground that leave had been granted for executing the decree against this appellant, and after the leave had been granted the appellant made an application to the Court for revoking the order granting the leave. This application was dismissed and the decree was consequently executed against this appellant as a partner of the firm. If the appellant had made an application for revoking the order granting the leave and that application was rejected on its merits, then it is not open to him now to contend that there was no decree against him and that the execution sale has not conveyed any title to the auction-purchaser with regard to the properties in suit. The simple fact that leave as contemplated by sub-r. (2) had been granted and the application of the appellant for revoking the leave had been refused is sufficient to dispose of the first contention raised by the appellant before us. In this connection it is also important to note that in none of the proceedings uptill now this appellant has seriously urged that he is not a partner of the firm against which the decree executed in Ex. Case No. 61 of 1934 had been obtained. It is admitted that though he instituted a suit in the year 1931 for setting aside the decree, even in the plaint of that suit he did not urge that he was not a partner of the firm. It will appear from a perusal of the judgment, Ex. A, which is the judgment passed in the miscellaneous case under S. 47, Civil P. C., that even in the objection which the appellant had filed in the previous execution case, namely, Exn. Case No. 80 of 1928, he did not urge that he was not a partner of the firm Ganpatrai Balabux. The learned Subordinate Judge after a lengthy discussion came to the conclusion that even in Misc. Case No. 1 of 1935 which the judgment-debtor had filed in Exn. Case No. 61 of 1934, he considered himself to be a partner of the firm. The learned Subordinate Judge has observed as follows :

"However the discussions above show that objector still considers he is entitled to share in the judgment-debtor firm and as such, for the purpose of this case at least, he is a partner of that firm."

It is no less important that neither in the plaint of this suit nor in the grounds of this present appeal the appellant has urged that he is not a partner of the firm Ganpatrai Balubux. There is, therefore, no merit in the contention that there was no decree against this appellant which could be executed against him, and in execution of which his properties could be sold.

[6] Admittedly, the appellant had filed an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. after the sale of his properties, and his application was considered on its merits and dismissed on 14-6-1938. Sub-rule (3) of O. 21 R. 92, lays down that no suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made. The present suit is, therefore, not competent unless the appellant is able to show that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to sell the properties and that the sale is a nullity. It is, therefore, that the appellant has raised the contention that the sale is without jurisdiction because no notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., was issued by the executing Court. It is, of course, common ground that no notice under O. 21, R. 22, had been issued, though according to sub-r. (1) of R. 22 of O. 21, it was necessary for the Court to issue a notice to the person against whom execution had been applied for requiring him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The question, therefore, arises whether in the absence of the notice the Court had jurisdiction to sell the properties of this appellant. A Full Bench of this Court held in Ajablal v. Haricharan, 23 Pat. 528 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 1 F. B.) that a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree after the death of the judgment-debtor but after the service of all the necessary processes, including the sale proclamation, without any notice to his legal representative is void in the sense that it is not valid against the legal representative. Chatterji J., Meredith J. (as he then was), and Sinha J. constituted the Full Bench. Chatterji J. expressed his views in the following terms :

"I must observe that the word 'void' when used with reference to a sale, is not always used in the same sense. A sale may be void in the sense that it is a complete nullity, in which case the purchaser acquires no title at all, even against a trespasser. Again a sale may be void in the sense that it is not valid and operative against some particular person, in which case the purchaser requires no valid title against that particular person, though he may acquire a title quite good and effective against a trespasser. A sale held without issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22 is a void sale of the latter class as will appear from the following observation of Sir George Rankin C. J. in Chandra Nath v. Nabadwip Chandra, 35 Cal. W. N. 9 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 476), already cited, 'the sale which follows will be without jurisdiction in the sense that even if the sale is to a stranger, the sale will not be binding or valid.' A sale of this class is called a 'void sale' as distinguised from a 'voidable sale' which means that the sale is valid and binding against the particular person concerned, unless and until it is set aside by him in an appropriate proceeding. It will be noticed that in all those cases, cited above, in which the sale was held to be void for want of notice under O. 21, R. 22 the question arose between the auction-purchaser or persons deriving title from him on the one hand and the judgment-debtor or his legal representative on the other. In this connection it will not be out of place to refer to the analogy of a sale in execution of a mortgage decree to which a subsequent transferee is not a party. The sale, though otherwise effective, is not valid and operative against the subsequent transferee. It is not void in the sense that it is a complete nullity. Nor is it merely voidable."

Thus, his Lordship was not of the view that a sale without the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., is a complete nullity, and he referred with approval to the decision of Rankin C. J., in Chandra Nath v. Nabadwip Chandra Dutt, 35 Cal. W. N. 9 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 476). Because the decision of Rankin C. J. and C. C. Ghose J., has been referred to with approval not only in the Full Bench case of Ajablal v. Haricharán, (23 Pat. 528 : A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 1 F. B.), but also in a later Full Bench case Ramlal Sahu v. Mt. Ramia, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 454 : (26 Pat. 340 F. B.), I should like to quote a passage from the judgment of his Lordship, Rankin C. J., and especially because the observation of his Lordship if applied to the facts of this case would, to my mind, be conclusive of the point raised before us. Rankin C. J., quoted the following observation of Kulwant Sahay J. in Fakhrul Islam v. Bhubaneshwari Kuer, 7 Pat. 790 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 79) which case had been decided by a Division Bench of this Court :

"All that O. 21, R. 22 requires is that an opportunity should be given to the judgment-debtors against whom execution is taken out more than a year after the decree to show cause why execution should not proceed."

And then his Lordship proceeded as follows :

"In my judgment, that is the substance and the meaning of the requirement. I do not in any way seek to throw doubt upon the proposition that where such a notice has not issued and the party who is entitled to notice does not in substance get notice and is not given or does not take an opportunity to object to the execution of the decree, the sale which follows will be without jurisdiction in the sense that, even if the sale is to a stranger, the sale will not be binding or valid. The parties in the present case have been litigating actively with each other upon the question whether this execution should proceed and how it should proceed. I have pointed out that, at one stage of the case, the matter was by agreement referred to a gentleman to report as to the amount of the valuation to be inserted in the proclamation of sale. In the appeal which came previously before this Court there was an affirmation that the sale was to take place and the proclamation was to issue. It appears to me to be merely piling unreason upon technicality to hold upon the circumstances of this case that it is open to the judgment-debtors on these grounds to object to the jurisdiction of the Court because they have not got a formal notice to do something, namely, to dispute the execution of the decree when in point of fact they were busy disputing about it in all the Courts for the best part of the last two years. I decline to push the doctrine so far as that and it seems to me that the execution should proceed."

[7] It seems that the Privy Council decision in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das, 41 I. A. 251: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 129) had been pressed upon their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, and it is therefore that Rankin C. J., observed that the abstract logic of the case of Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das, (41 I. A. 251 : A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 129) should not be pushed to a ridiculous extreme. As a matter of fact, the following observation of the Judicial Committee in Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das, (41 I. A. 251 : A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 129) leaves no room for doubt in my opinion that the principle laid down by their Lordships cannot be applied to a case where a judgment-debtor had not only knowledge of the execution proceeding but had litigated actively and put forward all possible objections for defeating the execution case :

"A notice under that section should have called upon the official assignee to shew cause why the decree should not be executed against him. Had the official assignee been served with such a notice, it is at least probable that he would, as in their Lordships' opinion he certainly could, have shewn good cause why the decree should not be executed, the property having under the Act and vesting order been transferred to him for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent generally. It is possible that the notice might be upheld as a proper notice preliminary to adding the official assignee as a party under S. 32, if that section were applicable, but in order to bind a party added under that section, he has, after being added, to be served with a summons to appear and answer, and it is not suggested that any such summons was served. Similarly, it is not suggested that any order to carry on proceedings was obtained under S. 372. Having obtained leave in that behalf the respondents proceeded to serve the notice in question, and their Lordships will assume that the notice was duly served on the official assignee. The official assignee took no notice of it, possibly because he had no objection to being substituted as a party, and expected to be served with notice of any further application against him. There is no evidence that he knew that an order for sale had been already made."

This cannot be regarded as a case in which the appellant did not know that an order for sale had been made. A perusal of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, EX. A, in the miscellaneous case under S. 47, Civil P. C., will show how actively he contested the decree-holder's claim in the execution proceeding and that he raised all possible objections which could be raised for defeating the decree-holder's claim. But neither in the S. 47-proceeding nor in the proceeding under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., did he raise the point that the execution case was not maintainable, because no notice under O. 21, R. 22, had been issued. The Judicial Committee have held in a very recent case, Shivraj Gopalji v. Edappavath Ayisa Bi, A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 302 : (1949-2 M. L. J. 493) that where in an earlier execution proceeding a decree-holder could have raised a plea that the judgment-debtor had an interest in certain property which could be attached under his decree but that the plea was not raised through his own default and the execution was dismissed, the dismissal operates as res judicata in the subsequent execution proceedings and even apart from the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C., it should be contrary to the principle to allow him in fresh proceedings to renew the same claim, namely, that the properties in question were properties liable to attachment. If the principle of res judicata is applicable in the case of a decree-holder in such circumstances, it will also be applicable in the case of a judgment-debtor in similar circumstances; and we cannot in this case overlook the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 47 which runs as follows:

"All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit."

[8] A proceeding under S. 47 can be treated as a suit and a suit can be treated as a proceeding, and because there was a determination under S. 47, Civil P. C., of the objections raised by this appellant, the present suit can be said to be barred and according to the principle laid down by their Lordships if the objection regarding the non-issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., was not raised in S. 47-proceeding, it cannot be raised now. Even if, however, it is open to the appellant to raise this point, the dictum laid down by Rankin C. J. in Chandra Nath Bagchi's case, 35 Cal. W. N. 9: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 476) referred to with approval in the two Full Bench cases of this Court is a sufficient answer to the contention of the appellant before us that the sale was without jurisdiction, because no notice under O. 21, R. 22, had been issued. Meredith J. in the case of Ajablal v. Haricharan, 23 Pat. 528: (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 1 F. B.) went further than Chatterji J. and observed as follows:

"As I read his judgment (judgment of Chatterji J.), he is also of opinion that the sale is not a nullity. He holds it void merely in the sense that it is not binding upon the legal representative of the judgment debtor. He suggests it is something that can be validated by confirmation if the legal representative is substituted before that is done. He does not seem to regard it as something that can be attacked collaterally so that any one can treat the purchaser as a trespasser. He holds indeed that not even the judgment debtor's legal representavive can ignore it and eject the purchaser as a trespasser, because the legal representative can only resist the purchaser's possession, or recover possession if he has lost it, by paying up the redemption money.

Definitions of the words 'void' and 'voidable' may differ, and it seems to me the question whether the sale is to be called void or voidable is consequently not so important. The crucial question is whether it is something that has to be set aside or something that can be ignored. That, to my mind, is equivalent to the question whether it operates or does not operate, unless and until challenged, as a transfer of the title. I have adopted the definition that a 'void sale' is one which can be attacked collaterally as having transferred no title at all to the purchaser, and can be ignored by the judgment-debtor or his legal representative, or whoever was the owner of the property at the time of the sale;

My answer to the question referred to the Full Bench is that in none of the circumstances which can arise within the terms of the reference is the sale void in the sense that it can be attacked collaterally or ignored. The sale may, however, be voidable upon a proper application or suit as the case may be."

Sinha J. agreed with Chatterji J. in answering the question referred to the Full Bench and held that the sale contemplated in the question was void as against the party not before the Court in the sense that it was not valid and operative against him. None of the Judges was thus of the opinion that the sale in the absence of a notice under O 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., should be regarded as a complete nullity. In the second Full Bench case in which the provisions of O. 21, R. 22, came to be considered, the judgment of the Court was delivered by Das J., and the following observation of his Lordship appears to me to be important for our present purpose :

"It is, no doubt, the duty of every Court to see that a notice issued by it is served in the manner required by law. This, however, is not a matter of jurisdiction; it is a matter between the Court and its officers. If there is any irregularity of service, the person aggrieved is not without a remedy, and it cannot be said that the object of the rule is frustrated. The person affected by the irregularity may apply for setting aside the sale by taking appropriate proceeding within the time allowed by law. There may be a case where the party entitled to a notice under O. 21, R. 22, comes to know of the execution and appears to contest it in spite of a defect in the method of service. Can it be said in such a case that the object of the rule is frustrated and that the notice must again be served properly? As Rankin C. J. had observed in Chandra Nath v. Nabadwip Chandra, 35 C. W. N. 9: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 476) to hold so would be 'to push the abstract logic of the case in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das, 41 I. A. 251: (A. I R. (1) 1914 P. C. 129) to the ridiculous extreme,' and would be 'piling unreason upon technicality'."

I need not refer to the earlier decisions of this Court or the Calcutta High Court with regard to the provisions contained in R. 22 of O. 21, Civil P. C., when with the help of these latest decisions the point raised before us can easily be determined.

[9] A new sub-rule has now been added to R. 22, and the amendment has been notified in the Bihar Gazette, dated 14-5-1947, under Notifn, No. 89-R/XII-6-47, dated 8-5-1947. The new sub-rule is sub-r. (3) of R. 22, and it lays down as follows:

"Proceedings held in execution of a decree shall not be invalid solely by reason of any omission to issue or failure to serve a notice under sub-r. (1) or to record reasons where such notice is dispensed with under sub-r. (2) unless the judgment-debtor has sustained substantial injury thereby."

It was, however, contended by the appellant's learned counsel—contention which cannot be regarded as absolutely without substance—that this rule can have no retrospective effect. Certainly, the provisions of a statute cannot be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. But can it be said about this provision that it relates to an existing right? It is either a provision dealing with matters of procedure or it merely interprets the provisions which already existed, and most probably this sub-rule was added to the existing provision with the intention that the Courts of Justice may not hereafter feel any difficulty in interpreting it. As was pointed out by Khaja Mohamad Noor J., in Sourendra Mohan v. Secy. of State, 14 Pat. 283 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 701) :

"It is a well settled principle of law that the Legislature must be taken to be aware of the interpretation of the statute enacted by them by the Courts; and if they find that the interpretations by Courts of justice are not in conformity with their intention they should amend it to bring it in conformity with their intention."

The sub-rule merely lays down how the Courts of justice should deal with an objection to the effect that proceedings in execution should be regarded as invalid, because a notice under O. 21, R. 22, has not been issued, or where while dispensing with the notice the Court has failed to record reasons for not issuing such a notice. The execution proceeding had terminated long ago, and even the application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., filed by this appellant was dismissed in June 1938. Because of the bars provided by S. 47 and O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., the present suit was not maintainable, and if in the present suit the same questions are raised which could have been raised in the proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C., or in the proceeding under O. 21, R. 90, I do not think that the new sub-rule which lays down that proceedings shall not be invalid solely by reason of an omission to issue a notice under sub-r. (1) should be ignored while determining the question how far the execution proceeding and the sale held in execution of the decree can be held to be invalid. As laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co. Ltd v. Income tax Commissioners, Delhi, A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 242 : (9 Lah. 284) the provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them. No person can have a vested right in a course of procedure, and it is an elementary principle that a plaintiff or a defendant has the right of prosecution or defence in the manner prescribed for the time being, by or for the Court in which he sues, and if there is an Act which alters that mode of procedure, he has no other right than to proceed according to the altered mode. If in spite of being unsuccessful in the proceedings under S. 47 and O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., this appellant has now chosen to file a suit which is apparently not maintainable. I do not think that he can get over the interpretation which has been placed on the provisions of O. 21, R. 22 by the new sub-rule which, in fact, lays down as to how those provisions have to be interpreted in a case in which an execution is challenged as invalid on account of the non-issue of a notice. The general principle certainly is that alteration in a procedure is retrospective unless there be some good reasons against it. Where a statute is passed for the purpose of supplying an omission in a former statute or for explaining a former statute, the subsequent statute relates back to the time when the prior statute was passed. "Baron Parke", said Lord Hatherley in Pardo v. Bingham, (1869) 4 Ch. 735 at p. 740 : (20 L. T. 464) "did not consider it an invariable rule that a statute could not be retrospective unless so expressed in the very terms of the section which had to be construed, and said that the question in each case was, whether the Legislature had sufficiently expressed that intention. In fact, we must look to the general scope and purview of the statute and at the remedy sought to be applied, and consider what was the former state of the law, and what it was that the legislature "contemplated." Certainly, in this case the Legislature contemplated to explain their intention with regard to the provisions contained in O. 21, R. 22, which had been the subject-matter of interpretation in various cases decided by the High Courts and also by the Judicial Committee. Even if, however, this new sub-rule cannot be said to have retrospective effect, for reasons already given, I am not prepared to hold in this case that the sale of the judgment-debtor's property is a nullity because no notice under O. 21, R. 22, had been issued in the execution case against him. My conclusion, therefore, in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, is that the sale is not without jurisdiction because the notice under O. 21, R. 22 had not been issued.

[10] Though it is not necessary, I should mention that the final decree in the partition suit between the plaintiff and the other members of his family was passed on 12-12-1936, that is, after the impugned sale in Ex. Case No. 61 of 1936 had taken place and, therefore, the decree-holder was not bound to proceed against the properties as allotted to the plaintiff on partition. The appellant's learned counsel did not make any point because of the final decree in the partition suit, and as I have already stated, except the two contentions which have been discussed above, no other contention has been urged before us in the appeal.

[11] In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

[12] Imam J. — I agree to the order that the appeal be dismissed. I would not like to express any definite opinion, as yet on the new sub-r. (3) of O. 21, R. 22.

A. F. O. O. No. 169 of 1947, Decided on 14-9-1949.

Limitation Act 1908), Art. 183 — Revivor — What constitutes — Order granting leave under O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., to proceed against partners of firm does not constitute revivor.

To constitute revivor of a decree there must be expressly or by implication, a determination that the decree is still capable of execution and the decree-holder is entitled to enforce it. [Para 3]

An order by the High Court on an application by the decree-holder for leave under O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., to proceed against certain partners of a firm granting such leave does not 'revive' the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act: Case law reviewed. [Para 9]

L. K. Jha and Nripendra Nath Roy — for Appellants; S. C. Misra and B. K. N. Singh — for Respondents.

Ramaswami J. — The sole question in this appeal is whether the execution of a decree made by the Calcutta High Court on the original side is barred by Art. 183, Sch. I, Limitation Act.

[2] The decree was granted by the Calcutta High Court on 12-7-1929. The present application for execution was made on 1-3-1946, in the Bhagalpur Court after a lapse of twelve years. But on 3-3-1944, the decree-holder had applied to the Calcutta High Court for leave under O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., to proceed against certain partners of the firm. On 3-3-1944, the High Court granted the leave. On behalf of the appellants the argument is addressed that the order of the Calcutta High Court "revived" the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act.

[2a] The question, therefore, must be determined on the words of Art. 183, as a matter of statutory construction.

[3] There is no definition of the term "revivor" in the Limitation Act, but the historical review contained in the judgments in the cases of Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn, 6 Cal. 504: (8 C. L. R. 23), Futteh Narain v. Chundrabati Chaudhrain, 20 Cal. 551 and Jogendra Chandra Roy v. Shyam Das, 36 Cal. 543 : (1 I. C. 168) shows beyond doubt that the procedure for revivor of judgment on the original side of the Calcutta High Court was substantially analogous to the writ of scire facias under the common law. That procedure was subsequently embodied in Ss. 248 and 249, Civil P. C., 1882, and was reproduced as O 21, Rr. 22 and 23 of the Code of 1908. Under these provisions, where an application for execution is made, a notice is required to be issued to the person against whom execution is applied for, if more than one year has elapsed from the date of the decree. The notice calls upon him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. If he does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court, the Court orders the decree to be executed. The order for execution thus made operates as a revivor, but the mere issue of the notice does not by itself produce that consequence Monohar Dass v. Futtah Chand, 30 Cal. 979: (7 C. W. N. 793). The true rule has been enunciated in Kamini Debi v. Agore Nath, 11 C. L. J. 91: (4 I. C. 402), namely, that to constitute revivor of a decree there must be, expressly or by implication, a determination that the decree is still capable of execution and the decree-holder is entitled to enforce it.

[4] In Chutterput Singh v. Sait Sumari Mall, 43 Cal. 903: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 488 F. B.) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court decided that an order for transmission of a decree was not an order on an application for execution; it was a proceeding taken with a view to further action by way of execution elsewhere on which action, unless previously determined, the question of the right to execute the decree is decided. Consequently the Full Bench decided that the order made upon the application did not operate as a revivor within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act.

[5] This case was expressly approved by the Judicial Committee in Banku Behari Chatterji v. Naraindas Dutt, 55 Cal. 500, in which the High Court had ordered a decree to be transmitted for execution to a district Court. Before the order was passed, the judgment-debtor appeared in the High Court and upon his petition, the decree had been varied with his consent. Even so, the Judicial Committee held that the order of the High Court did not operate to revive the decree so as to extend the time within which, under the Limitation Act, 1908, an application to enforce it must be made.

[6] Reference should be made to Muthiar Chettiar v Chidambaran Chetti, 55 Cal. 578 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 686) in which there was an adjudication in the execution stage of the question whether one of the judgment-debtors was a partner in the defendant firm and, as such, whether the decree was validly passed. An application for execution was made by the appellant as assignee of the decree. The application was served on Subramania who obtained a rule on motion calling upon the appellant to show cause why the decree should not be set aside and execution stayed. On 17-8-1923, it was ordered that an issue be tried as to whether Subramania was a partner in the defendant firm and that all "further proceedings in the execution should be stayed until the trial of the said issue." Apparently the validity of the decree depended upon this issue which was determined against him by an order of Thornhill J. on 20-5-1924, which declared that Subramania was a partner of the said firm and his application to set aside decree was dismissed. Rankin, C. J. and Mitter J. held that even so the adjudication by the High Court could in no sense be regarded as a determination by implication that the decree was capable of execution or that the decree-holder had a right to execute the decree, and that such an order could not revive the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act, 1908

[7] In support of appellant the learned Advocate-General relied upon Bhagwan Manaji v. Hiraji Premaji, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 516: (140 I. C. 519) in which an application under O. 21, R. 50, was held to be an application for execution of the decree obtained against the partnership. But the case must be distinguished, for the learned Judges were construing not Art. 183 but Art. 182 Limitation Act.

[8] On the contrary, in Harnarain v. Dayabhai Hira Chand, 19 Pat. 909: (A.I.R, (27) 1940 Pat. 596) a Division Bench of this Court held that the proceedings for obtaining leave to execute the decree against a partner of the firm under O. 21, R. 50 (2) did not operate as a revivor within the meaning of Art. 183. Limitation Act. In 1924 the decree-holder obtained decree against the judgment-debtor firm in the Bombay High Court. In 1938, the decree was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Motihari and leave was obtained under O. 21, R. 50 (2), Civil P C., 1908, to execute the decree against Har Narain a partner of the judgment-debtor firm. But the execution case was dismissed for default. In 1937 another application for execution was filed against Harnarain, but the Division Bench held that the proceedings for obtaining leave to execute the decree would not operate as revivor and the execution was time-barred.

[9] Upon this review of these authorities, it is manifest that in the present case there has been no revivor of the decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act.

[10] In my opinion, the order of the Subordinate Judge is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[11] Meredith J.—I agree.

A. F. O. D. Nos. 274 and 275 of 1945, D/- 25-1-1950.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (1920)—Applicability — Trust for public purposes is essential—Burden of proof —Gifts to Mohant of an asthal—Dedication for public purposes — Use of expression 'Shriprit' or 'Vishnuprit'—Inference.

For applying Act XIV [14] of 1920 or S. 92, Civil P. C. it must be established that the trust was substantially for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. It is not sufficient if one or some of the purposes of the trust are public. [Para 7]

To constitute a trust created or existing for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature within the meaning of Act XIV [14] of 1920, the author or authors of the trust must be ascertained, and the intention to create a trust must be indicated by words or acts with reasonable certainty. Moreover, the purpose of the trust, the trust property, and the beneficiaries must be indicated so as to enable the Court to administer the trust if required. [Para 7]

Where an asthal is founded by a bairagi Sadhu and there is nothing to show that the founder dedicated the temple attached to it for public use, the mere fact that during festivals and on ceremonial occasions a large number of people used to come to the temple to make offerings and to receive prasad cannot establish that the temple was a public institution So also the feeding of Sadhus and the distribution of alms and the entertainment of guests are inevitable in a temple and these are merely incidental to the worship of the deities. Where properties have been gifted to the Mohant of the asthal without any indication that they were dedicated for public use, the mere use of the expression 'Vishnuprit' 'Sheoprit' or Sriprit' in the deed of gift does not indicate that the gift was made for public purposes. The incidents attaching to the properties depend in each case upon the conditions on which the properties were dedicated or upon the conditions which can be gathered from the way they have been dealt with or which may be inferred from the usage and the custom of the institution.

Narayan J.—Appeal No. 274 arises out of Title Suit No. 10 of 1943 and App. No. 275 arises out of Title Suit No 3 of 1943. In Suit No. 10 of 1943, which was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga on 8-2 1913, the plaintiff was Mahanth Ramchandra Narain Dass and the defendants were Khub Narain Missir, Ramkishun Thakur, Shubhnarain Pande and Ramsunder Pande, and in suit No. 3 of 1943, which was instituted in the Court of the District Judge of Darbhanga, the plaintiffs were one Rambihari Thakur and Khub Narain Missir, defendant 1 of Suit No. 10 of 1943. The defendants of suit No. 10 had filed an application under S. 3 of Act XIV [14] of 1920 before the District Judge of Darbhanga for directing the Mahanth to furnish accounts for being examined and audited, and the then District Judge directed the Mahanth to produce the accounts for the years 1345, 1346 and 1347. The Mahanth moved this Court in civil revision against this order, but his application was dismissed. The Mahanth then filed Title Suit No. 10 of 1943 for a declaration that the "properties and temple appertaining to the asthal were private trust to which Act XIV [14] of 1920 was inapplicable, and that as such the order of the District Judge dated 5-7-1941 and the order of the High Court dated 18-3-1942 were illegal, ultra vires and void."

In the meantime Khub Narain Missir and one Rambihari Thakur had moved the Advocate-General of Bihar for giving his consent for the institution of a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C. against the Mahanth. The consent of the Advocate-General was obtained on 13-4-1943, and thereupon Khub Narain and Rambihari instituted Title suit No. 3 of 1943. While the contention of the Mahanth in the suit instituted by him was that the properties appertaining to the asthal had not been dedicated for public purpose of a charitable or religious nature, and no trust either express or constructive had been created, the case which Rambihari and Khub Narain made out in their own plaint was that the temple was a public temple and that the properties attached to it were debottar and trust properties. The allegations substantially were that in the said asthal there is a public temple in which the idols of Sri Ramji, Jankiji and Lachhmanji were installed, and that the said asthal owned and possessed considerable properties the income of which was spent in maintaining the asthal and acquiring other properties for religious and charitable purposes. It was further alleged that the defendant since his accession to the office of Mahanth had wasted the asthal properties and had been leading an immoral life. The plaintiffs instituted this suit as members of the Hindu public, and their alleged cause of action was that the defendant had committed breaches of the trust. The prayer was that the Mahanth be removed from the office and another suitable person be appointed in his place. It was further prayed that the Mahanth be ordered to render accounts of the funds of the asthal which had come into his hands, and if it be found that he had misappropriated any money belonging to the asthal, a decree for the recovery of the same may be passed against him personally.

[2] Both the suits were heard together by the learned District Judge, who, by his judgment dated 7-8-1945, decreed Title Suit No. 10 of 1943 which had been instituted by the Mahanth declaring that the properties detailed in the schedules attached to the plaint of the Mahanth were properties to which Act XIV [14] of 1920 was not applicable. The learned Judge dismissed Title Suit No. 3 of 1943 on the finding that it had not been established that there was a truet for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, and that consequently S. 92, Civil P. C., was inapplicable. Rambihari Thakur and Khub Narain Missir, the plaintiffs of Suit No. 3 of 1943, have preferred F.A. No. 275 of 1945 against the decision of that suit, and the four defendants of Suit No. 10 of 1943 have preferred F. A. No. 275 of 1945 against the decision of that suit, and the principal matters of controversy in these two appeals are whether the properties mentioned in the plaint of Suit No. 10 were debottar properties and were held on trust for purposes of religious and charitable nature, and whether the Mahanth has rendered himself liable to removal from his office on account of his alleged misfeasance and malversation. One of the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants before us was that the Court below should have in this case held that the asthal was a public institution and that the properties appertaining to it were held on trust for public purposes of a religious and charitable nature when it negatived the contention of the Mahanth that the asthal properties were his private properties. In other words, the contention of Mr. De for the appellants was that the Court below by coming to the finding that the properties were held on private trust had made out a third case. But, I think, the learned Judge has been quite careful in his statements and findings, and he has concluded his discussion on this point with the following observation:

"On a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of this case and keeping in view of the rulings referred to above, I am unable to hold that the disputed properties were held in trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature. It is unnecessary for me to consider whether the properties are held in private trust or whether they are private properties of the Mahanth."

But it can, however, be legitimately contended by the appellants that the amendments which have been made in the plaint of Suit NO. 10 of 1943 go to show that the Mahanth was at first not clear regarding the stand which he should take and whether he should claim the properties as private trust properties or as his own private properties. His ultimate decision, however, was that he should claim the properties as his personal properties, and, therefore, certain important amendments were made in the plaint. For the words "religious institution" the word "temple" was substituted, and for the words "private trust properties" the words "private property" were substituted. The plaint, as it stands now, no doubt, shows that the Mahanth is claiming these properties as his private properties. But it would not be a sound contention that if the contention that the properties are his private properties is negatived, the Court must hold that these properties are held for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature. The only relief sought by the Mahanth in his own suit is that it be declared that the properties attached to the asthal and the temple are properties to which Act XIV [14] of 1920 has got no application, and this relief the Mahanth would be entitled to whether he claims the properties as his own or as private trust properties. It does not, therefore, matter much if in the beginning he claimed these properties as private trust properties and is now claiming them as his personal properties. So far as the plaintiffs of Suit NO. 3 are concerned, their action cannot succeed unless it is held that the asthal is a public institution and that the properties appertaining to it are held for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, and the Mahanth is certainly entitled to the declaration which he seeks if the trust is not held to be a trust for purposes of a chartitable or religious nature. The difference in the wordings of the original plaint and the wordings of the amended plaint cannot, therefore, be of any assistance to the appellants in establishing the case which they have made out. I cannot agree with Mr. De that the use of the word "institution" in the original plaint indicates that there was a trust for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. The temple would be called an institution even if there are properties appertaining to it which can be regarded as private trust properties. The whole question in this case, therefore, is whether the asthal is a public institution and the properties appertaining to it have been held for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, and the onus is on the appellants to show that the properties have been held under a trust for public purposes. In order to determine this point we have to investigate what was the origin of this institution and how it has been developed and what has been its raison d'etre. As has been repeatedly pointed out, a "trust" in the sense in which this expression has been used in English law is unknown to the Hindu system. As was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the well-known case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar, 44 Mad. 831 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 123),

"Hindu piety found expression in gifts to idols and images consecrated and installed in temples, to religious institutions of every kind, and for all purposes considered meritorious in the Hindu social and religious system: to Brahman, Goswamis, sanyasis etc."

Their Lordships quoted with approval the following observation of the officiating Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in the case of Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran, 33 Mad. 265 : (5 I. C. 4):

"I think, then, that it cannot be predicated of the head of a mutt, as such, that he holds the properties constituting its endowments as a life tenant or as a trustee. The incidents attaching to the properties depend in each case upon the conditions on which they were given, or which may be inferred from the long-continued and well-established usage and custom of the institution in respect thereto."

[3] There can be no doubt that the incidents attaching to properties depend in each case upon the conditions on which the properties were dedicated or upon the conditions which can be gathered from the way the properties have been dealt with or which may be inferred from the usage and the custom of the institution. In Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das, 43 I. A. 73 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 256) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed that an asthal is an institution of a monastic nature, and that it is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets, and the observance of its rites, and that the question as to who has the right and office of Mahant is one, which must depend upon the custom and usage of the particular math or asthal. Such questions in India, their Lordships said, are not settled by an appeal to the general Customary law; the usage of the particular math stands as the law, therefor. In Chhotabhai v. Jnan Chandra Basak, 62 I. A. 146: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 P. C. 97) their Lordships pointed out that it is necessary to consider who was the author or who were the authors of the trust which is alleged to have been a trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature. Their Lordships further pointed out that the intention to create a trust must be indicated by words or acts with reasonable certainty and that the purpose of the trust, property, and the beneficiaries must be indicated in such a way that the trust could be administered by the Court if occasion arose. It was, therefore, incumbent on these appellants to place on the record certain very essential materials in absence of which it cannot be held that there is an express or constructive trust created or existing for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature to which Act XIV [14] of 1920 applies. The question is what materials are there on the record which can go to establish that a trust had been created for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Advocate General, who appeared on behalf of the respondent before us, that there is no evidence in this case to show that a trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature had been created. I am further inclined to hold that the way in which the asthal properties have been dealt with ever since its inception leaves no room for doubt that this asthal is a private institution. The observance of religious festivals, the feeding of sadhus and giving hospitality to atithis or guests are inevitable where there is a temple in which idols are being worshipped and which is under the control of a bairagi Sadhu. It is common ground that this asthal was founded by Mahanth Damodar Dass, who, it appears, was a saint whose piety had attracted the attention of not only the local people but also of a big person like the Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga. The plaintiffs of Suit No. 3 of 1943 have stated in para. 1 of the plaint that in village Bihat Tola Adalpur there is an asthal from a very long time of Bairagi Ramanandi Laskari sect, which is commonly known as the Adalpur asthal, and that in the said asthal from its very inception there is a "temple in which the murties of Sri Ramji, Jankiji and Lachhmanji besides other deities are consecrated and installed." In the depositions the witnesses for these appellants have been described as plaintiff's witnesses, and the witnesses for the Mahant have been described as defendant's witnesses, and we get it from the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses that Mahant Damodar Dass was the founder of the Adalpur asthal, and that idols of the temple were installed in his time. In the written statement of Suit No. 3 the Mahant has stated that in the year 1759 the temple was established by Mahant Damodar Dass who,

> 'by reason of his great piety and devotion of the deities was able to attract the attention and loyalty of the people round about who made gifts of property to him so that he might better be able to perform the daily religious practices he had established."

There is absolutely nothing to show that when this temple was constructed or when the deities were installed Mahant Damodar Dass dedicated the temple for public use, and the mere fact that during festivals and on ceremonial occasions a large number of people used to come to the temple to make offerings and to receive prasad cannot establish that the temple was a public institution. Such things happen even in private temples, and a bairagi can maintain a private temple even though he depends, for the up keep of the temple, on public charity. Something more substantial is required for establishing the alleged public nature of the institution than mere evidence to show that pepople used to assemble and make offerings at the temple on ceremonial occasions. Mr. De placed great reliance on the sanads granted by that Mabaraja of Darbhanga, and, in his opinion, the recitals in these sanads go to establish that the temple was a public institution, and that the properties dedicated to it are of the nature of a public trust. There are five sanads and two parwanas, by which properties appear to have been gifted to Mahant Damodar Dass. Out of the five sanads, four appear to have been granted by the then Maharaj of Darbhanga and one by some other person whose identity is not established. We have looked into the original sanads, and we find that the translator while translating some of these sanads has wrongly substituted the word "Vishunprit" for "Sriprit." In the sanads (Exs. A, A(1), A(2), A(3) and A (4)) Mahant Damodar Dass is mentioned as the donee, and in all of them, except Ex. A (3), the Maharaja is mentioned as the donor. Exhibit A (3) is a Fakirana Patra by one Shri Thakurji to Shri Damodar Dass. The recital in EX. A is as follows:

"Fakirana Prit land excluded from rent has been granted in the said mauza since 1172 Fasli excepting the previous barmottar and inami lands within the boundary of the mauza. You shall cultivate at your convenience and enjoy the produce thereof disciples after disciples. This shall be treated as prit land and no obstruction shall be caused thereto."

The expression "Shishyopashisyhya mili" has been translated as disciples after disciples, and this expression indicates that along with his disciples he will enjoy the usufruct of the land. The expression 'Fakirana prit land" is interpreted to mean that the dedication was a dedication for public use. In EX.A as well, the statement is that the produce will be enjoyed by the donee, that he will not have to pay any rent for it and the land will be treated as priti land. In EX. A (2) the recital is similar to the recital in EX. A and the lands described as sriprit land. In EXS. A (3) and A (4) also the lands have been described as sriprit land, and the expression "Shishyopashishya-mili" is to be found in EX. A (4) as well. In EX A (5) the name of one Shri Vidyapati Jha is mentioned as the donee, and this document cannot be regarded as a relevant document when it does not appear that any of the Mahanths of this math or asthal was given the property mentioned in this document as brahmottar land. The whole question, so far as these sanads are concerned, is whether the expression "Vishunu prit" or "Sriprit" and the expression "Shishyopshishya-mili" can lead us to hold that the dedication was for public use. The word "Vishunu prit" has been interpreted in some of the decisions of this Court, and in Naurangi Lal v Ram Charan Das, 11 P. L. T. 403 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 455) Fazl Ali. J. as he then was, pointed out that in a number of cases the words "Vishnu prit." "Sheoprit" and "Sheottai" have been held to indicate strongly that the property with reference to which one or other of these terms was used was not the private property of a Mahant or Shebait. His Lordship further observed that the terms "Khairat" and 'Vishunuprit" although they strongly indicate that there was an endowment for certain religious or charitable purposes are, strictly speaking, not conclusive for the purpose of establishing that the endowment was for public use. With the greatest respect for his Lordship's views, I may point out that the literal meaning of the word "Vishunuprit" is "for the love of Vishnu", and, according to the Hindu Shastras not only every dedication for public use but every act of charity is to be regarded as an act done for the love of Vishnu, even when alms are given to beggars, that is an act done for the love of Vishnu, and the Hindu Shashtras are so strict in this respect that they enjoin upon all Hindus not to take credit for any pious act done, but to lay the effects of the pious acts at the feet of the Lord Vishnu without claiming any benefit for the same. At the time when these grants were made the Hindu Society had not advanced in the modern sense of the term, and people had much greater faith in the injunctions of the Hindu Shastras, and, therefore, the expression "Vishnuprit" or "Sriprit" does not to my mind lead to the inference that the donor intended that the properties would be gifts not to the Mahant, whose piety, it appears, had a great impression upon him, but that the properties would be used by the public and would be treated as a public trust. In a much later case Ramsaran Das v. Jai Ram Das, 21 Pat. 815 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 135), Harries C. J. and Manohar Lall J. had to consider the meaning of the word "Vishnuprit" and the observations of Fazl Ali J. in the case of Naurangi Lal v. Ram Charan Das, 11 P. L. T. 403 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 455), and the learned Chief Justice, with whom Manohar Lall J. agreed, made the following observation:

"This case in which Fazl Ali. J., made the observation, which I have quoted, was subsequently reversed by their Lordships of the Privy Council but only on a point of limitation, whether their Lordships approved of this observation of the learned Judge, it is impossible to say, but it is an observation of weight. But as the learned Subordinate Judge himself points out, the use of the word 'Bishunprit' is not conclusive. In any event, there is nothing in the word 'Bishunprit' to indicate that the property was gifted to the idol for public purposes."

[4] I respectfully agree with his Lordship's views, and I have no hesitation in holding that the expression "Vishnuprit", "Sheoprit" or "Sriprit", does not indicate that the gift was made for public purposes. The gift in this case was made to a bairagi sadhu, who, it appears, had come to be regarded as a very pious man and whose piety had attracted the attention of all the local people including a big zamindar like the Maharaja of Darbhanga. The sanads show that the gift was made to Mahanth Sri Damodar Das and not to the idol, but even if it was a gift to the idol, that does not lead to the inference that it was a gift for public use when the temple cannot be held to be a public temple, and when it is obvious that the idol had been installed by Mahanth Damodar Das himself, who was the founder of the temple and the asthal. In the Parwanas (EXS. B and B (1)) as well the lands have been described as Vishnuprit land, and Mahanth Damodar Das is mentioned as the donee. It appears from the recitals in all these sanads and parwanas that the donor was very anxious to indicate that these grants should be treated as rent-free grants, and that no obstruction should be caused to the sadhus or his disciples in the possession or the cultivation of the lands. The words "Fakirana" has been used, and it has been explained as excluded from rent. It is important to note that in the survey record which was finally published in 1902 the lands have been mentioned as "Fakirana Vishunuprit." It would appear from the Guide and Glossary to Survey and Settlement Operations that the word "Fakirana" means rent-free grant to Muhammadan ascetics. Of course, this word must have come into use during the Muhammadan rule, but certainly when the survey authorities used the word „Fakirana Vishunuprit" they meant that the land would be treated as rent-free. In Col. 11 of the survey khewat where the nature, conditions and incidents of the tenure are to be mentioned the entry is "Fakirana Vishunuprit," and evidently what the survey authorities meant by this entry was that the grant was a rent-free grant. It is also noteworthy that the name of Mahanth Balmakund Dass alone was recorded as tenure-holder in the khewat, and this entry, which carries a presumption of correctness, goes to show that the Mahanth was treated as the sole owner of these dedicated lands. There is no mention even of the idol in Col. No. 2 of survey khewat where the name of the tenure-holder has to be mentioned, and it is remarkable that no member of the public cared to have these lands recorded in the survey as lands dedicated for public use, or as lands in respect of which the Mahant was a trustee and in which he was not personally interested. The entry in the survey record, therefore, militates against the case which Rambihari Thakur and others have made out, and if the survey record is considered along with the sanads and the parwanas referred to above, there would be little doubt left that the properties, which Rambihari Thakur and others claim as properties dedicated for public use, are really the personal properties of the Mahanth.

[5] Mr. De next relied on a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in a case which had been instituted by one Ganga Das to recover possession of the asthal in question from Bishun Das, who was the fourth Mahanth after Mahanth Damodar Das. Mahanth Bishun Das died during the pendency of the above suit, and the suit proceeded against Ralmukund Das, the Chela of Mahanth Bishun Das, in whose favour Mahanth Bishun Das had executed a will dated 13-11-1888. In this judgment there are certain passages on the basis of which Mr. De argued that this temple should be regarded as a public institution. In the very first sentence of this judgment the asthal has been called a Hindu convent, and there is another passage in the judgment which runs as follows :

"This suit relates to the asthal of Adalpur admittedly belonging to the Luskari brotherhood. . . . . The brotherhood to which the asthal of Adalpur belongs is a branch of the Ramanandi sect."

The mere fact that their Lordships used the expression "Hindu Convent" while referring to this asthal cannot indicate that their Lordships treated this institution as a public institution, just as the observation of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das, 43 I. A. 73 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 256) that an asthal, commonly known in Northern India as a math, is an institution of a monastic nature, would not lead us to hold that every asthal is a monastery. What their Lordships of the Judicial Committee meant was that an asthal bears resemblance to a monastery and can be taken to be an institution of that nature. By this statement their Lordships never meant to say that every asthal is a public institution just as a monastery is. Similarly, when their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court used the expression "Hindu Convent" they merely meant that the asthal bears some resemblance to a Christian convent, and even though their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court said that Adalpur asthal belongs to the Laskari brotherhood, they never meant that it is an institution belonging to the entire sect, known as the Ramanandi Laskari sect. In the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar, 44 Mad. 831 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 123), their Lordships condemned the idea of judging these Hindu institutions in the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, and the following passage of their Lordships' judgment is an answer to the contention of Mr. De, who relied on the expression "monastic nature" and the expression "Hindu convent" in the judgments referred to above :

"It would, in their Lordships' opinion, be a serious inroad into their rights if the rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan laws were to be construed with the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia. The vice of this method of construction by analogy is well illustrated in the case of Vidyapurna Thirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami, 27 Mad. 435 : (14 M. L. J. 105) where a Mahant's position was attempted to be explained by comparing it with that of a bishop and of a beneficed clergyman in England under the ecclesiastical law. It was criticised, and rightly, in their Lordships opinion, in the subsequent case, which arose also in the Madras High Court, of Kailasam Pillai v. Nataraja Thambiran, 33 Mad. 265 : (5 I. C. 4)."

[6] When their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court said that the asthal belongs to the Laskari brotherhood they meant nothing more than this that the Mahanths of this asthal belonged to the Laskari brotherhood. And it is not necessary for me to point out that statements of facts in a previous judgment cannot be admissible in a subsequent case. There does not appear to be anything in the Evidence Act to warrant the view that the statements of facts in a previous judgment can be used as evidence in a subsequent case to decide the points which are in issue in that case. As such the appellants can gain very little by relying on the statements in the judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Ex. 5 (b), in which case there were two rival claimants for the Mahanthship.

[7] Mr. De next relied on certain recitals in the will which Mahanth Bishun Das had executed in favour of Balmukund Das. It appears that when this will was executed Balmukund Das was a minor, aged only ten years, and Mahanth Bishun Das had to make arrangement for the management of the asthal during his minority. Paragraph 4 of this will says that Bansi Ram Das, the adhikari of the asthal, who has been the "manager of the village and Court affairs from the time of the previous Mahanths, shall be the guardian of Balmakund Das till he attains majority and shall maintain and bring him up and educate him and shall realise rent, manage and settle the village affairs and shall appoint and dismiss servants, shall pay Government revenue and cess and other demands and other items that are obligatory and generally done, shall bear the expenses of Puja Pat, utsab, festivals concerning Sri Thakurji and bhandara, shall entertain the casual visitors, and seek the pleasure of the poor, and the destitute, shall repair and construct houses, shall pay the salaries of the servants, shall take care of the boundary limits, shall look after (all) the cases, the estate relating to moveable and immoveable properties, take care of the cattle, viz. he cows and she cows, horses and elephant etc. which are at present in the asthal and that which may be acquired in future."

In Para. 5 of the will it is stated that the

"income from the village and the produce of the zirat lands as well as the income from the sewaks, devotees and the pujas of Sri Thakurji comes to more than ten thousand rupees and that after meeting the above-mentioned expenses he should keep the balance in his custody, and if he deems possible and proper out of the balance he shall purchase milkiat lands and other lands etc. in the name of the said disciple for his betterment and improvement."

Paragraph 7 of the will says that :

"After the period of minority when the said minor attains majority he shall manage the affairs of the dharam asthal as is being done from time immemorial, he shall not utilise the income from the village and the produce of the zirat lands on useless and immoral purposes save and except on legal necessities so that the properties and the reputation of the asthal may not be ruined and may not bring disgrace to the fair name of me, the executant."

In Para. 9 of the will there is a statement which runs as follows :

"The said disciple shall have no right to borrow money. If the said disciple requires some money for meeting the expenses of the bhandara or for purchasing properties, he shall in consultation with the adhikaris, shall take loan and perform the necessary work and shall (illegible). He shall have no right to cause loss to the milkiat (properties) and properties appertaining to the asthal."

The question is whether these recitals in the will can at all lead to the inference that the institution was treated as a public institution. I have already said that even a private institution like this is expected to look after the poor and the destitute, and every bairagi Mahanth would be careful enough to leave a direction that the income of the asthal should not be used for immoral purposes. This asthal has a large income, and the executant of the will rightly thought that his successor will have no necessity to borrow money, but still he made a provision for taking loans in case his successor thought that money was required for bhandara expenses or for purchasing properties. The clauses referred to above do not go to establish that the institution was a public institution, and that the asthaldhari was liable to render account to the public with regard to the income and expenditure of the math. On the other hand, the statement in para 5 to the effect that the guardian would be at liberty to purchase properties in the name of the succeeding Mahanth "for his betterment and improvement" goes to show that the Mahanth was the sole owner of the math, and that the properties appertaining to the asthal were his private properties. This document, therefore, instead of helping the appellants seems to destroy the case which they have set up. On the materials, therefore, which are forthcoming in this case I am unable to take a view contrary to the one which has been taken by the learned District Judge, and I fully agree with the learned Judge's view that the onus which lay on these appellants has not been discharged by them, and that it has not been established that the asthal is a public institution and that the properties appertaining to it are held for public purpose of a charitable and religious nature. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Prosad Das v. Jaganath Pal, 37 C. W. N. 181 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 519) that even where a deed of endowment provides for devasheva and for feeding of the poor and of students if the income increases, that does not make the endowment anything but a private trust, and in another case reported in Sm. Charusila Dassi, In the matter of, 50 C. W. N. 521 : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 148) the same High Court held that the performance of Prosad Utsarga does not necessarily render a temple a public one, and that a trust for a Hindu idol and temple simpliciter is not necessarily one for public purpose. And it need not be pointed out that the mere fact that a property has descended from guru to chela does not warrant a presumption that it is a religious property. Mr. De relied on the decision of the Madras High Court reported in Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti, 2 Mad. 175, and a decision of this Court reported in Susil Chandra v. Gobind Chandra, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 431 : (150 I. C. 61). There are several cases of the Madras High Court on the point which were decided subsequent to the decision reported in Sammantha's case, 2 Mad. 175, and in my opinion, the decision of the Madras High Court in Sammantha's case, 2 Mad. 175, is of very little use to the appellants in this case. That was a case where a math had been sued on the basis of a bond, and the defence was that the debt had not been contracted for the purposes of the math, and that the Mahanth who had borrowed the loan had no authority to do so. There an observation in the judgment that the property is attached to the office and passes by inheritance to no one who does not fill the office and that it is in a certain sense a trust property. There is a further observation that the superior has large dominion over the property, and is not accountable for its management or for the expenditure of the income, provided he does not apply it to any purpose other than what may fairly be regarded as in furtherance of the objects of the institution. The question whether that particular institution was a public institution or a private institution was not directly in issue in that case and from the facts given in the judgment it appears that the institution was taken to be a private institution. In the case of Susil Chandra v. Gobind Chandra, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat 431 : (150 I. C. 61), Dhavle J., observed that there are some differences between debutter property and property dedicated to a math, and that whether or not the property is dedicated to the idol the property, if it appertains to the math, would not be the personal property of the Mahanth. Nobody says that the property appertaining to a private asthal is to be regarded as the personal property of the Mahanth in the sense in which we generally use the expression "personal property." There can be priavate trust, and there has always been a distinction between a private trust and a public trust. The question before us in this case is whether this is a trust to which S. 92, Civil P. C., or Act XIV [14] of 1920 can be applicable. If it is found that in this case there is no express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a chartitable or religious nature, that would conclude the matter, and really it is not within the scope of this case to investigate whether the properties of the asthal should be regarded as private trust properties or as the personal properties of the Mahanth. In the case of Ramsaran Das v. Jairam Das, 21 Pat. 815 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 135), Harries C. J. quoted a passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Parma Nand v. Nihal Chand, 65 I. A. 252 : (A. I. R. (26) 1938 P. C. 195) and, I think, the observation of his Lordship Sir Shadi Lal in the Privy Council case is fully applicable to this case. The observation runs as follows :

"Their Lordships do not think that any user or treatment of the property has been proved, such as would justify the conclusion that it was a public, and not a private trust. It cannot be disputed that the plaintiff can be defeated only if the defendants establish affirmatively that a trust of a public character was imposed upon the property. To constitute a trust 'created or existing for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature' within the meaning of Act XIV [14] of 1920, the author or authors of the trust must be ascertained, and the intention to create a trust must be indicated by words or acts with reasonable certainty. Moreover, the purposes of the trust, the trust property, and the beneficiaries must be indicated so as to enable the Court to administer the trust if required; Chotabhai v. Jnan Chandra, 62 I. A. 146 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 P. C. 97). These conditions have not been fulfilled."

For applying Act XIV [14] of 1920, it must be established that the trust was substantially for public purposes, and as already pointed out it is not sufficient if one or some of the purposes of the trust are public. The feeding of sadhus and the distribution of alms and the entertainment of the guests are inevitable in a temple, and these are merely incidental to the worship of the deities. In fact, no Mahanth worth the name can refuse to entertain sadhus and guests if he has the means for it. His Lordship, the Chief Justice, while construing the arpannama in the case of Ramsaran Das, 21 Pat. 815 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 135) observed that though the arpannama had made it clear that thereafter the properties were debottar properties, there was nothing in the terms of the arpannama to indicate that the properties were dedicated to the public, and, therefore, his Lordship held that the trust was a private one. In this case also it would appear from the sanads and the parwanas that properties were gifted only to the Mahanth, there being nothing in these documents to indicate that they were dedicated for public use. It is true that in the case of Ramsaran Das, 21 Pat. 815 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 135) the grant in favour of the Mahanth was described as Gurudakshina, but that makes no difference whatsoever. By whatever name the gift is called it is a gift to the Mahanth of the asthal, and after the gift the property either retains its secular character or a private trust is created with regard to it. These suits were, therefore, correctly decided by the learned Judge, and his decision must be confirmed.

[8] Mr. De did not challenge the findings of the learned Judge that it had not been established that the Mahanth was leading an immoral life, but he pointed out to us that the learned Judge had held that the Mahanth had, without any necessity, settled some bakast lands and had executed two ladavi deeds, the execution of which documents constituted a breach of trust. These things will be material only if the trust is held to be a public trust. On the findings of the learned Judge it must be held that the Mahanth has not been acting like a prudent manager, but the public or any section of the public cannot complain against it when the trust is not a public trust. These appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs, one set of hearing fee.

A. F. A. D. No. 451 of 1946, D/- 23-9-1949.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 115 and 97 — Applicability—Suit to recover money in respect of realisation by decree-holder of decretal dues twice over—Starting point.

A suit for recovery of money in respect of realisation by the decree-holder of the decretal dues twice over is a suit for damages for breach of an implied contract by the decree-holder to get the payments certified and not to execute the decree and the article applicable is Art. 115, or possibly Art. 97. The breach takes place and the consideration fails as soon as the decree-holder does something inconsistent with the carrying out of the contract—something negativing its performance by him. That would be the date when he files an application for execution for the full decretal amount ignoring the payment which has been made. The subsequent second payment does not give a fresh cause of action. A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 156 and A. I. R. (6) 1919 Mad. 773, Dissent. [Para 5]

Anno: Lim Act, Art. 97, N. 2; Art. 115, N. 6, Pts. 1 and 2.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 24—Applicability—Suit to recover money in respect of realisation by decree-holder of decretal dues twice over—Contract Act (1872), S. 73.

Section 24 is applicable in the case of actions ex contractu in proper cases. [Para 7]

But the section has no application to a suit for recovery of money in respect of realisation by the decree-holder of the dues twice over ignoring previous payment made under a promise of certification. The breach of contract per se gives rise to a cause of action, and time begins to run from that date; A. I. R. (23) 1936 Rang. 510, Rel. on; A. I. R. (13) 1926 All. 605, Dissent. [Para 8]

Anno: Lim. Act, S. 24, N. 2

(c) Contract Act (1872), S. 73 — Measure of damages.

Where the judgment-debtor paid the decretal amount out of Court in 1936 under a promise of certification, but the payment was never certified and the decretal amount was recovered again in 1940 in execution, in a suit by the judgment-debtor to recover the money so recovered :

Held (Per Meredith J.; Ramaswami J. dubitante) that the act of the decree-holder deprived the plaintiff not only of the money, but the interest which he could earn and that should be taken into account in fixing the measure of damages and, therefore, the plaintiff should be allowed something by way of interest, though, strictly speaking, it should be described as damages and not interest, and it should not be interest from the date of the second payment in 1940, but interest from 1936 on the amount paid then: A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 196 and A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 67, Disting. [Paras 20 and 24]

Anno: Contract Act, S. 73, N. 4.

Prem Lall—for Appellant; Lakshmi Narain Sinha—for Respondents.

Meredith J.—This is a defendant's second appeal in a suit for recovery of Rs. 300 and interest, by way of damages, in respect of realisation by the defendant of the decretal dues twice over in two rent suits. These rent suits were decreed in 1935. According to the plaintiff's case and the findings of the Courts below, the sum of Rs. 300 was paid out of Court in the year 1936 under a promise of certification, but in fact the payment was never certified, and execution for the full amount of the decrees was taken out in the year 1937. On 5-4 1937, the plaintiff made an application under O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., for certification of the payment, but this application was dismissed as barred by limitation under Art. 174, Limitation Act, and also as it was held that payment had not been proved. There was an appeal, but the appeal also was dismissed. Subsequently in the execution proceedings the judgment-debtor had to pay over again, paying by instalments from 16-1-1940. onwards. The plaintiff waited for full three years before doing anything about it, and on 19-1-1943, filed the present suit. There were, however, a few days' holidays prior to the 19th of January, and it is conceded that the suit was within time if limitation runs from 16-1-1940. The suit has been decreed for Rs. 300 and interest, not at the rate claimed, but at 6 per cent. per annum from 16-1-1940.

[2] Three points have been raised in appeal, first, that the suit was barred by res judicata owing to the dismissal of the application under O. 21. R. 2, second, that the suit was barred by limitation, and third, that interest should not have been allowed as there was no contract for payment of interest or damages.

[3] I shall take these points in turn. With regard to the first, reliance is placed on a number of cases of which it will suffice to cite Peary

Mohan Mukherjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhya, 24 Cal. 900, wherein it was held that, though the previous suit failed for lack of notice, there was res judicata because the question of the merits, whether necessary or not, had also been decided and the matter was directly and substantially in issue in the previous litigation.

[4] Similarly it is argued that the application under O. 21, R. 2, was dismissed not only on the score of limitation, but also on the merits. Therefore, the matter of payment had been finally decided. It is not necessary to discuss the legal point involved because there is a short answer. It was for the defendant to establish the plea of res judicata set up by him. The final decision in the application under O. 21, R. 2, was that of the appellate Court, and the defendant has not filed the judgment of the appellate Court, and we do not know whether the appellate Court decided on the merits or only on the score of limitation. The first contention, therefore, fails.

[5] The second, that of limitation, is one of some difficulties. It is well settled that a suit like the present is a suit for damages for breach of an implied contract by the decree-holder to get the payments certified and not to execute the decree. Indeed it is only in this light that such a suit has been held to be maintainable despite the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. This being so, the article of limitation must be Art. 115, or possibly Art. 97, Limitation Act. In the first case limitation is three years from the date of the breach, in the second three years from the failure of the consideration. My personal view is that Art. 115 is applicable rather than Art. 97. But it makes no difference. Limitation is three years, and the question is, what is the terminus a quo? When did the breach take place or when did the consideration fail? Put like this, I think there can be only one answer. The breach took place and the consideration failed as soon as the decree-holder did something inconsistent with the carrying out of the contract—something negativing its performance by him. That would be the date when he filed an application for execution for the full decretal amount ignoring the payment which had been made. In this view the cause of action arose when the application for execution was filed in 1937, and consequently a suit brought in 1943 will be long out of time.

[6] There are, I apprehend, only two possible avenues of escape from this conclusion. First, that S. 24, Limitation Act, would be applicable, and, second, that the actual payment of the money twice over by the judgment-debtor gives a fresh cause of action.

[7] Section 24, Limitation Act, runs:

"In the case of a suit for compensation for an act which does not give rise to a cause of action unless some specific injury actually results therefrom, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the injury results."

In Kedar Nath v. Har Govind, 24 A. L. J. 550: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 ALL. 605), Ashworth J. took the view that under S. 73, Contract Act, a suit can only be brought for an injury or loss already caused, and not for prospective loss Consequently there is no cause of action until actual loss has been incurred, and S. 24, Limitation Act, will be applicable as it is not confined to suits based on tort. For the latter view he has been severely criticised by Ba U J. in V. M. Gany v. Leong Chye, 166 I. C. 48: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Rang. 510) who holds that in a suit for compensation for a breach of contract, the breach of contract per se gives rise to a cause of action, and time begins to run from the date of the breach, and not from the date of actual loss or damage. Section 24, Limitation Act, has no application because it applies only to suits based upon torts, and not to those based on breach of contract. With respect I think the better view is that S. 24 is applicable in the case of actions ex contractu in proper cases. It was so held by a Bench of this Court in Jagannath Marwari v. Kalidas, 8 Pat. 776: (A. I. R (16) 1929 Pat. 215), though in that particular case the terminus a quo was held to be the date of injury and not the breach of the covenant, because it only became apparent that the removal of pillars of coal amounted to a breach when the plaintiff's tank subsequently subsided.

[8] Agreeing, however, that in proper cases S. 24 is applicable to actions on contract, I am clear that it has no application to a case like the present. I do not think Ashworth J. was quite correct in his view of S. 73, Contract Act, and would prefer the view of Ba U J. that the breach of contract per se gives rise to a cause of action, and time begins to run from that date. In many such actions there has been no actual money loss, for example, in an action brought for failure to supply goods on a certain date the plaintiff will be entitled to recover the difference between the price of the goods according to the contract and the market price thereof at the date of failure to supply, even though the plaintiff has not actually subsequently purchased the goods at the higher price.

[9] In Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 19, p. 42, S. 64 we find,

"in an action for a breach of contract the cause of action is the breach. Accordingly such an action must be brought within six years of the breach; after the expiration of that period the action will be barred, although damage may have accrued to the plaintiff within six years of action brought. In such an action it is not necessary to prove actual damage, and special damage is merely alleged as a measure of the damages to be recovered. The time is not extended by the fact that the breach has not been discovered or that damage has not resulted until after the expiration of six years."

Similarly in Rustomji's work on the Law of Limitation, 1938 Edn., Vol II, p. 988, speaking about Art. 115, the learned author says:

"Time runs from the breach (i.e. when the contract is broken), after expiration of three years from the breach, the suit will be barred, although damage may have accrued to the plaintiff within three years of action brought, i. e. an action for breach of contract accrues as soon as the contract is broken, though no injury results until afterwards . . . . . The time is not extended by the fact that the breach has not been discovered or that damage has not resulted until after expiration of three years."

[10] In an action like the present, however, the position seems to me even clearer because here there is definitely damage as soon as the contract was broken by filing an application for execution. This results from the fact, which has, I think, been lost sight of in some of the decisions, that the money has been actually previously paid out by the plaintiff, and as soon as the defendant has converted it to his own independent use instead of setting it off against the decree, that money is lost to the plaintiff, since it can never be applied towards the satisfaction of the decree, as under O. 21, R. 2, the execution Court is debarred from taking any notice of the uncertified payment. The entire liability under the decree remains untouched, and the money paid previously becomes a complete loss, though of course compensation for that loss may be recovered in a suit like the present. Therefore, I think, limitation must run from the actual breach, and S. 24 has no application.

[11] As for the argument that the subsequent second payment gives a fresh cause of action, I am unable to appreciate that contention. It is payment of an amount lawfully due under the decree. The decree-holder is entitled to realise it, and the judgment-debtor must pay it. The breach of the contract has already taken place, and is over and done with. There is no fresh breach by the decree-holder, and indeed the levying of the money follows directly from the application for execution. It is made by the Court, not the decree-holder. In any event a suit for recovery of the money paid on the second occasion in the execution proceedings would be barred under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[12] Authority is somewhat scanty. There are two single Bench decisions of this High Court. The first is Ramautar Singh v. Thakur Prasad Singh, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Pat. 65. Fazl Ali J. in that case appears to have held that limitation ran from the date of the original payment, but I think the decision is based on the particular manner in which the plaint was framed since the cause of action was specified to be the receipt by the decree holder to his use. In the other case, Ram Das Sahu v. Sukhdeo Ram, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 156: (178 I. C. 196) Manohar Lall J. held that the cause of action arose on the date of realisation of the money for the second time in execution, and it was on that date that the plaintiff obtained the right to bring a suit for damages. With respect to the learned Judge, I think he was wrong for the reasons I have already given.

[13] There are several Madras cases. The first is Viraraghava Reddi v. Subhakka, 5 Mad. 397 (F.B.), a Full Bench case, in which it was held that a suit like the present is maintainable as a suit to recover damages for the breach of the implied promise to certify the payment to the Court and thereby make it effectual in execution. But the question of limitation was not considered.

[14] In T. M. Sriramulu v. R. Dalayya, 16 M. L. J. 54, where, as soon as the notice of the application for execution was served on the judgment-debtor, but before any steps were actually taken to execute the decree, the judgment-debtor instituted the suit, it was held that the suit was not maintainable. But in this case there is absolutely no discussion of the question. The judgment consists of a single sentence, and it has been subsequently dissented from in the Madras High Court itself. Having regard to the nature of the judgment, it is, in my opinion, no authority.

[15] In In the matter of Medai Kaliani Anni, 30 Mad. 545 : (3 M. L. T. 15) a learned Judge laid down that the law casts on the decree-holder receiving payment out of Court, the duty of certifying such payment in satisfaction of the decree under S. 258, Civil P. C. The judgment-debtor has a cause of action against the decree-holder when the latter having received the decree amount not only does not certify, but actually takes out execution. It is not necessary that money should have been actually recovered in execution.

[16] Krishna Aiyar v. Savurimuthu Pillai, 42 Mad. 338 : (A. I R. (6) 1919 Mad. 424) is a case in which, after receiving certain payments, the decree-holder assigned the decree, and the assignee executed it. The Full Bench held that the judgment-debtor has a cause of action for damages only as against the decree-holder, but none against the assignee. That is clearly correct having regard to the fact that there is no contractual relationship between the judgmentdebtor and the assignee, and the decree is a good decree and capable of execution so long as the payment is not certified. In such a case it may well be that the application for execution will give no rise to a cause of action. It cannot do so against the assignee, and it is not the act of the decree holder. Hence in such a case the cause of action will arise against the decree-holder as soon as the judgment-debtor has to pay twice over, but that is in no way inconsistent with the view I have taken.

[17] In Gopalasami Naick v. Nammalwar Naick, 36 M. L. J. 175 : (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Mad. 773), a Bench held that a cause of action arises as soon as the application for execution is filed, being a breach of the implied contract, the breach in itself giving rise to the cause of action. Though money may not have been realised, yet successive applications for execution will give rise to successive breaches and fresh cause of action, and, if money is subsequently realised, that will give a fresh cause of action as a further breach of the covenant. With regard to the second proposition, I am unable to agree with those learned Judges. They are apparently thinking of the fact that under Art. 115 limitation runs from the time when the contract is broken or, where there are successive breaches, when the breach, in respect of which the suit is instituted, occurred. But the provision with regard to successive breaches relates to a different type of contract altogether. A contract of which there may be successive breaches is a contract by which a party to it agrees to do or forbear doing two or more different things. Successive breaches occur in those cases only in which there is promise to perform periodically, as for example, payment of rent or maintenance. A contract such as we are concerned with in the present case, however, is a contract only for a single act, and when that act is rendered impossible of performance or negatived, the breach is complete, and it is over and done with, and there is no question of any further breach. Having wholly repudiated the contract in the first instance, what the decree-holder may do subsequently is merely in consequence of that breach, and is not a fresh breach of the contract to which he had previously put an end.

[18] There is one single Bench decision from Peshawar, Azim Khan v. Mt. Sahib Jan, 205 I. C. 20 : (A. I. R (30) 1943 Pesh. 13). In that case the learned Judge held that the filing of an execution application by a decree-holder against a judgment-debtor, who alleges that he has paid off the decree-holder privately, in itself gives the judgment-debtor a cause of action to bring a suit for relief, and for doing so the judgment-debtor need not wait until he is made to pay twice over or suffers some damages. I agree with that decision.

[19] In my opinion limitation in the present case ran from 1937, and the suit was barred by limitation.

[20] In this view there is no need to examine the third contention, but, as it has been argued, I may perhaps state my view briefly. Reliance is placed on J. H. Pattinson v. Sm. Bindhya Debi, 12 Pat. 216 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 196) and Bengal Nagpur Railway Company Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji, 65 I. A. 66 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. O. 67) but what those cases laid down was merely that in a suit for recovery of money due under a contract interest cannot be awarded unless provided for in the contract, and interest cannot be recovered in such a case as damages under S. 73, Contract Act. The reason is given that S. 73 is merely declaratory of the Common Law as to damages, and under the Common Law interest could not be allowed by way of damages for wrongful detention of debt. These cases deal, only with suits for recovery of money due, but the present suit is not for recovery of money due. It is for damages for breach of a contract, and not for recovery of the money paid. The considerations laid down in those cases, in my opinion, have no application to a suit like the present. Under S. 73, Contract Act, the party who suffers by the breach is entitled to receive from the party who has broken the contract, compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such a breach or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from the breach of it. Now what damage would naturally arise from the breach in a case such as the present? The payment was made in 1936. Had the decree-holder carried out his implied promise, the decree would have been satisfied in 1936. Owing to his breach the decree was executed in 1940. The execution would no doubt take place for the decretal dues with interest up to 1940, and, therefore, the judgment-debtor would have to pay not only the amount due in 1936, but interest on that amount as well up to 1940, and certainly I know of no principle on which it could be asserted that that loss could not be taken into account in fixing the measure of damages. Alternatively, the judgment-debtor paid Rs. 300 in 1936. Had that money remained with him up to 1940, he could in the usual course of things have earned interest upon it. Therefore, the act of the decree-holder deprived him not only of the money, but the interest which he could earn, and again I see no reason why that should not be taken into account. In my view, therefore, the Courts below were not wrong in allowing something by way of interest, though strictly speaking, it should not have been described as interest, but damages, and it should not be interest from the date of the second payment in 1940 up to the date of the suit but interest from 1936 on the amount paid then.

[21] As in my view the suit was barred by limitation, I would allow this appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout. I see no reason why the defendant should not get costs since there appears no good reason why the plaintiff waited from 1940 until 1943 to bring the suit.

[22] Ramaswami J.— There is a considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether interest can or cannot be recovered as damages under S. 73, Contract Act, where it is not recoverable under the Interest Act. In the Madras case Kamalammal v. Pearu Meera Levvai Rowthen, 20 Mad. 481 : (7 M. L. J. 263), the question arose whether interest could be recovered by way of damages under S. 73, where it was not recoverable under the Interest Act, and it was held that it could not be so recovered. The effect of the judgment in that case is that wherever interest could be claimed by way of damages, it would not be awarded unless either the requirements of the Interest Act are complied with, or interest is recoverable at Common Law. But according to the Calcutta High Court Khetra Mohan v. Aswini Kumar, 22 C. W. N. 488 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 448) interest may be awarded as damages for wrongful detention of money under S. 73, though there may be no agreement to pay interest and though the case may not be covered by the Interest Act. On the contrary in J. H. Pattinson v. Smt. Bindhya Debi, 12 Pat. 216 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat 196), a Division Bench of this Court after full review of all the authorities held that S. 73 was merely declaratory of the Common Law as to damages and under the Common Law interest could not be allowed by way of damages for wrongful detention of debt.

[23] In this context reference should be made to B. N. Rly. Co., Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji, 65 I. A. 66: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 67) in which the respondents instituted a claim on 29-11-1927, against the appellant railway company for a sum on account of work done by their predecessor in interest under three contracts in connection with the construction of a branch line. It was found that the original contract rates at which payment was to be made for various items of work done had been abandoned during the progress of the work with the consent of both parties, and that the price of the work done, determined on the basis of fair and reasonable rates, was Rs. 66,980-10-6 which the railway company were liable to pay to the respondents on 26-7-1925, after the completion of the work. Upon these facts the Judicial Committee held that in the absence of any usage or contract, express or implied, or of any provision of law to justify the award of interest on the decretal amount for the period before the institution of the suit, interest for that period could not be allowed by way of damages caused to the respondents for the wrongful detention of their money by the railway company. At p. 72, Sir Shadi Lal states,

"now S. 73, Contract Act, gives statutory recognition to the general rule that, in the event of a breach of a contract, the party who suffers by such breach is entitled to recover from the party breaking the contract compensation for any loss or damage thereby caused to him. On behalf of the plaintiffs, reliance is placed upon illustration (n) to that section. The illustration, however, does not deal with the right of a creditor to recover interest from his debtor on a loan advanced to the latter by the former. It only shows that if any person breaks his contract to pay to another person a sum of money on a specific date, and in consequence of that breach the latter is unable to pay his debts and is ruined, the former is not liable to make good to the latter anything except the principal sum which he promised to pay, together with interest up to the date of payment. He is not liable to pay damages of a remote character. The illustration does not confer upon a creditor a right to recover interest upon a debt which is due to him, when he is not entitled to such interest under any provision of the law. Nor can an illustration have the effect of modifying the language of the section which alone forms the enactment."

[24] Upon the facts proved in the present case I, therefore, doubt whether the plaintiffs would be entitled to claim interest upon the amount.

[25] It is, however, unnecessary to decide this point for I agree with my learned brother that the suit is barred by limitation and that the appeal should be allowed and the suit should be dismissed with costs throughout.

Lalnarayan Sinha and Lakshmi Narain Sinha—for Petitioners; Madan Mohan Pd—for Opposite Party.

Ramaswami J.—The question which arises for decision in this case is whether defendants 2 to 4 are necessary parties in the suit brought by the plaintiffs for redemption of the land in dispute.

[2] For the plaintiffs it was alleged that his ancestor had on 15-3-17 executed a rehan deed in favour of the father of defendant 1, for a sum of Rs. 50 with respect to 15 bighas 4 kathas 11 dhurs of land. A few months later defendant 1 executed a Bazidawa in favour of defendant party 2 treating the land as bakasht. The plaintiffs deposited the rehan money under S. 83, T. P. Act. After due service of notice on defendant party 1, they instituted a suit for redemption of the land. Defendant party 2 was impleaded on the ground that he interfered with the possession of the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif overruled the objection of the defendant party 2 and held that they were necessary parties for the decision of the suit.

[3] In support of the rule Mr. Lalnarain Sinha referred to the principle that in a suit for redemption, paramount title ought not to be normally drawn into controversy without the consent of the parties. It was pointed out that in the present case paramount title was in conflict with the title of the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee. For the opposite party reference was made to Zakirraza v. Madhusudan Dass, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 356 : (45 I. C. 691) and Khub Lal v. Jhapsi Kundu, A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 613 : (3 Pat. 244). But these cases must be distinguished for they proceeded upon the ground that the defendants who had set up paramount title appeared and contested the allegation set out in the plaint, that issues had been framed with their concurrence and so they could not afterwards object that the issues ought not to have been litigated, since they have already acquiesced in that course. In the present case, however, it is of importance to observe that the applicants as soon as they appeared in Court objected that the issue as to paramount title ought not to be tried and they should be struck off from the action. In the present case, therefore, I am of opinion that the learned Munsif was wrong to hold that the applicants were necessary parties but ought to have struck their names from the suit. This view is supported by Loknath Singh v. Santokhi Missir, 7 P. L. T. 737 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 45 : 27 Cr. L. J. 1240) in which the High Court interfered in a second appeal and dismissed the suit against the defendants who set up a paramount title but whose objection was not entertained by the lower Courts. The principle is laid down in Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan, 33 Cal. 425 : (3 C. L. J. 205) in which Ashutosh Mookerjee J. restated the ordinary rule that a plaintiff mortgagee cannot be allowed to frame his suit as to draw into controversy the title of a third party, who is in no way connected with the mortgage and who has set up a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and mortgagee. It was observed that the rule was not one of convenience merely and the fact of the question of such title being determined by the Court of first instance in breach of the rule did not preclude a Court of appeal from reversing the decree.

> "The interpretation which we put upon S. 85, leads necessarily to the conclusion that the proper scope of a mortgage suit is to cut off the equity of redemption and to bar the rights of the mortgagor and those claiming under him ; the only proper parties to such a suit are the mortgagor and the mortgagee and those who have acquired interest under them subsequent to the mortgage. It is not competent for the mortgagee to make as party defendant, one who claims adversely to the title of the mortgagor and mortgagee. He is a stranger to the mortgagee, has no connection with the mortgage, and as his adverse claim of title cannot in any way be affected by the mortgage suit in which he has no interest, he cannot be made a party for the purpose of litigating such claim of title."

Reference should also be made to Rameshwar Rai v. Harakh Lal, 20 Pat. 841 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 226) in which the learned Judges after examining a number of authorities deduced the general rule that in a mortgage suit paramount title ought not ordinarily be drawn into controversy without the assent of the parties.

[4] For the opposite party it was, however, objected that the question of misjoinder of parties or of causes of action is not a question of jurisdiction with which the High Court ought to interfere. This argument is not in my opinion untenable. It is true that High Court will not be justified in interfering on the sole ground that the trial Court has made a mistake in law. But here I think that it has done more than that. For it has entirely misunderstood the nature of the judicial discretion which it is called upon to exercise. In Velappa Nadar v. Chidambara Nadar, 43 M. L. J. 277 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Mad. 174) Venkatasubba Rao J. held that a decision on an issue in a suit to the effect that the suit is not bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action is subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C. The learned Judge reached the conclusion after examining a number of authorities.

[5] In my opinion this rule must be made absolute and defendants 2 to 4 should be struck off from the suit as not being necessary parties thereto. The application is allowed. There will be no order as to costs.

[6] Narayan J.—I agree.

SHEARER AND JAMUAR JJ.

Gopalji Sharma — Petitioner v. The State through Raghunandan Prasad — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 746 of 1950, D/- 15-11-1950.

Houses and Rents — Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 20 (2)—Tenant directed to vacate — Non-compliance, if punishable.

There is nothing in the Act to indicate that a non-compliance of the order which is executable under S. 17 of the Act cannot be subject-matter of prosecution under sub-s. (2) of S. 20. The order passed under S. 11 (2) by a Controller or by a Commissioner on appeal against a tenant to vacate a house within a certain time is clearly a direction for the non-compliance of which the tenant is liable to be punished under sub-s. (2) of S. 20. Under the provisions of the Act there is no bar for the landlord to apply to the civil Court for execution of that order or direction under S. 17 of the Act, and yet he may apply for the prosecution of the tenant for the non-compliance of the direction under sub-s. (2) of S. 20 of the Act. [Para 2]

Syed Akbar Hussain— for Petitioner; Shereshwar Prasad — for Opposite Party.

Jamuar J.—The petitioner is a tenant of a house under one Raghunandan Prasad which is situated in Terhi Ghat, police station Khajekalan, Patna City. On 21-1-1948, Raghunandan Prasad filed an application before the House Controller for the eviction of the petitioner from that house in the circumstances stated in the petition. The House Controller rejected the petition on 21-7-1948, and the landlord Raghunandan Prasad filed an appeal before the Commissioner against the order of the House Controller. In the meantime the landlord had also filed a money suit on 20-6-1948, for realisation of arrears of rent and obtained a decree. The appeal filed before the Commissioner, came to be heard by the Additional Commissioner who by his order dated 15-2-1949, allowed the appeal; and further made a direction against the petitioner to vacate the house by 25-5-1949. This direction has been disobeyed by the petitioner and he has not yet vacated the house as ordered by the Additional Commissioner. On 31-5-1949, that is, about a week after the expiry of the period allowed to the petitioner for vacating the house, the landlord filed a petition by way of a complaint before the Sub-divisional Officer, Patna City, for the prosecution of the petitioner under S. 20, Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947. Ultimately, the petitioner was put on trial for an offence under that section and was convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment as also to pay a fine of Rs. 25, and, in default, to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for two weeks. As against that judgment and order of conviction, the petitioner filed an appeal before the Sessions Judge of Patna, who, while upholding the conviction under S. 20 (2), Bihar Buildings Control Act, 1947, reduced the sentence of imprisonment to two months and maintained the fine. The petitioner has now come up to this Court in its revisional jurisdiction.

[2] Mr. Akbar Hussain for the petitioner has contended that the conviction of the petitioner is entirely illegal for the reason that in the circumstances of the case no prosecution could lie under S. 20, Bihar Buildings Control Act, at all. His contention was that sub-s. (2) of S. 20 of the Act makes the non-compliance of a direction made or deemed to have been made under the Act punishable, and the order of the Additional Commissioner made against the petitioner to vacate the house by a certain date did not amount to a direction within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 20 of the Act. He argued that under S. 17 of the Act every order made by the House Controller or by the Commissioner on appeal under S. 18 of the Act has been made executable by the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building in relation to which the order to be executed is passed, as if such order were a decree passed by such Court, so that the order passed by the Additional Commissioner to vacate the house was an order which could be executed by the civil Court under S. 17 of the Act, therefore the non-compliance of that order which amounts to a decree would not be punishable under sub-s. (2) of S. 20 of the Act. I am unable to accede to this contention. There is nothing in the Act to indicate that a non-compliance of the order which is executable under S. 17 of Act cannot be a subject-matter of prosecution under sub-s. (2) of S. 20. Section 11 (2) of the Act provides that a landlord who seeks to evict his tenant under sub-s. (1), shall apply to the Controller for a direction in that behalf, and if the Controller is satisfied that the tenant is liable to be evicted under the provisions of sub-s. (1), he shall make an order directing the tenant to put the landlord in possession of the building, and if the Controller is not so satisfied, he shall make an order rejecting the application. In my opinion, the order passed by a Controller or by a Commissioner on appeal against a tenant to vacate a house within a certain time is clearly a direction for the non-compliance of which the tenant is liable to be punished under sub-s. (2) of S. 20. Under the provisions of the Act there is no bar, in my opinion, for the landlord to apply to the civil Court for execution of that order or direction under S. 17 of the Act, and yet he may apply for the prosecution of the tenant for the non-compliance of the direction under sub-s. (2) of S. 20 of the Act. In these circumstances it is impossible to interfere with the conviction of the petitioner. I think, however, that there is room for interference with the sentence which has been imposed upon him. In the particular circumstances of this case I do not think that there is any necessity for sending the petitioner to jail. I would therefore, set aside the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon the petitioner, but I would enhance the amount of fine to Rs. 100, and in default to suffer two weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

[3] With these modifications in the sentence imposed upon the petitioner, the application is dismissed.

[4] Shearer J.—I agree.

Atta Karim—Appellant v. Mt. Bibi Habiba Soghra — Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 236 of 1948, D/- 28-2-1950.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 51—Money decree—Execution by arrest of judgment-debtor—Onus of proof —Order when can be made.

According to S. 51, Civil P. C., as it stands after the amendment by Act XXI [21] of 1936, the onus of proof is on the decree-holder to establish that the judgment-debtor had sufficient means to pay the decree within the meaning of sub-cl. (b) of the proviso to S. 51. Though by the amendment of the section some restrictions have been placed on the right of the decree-holder to obtain an order of arrest, such an order can be made when it is found that the judgment-debtor, though perfectly capable of paying the decree money, has neglected to pay it. [Para 2]

Thus, where a judgment-debtor, who was a Sub-Registrar owning some property, was found to have delayed or obstructed the payment of the dower debt for which a decree was obtained by his divorced wife, an order of execution of the decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor was passed: A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 380 and A.I.R. (13) 1926 Lah. 110, Rel. on. [Para 2]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 51, N. 5a.

K. C. Sanyal, Shamshul Hoda and A. H. Quadri — for Appellant; R. S. Sinha — for Respondent.

Narayan J. — This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding. The respondent obtained a decree for Rs. 5000 against the appellant on 11-1-1943, this amount having been claimed by the respondent as her dower. On appeal to this Court the decree was varied and Rs. 10,000 was allowed as dower to this respondent. The decree was put under execution and the judgment-debtor appeared in the execution case on 2-11-1943 and made a prayer to the effect that execution be stayed till the disposal of the appeal which he had preferred to the High Court. He was allowed time till 12-1-1944 and meanwhile an order was received from the High Court according to which the judgment-debtor was allowed to deposit the decretal amount in four equal instalments. This Court permitted the judgment-debtor to pay the decree money in instalments of Rs. 1250 each. There was, however, default by the judgment-debtor and because of the default the decree-holder applied for issue of notice under O. 21, R. 37, Civil P. C. against him. The judgment-debtor then objected but his objection was overruled and order for issue of warrant of arrest was passed. On 7-9-1944, the judgment-debtor prayed for recalling the order for the issue of warrant of arrest and after this petition had been heard the judgment-debtor was held to be in possession of properties yielding an income of about Rs. 400 per year. There was again an order by the Court permitting the judgment-debtor to pay the decree money in instalments and the judgment-debtor went on making payments till 19-1-1946. In the meantime his appeal before this Court was dismissed. Again for the third time by an order dated 2-7-1946 the judgment-debtor was allowed to pay the decree money in instalments and he made some payments but ultimately the order dated 2-7-1946 was set aside by the High Court. The decree-holder therefore again proceeded with the execution and the judgment-debtor filed an objection contending that he was not liable to be arrested. The judgment-debtor relied on S. 51, Civil P. C., as it stands after the amendment made in 1936. There is a proviso added to this section which says that where the decree is for the payment of money, execution by detention in prison shall not be ordered unless, after giving the judgment-debtor an opportunity of showing cause why he should not be committed to prison, the Court, for reasons recorded in writing, is satisfied (a) that the judgment-debtor, with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the execution of the decree is likely to abscond or leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or has, after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed, dishonestly transferred, concealed, or removed any part of his property or committed any other act of bad faith in relation to his property; or (b) that the judgment-debtor has, or has had since the date of the decree, the means to pay the amount of the decree or some substantial part thereof and refuses or neglects or has refused or neglected to pay the same, or (c) that the decree is for a sum for which the judgment-debtor was bound in a fiduciary capacity to account. The objection of the judgment-debtor was heard and the learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that sub-cl. (b) of the proviso is applicable to this case inasmuch as the judgment-debtor, though he had the means to pay the decree, has neglected to pay it. The learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out that the execution has been pending for the last five years and that though there was a decree for Rs. 10,000 as dower and for Rs. 1400 as costs against this judgment-debtor he has up till now paid a sum of Rs. 3600 only towards the decree. Mr. Sanyal on behalf of the appellant has stressed the fact that the judgment-debtor has made payments from time to time and he argues that this is a circumstance which indicates that he has not refused or neglected to pay the decree money.

[2] The main question therefore is whether the judgment-debtor has had since the date of the decree the means to pay the amount of the decree or a substantial part thereof. We have got two depositions of this judgment-debtor on the record and from a perusal of these depositions I am satisfied that the judgment-debtor has had the means to pay the decree money. He stated on 1-7-1944 that in December 1937, he had executed a sale-deed in favour of the children of his first wife with regard to the properties yielding an income of Rs. 600 or Rs. 700 per year and that the income from the properties still in his hands was Rs. 400 per year. It is clear from his deposition that besides owning zamindary property yielding an income of Rs. 400 a year he is in possession of certain khudkasht or bakasht lands. His statement is that he has got khudkasht lands in Hundrahi and Bhatta, but unfortunately he has avoided stating the exact area of the bakasht lands. Certainly it is very difficult to believe his statement that he does not remember the exact area of his bakasht lands and is not able to give any idea of those lands. This statement of the judgment-debtor shows that it is not only a few bighas of bakasht lands which are in his possession. If he would have really only possessed a few bighas of bakasht lands it was very easy for him to say that the area of the bakasht land, in his possession is quite negligible. In another deposition which the judgment-debtor gave on 6-7-1948 he stated that he had got about 50 bighas of bhaoli lands. If he has 50 bighas of bhaoli lands that would be equivalent to about 25 bighas of bakasht lands and even this property must be regarded as a valuable property specially in these days when prices of lands are very high. I therefore see no reason to disagree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the judgment-debtor, though he had the means to pay the amount of the decree or a very substantial part thereof, has neglected to pay it. Mr. Sanyal was perfectly right when he said that according to S. 51 of the Code as it stands after the amendment by Act XXI [21] of 1936 the onus of proof is on the decree-holder to establish that the judgment-debtor had sufficient means to pay the decree within the meaning of sub-cl. (b) of the proviso to S. 51. But as was pointed out by a Division Bench of this Court in Kamaldhari Lal v. Kamleshwari Sahay, 1939 P. W. N. 604 : (A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 380) though by the amendment of S. 51 of the Code some restrictions have been placed on the right of the decree-holder to obtain an order of arrest, such an order of arrest can be made when it is found that the judgment-debtor though perfectly capable of paying the decree money has neglected to pay it. Rowland J. who delivered the judgment of the Division Bench expressed his agreement with the decision in Hargobind v. Hakim Singh, 6 Lah. 548 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Lah. 110) and in this Lahore case Sir Shadi Lal C. J. had quoted the observation of the Judicial Committee that "the difficulties of a litigant in India begin when he has obtained a decree. The learned Chief Justice further observed that it was a matter of common knowledge that far too many obstacles were placed in the way of a decree-holder who sought to execute his decree against the property of the judgment-debtor, and therefore a decree-holder at times finds it easier to apply for the arrest of his judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor in this case happens to be a Sub-Registrar but if he has neglected to pay the decree money I should not hesitate to uphold the order that has been passed against him. In my opinion it is an abnormal thing for a man of his position to avoid, delay or obstruct the payment of the dower debt which he was liable to pay to his wife who has now been divorced.

[3] I see no merit in this appeal and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 107 — Appreciation of evidence by appellate Court — Interference on question of fact.

The functions of a Court of appeal in dealing with a question of fact are limited in their character and scope. Where the decision mainly rests on oral evidence, the Court of appeal must have regard to the exceptional value of the opinion of the Judge of first instance. In a case which turns on the conflicting testimony of witnesses and the belief to be reposed on them, the appellate Court can never recapture the initial advantage of the Judge who saw and believed. The Court of appeal must, in order to reverse the decision of the trial Judge, not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right, but be convinced that it is wrong. [Para 9]

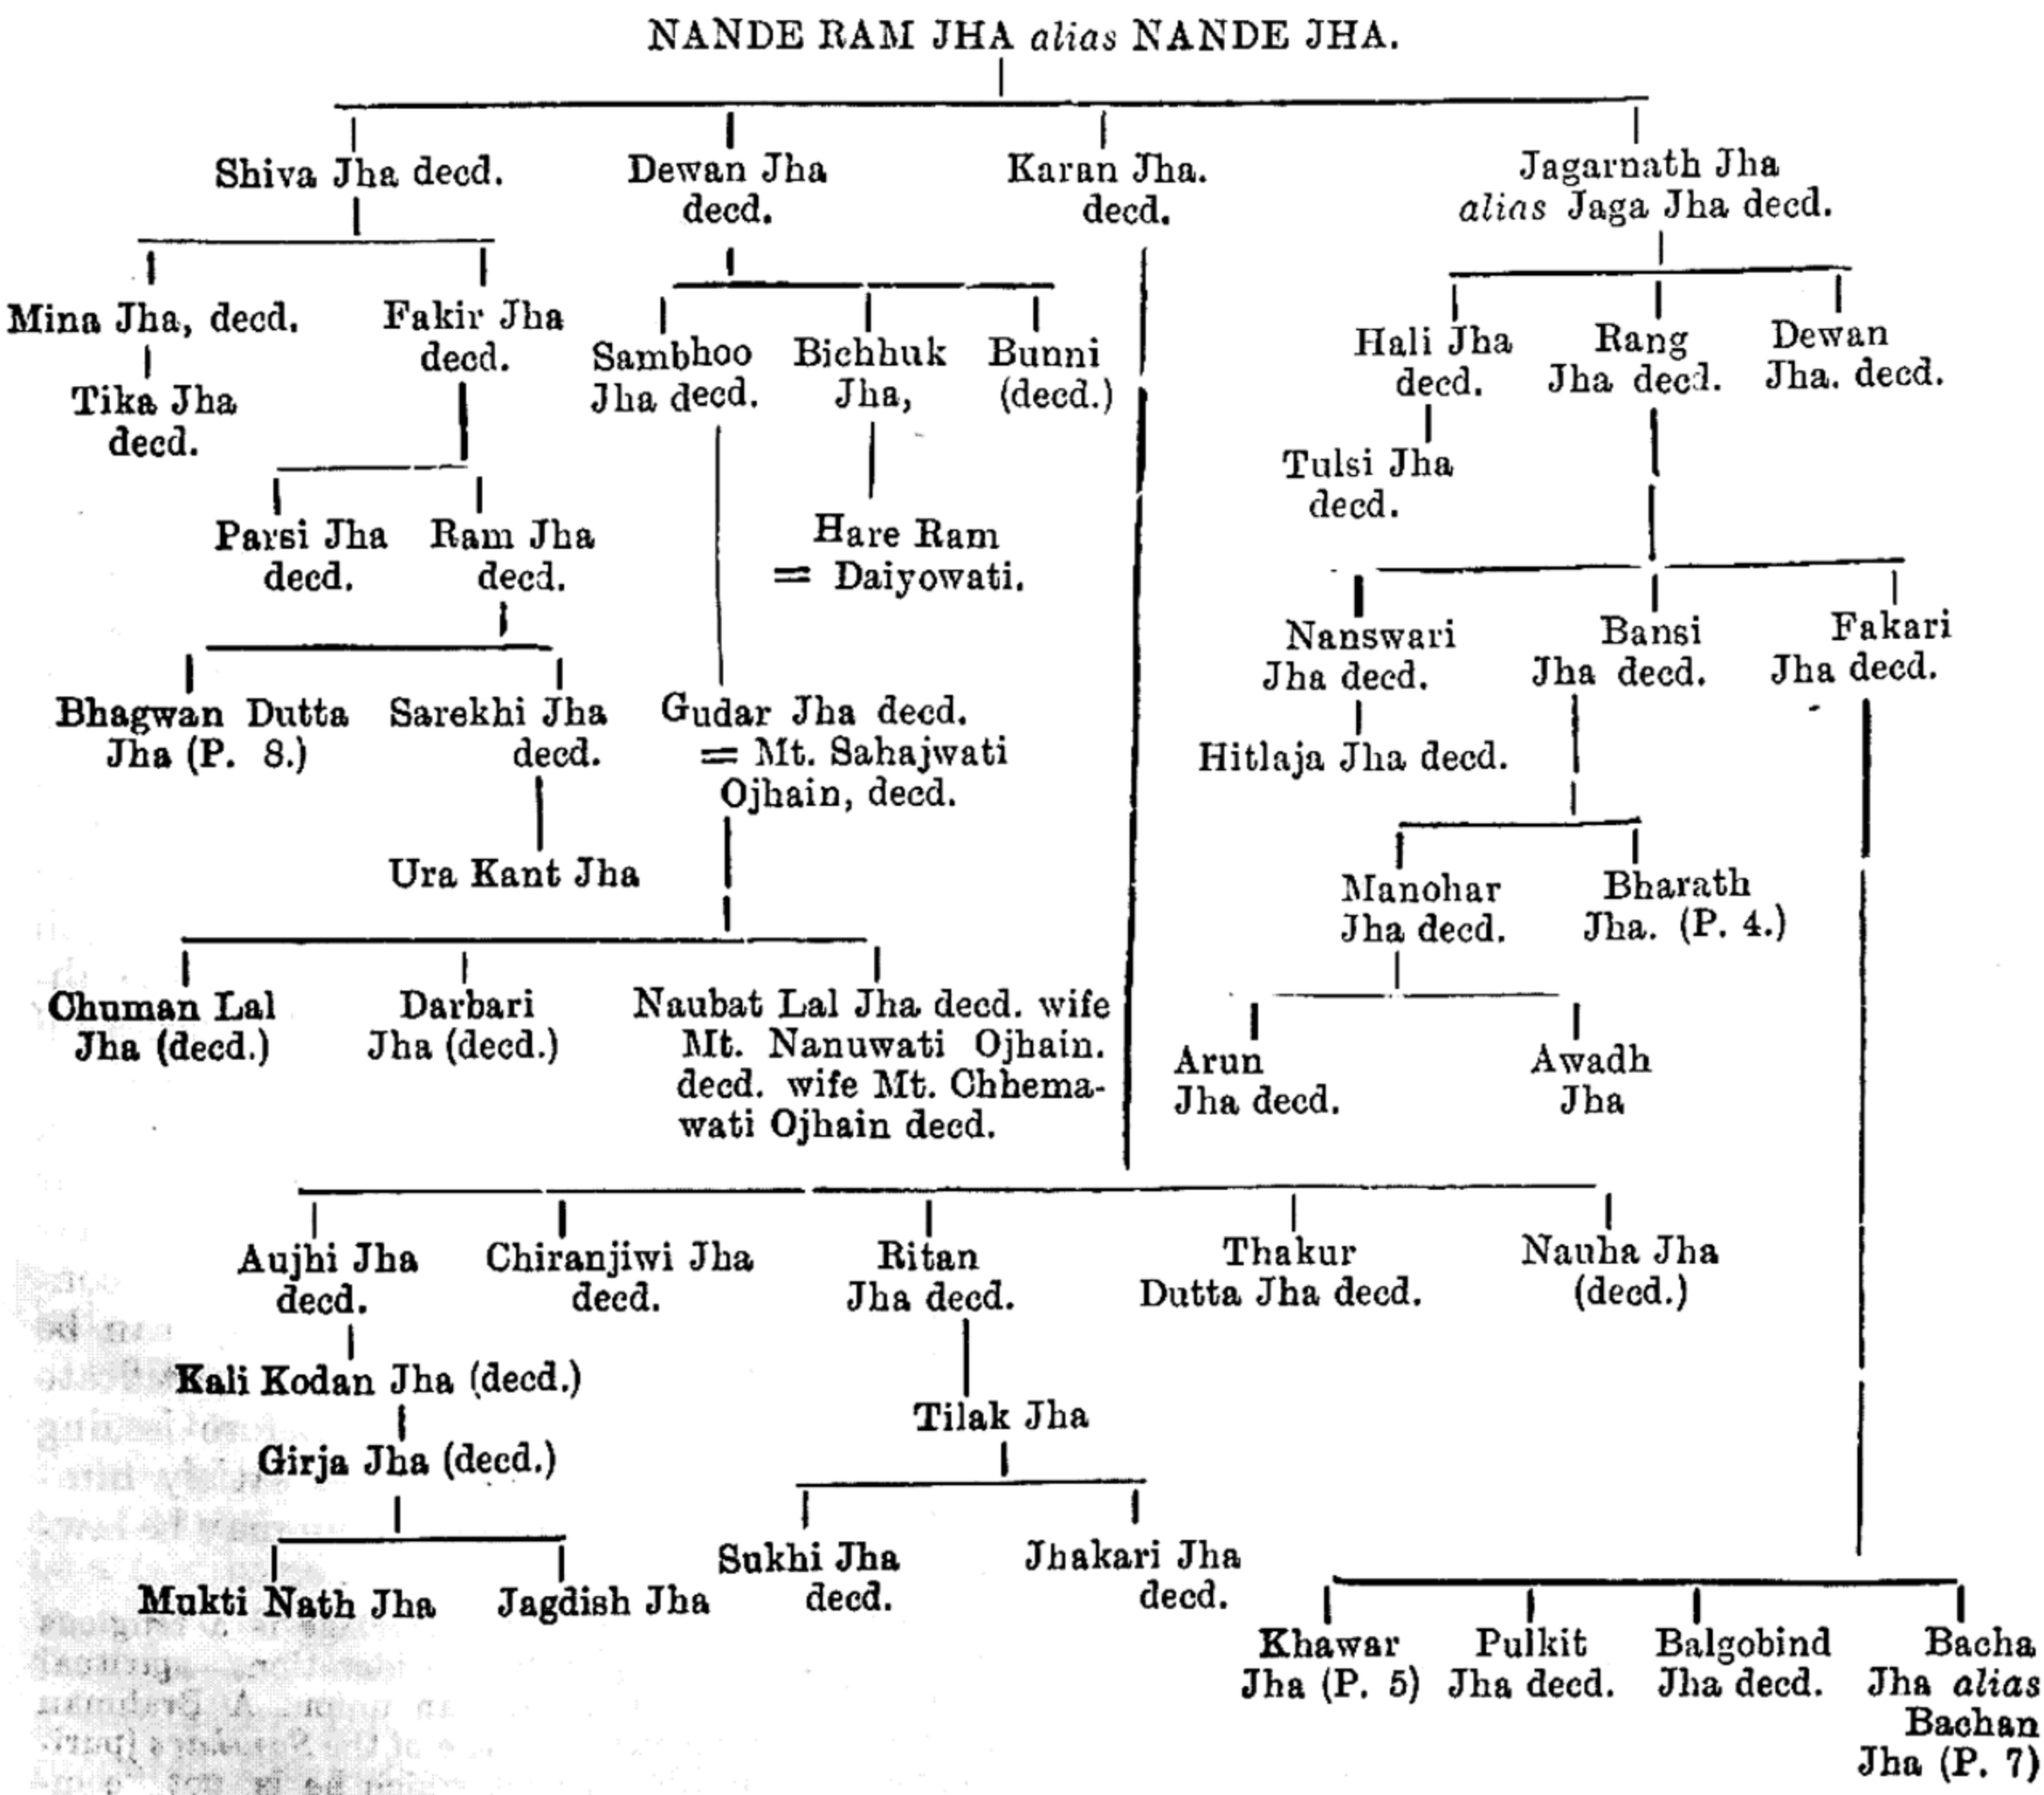
(c) Hindu Law — Widow — Accretion — Nature of — Burden of proof — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103.

The question whether properties acquired by a widow out of savings from income from her husband's estate form an accretion to her widow's estate or constitute her stridhan property must be determined according to the intention of the widow in dealing with those properties. A person who alleges accretion must show that the property was acquired by the widow with that intention : A. I. R. (5) 1918 P. C. 156, Rel. on ; A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 364, Dissent. [Para 11]

B. C. De, Ramakant Verma and K. D. De — for Appellants ; L. K. Jha, B. N. Mitter, Prem Lall, A. K. Mitter and Srinath Singh—for Respondents.

Ramaswami J. — This appeal is by the defendants first and second parties from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga. The plaintiffs brought the suit claiming that they were the nearest reversioners of one Naubat Lal Jha, who died in 1879, leaving two widows, Mt. Nanuwati and Mt. Chemawati and his mother Mt. Sahajwati Ojhain. The following pedigree will elucidate the relationship of the parties :



After death of Naubat Lal both the widows obtained possession of the estate but Mt. Sahajwati was granted only maintenance. Sahajwati died in 1909 ; and Nanuwati in 1911 when the whole estate devolved on Mt. Chemawati. On 5-11-1915 Mt. Chemawati dedicated all the properties to certain deities by a registered deed of Samarpannama. She constituted herself as shebait for her life time but she provided that after her death Mahant Ramsarup Das would succeed as shebait. Mahant Ramsarup Das, however, died in the life time of Mt. Chemawati. In 1931 she, therefore, executed a deed of shebaitnama appointing Mahant Gopal Das as shebait of the said deities. In 1933 the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants for a declaration that the deed of endowment executed by Mt. Chemawati was void and not binding upon their reversioners. In that suit the defendants contended that the plaintiffs were not the nearest reversioners of Naubat Lal Jha. But the plaintiffs obtained a decree. On appeal the High Court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by time; but the other issues raised were expressly left open. After Mt. Chemawati died on 5-8-40, the plaintiffs brought the present suit. They sought a declaration that the deed of endowment and shebaitnama executed by Mt. Chemawati were void and fraudulent and they were entitled to possession of the properties on the death of Mt. Chemawati. It is necessary to state that plaintiffs second party have conveyed 10 annas share of the properties to plaintiffs first party who in consideration thereof have agreed to meet the costs of litigation.

[2] Defendants 1st party contested the suit on the ground that plaintiffs 2nd party were not the nearest agnates of Naubat Lal Jha. As regards the disputed properties the defendants 1st party claimed that Naubt Lal was not the owner thereof; that the properties had from long before appertained to the deities and Naubat Lal Jha had acted merely as a shebait. In the alternative, defendants 1st party claimed that at any rate the properties mentioned in Sch. 3, of the deed of endorsement were the stridhan of Mt. Chemawati and she could make a valid endowment in favour of the deities.

[3] The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs were the nearest reversioners of Naubat Lal Jha, that the properties in dispute belonged to Naubat Lal Jha and not to the Thakurbari. As regards Sch. 3 of the deed of endowment the Subordinate Judge held that there was no evidence to show that these properties constituted the stridhan of Mt. Chemawati and she had power to alienate. Upon these findings the Subordinate Judge pronounced a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

[4] Two main questions were discussed in hearing of the appeal, viz., (1) whether the plaintiffs were the nearest heirs of Naubat Lal Jha and so were competent to bring the suit; (2) whether the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that the properties mentioned in Sch. 3 of the deed of endowment did not constitute the stridhan of Mt. Chemawati.

[5] On the important question of pedigree the parties have produced evidence of a very contradictory nature. The plaintiffs alleged that their ancestor Shiva Jha and Jaya Jha were the brothers of Dewan Jha, who was the great grand-father of Naubat. They stated that Shiva Jha, Jaya Jha and Dewan Jha were all sons of Nande Jha, who belonged to Jajuare Pachahi Mul. The defendants did not dispute that the plaintiffs are descendants of Shiva Jha and Jaya Jha or that Naubat Lal was descendant of Nande Jha and belonged to Jajuare Pachahi Mul. The defendants, however, denied that Shiva Jha and Jaya Jha were brothers of Dewan. They asserted on the contrary that Shiva Jha, Jaya Jha and Karan Jha were sons of one Guni Jha and that they all belonged to Jajuare Bhargao Mul. The question at issue, therefore, is whether Shiva Jha, Jaya Jha, Dewan Jha and Karan Jha were full brothers, as claimed by the plaintiffs. (After discussion of the oral evidence the judgment proceeds :)

[6] At this stage it is necessary to state that both parties exhibited panjis to corroborate the oral evidence of pedigree. Panjis are palm-leaf manuscripts of pedigree systematically maintained by Panjiaras (or genealogists) in the community of Maithil Brahmins. It is the agreed case of the parties that such a system is scrupulously maintained in order to prevent marriages being contracted within forbidden degree. There is a reference to this custom in Crooke's Tribes and Castes vol. 3 p. 411, 1896; O'Malley-Gazetteer of Darbhanga District p. 39; Journal of Bihar and Orissa Research Society, vol. 3, p. 515. Panjikars are selected after they pass a regular test prescribed by the Maharajah of Darbhanga, who is the head of Maithil Brahmins, and who issues certificates to successful candidates. The primary duty of the panjikars is to maintain regular records of pedigree of the Maithil Brahmins. In order to keep their records up-to-date, the Panjikars go on regular tours and make enquiries. The panjis are considered so important that no marriage can be celebrated unless panjikars issues a certificate of sanction called Siddhanta. Before issuing the certificate the panjikar must satisfy himself that the bride and bride-groom may be lawfully married :

"With a Maithil Brahman, marriage is a religious rite; it is based upon spiritual considerations—spiritual benefits derivable from such an union. A Brahman ought to marry because it is one of the Sanskars (purifications) of his life without which he is not "complete", nor competent to do any of the duties of Girhastha (householder). He ought to marry because a son born of such marriage will save the parents from the hell named 'Pun'. A son (Putra) means he who saves one from the hell 'Pun'. Consequently the marriage must be in conformity with Shastric injunctions. A bride must be more than fifth in descent on the mother's side and more than sixth on the father's from the last common ancestor of her and the bridegroom. One cannot marry the daughter of his stepmother's brother, nor can he marry a girl who is an offspring of his grandfather, and so forth. Any infringement of these rules not only invalidates the marriage but is a grievous sin. And as a safeguard against such an invalid marriage, entries of the relationship with names of members of all the different Maithil families are kept from an ancient time by the Panjikars or Panjiars (genealogists) of Mithila (Journal of Bihar and Research Society, Vol. 3, p. 515).

[7] For the plaintiffs panjis (EXS. 4 series) were exhibited in order to support the oral evidence of pedigree. If these panjis be authentic, they would completely establish the plaintiffs' case that Dewan Jha, Shiva Jha, Karan Jha and Jaya Jha were the sons of Nande Jha. P. W. 29 Nirsu alias Biswanath and P. W. 31 Lachmi Narain Jha proved the panjis (EXS. 4 to 4-G). Kumar Lal Jha had proved EX. 4-D in the previous title suit. His evidence is EX. 25-A. On behalf of the appellants it was pointed out that in the previous suit, EXS. 4 to 4-C and 4-E were not filed. But it is undisputed that EXS. 4-D, 4-F and 4-G were filed in that suit. For the appellants comment was made that Khantar Jha admitted in his evidence that he had dictated genealogy to Kumar Lal Jha. Kumar Lal Jha, however, stated that EX. 4-D was written partly by his father, that he was unable to identify the hand-writing of the other part. There is to my mind no real contradiction between the evidence of Khantar and of Kumar Lal Jha. It was then objected for the appellants that unless the hand-writing of the whole of EX. 4-D was proved, the document was not admissible in evidence. But this argument is untenable. In my opinion, it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove by whom the panji was written, if we recognise the admitted system of maintaining panjis in Mithila. In the present case Kumar Lal Jha has stated that EX. 1 is partly written by his father and partly by his ancestor whose writing he could not identify. The Subordinate Judge has rightly accepted his evidence as true. If so, the panji (EX. 4-D) is admissible in evidence. In a similar case Jahangir v. Sheoraj Singh, 37 ALL. 600 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 ALL. 334), a document ancient and genuine purporting to be a family pedigree was produced in evidence in a mutation case by one Jiraj. Jiraj stated that he had received the pedigree from his grand-father. But it was not proved who had prepared the pedigree. The High Court held that it was not necessary to show who has made the statements mentioned in the pedigree and that it was admissible in evidence under s. 32, cl. (6), Evidence Act. In Mt. Anandi v. Nand Lal, 46 ALL. 665: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 ALL. 575), it was pointed out that a family pedigree may be a pedigree kept by a member of the family or by another person on its behalf. In that case a book maintained by the members of a family of hereditary bards and containing entries of domestic events occurring from time to time in the family to which they rendered services as bards, was held admissible as evidence concerning the relationship of the various members of the family, whose history was entered therein. (After discussion of the defence evidence the judgment proceeds).

[8] In my opinion, the Subordinate Judge rightly held that the panjis (EXS. 4 series) are genuine. They completely support the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs that they are the nearest agnates of Naubat Lal Jha.

[9] In this context it is of great importance to remember that the functions of a Court of appeal in dealing with a question of fact are limited in their character and scope. Where the decision mainly rests on oral evidence, the Court of appeal must have regard to the exceptional value of the opinion of the Judge of first instance. He has had the opportunity of watching the demeanour of witnesses, he has observed the drift and conduct of the case, he has impressed upon him by hearing every word, the scope and nature of the evidence in a way that is denied to any Court of appeal. In a case which turns on the conflicting testimony of witnesses and the belief to be reposed on them, the appellate Court can never recapture the initial advantage of the Judge who saw and believed. In Powell v. Strentham Maner Nursing Home, (1935) A. C. 243 : (104 L. J. K. B. 304), Lord Wright observed :

"Two principles are beyond controversy. First, it is clear that, in an appeal of this character, that is from the decision of a trial Judge based on his opinion of the trustworthiness of witnesses whom he has seen, the Court of appeal must, in order to reverse, not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right, but be convinced that it is wrong."

In Watt or Thomas v. Thomas, (1947) A. C. 484 : (1947-1 All E. R. 582), Lord Thankerton re-stated the principle :

"Where a question of fact has been tried by a Judge without a jury, and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the Judge, an appellate Court which is disposed to come to a different conclusion on the printed evidence should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial Judge by reason of having seen and heard the witnesses, could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial Judge's conclusion."

In Prem Singh v. Deb Singh, 1947 A. L. J. 613 : (A. I R. (35) 1948 P. C. 20) the Judicial Committee quoted this statement of principle, reversed the High Court decree and restored that of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the finding of the trial Judge on the oral evidence should have been accepted by the High Court.

[10] In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has expressly accepted the testimony of P. W. 6, Khantar Jha, and P. Ws. 26, 30 and 38 on the question of pedigree. He rejected the evidence of the defendants' witnesses on this point. He expressly held that D. W.-22, Awadh Behari Das, being a Bairagi could not have performed the sradha of Mt. Chemawati; and that his evidence that he did perform the sradh was manifestly false. As regards the panjis, the Subordinate Judge held that the panjikars (P. Ws.-29 and 31) have given credible evidence and the panjis, they produced were genuine and absolutely reliable. On the contrary he disbelieved the evidence of D. W.-35, Nirsu Jha, and the panjis (Exs. 10 Series) produced for defendant. On behalf of the appellants Mr. B. C. De addressed elaborate arguments to show that the plaintiffs' evidence was unreliable. But we cannot take the responsibility of reversing the conclusion of the trial Judge, for we are not satisfied that his decision is wrong, or that the evidence on which he relied is so improbable as to be unbelievable, or otherwise unworthy of acceptance. It was next contended on behalf of the appellants that even if the plaintiffs were the nearest reversioners of Naubat Lal, they could not succeed with respect to the properties mentioned in Sch. 3 of the deed of endowment. In para. 9 of the plaint the plaintiffs alleged that the properties in Sch. 3 had been wrongly described as self-acquired properties of Mt. Chemawati. In para. 20 of the written statement the defendants specifically asserted that the properties were stridhan of Mt. Chemawati. It is the agreed case that these properties were purchased after the death of Naubat Lal Jha out of the income of the estate. But neither party has adduced evidence to prove whether Mt. Chemawati intended the properties purchased to be her stridhan or to be accretions to her husband's estate. For the respondents reliance was placed on Sheo Lochan Singh v. Saheb Singh, 14 I. A. 63: (14 Cal. 387 P. C.) in which the purchased properties were dealt with by the widows as accretions to their husband's estate, and the original properties and such accretions were treated by the widows precisely alike in the deed of gift which they executed in favour of the alleged adopted son. The Judicial Committees held upon the evidence that the properties were accretions, and proceeded to observe:

"Where a widow comes into possession of the property of the husband, and receives the income, and does not spend it, but invests it in the purchase of other property, their Lordships think that, prima facie, it is the intention of the widow to keep the estate of the husband as an entire estate, and that the property purchased would, prima facie, be intended to be accretions to that estate."

But this is only a dictum which must be understood with reference to the facts and circumstances of that case. It cannot be read as a statement of law for it is expressed merely in terms of an inference of fact. The obiter dictum is more than counter-balanced by the actual decision of the Judicial Committee in a much later case Saudamini Dasi v. Administrator-General of Bengal, 20 I. A. 12: (20 Cal. 433 P. C.) where the income which accrued from the husband's estate after his death for about eight years subsequent to his death and which was not disposed of by his will came to his widow as heir-at-law, and she invested the same in Government securities worth two lakhs of rupees; and after the lapse of about twenty years she disposed of the same as her own. It was held that the money so invested by her belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate and was subject to her disposition. The Judicial Committee observed:

"It was said she had placed it in investments of a permanent nature. Had she done so, it does not appear to their Lordships that this circumstance alone would have added the fund to the estate devolving on her husband's heir."

In Venkatadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao, 52 I. A. 214: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 105) the widow never obtained actual possession of the income to which she was entitled and the question arose as to whether she was entitled to dispose of it by will. Their Lordships observed:

"That income or any part of it, she could, while she remained entitled to it, have added as an accretion to the Medur estate if she had wished to do so. There is no evidence to suggest that she had ever added any part of that income as an accretion to the Medur estate. She was consequently entitled to dispose of it by will or otherwise."

In Navaneetha Krishna v. Collector of Tinnevelly, 69 M. L. J. 632: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 1017) the Madras High Court held, as well established that the income of a woman's estate remained at her disposal in the absence of any thing done by her to show that she treated the accumulation as part of the last male holder's estate. In Balasubrahmanya v. Subbayya, 65 I. A. 93: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 34) the Judicial Committee affirmed that decision holding that both the savings which were in the hands of the Court of Wards and the money which was in the widow's own possession were the personal property of the Rani and would pass under her will.

[11] The true position is stated by Lord Phillimore in Raja of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasari, 46 I. A. 64: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 P. C. 156):

"A widow may so deal with the income of her husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus. It may be that the presumption is the other way. A case has been cited to their Lordships which seems so to say (25 Mad. 351). But at the out side it is a presumption and it is a question of fact to be determined, if there is any dispute, whether a widow has or has not so dealt with her property."

On behalf of the respondents reference was made to Ramran Bijoy Pd. Singh v. Krishna Madho Singh, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 364 : (182 I. C. 982) where a Division Bench held that where a widow invests the income of the husband's estate in the purchase of other property the intention of the widow must be prima facie deemed to make purchased property an accretion to the husband's estate. But (with the greatest respect) this decision appears incorrect for it is opposed to the Privy Council authorities and is inconsistent with Prasad Kuer v. Baijnath Prasad, 14 Pat. 518 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 200) and Jamuna Prasad v. Ram Padarath, 18 P. L. T. 765: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Pat. 619) in which the learned Judges held that the onus was upon the party who alleged accretion, to show that the property which was purchased by the widow from her own savings was not her own but was intended to be an accretion to the estate. In the present case the plaintiffs have alleged that the properties of Sch. 3 of the deed of endowment were accretion to the widow's estate. The onus of proof was upon them, but they have not produced any evidence to show that the widow's intention was such. On the contrary in the deed of endowment Mt. Chemawati herself has clearly recited that the Sch. 3 properties were self-acquired. This important recital together with the circumstance that the widow separately enumerated the properties in the deed of endowment clearly suggest that the widow never intended to merge the properties with her husband's estate. As regards these properties, it is manifest that Mt. Chemawati could validly execute a deed of endowment, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree.

[12] Upon these grounds I hold that the deed of endowment and shebaitnama are valid with respect to the properties mentioned in Schs. 1 and 2, the plaintiffs being found to be the nearest reversioners of Naubat Lal Jha, are entitled to a declaration of their title and recovery of possession and to mesne profits from the date of death of Mt. Chemawati till possession is delivered.

[13] Accordingly I would alter the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and allow the appeal to this extent with proportionate costs.

Rai J.—This appeal is by the heirs of one Parmanand Singh, who along with others, had filed a title suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, for a declaration that the order dated 14-9-1939, as finally confirmed by the appellate order dated 10-9-1940, reducing the rentals of the holdings in suit is ultra vires, illegal and without jurisdiction and not binding upon the plaintiffs.

[2] The plaintiffs claimed the relief on various grounds including the one that all the landlords had not been impleaded in the proceedings under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act, before the Revenue Courts, and, as such, the orders passed in those proceedings were ultra vires and without jurisdiction.

[3] The defence put forward by the tenants-defendants was, that those of the landlords who had been impleaded in the proceedings would be deemed to have represented all the landlords, and, as such, the orders passed by Revenue Courts cannot be attacked in the present suit as being one without jurisdiction.

[4] The trial Court decreed the suit. But, on appeal by the tenants-defendants, the judgment and decree passed by the trial Court was modified. The appellate Court has held that the order of the Revenue Courts reducing the rent of the holdings would not bind Mt. Jit Kuer, or her heirs and legal representatives, but it was binding upon the present appellants who are the heirs of Parmanand Singh, deceased, the original plaintiff. Being aggrieved by the said judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court, the appellants have come up in second appeal before this Court.

[5] Mr. Lakshmansaran Sinha, the learned counsel for the appellants, has contended that as all the landlords had not been impleaded in the proceedings taken under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act, the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to reduce the rent of the holdings. The petition filed by the tenants for reducing of rent has been exhibited in this case, and is Ex. 3 on the record. In that petition under the heading "Name and residence of landlord" the following persons were named: "Sheorachcha Singh ogairah, Babu Rajendra Prasad Singh and Kishundeba Singh." The column recites the various addresses of the landlords named therein. Now, both the Courts have proceeded on the assumption that Jit Kuer, one of the landlords, and Parmanand Singh, another co-sharer landlord, had not been impleaded in the petition that was filed under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act. It was contended on behalf of the respondents by Mr. De that Sheorachcha Singh would be deemed to have represented the interest of Mt. Jit Kuer and that Bishundeva Singh would be deemed to have represented the interest of Parmanand Singh. The lower appellate Court, while dealing with this point, has come to the conclusion that Bishundeva Singh being the elder brother and karta of the family will be deemed to have represented the interest of Parmanand Singh also in the proceedings, and, hence, Parmanand Singh would be bound by the orders passed by the Revenue Court. As regards Mt. Jit Kuer, the lower appellate Court has taken the view that she was not represented in the proceedings, and she or her heirs and legal representatives would not be bound by the orders passed in the rent reduction proceedings.

[6] Mr. Lakshmansaran Sinha next contended that the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to decide the question of reduction of rent had been conferred by statute, and that jurisdiction can be exercised only if the case comes within the four corners of the powers that had been conferred on the Revenue Courts by the said statute. He contended that the right of the entire body of landlords to realise rent at a particular rate cannot be interfered with unless a proceeding is taken under S. 112A after impleading all of them as parties to those proceedings and after serving them with notice as enjoined by the rules framed under the Bihar Tenancy Act concerning the rent reduction proceedings. In support of his proposition he relied upon two Division Bench decisions of this Court, namely, Raja Surajpal v. Ramgati, 26 Pat. 353 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 239) and Basdeonarain v. Karumahton, 26 Pat. 592 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 153). In the former case, Imam J. held :

"As to the second point, it is clear that in the rent reduction proceedings under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act, only defendant 1 was made a party and the other landlords of the holding were not made parties. No notices were issued to them. The decision was given in their absence. It is quite clear that in these circumstances the order reducing the rent was without jurisdiction."

His Lordship thereafter dealt with various rules framed under the Bihar Tenancy Act enjoining a particular procedure to be followed regarding service of the notice. In the other case of Basdeonarain v. Karumahton, 26 Pat. 592 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 153) the same view was taken by a Division Bench of this Court. A similar question arose for consideration before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagdishwar Dayal Singh v. Dwarka Singh, 12 Pat. 626 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 P. C. 122). There, the question in controversy was whether a sale held under S. 208, Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act, was within the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner. In that case what had happened was that one of the tenure-holders had not been impleaded either in the rent suit or in the execution proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner, and in his absence the tenure was sold under S. 208, Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act. Section 208, Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act, ran as follows :

"When a decree passed by the Deputy Commissioner under this Act is for an arrear of rent due in respect of a tenure or holding, the decree-holder may apply for the sale of such tenure or holding, and the tenure or holding may thereupon be brought to sale, in execution of the decree, according to the provisions for the sale of under-tenures contained in the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1865; and all the provisions of that Act, except Ss. 12, 13, 14 and 15 thereof, shall, as far as may be, apply to such sale."

Now, dealing with the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were of opinion that when a statutory jurisdiction is conferred on a Revenue Court, the jurisdiction must be exercised within the statutory powers conferred. This pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee can be relied upon to decide the controversy in the present action also. The Revenue Court had been conferred statutory jurisdiction to decide the question of reduction of rent within particular limits. Section 112A and the other relevant sections of the Bihar Tenancy Act read with the rules framed under that Act governing such cases make it mandatory that the orders can be passed in the presence of all the parties interested in the holdings; and when it is found that all the landlords had not been impleaded in the proceedings, the order passed by the Revenue Court would become without jurisdiction.

[7] Mr. De, appearing on behalf of the respondents, on the other hand, contended that it had not been established that Jit Kuer was recorded in Register D. But from the pleadings as well as from the admitted case of the parties before the two Courts below, it was clear that Mt. Jit Kuer was one of the landlords who had not been impleaded in the proceedings under S. 112A. It is now too late to suggest that it may be that Mt. Jit Kuer was not recorded in Register D. Besides, the lower appellate Court also has held that Mt. Jit Kuer, her heirs and legal representatives would not be bound by the orders passed by the Revenue Courts as she was not represented in the proceedings. This part of the judgment of the lower appellate Court has not been challenged before us either by way of cross-objection or by way of appeal. It is, therefore, now settled for the purposes of this second appeal that Mt. Jit Kuer was one of the landlords who had not been impleaded in the proceedings under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act.

[8] Mr. De further contended that this objection of non-joinder of all the co-sharer landlords interested in the holdings had not been taken before the Revenue Courts and the present plaintiff was debarred from taking the same by virtue of constructive res judicata as contemplated by Expln. IV to S. 11, Civil P. C. He relied on the Full Bench decision in the case of Ram Ran Bijoy Prasad Singh v. Ramagya Kuer, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 354 : (226 I. C. 363 F. B.). But there the facts were different. In that case what had happened was that on 8-11-1939, on the application of the tenants under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act, the Rent Reduction Officer had reduced the rent of khata No. 415/1 to Rs. 14 and that of khata No. 416 to Rs. 17-11-0. On a further application of those very tenants the Rent Reduction Officer reduced the rent of khata No. 415/1 to Rs. 7-10-0 and that of khata No. 416 to Rs. 9-11-0 by order dated 29-11-1939. It was held in that case that the second order was passed on a petition for rehearing the matter as the first order had been passed ex parte. In the Full Bench case, however, their Lordships further considered the legality of the second order of the Rent Reduction Officer on the basis that the landlord should have raised objection at the time of the second order that a few days before there had already been a reduction and a second reduction was not permissible. He having not raised such objection at the time of the second order could not be permitted to say that the second order was wrong. The present suit as framed could not have been tried by the Revenue Court, and, as such, the present suit is not barred by res judicata either constructively or directly.

[9] Mr. De further referred to the case of Dwarka Nath v. Dhanoo Gope, 26 P. L. T. 297: (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 320), but there the facts were different. All the landlords interested in the holding had been impleaded as parties to the proceeding under S. 112A, Bihar Tenancy Act. There was some irregularity regarding service of notice and the point that was urged there was that the person on whom notices were served, had no written authority to accept notice on behalf of the landlord, and, as such, it was contended in that case that the order of the Revenue Court was without jurisdiction. But in the present case all the landlords had not even been impleaded in the proceeding, and, as such, that case has no application to the facts and circumstances in the present case.

[10] Mr. Lakshmansaran Sinha further raised the point that during the pendency of the appeal before the lower appellate Court, Parmanand Singh died and in his place the appellants before the lower appellate Court, substituted the widow and the two minor sons of Parmanand Singh as party-respondents to the appeal. The guardian's name in the substitution petition did not appear, but in spite of his non-appearance no other guardian was appointed by the Court to look after the interest of the minors, and, as such, the minors will not be deemed to be parties to the appeal. Mr. De in reply contended that the mother of the minors had also been made a party-respondent and she would be deemed to have protected the interest of the minors. But it appears that the mother also had not entered appearance, and it cannot be said that the mother will be deemed to have protected the interest of the minors in the appeal without even entering appearance in the appeal. But it is not necessary to proceed with this matter further because on merits, in my judgment, the appeal should be allowed.

[11] Under the circumstances, the appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree passed by the lower appellate Court are set aside and those of the trial Court restored. The plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to their costs in all the Courts.

Reuben J.—This civil revision petition and miscellaneous appeal, both by the plaintiff, are directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Patna, in Title Suit No. 122 of 1947.

[2] In this suit, the plaintiff, as sebait of Sri Thakur Brindaban Behari having its temple at Mahalla Kazibagh, police station Alamgunj, and Sri Thakur Radha Rasik Mukutmani alias Sri Thakur Brindaban Rasik Mukutmani having its temple in Mahalla Gyangudri Darwaza, police station Brindaban, in the district of Mathura, United Provinces, sues on behalf of the Deities to recover certain property in Brindaban and in Patna. The property in Brindaban, according to him, forms portion of the temple there. It was sold on 14-11-1929, in execution of a decree dated 25-7-1928, in Suit No. 273 of 1928 in the Court of the Munsif of Mathura on the basis of a bond for Rs. 140, executed by Muneshwar Tewari, one of the then sebaits of the Deity. It is alleged that Muneshwar Tewari had no authority without the concurrence of the other sebaits to incur any liability on behalf of the Deity, and that the liability was incurred without any legal necessity and was not for the use or benefit of the Deity, and that both the decree and the sale in execution were collusive and the purchaser at the auction-sale was a friend of Muneshwar Tewari. Recovery of possession over this property is sought as against defendants 3 to 5, to whom the property has passed from the auction-purchaser by a series of private transfers. Two other transactions are impugned. One is a deed of rehan dated 4-2-1936 for Rs. 1,000 in favour of defendant 2, in respect of three pies share in Mauza Rasulpur Kateswar Tauzi No. 627C, executed by Ram Kewal Tewari, one of the then sebaits of the Deities. The other transaction is also a rehan, executed on 10-7-1937, by the aforementioned Muneshwar Tewari in respect of fifteen dams share in Mauza Rasulpur Kateswar Tauzi No. 627C, also in favour of defendant 2. These transactions are impugned on the same grounds, namely, that the sebaits could not, by their individual acts, bind the Deities, and that the transactions were not for legal necessity or for the use or benefit of the Deities. According to the plaintiff, in both these transactions, defendant was the farzidar of Munshi Kanhaiya-Lall deceased, father of defendant 1, and relief is sought as against defendants 1 and 2 in respect of these properties. Plaintiff is alleged to have become the sebait of the Deities in 1939. Only defendants 3 to 5 appeared and contested the suit and, at their instance, the Subordinate Judge considered first the issue regarding the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit against the contesting defendants in respect of the property in Brindaban. Under O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C., all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, where, if separate suits were brought, any common question of law or fact would arise. The learned Subordinate Judge held that there were two distinct causes of action as against the two sets of defendants, and that the two conditions of O. 1, R. 3, were not satisfied and, therefore, the plaintiff, by joining the two causes of action in one suit, could not confer jurisdiction on the Patna Court in respect of the property in Brindaban. On this finding, he came to the conclusion that the suit as framed was bad for multifariousness and directed the plaintiff to elect against which defendant or set of defendants he proposed to go on with the suit, the discretion to be exercised by 17-2-1948. failing which the plaint would stand rejected. The appeal and the petition in civil revision are both directed against this order.

[3] It is clear that no appeal lies against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The petition in civil revision will, therefore, be dealt with below.

[4] Order 1, R. 3, requires two conditions to be satisfied : (1) that the right to relief should be related to the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, and (2) that, as against the different defendants or sets of defendants, some common question of law or fact will arise.

[5] The first condition is concerned with a common act or transaction or series of acts or transactions. A mere finding that there were different causes of action as against the different sets of defendants is, therefore, not sufficient. The Code itself recognises that, in the case of joinder of several defendants, every defendant may not be interested as to all the relief claimed (O. 1, R. 5), and that questions may arise in which one set or other of the parties may not be interested (O. 2, R. 6). The question as to joinder depends not on a common cause of action but, as I have said, on common basis of acts or series of acts. That the matter is not as simple as the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have thought, is clear from the series of decisions commencing with Vasudeva Shanbhaga v. Kuleadi Narnapai, 7 M. H. C. R. 290, where the Full Bench, dealing with suits impugning several alienations of joint family property by deceased coparceners, repelled the objection of multifariousness and commented on the desirability of deciding the validity of the alienations in one proceeding in order to secure the soundness of the decision, and to avoid discordant decisions in different cases on facts nearly the same. The decision was followed in Mahomed v. Krishnan, 11 Mad. 106, in a suit by junior members of a Nayar family challenging as many as 48 alienations by the karnavan in respect of 213 items of the family property. The same course was followed in Abdul v. Ayaga, 12 Mad. 234 and Byathamma v. Avulla, 15 Mad. 19. The underlying principle was explained in Nundoo Kumar v. Banomali Gayan, 29 Cal. 871, which was a suit in ejectment. The maintainability of the suit was challenged for multifariousness on the ground that the different sets of defendants second party held by separate leases under the defendant first party, from whom the plaintiff claimed as a lessee. Their Lordships pointed out that the cause of action of the plaintiff suing in ejectment cannot be affected by the title under which the defendants profess to hold possession; what concerns the plaintiff is that another is wrongfully in possession of what belongs to him; it is that fact that gives him the cause of action, and it is a matter of indifference to him on what grounds the different persons in possession may seek to justify the wrong detention of what is his. They agreed with the same view expressed by another Bench of the same Court in Ishan Chunder v. Rameswar Mondo, 24 Cal. 831. These two decisions were followed in Parbati Kuar v. Mahmud Fatima, 29 ALL. 237: (4 A. L. J. 121), where the plaintiff sued as heir of his father to recover various portions of his father's estate from the hands of different alienees and in Kubra Jan v. Ram Bali, 30 ALL. 560 : (5 A. L. J. 647), where the plaintiff as heiress of her father sued to recover from her brother and certain transferees from him her share of the property of her deceased father. The latter decision is of special interest as the suit related to property partly in Bareily district and partly in the district of Bara Banki in the Province of Oudh. During the course of the suit, a compromise was arrived at regarding the Bareily property. Nevertheless, their Lordships held that the Court at Bareily was not divested of its jurisdiction to hear and decide the suit in respect of the property situate in Oudh. For other decisions relevant to the point of joinder, reference may be made to Govindaraja Mudaliar v. Alagappa Thambiran, 49 Mad. 836 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 911 F. B.); Ramanathan Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar, 57 Mad. 1031 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 367) Ranganatham Chettiar v. Mariappa Mudaliar, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 334 : (208 I. C. 81) and Ramautar Singh v. Brij Kishore, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 653 : (149 I. C. 931) all of which emphasise the necessity that the first condition of O. 1, R. 3, must be satisfied.

[6] In the present case, I do not think it is necessary for me to go into this matter at greater length, because I do not think that we should interfere in exercise of this Court's power of revision in order to assist the plaintiff to raise in Patna, questions relating to the passing of a decree and the execution thereof in the Brindaban Courts so long ago as 1928 and 1929 and raising questions quite unconnected with the suit as against the defendants and the property belonging to Patna.

[7] Taking the finding of the Subordinate Judge as it stands it seems to me that the Subordinate Judge has clearly gone wrong by refusing to exercise his jurisdiction in respect of the Patna property. The proper procedure might ordinarily be, as suggested in the cases of Ramanathan Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar, (57 Mad. 1031 : A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 367) and Ramautar Singh v. Brij Kishore, (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 653 : 149 I. C. 931) to give the plaintiff an opportunity of amending his plaint and electing as to which of the defendants he will proceed against. This is because there are more than one set of defendants against whom the Court is empowered to grant relief, and it is proper that the plaintiff should decide as to whom he will pursue his remedy against. The problem does not arise, where the Court finds, as it has found in this case, that there are two sets of defendants against one of whom it has no power to grant any remedy. Order 1, R. 3 provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and that the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. Under O. 1, R. 4, judgment may be given without any amendment against such one or more of the defendants as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities. If the Court feels itself embarrassed by the presence of parties against whom it has no power to entertain the suit or by the inclusion in the plaint of pleadings relating to property over which it has no jurisdiction, it has the power under O. 1, R. 10, sub-r. (2), to strike out the defendants, and, under O. 6, R. 16, to strike out the unnecessary pleadings. A case in point is Nisar Ali v. Mohammad Ali, 59 I. A. 268 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 172) where the inclusion in the suit of property in the Punjab which the plaintiff claimed as mutwalli of Muhammadan wakf, was not held to affect the maintainability of his suit in the Oudh Court in respect of an estate comprising properties in Oudh and the Punjab, claimed by him under a testamentary disposition made by his father.

[8] On the above grounds, I would allow the petition in revision, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge so far as it relates to the election to be made by the plaintiff and direct that the suit be proceeded with according to law. The petition having failed against defendants 3 to 5, they are entitled to and will get their costs. I would assess the hearing fee at one gold mohar. Defendants 1 and 2 not having opposed the petition, and the necessity for the petition in this Court having arisen by reason of the plaintiff not having elected as directed, there will be no order for costs against defendants 1 and 2. I would dismiss the appeal, there will be no order as to costs.

In a proceeding under the Act costs cannot be awarded against a dealer except by the High Court under cl. (6) of S. 25 which is equivalent to S. 21 (6), Sales Tax Act of 1944 : Misc. Judicial Case No. 127 of 1947, D/- 28-9-1948 (Pat.), Foll. [Paras 1 and 3]

(b) Sales Tax — Bihar Sales Tax Act (XIX [19] of 1947), S. 24 (4) — Commissioner may dismiss application for revision without hearing applicant.

An order refusing to revise is not an order which can be said adversely to affect either party to the proceedings. The revisional jurisdiction both of the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue is entirely discretionary and when a discretionary jurisdiction is conferred on a Tribunal, it is impossible to hold that anybody has a vested right to be heard before an order refusing to exercise the discretionary jurisdiction of revision is passed. The Commissioner may legally dismiss an application for revision under S. 24 (4) without giving the applicant a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his application.

[Paras 1 and 3]

Agarwala C. J. — Under S. 21 (3), Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1944, the Board of Revenue was called upon by this Court to state a case on the following questions :

"(1) Whether in a proceeding under the Act costs may be awarded against a dealer except by the High Court under cl. (6) of S. 25 ; and

(2) Whether the Commissioner may legally dismiss an application for revision under S. 24 (4) without giving the applicant a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his application."

[2] The reference to the sections in the questions framed was to those of the Act of 1947 which replaced the Act of 1944, but which are in pari materia with the provisions of the former Act.

[3] So far as the first question is concerned, that has been decided in The Province of Bihar

v. Messrs. Jokhi Ram Ram Prasad, (Misc. Judicial Case No. 127 of 1947) on 28-9-1948 by this Bench, which held that there was no power to grant costs under the Bihar Sales Tax Act except the power vested in the High Court by S. 25 (6) of the Act of 1947 which is equivalent to S. 21 (6) of the Act of 1944. The revisional powers of the Commissioner under the Act of 1944 are derived from S. 20, sub-s. (3) of which provides :

"Subject to such rules as may be prescribed and for reasons to be recorded in writing, the Commissioner may, upon application or of his own motion, revise any order passed under this Act or the rules thereunder by a person appointed under S. 3 to assist him, and subject, as aforesaid, the Board of Revenue may, in like manner, revise any order passed by the Commissioner :

Provided that before rejecting any application for revision of any such order the Commissioner or the Board of Revenue, as the case may be, shall consider it and shall record reasons for such rejection."

Sub-section (5) provides :

"Before any order is passed under this section which is likely to affect any person adversely, such person shall be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard."

It is contended that the effect of sub-s. (5) is to confer upon a dealer who has been assessed a right to be heard by the Commissioner before his application to revise an order is rejected. That contention, in my opinion, is entirely untenable. The proviso to S. 3 merely requires the Commissioner or the Board of Revenue, as the case may be, to consider an application before rejecting it, and does not require the aggrieved party to be heard. Sub-section (5) merely requires the revising authority to hear the party before an order adverse to him is made. An order refusing to revise is not an order which can be said adversely to affect either party to the proceedings. If it had been intended that an application in revision should not be rejected without hearing the party making it, that would have been made clear in the proviso to sub-s. (3). It is to be noted that the revisional jurisdiction both of the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue is entirely discretionary and when a discretionary jurisdiction is conferred on a Tribunal, it is impossible to hold that anybody has a vested right to be heard before an order refusing to exercise the discretionary jurisdiction of revision is passed. I would, therefore, answer the first question referred to us in the negative, and the second question in the affirmative. As the petitioner succeeds on the first point and fails on the second, there will be no order for costs. Half the fee of Rs. 100 deposited by the applicant under S. 21(1), will be refunded to him.

Kokil Ram and others — Petitioners v. Province of Bihar — Opposite Party.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 3 of 1947, D/- 26-1-1949.

Sales Tax—Bihar Sales Tax Act (VI [6] of 1944), S. 6—Betel leaves, if taxable.

Green betel leaves called pan are taxable articles within the meaning of S. 6 read with Govt. Notfn. No. 7567-F, D/- 8-7-1944. The word "vegetables" in the notification is used in the more limited sense as plants cultivated for food and does not include betel leaves which are certainly not a food stuff. [Paras 3 & 5]

Rai Parasnath—for Petitioners; Advocate-General and R. Prasad — for Opposite Party.

Meredith J. — This is a case stated by the Board of Revenue under S. 21 (3), Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1944. The question referred is :

"Whether green betel leaves called pan are taxable articles within the meaning of S. 6, Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1944, read with Notfn. No. 7567-F, dated 8-7-1944 issued by the Government of Bihar in the Finance Department."

[2] The assessees are 13 dealers in betel leaves used in making up pan. It was found that they had been importing betel leaves from outside the Province of Bihar, and had been carrying on this business for a long time, with an annual gross turnover exceeding Rs. 5000 in the case of each of them during the financial year 1943-44, but they had failed to apply for registration under S. 7 of the Act. Accordingly, the Sales Tax Officer issued notices upon them on 14-3-1945, under S. 10 (5) of the Act calling upon them to file necessary returns for the quarter ending 31-12-1944. Instead of filing returns, the assessees filed objection petition on the ground that betel leaves come within the category of green vegetables and as such were exempted from the levy of sales tax by Notfn. No. 7567 dated 8-7-1944, issued by the Government under S. 6 of the Act. Subsequently they filed before the Commissioner of Sales Tax, Chota Nagpur Division, a joint petition for determination of the question whether any tax was payable in respect of the sale of betel leaves. The Commissioner took the view that the notification in question was not intended to exclude betel leaves from taxation, and that the word "vegetables" in the notification was used in the ordinary popular sense of "a plant cultivated for food". He accordingly dismissed the petition. The assessees then moved the Board of Revenue in revision, but the Board took the same view. The assessees then filed an application under S. 21 (1) of the Act which has resulted in the present reference.

[3] The notification referred to direct that no tax shall be payable on the sale of a number of classes of goods specified. Item 6 is "vegetables, green or dried other than medicinal preparations". Hence the question for decision is whether the word "vegetables" must be taken to include betel leaves. The word "vegetable" is used in two different senses: first, in a wide sense, as for example, when we speak of "the vegetable kingdom". According to this usage, it would include all plants. The second sense, and the more common usage, is as connoting only "herbaceous plants cultivated for food" (see Webster's Dictionary). It is perfectly clear from the notification that Government used the word in the more limited sense in accordance with the common usage. The notification includes 25 items, many of which are not food-stuffs, but all the items up to 8 are food-stuffs, and item 6, which we are considering, thus comes in the midst of the list of food-stuffs. Secondly, it is impossible to suppose that Government meant to exclude the entire vegetable kingdom. Lastly,—and this is most convincing—item 1 is

"cereals and pulses including all forms of rice, gram, peas, moong, arhar, masur, khesari, millet, bajra, and jowar, wheat, oats, barley, maize, powdered or broken pulses, sago, besan and sattu, sold loose or in unsealed cardboard or paper containers."

Item 3 is "flour including atta, maida, suji and bran". Item 8 is "gur, sugar and molasses". If the word "vegetables" had been used in a comprehensive sense to include all plants and their products, then items 1 and 8 would not have been separately specified. There can, therefore, in my opinion, be no doubt that Government by "vegetables" meant plants cultivated for food.

[4] In this limited sense, will pan be included? Pan is certainly not a food-stuff. It is a masticatory (see the article on "betel" in the Encyclopaedia Britannica). Some hold that it is also a digestive. But, even so, it is not a food. It is not eaten for its food value, but at the highest as an aid to digestion. It is not served as a part of a meal, but as a supplement to it. As a digestive agent, it might perhaps be considered a medicinal preparation, but the notification is careful to provide that in exempting vegetables, green or dried, medicinal preparations are not included.

[5] For these reasons I am satisfied that the view taken by the Board of Revenue is the correct one, and I would, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative. Betel leaves are taxable, and have not been exempted under the notification. The assessees must pay the costs of the reference. Hearing fee Rs. 100.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 3 of 1948, D/- 1-2-1949.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 3—'Attested' — Signature by one attesting witness for himself and for other attesting witness—Validity.

When one of the two attesting witnesses to a mortgage signs for himself and also on behalf of the other at his instance and in his presence the signature would be a good signature, though no mark is affixed by the other witness. The mortgage, therefore, is valid as duly attested. [Para 8]

Anno: T. P. Act, S. 3, N. 11 to 13.

K. D. Chatterji — for Appellants; Barhamdeva Narain, U. S. Sharma and S. A. Ahmad — for Respondents.

Meredith J. — This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of Shearer J. sitting singly. The appeal is by defendants 1st party. The suit was brought upon a mortgage created in 1927 by the appellants in favour of one Chilu Rai. Defendant 4 was Chilu's widow, and defendant 3, the widow of his son. The plaintiff is an assignee from defendant 3. The suit was decreed by the learned Munsif and the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the first appeal.

[2] It is necessary for our present purposes only to consider two of the defences taken. The defendants first party claimed that the mortgage had been redeemed by payment of the full amount to defendant 4. The learned Subordinate Judge held that this payment had in fact been made, but it could not operate as a discharge as the right to realise the debt had passed from Chilu to his son, and thence to defendant 3, and thereafter to the plaintiff. Therefore, the payment could not be recognised by the Court.

[3] The second point to be noticed is that it was alleged that the mortgage was not valid because the document had not been duly attested. There were two attesting witnesses, Mathura Rai and Damar Rai. Mathura Rai (deceased) had signed for himself and had also signed on behalf of Damar, the latter not having even affixed his mark. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the signature of Damar made on his behalf, at his instance, and in his presence by Mathura was good signature, and the mortgage was, therefore, valid. This is the sole point which was raised before Shearer J. in second appeal. That learned Judge had dealt with the matter elaborately, and, as I am in complete agreement with his views, it is unnecessary to add much to what he has said. The definition of the word "attested" was inserted in S. 3, T. P. Act, by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act (XXVII [27] of 1926), and was further amended by the insertion of the words "and shall be deemed always to have meant" by the Repealing and Amending Act, 1927, to show that the definition had retrospective effect. The definition was made in the same words as had been used in S. 63, Succession Act (originally S. 50). In Fernandez v. Alive, 3 Bom. 382, it had been held in regard to S. 50, Succession Act, that it was necessary for the validity of a will that the actual signature, as distinguished from a mere mark, of at least two witnesses should appear on the face of the will. This decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court in Nitye Gopal v. Nagendra Nath, 11 Cal. 429. But obviously other considerations arise with regard to the Transfer of Property Act. One is this. Before the definition of "attested" in the Transfer of Property Act, it had been held, and was recognised as good law, that a signature might be validly made by the pen of someone else provided it was done at the instance of the attesting witness, and in his presence. On this point reference may be made to Sasi Bhusan Pal v. Chandra Peshkar, 33 Cal. 861 : (4 C. L. J. 41) where the question was fully examined. Now, if the intention of the Legislature in 1926 was to alter the position, it is highly unlikely that the definition would have been made retrospective, as thereby large numbers of existing titles would have been upset, and large numbers of deeds validly attested in accordance with the previous view would become invalid. This suggests that there was no intention to alter the law in this respect, but rather to define and clarify it. The question in regard to the words "signed by the mortgagor" in S. 59, T. P. Act, was exhaustively considered by a Full Bench of five Judges in the Allahabad High Court in Deo Narain Rai v. Kukur Bind, 24 ALL. 319: (1902 A.W.N. 127 F.B.). Stanley C. J. considered the whole position including that under the English law and held that the word "signed" did not mean "personally autographed" unless there was some clear provision in the statute under consideration so providing. There was no such provision in the Transfer of Property Act. In S. 59, the word "signed" was used without more. The same remarks apply to the definition of "attested" in S. 3. Here also the wording is, "each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant." I cannot usefully add to the reasoning of Stanley C. J., which may be referred to.

[4] It is argued for the appellants that a distinction should be drawn between the executant and the attesting witnesses. But I cannot find any warrant for that distinction in the Act when the same wording is used. A judgment which is material is the Division Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Nagamma v. Venkatramayya, 58 Mad. 220 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 178). The question under consideration there was whether the word "sign" used in S. 3, T. P. Act, with reference to an attesting witness was to be taken to be governed by the definition of that word in S. 3 (52), General Clauses Act, 1897, and to include, with reference to a person who is unable to write, his mark. This question was answered in the affirmative. Though this case is not directly in point, a passage in the judgment of Beasly C. J. is very material. At p. 226 he says :

"But in our view the act of execution by the executant is so important and the physical acts to which the attestors may have to testify are so important that the Legislature deemed it necessary to set out all the four alternatives in precise language. On the other hand, no such importance appears to us to be attached to the act of the attestors provided only it is done in the presence of the executant. Whether they sign the document themselves or affix their mark to it, the mere presence of their names on the document will be sufficient prima facie evidence to show who the attestors are. The really essential part of the definition is that the attestors should be present and be assured by what they themselves see or by what the executant acknowledges before them that the executant has actually executed the document."

[5] I am of opinion that the mortgage was validly attested, and this appeal must, therefore, be dismissed. The case seems to me, however, in some respects a hard one, since the appellants having already paid off the mortgage to a close relative of defendant 3 now have to pay up again. I would accordingly make no order for costs.

[6] Manohar Lall J.—I entirely agree and wish to make a few observations out of respect to the able argument addressed to us by Mr. K. D. Chatterji. His chief contention was that the Legislature by amending S. 3, T. P. Act, has laid down that the instrument will be considered to be attested only inter alia if the attesting witness makes his own signature and that even if such a person is illiterate and he makes a mark, that would not be a sufficient compliance with law. I am unable to agree with this argument for the reason that the language of the definition of the word 'attested' does not warrant the adoption of such a narrow construction which would lead to great inconvenience and injustice. In this country a very large number of persons are still illiterate, and if the argument is accepted as correct it would be putting an impossible burden upon the parties to secure only literate attesting witnesses.

[7] It will be observed that in the definition the words "signature" or "mark" are inserted to show that the executant must either sign the document or affix his mark; but the Legislature has been careful to omit these words "or mark" when providing for the manner in which the witness should sign. This omission indicates, to my mind, that in case of an illiterate witness he is not required even to put a mark. As I pointed out in the course of the argument, the essential requirement from an attesting witness is that he should actually be present at the time of the execution of the document and either he should have seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument or he may be assured by the executant himself that he himself has signed and put the mark on the document. It was argued that unless there is a signature of the witness there will be ample room for fraud. I do not agree with this argument. In order to safeguard any fraud, the contesting party is able to know from the document itself as to who the attesting witnesses are, and he can easily satisfy the Court that such persons, though shown to be attesting witnesses, are really not so. In my opinion, Shearer J. in his elaborate judgment came to the correct conclusion, and I would entirely agree with the view expressed by the Madras High Court in Nagamma v. Venkatramayya, 58 Mad. 220 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 178) and with the view of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Deo Narain Rai v. Kukur Bind, 24 ALL. 319 : (1902 A.W.N. 127 F.B.). I would also approve of Sasi Bhusan Pal v. Chandra Peshkar, 33 Cal. 861 : (4 C.L.J. 41), which has taken the same view. I, therefore, agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

(a) Oaths Act (1873), Ss. 8 and 11—Proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C.—Decision on special oath — Regular civil suit not barred — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11.

Where in a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., a special oath is administered by an agreement of parties and the Court orders delivery of possession to one of the parties in accordance with such oath, the unsuccessful party is not precluded thereby from suing for declaration of his title to and recovery of possession of the disputed lands. The reason is that the effect of special oath is merely to treat that as conclusive evidence in those proceedings and it is the order upon such conclusive evidence which is res judicata between the parties and not the evidence. (b) Oaths Act (1873), Ss. 10 and 11 — Applicability to criminal proceedings.

Sections 10 and 11, Oaths Act, are applicable to proceedings under Ss. 144 and 145, Criminal P. [Para 8]

Anno. Oaths Act, S. 10 N. 1; S. 11 N. 1.

Harinandan Singh — for Appellants ; Prem Lall, Sreenath Singh and G. P. Shahi—for Respondents.

Manohar Lall J.—This is an appeal by the defendants who are aggrieved by the concurrent decisions of the Courts below by which they have decreed the plaintiffs' suit for a declaration of title to and recovery of possession of certain lands. One of the questions for consideration is the effect of certain sections of the Oaths Act, 1873.

[2] The facts are these: The plaintiffs claim title to 8 kathas 14 dhurs of plot 539 and to 15 kathas out of plot 549 on the basis of certain transfers in their favour from the true owners. The cause of action for the suit was the dispossession of the plaintiffs and the defendants fourth-party as a result of an adverse order passed under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

[3] The defence to the action was that the plaintiffs and defendants fourth-party had no title to the land in suit, and that on the material dates although the plaintiffs had title at one time to plot 539, but as a result of an exchange plot 539 came into possession with title of the defendants, the plaintiffs title to plot 549 was wholly denied. It was further urged that in the 145-proceedings the defendants fourth-party gave a special oath to the defendants, and as a result of that special oath, the 145-proceedings were decided in favour of the defendants, and, therefore, the plaintiffs and the defendants fourth-party are bound by that oath and cannot re-agitate their title in the civil suit.

[4] The Courts below have concurrently found title and possession with the plaintiffs and defendants fourth-party, and have also held that in law the special oath has no force in the proceedings in the civil suit. Hence, the second appeal to this Court.

[5] Mr. Harinandan Singh, learned counsel for the appellants, took us through the entire judgments of the Courts below and wanted to submit that the findings on the question of title and possession are not in accordance with law; but having perused the judgments of the Courts below I am satisfied that they have come to the conclusions on the question of fact which are binding in second appeal. No error of law has been pointed out although it was sought to be argued that the findings on the question of fact were erroneous here and there. With regard to plot 539, the Courts below did not believe the story of exchange, and, therefore, the plaintiffs had established their subsisting title to plot 539 all along. With regard to plot 549, the Courts below have proceeded to assess the evidence. The defendants' own case was that the portion of plot 549 in dispute had been amalgamated with plot 539; this was also the case of the plaintiffs. Now, if the title of plot 539 is found to be with the plaintiffs, the amalgamation could have only been made by the plaintiffs. The Courts below have considered this as an important circumstance to defeat the defendants' case that they had any title to this portion of plot 549. Having considered the matter, I am of the opinion that the Courts below have taken a view which was open to them as Courts of facts, and this Court cannot be asked to interfere in second appeal.

[6] An interesting argument was raised as to the effect of the oath taken by the defendants fourth-party in the 145-proceedings. It was argued that the result was that some sort of agreement had been arrived at between the defendants fourth-party and the defendants that the defendants fourth-party had no longer any claim to plot 539 and to the portion of plot 549, that is to say, by some sort of conclusive admission, title to these plots passed to the defendants some sort of estoppel was sought to be established. I do not agree with this contention, because upon a plain reading of the various sections of the Oaths Act, it is clear to me that the effect of the special oath is to treat that as a conclusive piece of evidence in those proceedings, when the oath was administered by an agreement between the parties. See S. 8 and S. 11. Section 11 distinctly states that the evidence so given shall, as against the person who offered to be bound as aforesaid, be conclusive proof of the matter stated. It is obvious that this is conclusive proof of the matter in those proceedings and the Court in charge of the proceedings is bound to decide the proceedings in accordance with the evidence specially given on oath. It is also clear that it is the adjudication upon such conclusive evidence which is res judicata between the parties and not the evidence, as was sought to be made out by Mr. Harinandan Singh.

[7] The case of Mithu Lal v. Sri Lal, 45 ALL. 724 : (A.I.R. (11) 1924 ALL. 126) was relied upon by Mr. Harinandan Singh; but what that case decided was that where one party has entered into a valid agreement with the other that the case may be decided according to the special oath and the other party has taken a special oath, then the Court is not competent to ignore the statement and enter into further evidence to decide that litigation. This is in accordance with what I have observed above and does not help the appellants.

[8] The next case relied upon was the case of Sanyasi Baritya v. Artaswaro, 36 Mad. 287 : (18 I. C. 835). In that case it was held that an adjudication by a Court on an oath made by one of the parties to the suit would make the matter or issue covered by the adjudication res judicata in a subsequent litigation between the same parties where the subject-matter of the suit is different. It would be noticed that the adjudication is res judicata and not the evidence. This case is of no assistance in the present case because the only adjudication in the 145-proceedings was not that the title was with the defendants, but that the possession should be given to the defendants and was given to the defendants. The effect of the adjudication was not that the aggrieved party was debarred from bringing the regular civil suit, but that the proceedings then before the Court must be decided in accordance with the special oath. Moreover, on reading p. 294, it appears that the learned Judges came to the same conclusion as was pointed out by us in the course of the argument. I am reading from the top of p. 294. Referring to the case of Badiaddin Ahmed v. Nizamuddin Haider, 33 Cal. 386 : (10 C. W. N. 501) the learned Judges observed :

> "In that case proceedings taken under S. 144, Criminal P. C., were settled by an oath taken by one of the parties. The result of an order in such a proceeding does not prevent a suit in a Civil Court by the unsuccessful party to establish his right to any property concerned in the proceeding. * * * * The doctrine of res judicata would not apply to a prior decision in a criminal proceeding between the parties in a Court which would have no jurisdiction to try the later proceedings in the civil litigation. It need hardly be observed that the scope of the doctrine cannot be extended by the fact that the decision of any matter proceeded on evidence furnished by an oath."

I think Mr. Harinandan Singh cannot have been unaware of these observations of the learned Judges at p. 294, and that he cited this case really to meet the view of the Courts below that Ss. 10 and 11, Oaths Act, are not applicable to criminal proceedings. In my opinion, these sections are applicable to S. 144 or S. 145-proceedings; but obviously they are not applicable to criminal proceedings which are between the Crown or Government and the accused unless these may be criminal proceedings between the complainant and the accused in certain circumstances.

[9] A later Madras case of Ranganatha Aiyar v. Jayavelu Mudaliar, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 627 : (193 I. C. 591) also supports the view which I have taken. In that case the proceeding under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C., was decided in favour of a party as a result of a special oath in a suit instituted under O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., and a suit was brought to set aside this order. It was argued that the special oath which was taken in the course of the proceedings under R. 100 was a bar to the trial of the same matter between the parties. The argument was overruled by the learned Judges holding (1) that the primary meaning of S. 11 is that the evidence given in any proceeding in which a challenge has been made and an oath has been taken shall be in that proceeding conclusive proof of the matter stated; (2) that in a subsequent proceeding unless that statement has been brought on the record, it cannot even be considered; (3) in that regular suit any evidence which has been given under the special provisions of the Oaths Act in the earlier proceeding under R. 100, Civil P. C., cannot be conclusive, but will merely be treated as an evidence. With respect, I agree with these observations.

[10] Having regard to the views expressed above, I come to the conclusion that the Courts below were right in overruling the second contention also.

[11] I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

[12] Mahabir Prasad J. — I agree.

REUBEN AND DAS JJ.

Dasrathi Rai Chaudhury — Appellant v. Kali Charan Ghosh—Respondent.

A. F. A. O. No. 218 of 1949, D/- 1-2-1950.

(a) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 1 (3)—Operation of Act—Delegation of legislative power to Provincial Government — Effect — Operation of Act, whether validly extended.

The amendment of the Act by the Bihar Ordinance No. VI [6] of 1949, substituting a new sub-s. (3) for the original sub-section in S. 1, has validly made the Act an Act whose period of operation is five years from its commencement. The Act is, therefore, validly in existence for five years : A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 (F.B.), Rel. on.

In view of the above Full Bench decision, it is not now open to argue that the original sub-s. (3) of S. 1 having contained delegation of legislative power to the Provincial Government was invalid and that the Act could not, therefore, be extended beyond the initial period for which it was first brought into force.

[Paras 7, 8]

(b) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 17—Order of eviction by Controller—Execution —Munsif, first Court, with Small Cause powers — Jurisdiction to entertain application for execution.

The Courts of Small Causes in Bihar are not Courts established under S. 5, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act; they are the ordinary civil Courts empowered under S. 25, Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, to exercise the jurisdiction of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes. A civil Court which is invested with Small Cause Court powers under S. 25 does not thereby become a different Court. It is only for the purposes of the Small Cause Courts Act and of the Code of Civil Procedure that it will be treated as being a different Court in each of its two capacities (vide S. 33, Small Cause Courts Act). It follows that, for the purposes of S. 17 of Bihar Act III [3] of 1947 the Munsif, first Court, who is invested with Small Cause powers should be regarded as the same Court whether exercising his ordinary jurisdiction or his Small Cause Court powers. Where, therefore, such Munsif's Court is the Court of lowest jurisdiction competent to try the rent suit in respect of the building, an application for execution of an order of eviction by the Controller can rightly be presented in his Court.

[Paras 14, 16]

(c) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), Ss. 11, 17 — Order of eviction by Controller giving three months' time to tenant—Appeal to Commissioner — No further extension by Commissioner—Application for execution of order of eviction within three months of Commissioner's order is not premature. [Para 17]

(d) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), Ss. 11, 17 — Application for execution of order of eviction — Subsequent filing of suit for arrears of rent—Effect — Whether tenant is entitled to protection under S. 11.

It is obvious that the protection under S. 11 cannot avail the tenant against an order of eviction passed under the Act itself.

The conception of a tenant as conceived by this Act is entirely novel and not in keeping with the ordinary ideas as to what a tenant is. The mere fact, therefore, that an order was passed against the tenant under S. 11 to vacate the building does not necessarily terminate his tenancy and a subsequent suit to recover rent does not bring a new tenancy into being. The legal position of the tenant after the Controller has passed an order under S. 11 is uncertain. He may or may not continue as a tenant. In these circumstances, if the landlord, in his suit, describes as rent the sum which he claims to recover from him on account of his occupation of the building subsequent to the order of eviction by the Controller, it cannot be said that he shows thereby an intention to continue the tenancy and to waive his rights under the order of the Controller.

B. C. Ghosh and S. C. Ghosh — for Appellant; R. S. Chatterji—for Respondent.

Reuben J.—This appeal is directed against an order of the District Judge of Patna, dated 19-7-1949, modifying a decision of the Munsif, first Court, Patna, dated 24-5-1949. It arises in the following circumstances.

[2] The respondent as the owner of a house situated in Holding 189, Circle 18, Ward 10, in the Patna City Municipality, obtained on 18-9-1948, an order from the Controller under S. 11, Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947 (Bihar Act III [3] of 1947), which I shall refer to for convenience as Act III [3], directing the appellant as the tenant to vacate the house in favour of the respondent within three months from the date of the order. An appeal against this order was dismissed by the Commissioner on 26-2-1949. The appellant not having vacated the house as directed, the respondent, on 21-3-1949, applied to the Munsif, first Court, Patna, under S. 17 of the Act III [3] for the execution of the order. On 24-5-1949, the appellant filed an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., challenging the executability of the order against him. This was summarily dismissed by the Munsif. In appeal, the District Judge has made a slight modification in the Munsiff's order. Among other grounds of objection, the appellant objected that he is not the tenant of the respondent in respect of Holding 189, and that it is being sought by mentioning boundaries not included in the order of the Controller to execute the order against Holding 175 which is in his occupation. The District Judge has directed :

"That the respondent will get delivery of possession over the house situated in Holding 189 and not over any house situated in Holding 175 unless he gets the Commissioner to amend his order."

[3] Six points have been urged before us: (1) that owing to a delegation of legislative power to the Provincial Government under sub-s. (3) of S. 1, Act III [3] never came into operation ; (2) that under S. 17 of the Act the Small Cause Court and not the Munsif, first Court, in his ordinary civil jurisdiction, can entertain an application for execution of the order ; (3) that the application for execution having been filed within three months of the Commissioner's order it is premature, (4) that the execution cannot proceed against Holding 175 which is in the occupation of the appellant, (5) that the objection under S. 47 should not have been summarily dismissed, and (6) that the respondent by filing a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of this holding for a period subsequent to the orders of the Controller and the Commissioner has created a new tenancy, which is entitled to protection under S. 11 of Act III [3], and, therefore, the order of eviction is no longer executable.

[4] For his first contention, the learned counsel relies on the decision of the Federal Court reported in Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, A.I.R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175 : (50 Cr.L.J. 897) in which their Lordships considered the provisions of S. 1 (3), Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947. The duration of that Act was by the statute fixed for one year, but there was a proviso that the Provincial Government may, by notification, on a resolution passed by the Bihar Legislative Assembly and agreed to by the Bihar Legislative Council, direct that the Act shall remain in force for a further period of one year with such modification, if any, as may be directed in the notification. The power given to the Provincial Government under the Proviso was held to be legislative power and the delegation of it to the Provincial Government to be ultra vires of the Legislature. The impugned portion of Act III [3] is sub-s. (3) of S. 1, the relevant portion of which is as follows :

"It shall remain in force for such period as the Provincial Government may, by notification, fix; Provided that the Provincial Government may, from time to time, by notification, extend such period."

[5] There is, thus a two-fold power given to the Provincial Government. Firstly, it can determine at the initial stage the duration of the Act. Secondly, it may, from time to time, extend that period. According to the learned counsel, the delegation is in both respects delegation of legislative power and, therefore, ultra vires of the Legislature. This view, according to him, follows from the decision of the Federal Court as was held by Meredith J., in the recent Full Bench decision in Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, S. A. No. 201 of 1948 : (A.I.R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 FB). He contends that the further deduction of Meredith J., that sub-s. (3) of S. 1 was separable from the Act and that, in the absence of this provision, the Act would operate as a permanent Act commencing from the publication on 15-3-1947, in the Bihar Gazette of the Governor-General's assent, is incorrect. It is not open, according to the learned counsel, to the Court, by interpretation, to give an Act an effect contrary to its clear intention. He points out that the second proviso contained in sub-s. (3) contemplates an Act which is not permanent, and argues that this sub-section cannot be ignored so as to make the Act a permanent Act.

[6] It is not necessary for me, nor will it be proper to consider whether this contention of the learned counsel has any substance, for the learned counsel concedes that the effect of the decision of the Full Bench is that it is no longer open to this Bench to consider whether the delegation to the Provincial Government of the power to fix the initial duration of the Act is ultra vires or not. My Lord the Chief Justice and Ramaswami J., who were the other members of the Full Bench took a different view from Meredith J. They distinguished the case of Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175 : (50 Cr.L.J. 897) (ante) and held that the delegation made in sub-s. (3) of S. 1 is intra vires of the Legislature. This is a decision which is binding so far as we are concerned. Therefore, while not conceding the correctness of this decision, the learned counsel has argued the case on the basis that, to the extent of the delegation of authority to determine the initial duration, sub-s. (3) was intra vires. According to him, this is all that the decision of the Full Bench is an authority for; the question as to whether the delegation contained in the first proviso to sub-s. (3) is ultra vires of the Legislature is still open.

[7] To understand the argument of the learned counsel, it is necessary to give a few further facts relating to Act III [3]. By Notfn. No. 6208, dated 15-3-1947, the Provincial Government fixed the initial period of duration as one year. This period was extended for another period of one year by Notfn. No. 5641 dated 1-3-1948, and for a further period of one year by Notfn. No. 7804 dated 7-3-1949. The subsection was then repealed by the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) (Amending and Validating) Ordinance, 1949, and, in its place, was substituted the following: "(3) It shall remain in force for five years." According to the learned counsel, the first notification was effective, so that the Act remained in force for one year; the other two notifications were of no effect because the delegation was ultra vires. The Act, therefore, expired at the end of the first year, and, since the Ordinance purports to amend an existing Act, it did not have the effect of revising the Act. In consequence there was no such Act in existence after 15-3-1948, and the orders of the Controller and the Commissioner were without jurisdiction.

[8] The point raised by the learned counsel is of interest, but, in my opinion, it is not open to this Bench to investigate it as it is concluded by the decision of the Full Bench. That decision was given on a reference made in a first appeal arising out of an ejectment suit. The plaintiff in that suit, following an unsuccessful attempt to evict the defendants under the provisions of the House Rent Control Order, 1942, filed a suit in ejectment treating the defendants as trespassers. By that time, Act III [3] had replaced Ordinance II [2] of 1946, which had itself replaced the House Rent Control Order, 1942. The defence set up was that the defendants were tenants within the very wide definition of this term contained in cl. (h) of S. 2 of the Act, and, under the provisions of S. 11 the civil Court has no jurisdiction to evict them. The defendants' case succeeded and the suit was dismissed on 8-4-1948, that is to say, in the period following the initial period of one year of the duration of Act III [3]. Obviously, the defence was of no avail, unless the Act was in existence. The point for consideration before the Full Bench, therefore, was whether this was so or not. The learned counsel stresses that the decision of the majority of the Full Bench is to the effect that sub-s. (3) of S. 1 is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and he has argued that this decision confines itself to the main provision of the section, that is to say, the delegation of the power to fix the initial period. On a perusal of the judgments it is clear that there is no substance in this argument. Both their Lordships set out the provisions of sub-s. (3) including the first proviso. They mentioned the successive notifications by which the duration was first fixed for one year and then extended from time to time. Then, having referred to the Ordinance of 1949, they came to the definite conclusion that the Act is now an Act whose period is five years from its commencement, that is to say, that it is an Act which is in existence now, so that its protection was available to the defendants in that case. This also was the effect of the decision of Meredith J. according to whose view the Act first took effect as a permanent Act and now, as a result of the Ordinance of 1949, is an Act for five years.

[9] It has been suggested that, even if this is the effect of the decision of the Full Bench, the decision is obiter that it is not covered by either of the two points that were referred to the Full Bench. The relevant point was thus stated by the referring Bench: "Whether the annual extension of the Act aforesaid by the Provincial Government is ultra vires of the Legislature."

[10] This was a clear reference as regards the first proviso to sub-s. (3) of S. 1. It is unthinkable that the Full Bench would not decide the very point which was referred to them. But, the argument is, there was no reference so far as the Ordinance of 1949 was concerned. This Ordinance was only promulgated on 12-10-1949, probably after the reference had been made to the Full Bench. This may explain why it is not mentioned in the order of the referring Bench. Whether it was mentioned in that order or not, a consideration of its effect was obviously necessary. The entire point of the reference was to ascertain whether Act III [3] was still in force and its provisions were available to protect the defendants. In giving its reply, it was surely open to the Full Bench to determine what was the real question referred and not to consider itself bound by the exact words used in the reference.

[11] This brings me to the second point. Section 17 is as follows:

"Every order of the Controller passed under this Act and every order of the Commissioner passed on appeal under S. 18, shall be executed by the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building in relation to which the order to be executed is passed, as if such order were a decree passed by such Court."

[12] It is pointed out that the tenancy in question was a monthly tenancy, the rental being Rs. 16 per month. It is urged that, under the provisions of Ss. 15 and 16, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, read with Art. 8 of the Schedule to the Act, a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building was entertainable by the Small Cause Court and not by the Munsif in his ordinary civil jurisdiction. It is conceded that the Munsif in question is vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes, and that, in that capacity, he can entertain a rent suit in respect of this building. But it is contended that the execution petition was filed before him in his ordinary jurisdiction and, therefore, is not entertainable.

[13] There has been an argument at some length as to the identity of the Court authorised under S. 17 to execute an order under the Act. The particular Court in which a suit for arrears of rent will lie will depend upon the valuation of the suit. Up to Rs. 500 the suit would lie before the Small Cause Court, beyond that it would go to the Munsif, and, if it exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif, it will have to be filed before the Subordinate Judge. In fact, in the rent suit to which a reference has been made in stating the sixth point, the arrears claimed exceeded Rs. 500 and the suit has been instituted before the Munsif in his ordinary civil jurisdiction. The section does not say how the valuation of the notional suit contemplated by it is to be determined. Are we to take the arrears of rent, actual or as claimed by the landlord, at any particular time, say at the time of the application to the Controller, or at the time of the order which is under execution, or at the time when the application for execution is made? And what is to happen if there are no arrears? Are we to take a notional sum, say the rent for one month or one year, as being the arrears recoverable? Another possibility is that the section gives the person in whose favour the order stands (for convenience, I will describe him as the decree-holder), a power of election between the two or the three Courts coming within the description in S. 17, a supposition which seems unlikely in view of the words "the Court" used in the section.

[14] The difficulty as between the Small Cause Court and the civil Court in its ordinary jurisdiction is, to my mind, only an apparent one. The solution lies in the manner in which the Small Cause Court's jurisdiction has been created in this Province. Our Courts of Small Causes are not Courts established under S. 5, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act; they are the ordinary civil Courts empowered under S. 25, Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, to exercise the jurisdiction of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes. There is a difference between a Court of Small Causes, a term defined in S. 4, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and a civil Court empowered under S. 25, Civil Courts Act. The two are spoken of separately in sub-s. (2) of S. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and S. 32 of that Act provides that certain portions of that Act applicable to Courts of Small Causes shall apply to Courts invested with the jurisdiction of such Courts. A civil Court, therefore, which is invested with Small Cause Court powers under S. 25, Civil Courts, Act, does not thereby become a different Court. It is only for the purposes of the Small Cause Courts Act and of the Code of Civil Procedure that it will be treated as being a different Court in each of its two capacities (vide S. 33, Small Cause Courts Act). It follows that, for the purposes of S. 17 of Act III [3] the Munsif, first Court, should be regarded as the same Court whether exercising his ordinary jurisdiction or his Small Cause Court powers. It is in this sense that the Court is spoken of in S. 17, and this explains the further difficulty in the way of the decree-holder which was suggested to us in the course of the argument, namely, that the only Court competent to execute the order is the Small Cause Court and that Court cannot execute the decree because it is a decree for ejectment. If it was necessary, I was prepared to hold that, when the Legislature in S. 17 indicated to Small Cause Court as the proper Court to execute the order, it thereby empowered that Court to execute that order, although in its ordinary jurisdiction as such Court it is not authorised to execute such an order. It is not necessary, however, to go so far. It is unlikely that, with Civil Courts exercising such jurisdiction available for the purpose, the Legislature would delegate to Small Cause Courts the duty of executing orders of eviction under S. 11 or enforcing the restoration of amenities under S. 10. This consideration is, on the contrary, a further reason for holding that the Court indicated in S. 17 is the civil Court exercising its ordinary jurisdiction.

[15] The difficulty as regards the choice between the Court of the Munsif and that of the Subordinate Judge, within whose local jurisdiction the building in question lies, is not likely to arise where the rent of the building is so small that the accumulated arrears for the whole period of limitation for the filing of such a suit will not exceed the jurisdiction of the Munsif. The solution of the difficulty in cases where such a difficulty does arise seems to me to lie in the application of the principle which has found statutory sanction in S. 15, Civil P. C., namely, that the superior Court should be protected from overcrowding: Mohini Mohan v. Kunjabehari, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 450 : (209 I. C. 225). All that S. 17 speaks of is "the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building." However high the rent may be, it is always possible that only a small portion of that rent is in arrear. Therefore, the Court of the Munsif will always come within this description. The section does not indicate that the notional rent suit is to have any particular valuation. There is no reason, therefore, why the Court before which execution is sought to be taken out should be required to enter upon an investigation as to existing arrears at any particular moment of time or to assume that the section requires it to proceed on a notional valuation. All it has to ask is whether it has jurisdiction to entertain "a suit" for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building, and, if it has, whether it is the Court of the lower jurisdiction which can do so. If it is, then it is a Court which has jurisdiction to execute the order.

[16] The Munsif, first Court, was in the present case the Court of the lower jurisdiction in which a suit for arrears of rent of the building would lie. Hence, the execution petition was rightly presented in this Court.

[17] There is no force in the third contention. The Controller gave the appellant three months within which to vacate the premises. It was open to the Commissioner, if he thought it proper, to extend this period. He has not done so and has allowed the order of the Controller to stand as it is. I see no reason to hold, in the circumstances, that the appellant is entitled to a further period of three months from the date of the Commissioner's order before he can be evicted. The petition in execution is not, therefore, premature.

[18] The fourth and the fifth points are interconnected. There is no authority for the proposition that an application under S. 47 should not be summarily dismissed. It is always open to a Court to which a petition is presented to consider it on its merits at the time of the presentation. If it is clear that the contentions raised in the petition have no merits, it is not right that public time and money should be wasted and the opposite party harassed and put to additional expense by deferring the passing of orders until both parties have been heard at length. It is necessary, however, that the party filing the application should have a full hearing on the points raised and, where necessary, should be given an opportunity of establishing them. So far as an objection concerns a pure matter of law, it is possible that the matter may be so clear that the Court will have no difficulty in coming to a decision on the point at once. Where considerations of fact arise, this will not generally be possible. In the present case, there was such a consideration, namely, that, according to the appellant, the order relates to Holding 189 and the respondent is trying to execute it in respect of Holding 175. The orders of the Controller and the Commissioner, which are on the record, mention merely the number of the holding and give no boundaries. The execution petition gives certain boundaries which, according to the appellant, are the boundaries of Holding 175. Without some sort of investigation, it is not possible to deal with the objection of the respondent. It is necessary that the executing Court should proceed only against the building in respect of which the order under execution was passed. Had the Munsif investigated the matter, the difficulty would have been cleared up at once. As it is, in the absence of any evidence, the District Judge gave the only directions which were open to him, namely that the order be executed strictly in accordance with its terms. During the hearing we were informed that the decree-holder has since got the order amended. In the circumstances, it is not necessary for us to interfere with the order passed by the Courts below.

[19] This brings me to the point about the filing of the suit for recovery of rent. The application for execution was made on 21-3-1949. In May of the same year, the respondent filed Money Suit No. 435 of 1949 in the Court of the same Munsif in respect of Holding 189, seeking recovery from the appellant of arrears of rent from May 1946 to April 1949 amounting to Rs. 576. It is contended that this suit constitutes the appellant a statutory tenant under Act III [3] and, therefore, he is entitled to claim protection from eviction under the Act. The relevant provision is in S. 11 and is as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary .... where a tenant is in possession of any building, he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise."

[20] It is obvious that this protection cannot avail the tenant against an order of eviction passed under the Act itself. The contention of the learned counsel, however, is that, by filing the rent suit, a new tenancy has come into being and, therefore, the tenant can claim protection. The conception of a tenant as conceived by this Act is entirely novel and not in keeping with the ordinary ideas as to what a tenant is. I reproduce the definition below :

" 'Tenant' means any person by whom or on whose account, rent is payable for a building and includes a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour."

[21] According to our ordinary conception of a tenant, he ceases to be a tenant when the tenancy terminates. If he continues to occupy the tenancy after the termination, he does so as a trespasser and continues to be a trespasser, however long he remains in possession after this period, unless the landlord, by accepting rent or by otherwise indicating his recognition of the relationship of landlord and tenant between them, brings a tenancy into being between them. Under Act III [3], however, no such thing is necessary; even after the tenancy has terminated, the lessee is still a tenant provided he remains in possession. This is so even after the passing of an order under S. 11 for vacating the building in favour of the landlord. The order of eviction given by the Controller is also different in nature from an order of eviction passed by a civil Court. It is based on grounds which do not necessarily terminate the tenancy, for instance, for non-payment of rent or because the landlord requires the building for his own occupation whereas the civil Court ejects a lessee as a trespasser after the tenancy between him and the lessor has been terminated. In the present case, therefore, the mere fact that an order was passed against the appellant to evict the building would not necessarily terminate his tenancy and the suit to recover rent would not bring a new tenancy into being.

[22] The principle underlying the waiver of forfeiture of a tenancy is that the lessor by some act has indicated an intention to treat the lease as still subsisting. It is illustrated by S. 112, T. P. Act, which provides that a forfeiture under cl. (g) of S. 111 of the Act is waived by acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture, or by distress for such rent, or by any other act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. There is a relevant exception to this section, namely, where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture. Apparently, once the lessor has made his intention of terminating the relationship clear by instituting a suit for ejectment, his acceptance of rent is not to be interpreted in the manner indicated in the section. This exception is not extended by S. 113, T. P. Act, to waiver of a notice to quit, but the view has been expressed by a Judge of this Court that the inclusion in a suit for ejectment of a claim to such rent would not have the effect of waiver: Shah Wali Ahmad v. Hussaini Begam, 2 Pat. L. J. 595 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Pat. 469). These sections are concerned with waiver before the landlord has obtained a decree for ejectment. Here, we are concerned with a case where the landlord has actually got an order for ejectment and has filed a petition for execution in order to give effect to it. Act III [3] does not contain any special provisions to enable the landlord to recover his arrears of rent. He has for this purpose to go to the civil Courts and he has done so in the present case. I have indicated above that the legal position of the tenant after the Controller has passed an order under S. 11, directing him to vacate the building is uncertain. He may or may not continue as a tenant. In these circumstances, if the landlord, in his suit, describes as rent the sum which he claims to recover from him on account of his occupation of the building subsequent to the order of the Controller, it cannot be said that he shows thereby an intention to continue the tenancy and to waive his rights under the order of the Controller. A copy of the plaint in the suit was produced before us, and it certainly does not indicate any such intention.

[22A] On the above grounds, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

[23] Das J.—I agree with my learned brother that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[24] As to the first point of delegated legislation, I am clearly of the opinion that the Full Bench decision, Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, (A.I.R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 F.B.) referred to by my learned brother covers the point now raised by learned counsel for the appellant. It would, I think, serve no useful purpose to repeat what my learned brother has said with regard to it.

[25] I should like to say a few words about the second point which relates to the interpretation of S. 17, Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947, hereinafter to be referred to as Bihar Act III [3] of 1947. The particular words used in the section which have given rise to difficulties are

"shall be executed by the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building in relation to which the order to be executed is passed, as if such order were a decree passed by such Court."

The difficulties are these. It appears that there are three kinds of orders which may be passed by the Controller or the Commissioner on appeal, where the question of execution of the order may arise. Under S. 9, the Controller may direct, on application by the tenant, that certain repairs be made by the tenant and the cost thereof may be deducted from rent which is payable by him. Under S. 10, the Controller may make an order directing the landlord to restore amenities which the landlord has without just or sufficient cause cut or withheld. Under S. 11, the Controller may pass an order of eviction directing the tenant to put the landlord in possession of the building. With regard to, at least, two of the aforesaid orders, namely, the order directing the landlord to restore amenities and the order directing the tenant to put the landlord in possession, the question of execution of the order will undoubtedly arise. The only section in Bihar Act III [3] of 1947 relating to execution is S. 17. That section seeks to indicate the Court which shall execute every order of the Controller passed under the Act and the order of the Commissioner passed on appeal under S. 18. In terms, the section states that the order shall be executed by the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the building in relation to which the order to be executed is passed, as if such order were a decree passed by such Court. The first difficulty that arises is that there may be cases where in fact there are no arrears of rent. The second difficulty is even when there are arrears of rent, which amount should be taken for the purpose of determining the Court of execution, the amount of arrears at the date of the order of the Controller or the amount of arrears at the date of the order of the Commissioner on appeal, or the amount of arrears at some earlier date, say the arrears outstanding at the date when the application for the order was made. The jurisdiction of a Court is of various kinds, personal, territorial and pecuniary. There will be no difficulty in determining the territorial jurisdiction; but there may be difficulty in determining the pecuniary jurisdiction, and the Court will be different according as one view or other of the views mentioned above is taken. I have been at some pains to find out one solution which would meet all difficulties; but S. 17 is so worded that it is difficult to get one solution for all the difficulties which may arise.

[26] Personally, I think that as between the Court of Munsif and that of a Subordinate Judge the determination will depend on the amount of arrears, and that amount must be the amount outstanding at the date of the order which is under execution. If the amount is beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Munsif, the order must be executed by the Subordinate Judge; if the amount is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Munsif, the order will be executed by the Munsif. The question may be asked — what about cases where there are no outstanding arrears of rent? In such cases, I think, a notional arrear has to be resorted to in order to give effect to the words used in S. 17. The arrears then would be notionally at least, one month's rent if a monthly tenancy or one year's rent, if an annual tenancy, or periodical rent if the tenancy is created for a particular period. Without any such notional arrear it will be impossible to determine to which Court to go for execution of the order.

[27] Where, however, the amount of arrears, either actual or notional, is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Munsif, I do not think any difficulty is created. I agree with my learned brother that S. 33, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, solves the difficulty. That section states that a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes with respect to the exercise of the jurisdiction, and the same Court with respect to the exercise of its jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature which are not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, shall, for the purposes of the Small Cause Courts Act and the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to be different Courts. It is worthy of note that they will be different Courts only for the purpose of the two Acts—the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and the Code of Civil Procedure. I do not think that S. 17, Bihar Act III [3] of 1947, contemplates that a Munsif who is vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court under S. 25, Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, and the same Munsif who exercises jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, shall for the purposes of Bihar Act, III [3] of 1947, be deemed to be different Courts. The Legislature must have been aware of the provisions of S. 33, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It is to be observed that the words used in S. 33 are "be deemed to be different Courts" which mean not that they are different Courts, but that they shall be deemed to be different Courts for a limited purpose only. If the intention was to treat them as different Courts for S. 17, Bihar Act III [3] of 1947, the Legislature would have said so in clear terms. There is, therefore, no antithesis between a Munsif exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court and a Munsif exercising ordinary jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, so far as the provisions of S. 17, Bihar Act III [3] of 1947, are concerned.

[28] Therefore, in either view of the matter the order in the present case was properly executed in the Court of the first Munsif, Patna, who had both territorial and pecuniary jurisdiction. I have examined the order of the Controller dated 18-9-1948, as also the order of the Commissioner on appeal dated 26-2-1949. I think it is the order of the Commissioner which is in execution, and on the date of that order the arrears amounted to more than Rs. 500. Under S. 15 (2), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction as the value exceeded Rs. 500. This would be the result if the view is taken that there is a distinction between the Munsif exercising Small Cause Court powers and the Munsif not exercising such powers. I do not, however, think there is any such distinction, and if there be no such distinction, then clearly enough the proper Court of execution of the order of eviction was the Court of the first Munsif, Patna.

[29] I agree with my learned brother with regard to points 3, 5 and 6, and have nothing useful to add. With regard to point 4, I do not think there is any difficulty. It was stated at the Bar that the order in question had been amended so as to relate to Holding 175. If such an amendment has been made, then there is no question of making any further enquiry as to whether Holding No. 189 was the old number of the holding which is now 175 as is stated by learned counsel for the respondent. If no amendment has been made, then the order of the learned District Judge makes it quite clear that the execution will be in respect of the holding mentioned in the order. The respondent has not made any grievance of the order of the learned District Judge, and I fail to see how the appellant can make a grievance of it.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 96 of 1948, D/- 12-10-1950.

Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act (VII [7] of 1938), Ss. 2, 6 (c) and 6 (k)—Agricultural income — Usufructuary mortgage of patni mahal — Rent and cess realised by mortgagee — Whether 'income' of mortgagor assessee for purposes of deduction under Ss. 6 (c) and (k).

Where certain patni mahal is usufructuarily mortgaged and a mukhatyarnama is also executed in favour of the mortgagee by the assessee mortgagor, the realisation of rent and cess from the patnidars of the mortgaged property made by the mortgagee under the power-of-attorney from the mortgagor is the income of the mortgagee and not that of the mortgagor, and the assessee is not entitled to get any deductions under S. 6 (c) and (k), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, in respect of the said income; nor is he entitled to deductions for the collection and payment of interest in respect of the mortgage : A. Sarjoo Prasad J.—This is a reference made by the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax under S. 25 (2), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act (VII [7] of 1938). There are the following two questions of law which have been referred to us :

"Whether the realisation of rent and cess from the patnidars of the mortgaged property made by the mortgagee under a power-of-attorney from the mortgagor is the income of the mortgagor or mortgagee within the meaning of Ss. 6 (c) and 6 (k), Agricultural Income-tax Act, and whether the assessee is entitled to get deduction under those sections in respect of the same income ?

Whether under the circumstances of the case the assessee is entitled to get appropriate deductions under S. 6 (c) for collection charges and also under S. 6 (k) for payment of interest made on the mortgage?"

The answer to the two questions formulated above will affect the assessment in respect of various years, namely, 1943-44, 1944-45 and 1945-46.

[2] The relevant facts are that a portion of the assessee's property has been given in usufructuary mortgage to one Babu Raghubar Narayan Singh of Monghyr under a registered mortgage bond dated 10-8-1935 for a sum of rupees 4 lakhs. Under the terms of the bond the mortgagee was entitled to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and to utilise the usufruct of the same, and until the payment of the mortgage debt the mortgagor or his successors were not entitled to dispossess him of the mortgaged property. The mortgagees were entitled to realise rents from the patnidars and had also the right to enforce payment thereof in case of default by institution of rent suits. Contemporaneous with the mortgage, the executant of the bond also executed a mukhtarnama in favour of the mortgagee. It appears that by virtue of the mortgage in question the mortgagee had been appropriating a sum of Rs. 34,270 out of the usufruct by way of interest for the loan advanced and also paying Government revenue and cesses amounting to Rs. 1,11,797. The assessee claims that these two amounts were really a part of his agricultural income, and, therefore, he is entitled to deduction on account of those payments. The assessee contends that those appropriations are really in the discharge of his obligations in favour of Government, on the one hand, and the creditor, on the other; and, therefore, they should be included within his income and the deductions allowed as claimed by him. The Revenue authorities did not agree with this contention of the assessee. They held that, in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed, the mortgagee was in possession of the patni mahal, and the assessee had no right to collect rents from the patnidars, and, as such, the income from the patni mahal was not the income of the assessee, and, consequently, he was not entitled to any deductions under S. 6 (c) or under S. 6 (k) of the Act.

[3] In my opinion, the view of the Revenue authorities on the point is absolutely correct. The term "agricultural income" as defined in S. 2 of the Act means any rent or income derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, etc. On the plain terms of the mortgage bond it is perfectly clear that since sewan, 1342 Fs., that is, long before the periods of assessment the mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged property, and the assessee is neither in possession, nor is he entitled to collect any rent, nor has he derived any agricultural income from the said property during the years of assessment. Therefore, in no sense can it be said that he had any agricultural income in respect of the mortgaged property. A mortgage is a transfer of interest in an immovable property, and where the mortgagee comes into possession of the property and is entitled to appropriate the usufruct thereof, he gets the income of the land in question. He gets the income of the land in question subject to the payment, as the terms may be, of the Government demands in respect of the property. The payment of the Government demands, according to the terms of the mortgage bond, is in no sense the agricultural income of the mortgagor assessee although it goes to satisfy some of the public demands for which the mortgagor may be found personally liable. Similar considerations apply to the payment of the interest out of the usufruct of the property. The mortgagee, in such a case, is not acting as the agent of the mortgagor. In the bond under consideration there is no rate of interest fixed and, on the terms of the bond there is nothing to show that any particular portion of the usufruct is to be specifically appropriated towards the interest of the loan. But even if there were such a term, as I have already pointed out, that would not make any difference so long as whole usufruct of the property is appropriated and realised by the mortgagee under the terms of the document, and no part of the income of the property goes to the mortgagor. The possession would have been different if it had been a case of a simple mortgage where, of course, the income derived from the property goes to the hands of the mortgagor, or where for instance, the usufructuary mortgagee had given a lease back to the mortgagor on certain terms and conditions ensuring the payment of a certain amount towards the satisfaction of the principal or interest in respect of the mortgage dues: vide In the matter of M. Makund Sarup, 50 ALL. 495 at p. 497: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 ALL. 811 F. B.) and Ibrahimsa Rowther v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 51 Mad. 455: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 543 F. B.). As it has been rightly found that no part of the income derived from the mortgaged property under the terms of the bond did not go to the hands of the mortgagor, the claim of the mortgagor in respect of the deductions in question is quite unfounded. The answer, therefore, to both the questions must be in the negative; in other words, the answer to the first question is that the realisation of rent and cess from the patnidars of the mortgaged property made by the mortgagee under a power-of-attorney from the mortgagor is the income of the mortgagee and not that of the mortgagor, and the assessee is not entitled to get any deductions under Ss. 6 (c) and 6 (k), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, in respect of the said income; and the answer to the second question is that in the circumstances of the case, the assessee is not entitled to get deductions under S. 6 (c) or under S. 6 (k) of the Act for collection and payment of interest in respect of the mortgage in question.

[4] The reference is answered accordingly. The department is entitled to the sum of Rs. 100 by way of costs of this reference which has been already deposited by the assessee.

Mansid Oraon and another — Petitioners v. The King.

Criminal Revn. No. 1189 of 1949, D/- 7-10-1949.

(a) Forest Act (1927), Ss. 20 (1), 26 (1) (f) and (h) —Prosecution for offence under Cls. (f) and (h) of S. 26 (1) — Notification under S. 20 (1) not proved — Effect.

For the purpose of proving the guilt of the accused it is necessary to show not only that they did the acts mentioned in cls. (f) and (h) of S. 26 (1) but also that they were not entitled to do those acts because there had been a notification issued under S. 20 (1) specifying the limits of the forest and that the land in question fell within those limits. Such a notification is essential for the purpose of declaring a forest as a reserved forest. The production of notification under S. 4 or oral evidence as to limits of the forest is not sufficient. [Para 1]

Anno. Forest Act, S. 26 N. 3, 6.

(b) Criminal trial — Evidence — Duty of Court and Public Prosecutors.

The Public Prosecutors or the magistracy should take care to bring on to the record those notifications and orders which are essential for proving that the accused has acted in contravention of the law. Until they do so, it is a waste of public time and money to prosecute at all because whenever convictions are challenged in the High Court, they have to be set aside when there are omissions of this nature.

[Para 2]

L. K. Chowdhury — for Petitioners; Harinandan Singh — for the Crown.

Agarwala C. J.—The petitioners have been convicted of offences under cls. (f) and (h) of S. 26 (1), Forest Act, 1927. The prosecution case is that they cultivated land which falls within a reserved forest and have cut down trees standing on that land. The defence was that the land which has been cleared does not fall within the reserved forest, and that it has been the raiyati land of the petitioners for many years. The prosecution produced and relied on a notification issued under S. 4 of the Act, and also led evidence that the land in question falls within the boundary pillars fixed by the forest department, for proving that the land in question falls within the reserved forest. Now, the notification under S. 4 of the Act is merely a notification declaring the intention of Government to constitute certain land as a reserved forest and specifying as nearly as possible the situation and limits of such land. The following sections of the Act provide for the determination of rights in the land which it is sought to constitute as a reserved forest and similar matters. Then comes S. 20 which is the section under which the forest is eventually constituted. That section provides that when certain events have occurred, which need not be specified here, the Provincial Government,

"shall publish a notification in the Official Gazette specifying definitely, according to boundary marks erected or otherwise, the limits of the forest which is to be reserved, and declare the same to be reserved from a date fixed by the notification."

Sub-section (2) of this section says that

"from the date so fixed shall be deemed to be a reserved forest."

The prosecution has not produced the notification, if any, issued under S. 20, specifying definitely the limits of the forest. It is clear from a perusal of the section that a notification under this section is essential for the purpose of declaring a forest a reserved forest, and that such notification must specify precisely the limits of the forest and the date from which the forest is constituted. The prosecution has, by oral evidence, endeavoured to prove that the land in question falls within certain boundary pillars. Presumably it was intended to imply that these were the boundary marks referred to in sub-s. (1) of S. 20. It may be that they are so; but for the purpose of proving the guilt of the petitioners it is necessary to shew not only that they did the acts mentioned in cls. (f) and (h) of S. 26 (1), but also that they were not entitled to do those acts because there had been a notification issued under S. 20 (1) specifying the limits of the forest and that the land in question fell within those limits.

[2] This is merely one of the many instances to which this Court has continually invited Government's attention to the utter carelessness with which prosecutions in this province are conducted. Neither the Public Prosecutors nor the magistracy seem to take the slightest care to bring on to the record those notifications and orders which are essential for proving that the accused has acted in contravention of the law. Until they do so, it seems to be a waste of public time and money to prosecute at all, because whenever convictions are challenged in this Court they have to be set aside when there are omissions of this nature.

[3] The convictions and sentences are set aside. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

[4] A copy of this judgment will be sent to the Provincial Government.

Ramautar Ahir — Petitioner v. The State.

Criminal Revn. No. 1021 of 1950, D/- 14-11-1950.

Criminal P. C., (1898), S. 250 — Order for compensation — Findings necessary before passing—Omission—Effect.

Before an order for payment of compensation is passed, S. 250 necessarily implies a finding by the Magistrate on two heads : firstly, whether the accusation was false, and, secondly, whether it was either frivolous or vexatious. Where in acquitting the accused persons of the offences charged, the Magistrate expresses the opinion that the accusation was false and malicious it is at most a compliance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 250 which says that the complainant or informant, as the case may be, is to be called on to show cause, only if the Magistrate is of the opinion that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious. The expression of opinion contained in the judgment of acquittal does not exempt the Magistrate from considering the point after the cause is shown. The absence, however, of the necessary finding under the other head does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass the order for compensation ab initio as it is not a defect which goes to the root of jurisdiction. [Paras 2, 3]

Anno. Cr. P. C. S. 250 N. 10.

S. Safdar Imam — for Petitioners; Janeshwar Singh — for the State.

Reuben J. — The petitioner filed a first information report under Ss. 447 and 380, Penal Code, against Banti Ahir and four other persons, alleging that they had committed housebreaking and theft in his house. The accused persons were acquitted by the First Class Magistrate, Motihari, and, in a proceeding under S. 250, Criminal P. C., the petitioner was directed by the Magistrate to pay Rs. 100 as compensation to each of the accused persons. The order has been upheld by the Sessions Judge with the modification that the amount payable to each of the accused persons has been reduced to Rs. 50.

[2] The order passed by the Magistrate is on the face of it defective as not complying with S. 250. This section provides that, after cause has been shown by the complainant or informant, as the case may be, if the Magistrate is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious, he may direct payment of compensation. This necessarily implies a finding by the Magistrate on two heads : firstly, whether the accusation was false, and, secondly, whether it was either frivolous or vexatious. In acquitting the accused persons of the offences charged, the Magistrate expressed the opinion that the accusation was false and malicious. This is at most a compliance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 250, which says that the complainant or informant, as the case may be, is to be called on to show cause, only if the Magistrate is of the opinion that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious. The expression of opinion contained in the judgment of acquittal does not exempt the Magistrate from considering the point after the cause is shown. The learned Magistrate lost sight of this provision altogether and recorded only one finding, namely, that the accusation was false.

[3] It has been urged that the absence of the necessary finding under the other head affects the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass the order and, therefore, the order is bad ab initio. It appears to me that this is not a defect which goes to the root of jurisdiction. At the most, there is an irregularity and, since the appellate Court can exercise the same powers as the original Court, the defect might have been supplied by the Sessions Judge in appeal. I, therefore, turn to the order of the Sessions Judge.

[4] The finding of the learned Sessions Judge is that there was probably a house-breaking and theft as alleged, but that the accusation as against these particular persons is without any reasonable and probable ground and was made out of enmity between the parties. He did not refer to the particular terms of S. 250 and went on to decide whether the condition as to frivolousness or vexatiousness was satisfied. In the circumstances of this case, it is not necessary to enter into a consideration of the difficult question as to whether a finding of this sort is a sufficient finding for the purposes of S. 250. Some guidance on the point is afforded by In re Dinshahji Hirjibhai, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 177 : (33 Cr. L. J. 392). But that was a case where the falseness of the accusation against the accused person was definitely established. On a consideration of the order of the Sessions Judge, I do not find this to be so here. According to the Sessions Judge, there probably was a house-breaking and theft. The witnesses, however, seem to be interested and have deposed before for the prosecution. There is previous enmity between the first informant on one side and the accused persons on the other and there are discrepancies in the evidence and improbabilities in the evidence relating to the occurrence. These are the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge. They are, at the most, reasons for disbelieving the witnesses, in other words, for holding that the offences alleged against these accused persons have not been proved. Before an order under S. 250 can be passed, however, it must be definitely established that the accusation is false.

[5] For the reasons given above, I would allow this petition and set aside the order for the payment of compensation. The money, if paid, must be refunded.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 72—'Risk Note A' — Non-delivery—Liability of railway.

Risk Note A confers exemption from liability only in respect of the condition of goods at the time of delivery at destination. It does not confer immunity in a case of total non-delivery of the goods. [Para 5]

Anno : Railways Act, S. 72, N. 5.

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 72 — Consignment under Risk Note A—Loss of goods due to looting at destination—Non-delivery—Liability of Railway —Burden of proof.

Under S. 72, Railways Act, the responsibility of Railway Administration is that of a bailee under Ss. 151 and 152, Contract Act. The railway must take such care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would take of his own goods of the same quality and value under similar circumstances. The loss or damage of goods entrusted to a bailee is prima facie evidence of negligence and the burden of proof, therefore, to disprove negligence lies on the bailee and this burden lies also on the Railway Administration in the absence of special circumstances to the contrary. [Para 6]

Where a consignment of goods under Risk Note A was looted at the destination by an unruly mob under circumstances over which the Railway Administration had no control and there was no proof of negligence on the part of the railway, it was held that the railway could not be held liable in damages for non-delivery of the goods. [Para 8]

N. C. Ghosh and P. K. Bose — for Appellant ; Nandlal Unatwalia and Shreenath Singh — for Respondent.

Ramaswami J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Monghyr. The plaintiff brought the suit on the allegation that the defendant Railway Administration had on account of their negligence failed to deliver three consignments of certain goods which had been booked for being delivered to the plaintiff at Lakhisarai. Shree Krishna Company had booked one consignment of goods at Bhagalpur on 11-8-1942. A second consignment was booked by Ramdeo Gajanand at Barhee on 13-8-1942; a third consignment by Durga Prasad Nandlal at Sultanganj on 11-8-1942. The plaintiff claimed as damages a sum of Rs. 5233-2-9 and odd together with interest. The main ground of defence was that the consignment booked at Bhagalpur and Sultanganj were duly conveyed to Lakhisarai where they were looted by a violent mob on 15-8-1942. It was stated that the third consignment was looted by a violent mob on 14-8-1942 at Barhee station. The Railway Administration pleaded that there was no negligence on their part ; that the loss of the consignments was due to circumstances beyond their control. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments were looted by a violent mob at Lakhisarai as alleged by the defendant. But he held that the Railway Administration was negligent and the loss would not have taken place if the railway servants had taken proper care. As regards the third consignment the learned Subordinate Judge found that there was no reliable evidence that Barhee railway station was subjected to mob violence on 14-8-1942 or that the consignment was looted. He accordingly granted a decree to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 5233-2-9 but disallowed interest.

[2] Three main questions were argued in this appeal : (1) whether the learned Subordinate Judge was right to hold that the Sultanganj and Bhagalpur consignments were looted at Lakhisarai owing to the negligence of the Railway Administration; (2) whether there was proof that the Barhee consignment was lost on account of mob violence at Barhee ; and (3) whether the entire claim of the plaintiff was not barred under Art. 31, Limitation Act.

[3] On behalf of the respondent learned advocate addressed the argument that the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments never reached Lakhisarai, that they were not looted from the Lakhisarai goods shed on the alleged date. But this argument is untenable in face of the admission of the plaintiff's witnesses that the consignments were actually looted from the goods shed at Lakhisarai. The Subordinate Judge has found also upon the evidence that the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments duly reached Lakhisarai on 13-8-42 during the night, that the consignments were unloaded and kept in the Lakhisarai goods shed on the next date. (After discussion of the evidence the judgment proceeds :)

[4] On behalf of the respondent it was argued that there was no proof that the particular consignments were looted from the goods shed at Lakhisarai on the alleged date. It was maintained that the railway officers ought to have prepared a list of the consignments which were looted. But D. W. 11 stated when cross-examined, that no list was prepared as nothing was left after the loot. Learned advocate referred to Governor-General in Council v. Kabirram, 27 Pat. 151 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 345) in which we had held that the onus was really on the company to prove that the particular goods were looted. But that case must be distinguished from the facts proved in the present case. In that case part of the contents of the wagon were looted by the mob and part remained of which a list had been prepared by Mr. Banerji. This list was disbelieved as Mr. Banerji had not been examined. In the present case, however, it was proved that the entire contents of the wagon had been looted and according to the evidence of D. W. 11 no list was prepared as nothing was left after the loot. On the contrary the defence evidence coupled with the admission of the plaintiff's witnesses fully supports the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments were looted by a violent mob from the goods shed at Lakhisarai on 15-8-42.

[5] In the present case the consignments were booked under Risk Note Form A duly signed by the consignor. Under this Risk Note the consignor undertakes to hold the Railway Administration

"harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods consigned may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servants."

This clause confers exemption from liability, only in respect of the "condition" of goods at the time of delivery at destination. It does not confer immunity in a case of total non-delivery of the goods. The onus will still be on the Railway Administration to prove that they took as much care of the consignments bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence of his own goods of the same quality and value under similar circumstances.

[6] Under S. 72, Railways Act, the responsibility of railway administration is that of a bailee under Ss. 151 and 152, Contract Act. The Railway must take such care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would take of his own goods of the same quality and value under similar circumstances. There are authorities to the effect that the loss or damage of goods entrusted to a bailee is prima facie evidence of negligence and the burden of proof, therefore, to disprove negligence lies on the bailee and this burden lies also on the Railway Administration in the absence of special circumstances to the contrary. In Surendra Lal v. Secretary of State, 25 C. L. J. 37 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 892) the plaintiff had made over to railway 250 bundles of tobacco for delivery to Calcutta. In course of transmission the goods were destroyed by a severe cyclone while being carried on a flat in river Padma. Sir Ausutosh Mookerjee observed that when goods were not delivered to the consignee at the place of destination, the plaintiff need not prove how the loss occurred. The burden lay upon the bailee to prove the existence of circumstances which exonerated him from liability for the loss. Sir Asutosh Mookeriee relied upon two cases : Trustees of the Madras Harbour v. Best & Co. 22 Mad. 524 and Sesham Patter v. Moss,(17 Mad. 445). In River Steam Navigation Co. v. Choutmull, 26 I. A. 1 : (26 Cal. 398 P. C.) the Judicial Committee had previously adopted the view. In that case jute properly put on board on one of the appellants' vessels took fire and was consumed. The respondents claimed damage for non-delivery of 432 drums of jute. The judicial Committee held that under the Carriers Act the appellants would have been exempt from liability if they had proved (the onus being on them) that there was no negligence on their part, but that on the evidence they had failed to exonerate themselves. In Flannery v. Waterford and Limerick Railway Co., Ir. R. 11 C. L. 30, the plaintiff sustained injuries in consequence of a portion of the train in which she was travelling, having left the rails, and the railway, the engine and the carriages were under the defendants' management. The Court held that the fact of the accident was sufficient evidence to cast upon the defendants the burthen of showing that there was no negligence on their part; and that as they declined to afford any explanation of the course of the accident, there was a case for the plaintiff proper to be submitted to the jury. In Scott v. London Docks Co., (1865) 3 H. & C. 598 at p. 601 : (34 L. J. Ex. 220) Erle C. J., has well stated the principle :

"There must be reasonable evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care."

[7] In the present case the Subordinate Judge has found that the consignments were looted on account of the negligence of the Railway Administration. But the reasoning is extravagant and the conclusion cannot be sustained. The Subordinate Judge states that the bazar at Lakhisarai was close to the railway station. He considers that on 14-8-42 the railway authorities should have ascertained who were the consignees of the goods lying in the goods shed and should have issued a general notice of beat of drum to the traders in the bazar. He states: "the station-master if he had so liked could have saved the properties with the help of his staff and the traders in the bazar."

But there is sufficient evidence on the record to indicate that the loot of the consignments could not have been prevented by any reasonable precaution on the part of the railway authorities. [After discussion of evidence the judgment proceeds.]

[8] In the present case it is manifest that the consignments were looted in the circumstances over which the Railway Administration had no control. There is no proof of negligence on the part of the Railway Administration. On the contrary there is evidence that the Railway Officers had taken as much care for the consignments as a man of ordinary prudence would have taken of his own goods under similar circumstances. As regards the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments it must, therefore, be held that the plaintiff is not entitled to any decree against the Railway Administration.

[9] As regards the Barhee consignment the case is, however, different. For the defendant it was alleged that the consignment was looted by a riotous mob on 14-8-42 from a wagon in Barhee station. The Stationmaster and Assistant Station-master (P. Ws.-1 and 5) gave oral evidence of the alleged loot. Exhibit A is the report of the Station-master but the learned Subordinate Judge rightly refused to place any reliance upon it because the original diary was not produced and no explanation was given for its non-production. Three witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff (P. Ws. 6, 9 and 10) denied that any loot took place at Barhee. Upon the evidence the learned Subordinate Judge rightly held that the Railway Administration has not proved the loss of the consignment. As already stated the non-delivery of the consignment would be prima facie evidence of negligence. No proof has been offered by the railway company to rebut this presumption. With reference to the Barhee consignment the plaintiff is, in my opinion, entitled to a decree against the defendant.

[10] On behalf of the appellant learned advocate addressed the argument that the whole suit was barred by Art. 31, Limitation Act. There is admitted evidence that till December 1942 the Chief Commercial Manager had stated that special enquiry was being made and that he would send a definite reply shortly. The plaintiff originally brought the suit on 16-9-43 with respect to all the consignments. On 15-11-44 the plaintiff withdrew the suit with the leave of the Court to sue afresh on the same cause of action. The reason was that the suit had been filed within two months of the service of notice under S. 80, Civil P. C. The plaintiff instituted the present suit on 16-11-1944. Upon these facts it is patent that under S. 14, Limitation Act, the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the period during which the previous suit was pending in Court. In this context reference may be made to Hem Chander v. Kali Prosunno, 30 I. A. 177: (30 Cal. 1033 P. C.). In that case the facts were, that in 1890 a suit was brought against certain talukdars claiming to enhance the rent and to recover rent at an enhanced rate for a particular year. The first prayer was allowed but the second claim was rejected upon the ground that it was premature. Five years thereafter the plaintiff brought a suit to recover, inter alia, rent at the enhanced rate for the same year. The Subordinate Judge held that this claim was barred by res judicata. In appeal, the High Court did not accept this view but held that it was barred by limitation. The Judicial Committee held that there was no bar of limitation. They observed:

"In the opinion of their Lordships the proceedings in the earlier suit stayed the operation of the law of limitation; and as the appellant claimed the arrears of 1298 in that suit, but his claim was then disallowed as premature, he is now entitled to the benefit of the decree of enhancement and to recover the arrears at the enhanced rate."

Reference may also be made to the recent case Lal Bihari Lal v. Beni Madhab Khetri, F. A. No. 389 of 1946 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 293 F. B.) in which upon similar facts the Full Bench held that the plaintiffs were entitled to invoke the exception under S. 14, Limitation Act. The objection of the appellant that the suit is barred must be overruled.

[11] For the reasons already stated I hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree as regards the Bhagalpur and Sultanganj consignments but he is entitled to a decree with respect to the Barhee consignment, viz., a sum of Rs. 2,104-1-0 with proportionate costs and interest pendente lite at 6 per cent. per annum.

[12] To this extent I would alter the decree of the trial Judge and allow this appeal with proportionate costs.

[13] Manohar Lall J. — I agree. I only wish to observe that the plaintiff cannot be non-suited on limitation because he has come too soon and not too late. See Mt. Phulbas Kunwar v. Jogeshur, 3 I. A. 7 at p. 25 : (1 Cal. 226 P. C.) and Hem Chander v. Kali Prosunno, 30 I. A. 177 : (30 Cal. 1033 P. C.). I would allow relief to the plaintiff under S. 14, Limitation Act in the circumstances of the case.

Nanda Majhi—Appellant v. Gokul Kamini and others — Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 529 of 1947, D/- 3-8-1949.

(a) Landlord and Tenant — Self-growing palas trees on land in possession of raiyat—Right of tenant to grow lac.

The right to the palas trees self-growing on the land in the possession of the raiyat would go along with the land in possession of the raiyat unless the patnidar establishes that he at the time of the original settlement with the raiyat had reserved the right to go upon the land in possession of the raiyat and put lac on the trees that may come into existence later on or unless he establishes the custom that the tenant in the particular village had no right on the self-growing palas trees standing on his holding. It is for the patnidar to prove that there was a stipulation in the original settlement to the effect that if the raiyat cultivates lac on the trees he must pay a tax or rent therefor. Even in such a case the landlord has no right to go on the land to cultivate lac. But the right to cultivate lac is with the raiyat : A.I.R. (16) 1929 Pat. 328 and A.I.R. (4) 1917 Cal. 226, Rel. on; A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 69, Disting. [Paras 10, 13]

(b) Tenancy Laws — Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI [6] of 1908), S. 21A (a) (iv)—Retrospective operation—S. 21A (a) (iv) is retrospective. [Para 7]

S. C. Mazumdar and S. K. Mazumdar — for Appellant; R. S. Chatterji — for Respondents.

Manohar Lall J.—This is an appeal by the defendants who are aggrieved by the concurrent decisions of the Courts below by which they have decreed the plaintiff's suit. The question for decision is whether the appellants as raiyats have a right to grow lac on the trees standing on their holding.

[2] The facts alleged are that the plaintiff is the patnidar of village Damda from before the time of the survey settlement operations which took place about the year 1922. No palas trees fit for lac rearing were found on the lands belonging to the plaintiff which were recorded as khewat No. 2 under the Gorabadi khatian No. 117; but subsequently some palas trees grew up on those lands. On 9-6-1924, the plaintiff settled all the trees standing in village Damda by a registered kabuliat with certain lessees who relinquished the settlement on 6-10-1933 and surrendered all the trees with the lac thereon in favour of the plaintiff.

[3] The appellants held in that period some lands in this village as ordinary tenants, but owing to a dispute between the appellants and the landlord, Mukunda Majhi, the predecessor of the appellants, claimed some khas lands of the plaintiff as within the ambit of his jote, and thereupon Title Suit No. 493/503 of 1928 was instituted by the appellants in the Court of the Munsif of Purulia, but that suit was compromised on 6-3-1929, and a compromise decree was drawn up on the terms that the lands in suit were recognised to be tenancy of the appellants at Rs. 5 a year. This compromise decree having been found to be unregistered has not been relied upon by the Courts below, or before us.

[4] The cause of action for the present suit instituted on 8-4-1944, was that in the year 1934 the appellants forcibly cut away the lac standing on the palas trees on their holding and the plaintiff was unsuccessful in the criminal Court in a case which he had instituted against the appellants for theft. The plaintiff states that since 1935 he has been dispossessed from the trees.

[5] The defence to the action was that the plaintiff was never in possession of the trees in suit, that the story of the settlement of those trees with a third person is not true and the defendants had all along been in possession of those trees and their possession was affirmed by the compromise decree.

[6] It should be stated that the plaintiff's case that there was a custom in the village by which the tenants had no right whatsoever on the self-grown palas trees standing on his holding has not been established on the evidence. The only question for decision, therefore, is whether in the circumstances of the present case the right to rear lac on the trees and the title to the trees are with the defendants or with the plaintiff.

[7] If S. 21A, introduced in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, by Bihar Act XXV [25] of 1947, is held to be retrospective, then the plaintiff has no case whatsoever, because by sub-cl. (a)(iv) of that section the raiyat is expressly given right to rear lac and cocoons on the trees standing on his land and appropriate the same provided that there is no specific entry in the record of rights to the contrary. In the present case there is no specific entry in the record of rights to the contrary, and the allegation of custom has been already found to be non-existing. The terms of this new sub-clause appear to be retrospective, otherwise no reference would have been made to the entry in the record of rights.

[8] But it is unnecessary to have recourse to the retrospectivity of this new section, because on the facts found the plaintiff has no title or subsisting title to the trees in suit.

[9] It is admitted that the trees are on the lands in possession of the defendants, and therefore, prima facie in their possession. The solitary act of possession which the plaintiff alleges is that he reared lac on the trees which was removed by the defendants in 1934. The finding of the appellate Court is not clear or satisfactory. All he says at p. 14 is:

"The plaintiff has adduced evidence that in 1341 B. S. he reared lac on the trees standing on the disputed lands but the defendants cut and removed the same in Kartik 1341 B. S. . . . I have no reason to disbelieve this evidence of the plaintiff as he would never have allowed the defendant to set lac on the trees which were never settled with them along with the lands. The defendants have failed to prove that they have any right in the trees."

This finding of possession by a solitary act in 1341 B. S. is based materially upon the finding that the title was with the plaintiff and not with the defendants. I have perused the evidence adduced in this case, and I am of the opinion that the Courts below should not have accepted the plaintiff's evidence of possession. But as there is a finding of fact, however unsatisfactory it may appear to be, I must assume that the possession was somehow with the plaintiff in 1934.

[10] But has the plaintiff established that he has any title to the trees in question? The trees were self-growing on the land in possession of the defendants. The plaintiff did not claim the right to such trees in the record of rights, nor can he rely upon the statements made in the compromise decree, because that decree is inadmissible in evidence. The right to the trees would, therefore, go along with the land in possession of the defendants unless the plaintiff establishes that he at the time of the original settlement with the defendants had reserved the right to go upon the land in possession of the defendants and put lac on the trees that may come into existence later on. As I have said above, the plaintiff cannot rely upon the terms of the compromise decree, and in the absence of any evidence whatsoever as to the terms upon which the original settlement of the land was made with the defendants, the plaintiff could only succeed on the question of custom which he had set up in the plaint. The custom having been found non-existent on the evidence, the plaintiff, in my opinion, has failed to prove that he has any title to the trees which admittedly stand on the lands rightly in the possession of the defendants.

[11] I now proceed to consider some of the cases which have been placed before us.

[12] The leading case is Rai Charan Mahanti v. Kanai Kumar, 24 C. L. J. 21 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 226). In that case the learned Judges were construing a kabuliat by which the lessor had reserved property in the trees growing on the leasehold land and the lessee was prohibited from taking them away although they were given enjoyment of the fruits and flowers of the trees only at the permission of the lessor. Nevertheless, it was held that this ownership in the trees did not carry with it a right to go on the land of the lessee to cultivate shellac on the trees reserved. In my opinion, this case exactly fits in the circumstances of this case. Moreover I cannot see any justification for the plaintiff to insist on going on the land of the defendants to cultivate lac on the trees. If this is allowed to be done it would mean unjustifiable interference with the right of the defendants to enjoy every portion of their land, and in view of the unhappy relations between the parties this would also lead to constant breaches of the peace.

[13] This case was referred to with approval in Upendra Singh v. Surjan Singh, 8 Pat. 266: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 328), the facts of this case, however, are distinguishable because it was found that the lease was both of the land and of the trees. The head-note states that in the district of Ranchi where a raiyat clearing land for cultivation conserves a tree, he is not liable by custom or otherwise to pay rent or a tax in respect of the tree if he cultivates lac on it, unless on a stipulation in the original settlement to that effect. This head-note correctly states the decision and supports me in the view that it is for the plaintiff to prove that there was a stipulation in the original settlement to the effect that if the raiyat cultivates lac on the trees, he must pay a tax or rent therefor. It will be observed that even in such a case the landlord has no right to go on the land to cultivate lac upon it, but the right to cultivate lac is with the raiyat.

[14] Mr. Chatterji cited before us some cases including Nawagarh Coal Co. Ltd. v. Behari Lal, 1 Pat. L. J. 275 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 69), to support his argument that there is an implied reservation of incidental rights in the landlord. But those cases are cases of mining leases and have no bearing upon the facts of the present case.

[15] For these reasons, I would reverse the decision of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff should pay half the costs to the defendants in all the Courts.

[16] Ramaswami J. — I agree.

Asghar Ali—Appellant v. Mt. Jasoda Kuer and others—Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 2550 of 1947, Decided on 30-8-1949.

(a) Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914), S. 45 — Section has no application to suit to declare certificate-sale as void ab initio as it relates to suits to set aside certificate sales. [Para 2]

(b) Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914), S. 11 — Certificates against co-sharer tenants - Payment of their proportionate dues by some of them — Their shares temporarily exempted and execution proceeded against others —Fresh notice under S. 7 if necessary.

Where a landlord files a certificate against all the tenure-holders for the rent of the entire tenure but during the course of the proceeding some of the co-sharer-tenants pay up their proportional dues and their shares are temporarily exempted from sale at the request of the landlord with the result that the Certificate Officer directs the execution to proceed against the remaining co-sharer-tenants for the value of the amount due, there is no amendment of the certificate within the meaning of S. 11 so as to necessitate a fresh issue of notice under S. 7. [Para 5]

(c) Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914), S. 26 and Sch. II, R. 24 — Certificate filed on requisition of private landlord — Certificate officer's power to execute it by sale of portion of property — Tenancy laws — Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 158 A (7).

Where a certificate is filed on the requisition of a private landlord, the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act become applicable to such a sale by virtue of S. 158A (7), Tenancy Act. Therefore by virtue of S. 26 read with Sch. II, R. 24 of that Act the certificate officer has power to execute the certificate only against a portion of the property liable for the certificate debt, such a sale operating as a money sale: A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 223 and A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 89, Disting. [Para 6]

(d) Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914), Ss. 29 and 45 — Certificate sale—Irregularities in—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

Sections 29 and 45 show that the Legislature was not anxious that the Civil Court should interfere with the proceedings of the Certificate Officer on the ground of irregularities. By Ss. 29 and 31 it has kept such matters for the consideration of the Certificate Officer himself, and even where that important notice, the notice under S. 7, is alleged not to have been served it has refused relief to the certificate debtor under S. 45, if he appears in the certificate proceedings.

[Para 9]

L. K. Jha, S. Anwar Ahmad and Balbhadra Prasad Sinha—for Appellant; Rajkishore Prasad, S. P. Shrivastava and Shivanugraha Prasad — for Respondents.

Reuben J.— This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the District Judge of Gaya, reversing in appeal, a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya.

[2] The suit was instituted to obtain a declaration that a certificate sale of certain mokarrari property was void ab initio. In dismissing the suit, the District Judge, besides other grounds, relied on the ground that the suit is barred under the provisions of S. 45, Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914. Obviously this section has no application, as it relates to suits for the setting aside of certificate sales.

[3] The suit property is a share of 4 annas and odd in a mokarrari tenure in village Murhera, tauzi No. 1755. The certificate was filed at the instance of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, the mortgagee of the proprietary interest in the village, for the recovery of arrears of rent of the entire mokarrari interest for the years 1344 to 1345 Fasli at the rate of Rs. 1363 per year. During the course of the execution of the certificate, one of the cosharers-mokarraridars, defendant 1, whose share is 7 annas and odd filed an application for accepting from him a fraction of the certificate dues proportional to his share and for exempting his share from being proceeded against. A similar petition was filed by another set of co-sharer Mokarraridars, defendants 3 to 7, who hold a share of 8 pies and odd. These two applications were agreed to by the certificate-holder and were allowed by the Certificate Officer by an order dated 29-5-1939. The execution of the certificate proceeded against the other certificate-debtors for the balance of the certificate dues and 7 annas and odd of the mokarrari tenure was sold on 31-7-1939, delivery of possession being taken by the purchaser defendant 1 on 24-1-1940. An application under S. 29, Public Demands Recovery Act for setting aside the sale was filed by the plaintiff on 28-9-1939. It was allowed conditionally by the Certificate Officer, but was dismissed by the Collector in appeal.

[4] The learned Advocate-General, for the appellant, has challenged the validity of the sale on two grounds, firstly that, by his order of 29-5-1939, the Certificate Officer amended the certificate and, therefore, under S. 11, Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914, should have issued a fresh notice under S. 7. In the absence of such a notice, he argues, the Certificate Officer had no jurisdiction to sell the property. Secondly, he argues, on the basis of S. 158A, Tenancy Act (vide Sch. 3 to the Public Demands Recovery Act) which section was then in force but has since been repealed, and sub-s. (3) of S. 26, Public Demands Recovery Act, that the Certificate Officer could only proceed in respect of the rent against the entire tenure, and, therefore, has acted without jurisdiction in proceeding against only some of the Mokarraridars in respect of a fraction of the tenure.

[5] The first point is readily answered by a perusal of the Certificate Officer's order of 29-5-1939 which is as follows :

"R. O. Reports that the share of the C. Ds. 1 and 2 to 6 may be temporarily exempted as they have paid their full quota. The share of C. Ds. 1 to 6 is therefore temporarily exempted. Issue fresh S. N. fixing 31-7-1939 on payment of cost by 1-6-1939. Put up on 30-6-39."

I have stressed the word "temporarily" because it indicates what was the essence of the order of the Certificate Officer. He had before him a certificate filed by the landlord against all the tenure-holders for the rent of the entire tenure. During the course of the proceeding, some of the co-sharer-tenants paid up what he took to be their quota, and at the request of the landlord he directed execution to proceed against the remaining co-sharer-tenants for the balance of the amount due. This, however, was a "temporary" step. If the sale of the shares of the remaining co-sharers failed to realise the balance still due, the Certificate Officer intended to proceed against the shares which had been "temporarily" exempted. The effect, therefore, was that these certificate-debtors though for the time being they were not being proceeded against, remained as certificate debtors. It follows that it is not correct that there was any amendment in the certificate.

[6] Coming to the second point, S. 158-A, Tenancy Act empowers the Provincial Government to extend the procedure prescribed by the Public Demands Recovery Act to the recovery of rent by private landlord. When a certificate is filed on the requisition of such a landlord, the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act apply mutatis mutandis for the purpose of the execution and of proceedings arising out of the execution of the certificate (vide sub-s. (7) of S. 158A). In the present case, there is no suggestion that the requisition made by the landlord and the certificate filed thereupon are not in accordance with the law. The learned Advocate-General stresses merely sub-s. (3) of S. 26, which provides that the sale in certificate proceedings of a tenure or holding for arrears of the rent thereof shall in certain circumstances have the effect of a rent sale. This provision must be read with sub-s. (1) of S. 26 of the Act, and R. 24 of the rules in Sch. 2 to the Act, which rules have a statutory effect (vide S. 47 of the Act). Rule 24 empowers the Certificate Officer when executing a certificate to sell the whole or a portion of the property liable to sale. Under sub-s. (1) of S. 26 where property is sold in execution of a certificate, there vests in the purchaser "merely the right, title and interest of the certificate-debtor at the time of the sale, even though the property itself be specified."

The two provisions clearly empower the Certificate Officer to execute the certificate only against a portion of the property liable for the certificate-debt, such a sale operating as a money sale. This is all that has happened in the case before us.

[7] Our attention has been drawn to Ambika v. Laxmi Ahir, 26 Pat. 66 : (A.I.R. (35) 1948 Pat. 223) and Parmeshwar Singh v. Jajo Singh, 29 Pat. L. T. 9 : (A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 89). These are authorities for the proposition that no suit can be entertained for the recovery of rent for a non-existent tenancy. They have no application to the present case. Here, we are past to stage of a suit to recover arrears of rent. The certificate which was duly filed is a decree for rent, and has been held to be for the correct rent of the whole tenure. We are now at the stage of execution.

[8] The learned Advocate-General has spoken of certain irregularities, for example, he complains that the order of 29-5-1939, was passed without notice to the applicant and that there is no provision under which the Certificate Officer could proceed only against some of the certificate-debtors. At the best, these are irregularities. Apart from S. 45, the only provision for challenging a sale on the ground of an irregularity is S. 29. This provision is analogous to that in O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., but goes much further, for it extends to material irregularities "in the certificate proceedings" and not merely "in publishing and conducting the sale". Further, the Certificate Officer is empowered to entertain an objection even after the expiry of sixty days after the sale (vide sub-s. (2) of the section). The plaintiff is barred from relief under S. 45 as he has been found to have appeared in the proceedings (vide cl. (b) of the proviso to S. 45) and the sale having been confirmed after the dismissal of his objection under S. 29 has become absolute (vide S. 31).

[9] The learned Advocate-General has also cited Baijnath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh, 23 I. A. 45 : (23 Cal. 775 P. C.) and Sudhir Chandra v. Sudhanshu Kumar, 44 C. W. N. 1097 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 556) and has stressed the observation of Lord Davey, about the necessity for the Certificate Officer to comply precisely with the forms prescribed by the Public Demands Recovery Act. These were both cases where the Court found that there was no certificate. Now, the certificate is the basis of the Certificate Officer's power to proceed in execution. The defect was one which went to the root of jurisdiction and entirely invalidated the proceedings of the Certificate Officer. But here we are concerned only with irregularities. The provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act to which I have referred show that the Legislature was not anxious that the civil Court should interfere with the proceedings of the Certificate Officer on the ground of irregularities. By Ss. 29 and 31 it has kept such matters for the consideration of the Certificate Officer himself, and even where that important notice, the notice under S. 7, is alleged not to have been served it has refused relief to the certificate-debtor under S. 45 if he appears in the certificate proceedings.

[10] On the above grounds, I think that the appeal has no merits and must be dismissed with costs.

[11] Narayan J.—I agree.

DAS AND SINHA JJ.

Chandra Sheikhar Prasad Singh — Petitioner v. The State of Bihar.

Criminal Misc. No. 126 of 1950, D/- 24-8-1950.

(a) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3 (1) — Detention order — Necessity to mention period of detention.

The detaining authority is not required, under the Act, to mention the period for which the detaining authority intends the detenu to be detained. If there is no provision for mentioning the period, the detaining authority is not bound or obliged to mention the period : A. I. R. (38) 1951 All. 357, Dissent. [Para 3]

Hence, a detention order under S. 3 is not invalid by reason of a failure to mention therein the period of detention. [Para 26]

(Distinction between preventive and punitive detentions pointed out.)

(b) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3 (1)—Public order—Meaning — Words and Phrases.

'Public order' must be taken in a comprehensive sense so as to include public safety in its relation to the maintenance of public order and that maintenance of public order undoubtedly involves consideration of public safety. [Para 4]

(c) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 12—Previous detention under other law —If can be considered for one year, under S. 12.

The expression 'from the date of his detention' in S. 12 must refer to the detention under the Act under which the person is to be detained, that is to say, the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950). If Parliament has enacted that a person should be detained without his case having been referred to an Advisory Board for a period not exceeding one year from the date of his detention, it must have reference to the detention under the Preventive Detention Act and it would be ridiculous to hold that this maximum period of one year could be made up by taking into consideration under some previous enactment. [Para 7]

(d) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 7—Detention grounds—Communication of—Delay in—Delay of 18 days between the date of the order of detention and the actual service of the grounds of detention is not an unreasonable delay —Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5). [Para 8]

(e) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 7 Detention grounds—Necessity to disclose all grounds — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) and (6).

The grounds on which the order of detention has been made must be communicated to the person detained and the right to get the grounds on which the order of detention has been made is one of the fundamental rights. The Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950) has quite properly given due consideration to that fundamental right embodied in Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution and the detaining authority, under S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, is bound to furnish the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. He is not at liberty to disclose some and withhold other grounds on which the order is made. If some of the grounds on which the order has been made are not communicated to the detenu, then he is not in a position to make an effective representation which he has the right to do under Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. [Paras 10, 12]

There may be a number of grounds in support of the order, but the authority making the order must be held entitled to base the order of detention only upon some out of the many grounds in his possession. It is only those grounds on which the order has been made that have to be communicated to the detenu. [Para 12]

The safeguard provided by cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India is a safeguard in favour of the detenu, and the detenu is entitled, as a matter of right, to know the grounds on which the order of detention has been made against him. No question of waiver can arise in such circumstances. [Para 36]

B. C. Ghose, U. C. Sinha and Rewati Raman Singh — for Petitioner ; Government Advocate — for the State.

Sinha J. — This application was made by the petitioner on 27-2-1950, under S. 491, Criminal P. C. and Art. 226 of the Constitution of India. At that time the petitioner was being detained under the Bihar Ordinance II [2] of 1950, the detention order under that Ordinance having been served on him on 17-2-1950. It appears, however, that after the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950) came into force, an order of detention was passed against the petitioner on 27-2-1950. This order was served upon him on 28-2-1950 and the grounds of detention were communicated to him on 17-3-1950. As this application was made before the present Act IV [4] of 1950 came into force, no specific grounds relating to this Act were mentioned in the petition. Mr. B. C. Ghose, the learned counsel for the petitioner, has, however, made submissions as if the application was made after the order of detention against the petitioner was passed under the Preventive Detention Act of 1950, and no objection having been raised by the State, the Court has heard Mr. Ghose's arguments as if objection was taken to the detention of the petitioner under the present Act. Mr. Ghose has submitted that the petitioner has been in detention since 1-8-1949, under one or other of the Bihar Acts or Ordinances.

[2] The following points have been taken in support of the application: (1) that the order of detention is illegal, because it does not prescribe the period of detention; (2) that the grounds of detention communicated to the petitioner do not relate to public order; (3) that the date of detention must be counted from the date of detention under previous orders; (4) that the grounds of detention were not communicated to the petitioner as soon as possible; and (5) that all the grounds on which the order of detention has been made have not been communicated to him. I would like to consider the points in the order in which they have been mentioned. To understand the argument, it is necessary to mention some of the relevant provisions of the Preventive Detention Act (Act IV [4] of 1950):

"Section 3 (1) — The Central Government or the State Government may:

(a) if satisfied with respect to any person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial . . . . .

(ii) the security of the State or the maintenance of public order . . . . it is necessary so to do, make an order directing that such person be detained.

Section 7 (1)—When a person is detained in pursuance of a detention order, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to him the grounds on which the order has been made, and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order . . . .

(2) Nothing in sub-s. (1) shall require the authority to disclose facts which it considers to be against the public interest to disclose.

Section 12 (1) — Any person detained in any of the following classes of cases or under any of the following circumstances may be detained without obtaining the opinion of an Advisory Board for a period longer than three months, but not exceeding one year from the date of his detention, namely, where such person has been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to . . . . . (b) the security of a State or the maintenance of public order. (2) The case of every person detained under a detention order, to which the provisions of sub-s. (1) apply, shall, within a period of six months from the date of his detention, be reviewed where the order was made by the Central Government or a State Government, by such Government, and where the order was made by any officer specified in sub-s. (2) of S. 3, by the State Government to which such officer is subordinate, in consultation with a person who is, or has been, or is qualified to be appointed as a Judge of a High Court nominated in that behalf of the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be."

The words which I considered important have been underlined (here italicised) by me.

[3] Now I take up the arguments of Mr. Ghose. He says that the order of detention is bad because no period of detention has been mentioned in the order. From the provisions of the sections which I have mentioned above—and there is no other section in the Act bearing on the point—it is apparent that the detaining authority is not required, under the Act, to mention the period for which the detaining authority intends the detenu to be detained. If there is no provision for mentioning the period, the detaining authority is not bound or obliged to mention the period. The learned counsel, has, however, relied upon an unreported judgment of the Allahabad High Court in M. M. Bashir v. State, Cri. Misc. No. 1127 and 1128 of 1950 : (A. I. R. (38) 1951 ALL. 357 : 52 Cr. L. J. 115) delivered by Bhargava J. in support of his contention. I have perused the judgment with care and attention and with great respect to the learned Judge, I do not subscribe to his view or to the reason he has given for holding that the order of detention must contain the period of detention. One reason which appears to have appealed to his Lordship is that, because in punitive detentions, that is to say, in punishments for some offences under the Criminal law, a period is prescribed for the imprisonment of the accused, so also, he says, in a case of preventive detention the period must be mentioned. I think, the analogy is not correct. In the first place, in the case of punitive detentions, the Court which passes a sentence of imprisonment has to determine, with reference to the gravity of the offence proved, as to for how long a period the man should be put in prison. The facts are before it and it is in a position to know exactly what the offence is and, having regard to the nature of the offence, it has to decide as to how long the accused should be imprisoned. This is not the case in regard to preventive detentions. By the very nature of it, the detaining authority has to proceed, more or less upon suspicion based upon confidential reports against the person to be detained. He is not in a position to judge at the time he passes the order as to the exact nature of the act or acts which the person to be detained was going to commit or for how long it will be necessary to detain him. This will depend upon circumstances which may be obtaining in future. He only knows at the time that upon the reports which he has received if the man is allowed to remain at large, his so remaining at large will be prejudicial to public safety or public order. It is not, therefore, possible for the detaining authority, at the time of his making the order, to exactly know the nature of the act the detenu was going to commit or the circumstances prevailing in future and, therefore, in my opinion, he is not in a position to fix any definite period for which the person has to be detained. Mr. Ghose, by way of analogy, has placed before us S. 107 and other sections occurring in Chap. VIII, Part V, Criminal P. C. headed 'Prevention of Offences' and has argued that as under S. 112 so also under the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950) the period for which the order is to remain in force has to be mentioned. The analogy does not hold good. It is sufficient to dispose of this part of the argument to say that the Court under S. 112, Criminal P. C. is required under law to mention the period and, therefore, it is a statutory obligation whereas there is no such obligation under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act. In my view, therefore, no period of detention need be mentioned and the order of detention cannot be held to be illegal because it mentions no period of detention.

[4] The next point is that the grounds of detention in this case have no relation to the maintenance of public order and, therefore, the order of detention is bad. The learned counsel for the petitioner has taken us to the various provisions of Art. 19, Constitution of India and has tried to show that the expressions 'security of State', 'public order', 'public order or morality', and 'interest of the general public' have distinct and different connotations. He has placed before us the grounds of detention passed against the petitioner to show that those grounds do not relate to the maintenance of public order, but that they relate to both 'public safety' and 'public order'. In my view, this point is no longer at large because in the case of Nek Mohammad v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 1 : (50 Cr. L. J. 44 F. B.) it has been held that 'public order' must be taken in a comprehensive sense so as to include 'public safety' in its relation to the maintenance of public order and that 'maintenance of public order' undoubtedly involves consideration of 'public safety'. His Lordship Das J., who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench case, made the following observation :

"In the context in which the expression 'public safety' occurs in the preamble and in S. 2 (1) of the Act, it is either synonymous with public order or is comprehended by the more general term 'public order'."

It may be noted that his Lordship was considering the validity of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act (v [5] of 1947), but that makes no difference to the meaning of the expression 'public order' as used in the present Act under consideration. I do not like to dilate upon this point any further and I hold that the word 'public order' has been used in a comprehensive sense.

[5] After the hearing of this case was concluded my attention was drawn to two more cases of the Supreme Court. In the case of Romesh Thappar v. State of Madras, A. I. R. (37) 1950 S.C. 124 : (51 Cr.L.J. 1514) the majority judgment has been given by Patanjali Sastri J. This case involved the consideration of the validity of the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949 (XXIII [23] of 1949). His Lordship has made the following observation which is relevant to the point I have been considering:

"Now 'public order' is an expression of wide connotation and signifies that state of tranquillity prevailing among the members of a political society as a result of the internal regulations enforced by the Government which they have instituted. Although S. 9 (1A) (of the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949) refers to 'securing the public safety' and the 'maintenance of public order' as distinct purposes, it must be taken that public safety is used as a part of the wider concept of public order."

In the other case of Brij Bhushan v. State of Delhi, A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 129 : (51 Cr. L. J. 1525) the majority judgment was given by Patanjali Sastri J. His Lordship relied mainly upon his judgment given in the other case, referred to above, but his Lordship Fazl Ali J. gave a dissenting judgment. But so far as the expressions 'public order' and 'public safety' are concerned, his Lordship made the following observation, after having held that 'public order' and 'public safety' are allied matters :

"In my opinion, the word 'or' (between 'public safety' and 'maintenance of public order') is used here not so much to separate two wholly different concepts as to show that they are closely allied concepts and can be used almost interchangeably in the context."

These two decisions also, in my opinion, support the view which I have taken in regard to this point.

[6] Now, looking to the grounds in the present case, I find that they relate to public order and in support of my view I need only quote an extract from the grounds of detention served upon the petitioner :

"The police recovered during his arrest a cyclostyled Hindi leaflet entitled 'RAILWAY HARTAL AUR KISAN MORCHA KE SATHION KA KARTABYA' dated 5-3-1949, containing incitement to railway men, Kisans and field labourers to hold demonstrations, to attack zamindars, Mahajans, profiteers, rich kisans etc. to face the police and military paying them back in the same coin, uproot rails etc."

In my view the extract quoted above is closely connected with the maintenance of public order. Besides the above quotation, there are a number of other grounds given which, in my opinion have reference to the maintenance of public order. I am satisfied, therefore, that the grounds served upon the petitioner relate to the maintenance of public order and as such the order is good and valid.

[7] The third ground taken is that the period of previous detention under any other provision of law should be counted for the purpose of S. 12 of the Act which prescribes the maximum period of one year. The learned counsel contends that if the detenu has been in detention for more than a year before his detention under the present Act, his present detention would be illegal. In my view, the interpretation put upon S. 12 by the learned counsel for the petitioner is not borne out by the section itself. The section says that if a person has been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of a State or the maintenance of public order (I am omitting the other portions of the section), the man can be detained without obtaining the opinion of an Advisory Board for a period longer than three months but not exceeding one year from the date of his detention. The expression 'from the date of his detention' must refer to the detention under the Act under which the person is to be detained, that is to say, the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950). If Parliament has enacted that if a person should be detained without his case having been referred to an Advisory Board for a period not exceeding one year from the date of his detention, it must have reference to the detention under the Preventive Detention Act and it would be ridiculous to hold that this maximum period of one year could be made up by taking into consideration the previous detention under some previous enactments. If the argument is good, the result would be absolutely absurd; for example, if a man who has been detained for one year, say 20 years ago, he cannot again be detained under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, although there may be good reasons for his detention. That could never have been the intention of the Parliament and I must hold that the maximum period of one year mentioned in S. 12 means one year from the date of detention of the person under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950.

[8] Now I come to the fourth contention of Mr. Ghose. He says that the grounds of detention in this case have not been communicated to the petitioner in time, as required by S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, 1950, or Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. In this case the order of detention under the Preventive Detention Act, as I have already said, was passed on 27-2-1950; it was served on the petitioner on 28-2-1950; and the grounds were communicated to him on 17-3-1950. Thus there has been a delay of only 18 days from the date of the order of detention. I consider that a delay of 18 days between the date of the order of detention and the actual service of the grounds of detention is not an unreasonable delay. In the case of Murat Patwa v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 135 : (49 Cr. L.J. 132 F.B.) their Lordships had to consider the same expression "as soon as may be", as we find in the present Preventive Detention Act, and they held that it meant a reasonable time, although on the facts of that particular case, their Lordships did hold that the delay between the date of order of detention and the service of the grounds was not reasonable, because, as the facts of that case showed, the order of detention was passed on 16-4-1947; the man was arrested on 9-5-1947; and the grounds were served upon him on 24-7-1947. Thus in that case there was delay of two months and a half and their Lordships held that the authorities did not comply with the mandatory provision of the Bihar Act (V [5] of 1947), which their Lordships were considering in that particular case. In the present case, however, I find that the delay was not unreasonable and that the petitioner was given the earliest opportunity, in the circumstances of this case, to make a representation against the order. In that view of the matter, I hold that there is no merit in this contention.

[9] Having disposed of the first four points, I now come to the most important contention of the petitioner. The submission is that all the grounds on which the order of detention is made have not been communicated to the petitioner. Reliance is placed by the learned counsel, in support of his submission, on the grounds themselves. Paragraph 4 of the grounds, which is a long para. has the second sentence as follows:

> "The Provincial Government is of opinion that it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh."

It is said that on their own admission the detaining authority have not given all the grounds of detention, as required by Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution of India and S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950). Article 22 (5) of the Constitution of India which occurs in Part III—"Fundamental Rights"—enjoins upon the authority making an order to communicate to the detained person the grounds on which the order has been made. Section 7, Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950) borrows exactly the language mentioned in Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. This right to receive the grounds on which the order of detention has been made is one of the fundamental rights which has been guaranteed to the detained person under the constitution and, therefore, it is not open to the executive authority to whittle down the said fundamental right. Article 22 (6), however gives liberty to the detaining authority not to disclose the facts which such authority considers to be against the public interest to disclose. Therefore, a clear distinction has been made between the grounds on which the order of detention has been made and the facts upon which the grounds may have been founded. It is not open to the executive authority to keep back some out of the grounds on which the order has been made. In the case of Lalit Kumar v. The State, Cri. Misc. No. 124 of 1950 : (29 Pat. 502 F.B.) a Full Bench of this Court which considered the validity of the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950), Das J. who was one of the Judges constituting the Full Bench and with whom Meredith C. J. concurred considered cls. (5) and (6) of Art. 22 of the Constitution, and while considering these two clauses, his Lordship said :

> "A distinction is drawn between 'grounds' and 'facts'. Clause (6) entitles the authority making the order to withhold disclosure of facts, but it does not authorise withholding disclosure of grounds on which the order has been made."

[10] The Supreme Court also, while considering the validity of the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950), in the case of A. K. Gopalan v. The State of Madras, 1950-13 S. C. J. 174 : (A.I.R. (37) 1950 S. C. 27 : 51 Cr.L.J. 1383) has also expressed the view similar to the view expressed by Das J. in the Patna Full Bench case. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court have, by majority judgment, held that the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950), excepting S. 14 of the Act, is a good and valid Act and within the competence of Parliament to enact. Their Lordships have given separate judgments, but so far as Arts. 22 (5) and 22 (6) of the Constitution are concerned, there is no difference of opinion and they have held that the grounds on which the order of detention has been made cannot be withheld from the detained person and they must be communicated to him and that so far as the facts are concerned, if the authority passing the order of detention was of the opinion that the disclosure of such facts would be against the public interest, then, the authority could very well withhold such facts. I would, therefore, content myself by giving a quotation from the judgment of Kania C. J. Dealing with Arts. 22 (5) and 22 (6) his Lordship says:

"Article 22 (5) prescribes that when any person under a preventive detention law is detained, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to such person the grounds on which the order has been made and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order. This clause is of general operation in respect of every detention order made under any law permitting detention. Article 22 (6) permits the authority making the order to withhold disclosure of facts which such authority considers against the public interest to disclose. It may be noticed that this cause only permits the non-disclosure of facts, and reading Cls. (5) and (6) together a distinction is drawn between facts and grounds of detention."

It is, therefore, quite clear that the authority passing the order of detention cannot withhold any of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. In the case of Nek Mohammad, A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 1 : (50 Cr.L.J. 44 F.B.), the Full Bench, while considering the validity of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act (V [5] of 1947) on the construction of S. 4 of the Act, observed as follows:

"It is clear that under the section the authority passing the order of detention shall communicate the grounds and I emphasise the word 'shall'; but it need not disclose facts which it considers it would be against the public interest to disclose. A question has been raised before us if 'facts' and 'grounds' mean the same thing. There are some decisions in which it has been held that 'grounds' mean the conclusions or reasons based on 'facts.' Whether such a distinction can be made or not, it seems to me that under S. 4, Bihar Act the facts may be so intertwined with the grounds that the Provincial Government may be in a position to say that the grounds cannot be disclosed without disclosing the facts."

[11] The learned counsel has cited before us the case of Inder Prakash v. Emperor, A.I.R. (36) 1949 ALL. 37 : (50 Cr. L. J. 34) in support of the contention that all the grounds must be disclosed. It appears that some of the Allahabad cases were also placed before Full Bench in Nek Mohammad v. The Province of Bihar, A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 1 : (50 Cr. L. J. 44 F.B.) and the Full Bench in regard to the Allahabad cases had observed as follows:

"In some of the Allahabad decisions it has been held that all the grounds must be disclosed. I do not think one can go to that extent under the Bihar Act."

Some of the unreported Nagpur decisions which have been placed before us were also placed before the Full Bench in Nek Mohammad's case, (A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 1 : 50 Cr. L. J. 44 F.B.). The Nagpur judgments were in Madhav Bapat v. Provincial Government of C. P. & Berar, Misc. Case No. 253 of 1948, and Govind Laxman v. Provincial Government of C. P. & Berar, Misc. Cri. Case No. 154 of 1948 and these are the cases which have been placed before this Court also. Das J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench case, has observed in regard to these Nagpur cases as follows:

"It was there (in Nagpur cases) stated that the Provincial Government was bound to state all the grounds and particulars. As I have said above, under S. 4, Bihar Act, one cannot go so far as to say that all the grounds must be disclosed."

[12] The learned counsel for the petitioner has also cited before us the case of Shoilen Dey In re, A.I.R. (36) 1949 Bom. 75 : (50 Cr.L.J. 173). In my view, however, this case is not of much help in the present case. What happened in that case was that the detenu was detained for inciting a section of labourers of Tata Air India, Bombay, to use violence against the officers of the Tata Air India and that he was also inciting this section of workers to acts of sabotage. It was found, however, that there was no such company in existence as Tata Air India. Chagla C. J. made the observation:

"The detaining authority, as we have had occasion to point out several times, has such wide powers given to it under the statute that where the Court is left with any discretion at all to investigate the grounds given by the Commissioner of Police, the Court must do so vigilantly in order to find out whether that degree of care and caution has been exercised by the detaining authority which the law requires. The Commissioner of Police need give no particulars, need state no facts. He can take refuge behind public interest and behind the language of Ss. 2 and 3 (of Bombay (Act VI [6] of 1947). But when he does give grounds—and those grounds have to be given by him as a statutory obligation—he must take meticulous care to see that whatever he stated in those grounds is stated with absolute accuracy."

Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court ordered the release of the detenu because the grounds communicated to the detenu had in fact no existence inasmuch as there was no such company as Tata Air India, Bombay, and it was, therefore, held that the detenu was not afforded the opportunity of making a representation. As I have said above, this case does not give us any assistance. In my view, and upon the authorities mentioned above, it is quite clear that the grounds on which the order of detention has been made must be communicated to the person detained and the right to get the grounds on which the order of detention has been made is one of the fundamental rights. The Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950) has quite properly, if I can say so with respect, given due consideration to that fundamental right embodied in Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution and the detaining authority, under S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, is bound to furnish the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. He is not at liberty to disclose some and withhold other grounds on which the order is made. If some of the grounds on which the order has been made are not communicated to the detenu, then he is not in a position to make an effective representation which he has the right to do under Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. That being the settled position in law, let us consider if the detaining authority in this case has complied with the mandatory provision of Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution of India or of S. 7, Preventive Detention Act. There may be a number of grounds in support of the order, but the authority making the order must be held entitled to base the order of detention only upon some out of the many grounds in his possession. It is only those grounds on which the order has been made that have to be communicated to the detenu. When in Para. 4 of the grounds it is said that :

"The Provincial Government is of opinion that it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh," does it mean that any of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made or is being founded is being suppressed from the detenu ? The answer depends on the meaning of the two expressions " . . . the grounds on which the order has been made . . . ." which finds place both in Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution and in S. 7, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 and "the grounds of the order of detention passed . . . " which occurs in Para. 4 of the grounds of detention communicated to the petitioner in this case. If there is no difference in the meaning of the two expressions, then it must be held that the detaining authority has failed to comply with the constitutional safeguards and the statutory provision. I have given my anxious consideration to the meaning of these two expressions and I have come to the conclusion that there is no difference at all. The expression 'grounds of the order of detention' must mean the same thing as 'the grounds on which the order of detention has been made'. It has, therefore, to be held that all the grounds of detention have not been communicated to the petitioner which was one of the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution and which under the Act under consideration he was entitled to get.

[13] Now let us consider if upon the interpretation of the language implied in Para. 4 of the grounds it is possible to give any other meaning to the word 'grounds' occurring in that paragraph. At one time I was inclined to think that the word 'grounds' has been used rather loosely and perhaps the authority wanted to use the word 'facts' instead of 'grounds'. As that raised a doubt in my mind, I enquired of the learned Government Advocate whether the State would be able to swear an affidavit as to whether or not there were some other grounds of detention which have not been disclosed. The learned Government Advocate took time to consider the matter and then, after a few days, he said that for some reason it was not possible to file an affidavit. This attitude on the part of the State, therefore, settled the matter beyond doubt that the word 'grounds' has not been loosely used.

[14] It is, therefore, clear that the word 'grounds' in the above-mentioned sentence in Para. 4 of the grounds does not mean 'facts' and, in that view of the matter, I am bound to hold that the grounds of detention on which the order has been made have not been communicated in full to the petitioner.

[15] In the circumstances mentioned above, the petition must succeed and it is, therefore, allowed and the petitioner must be released from detention.

[16] Das J.—I take up one by one the points urged by learned counsel for the petitioner in support of his contention that the detention of the petitioner is illegal.

[17] The first point is that the order of detention passed under S. 3 (i), Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (hereinafter to be referred to as the Detention Act) is invalid, because it does not state the period for which the petitioner is to be detained. In an unreported decision of the Allahabad High Court M. M. Bashir v. State, in Cri. Misc. Case Nos. 1127 and 1128 of 1950 : (A. I. R. (38) 1951 ALL. 357 : 52 Cr. L. J. 115) Bhargava J. expressed himself as follows :

"It is true that S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950) did not itself lay down that the period of detention must be prescribed in the order but whether a period is prescribed in the order or elsewhere, it is obviously essential that it must be definitely laid down by the detaining authority. On behalf of the State it was argued that under S. 12, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950) any person, detained under the provisions of this Act, could be detained for a maximum period of one year and, therefore, the detention of the applicant should be considered to be valid until the expiry of the period of one year from the date from which his detention began. This argument is not acceptable to me. Section 12 of the Act merely lays down the maximum period for which a person can be detained but it does not lay down that in case the detaining authority prescribes no period, the detention will continue for the whole of this maximum period. Most of the provisions of the Penal Code also lay down the maximum period of imprisonment that can be awarded for the commission of offences dealt within it. It has, however, always been considered necessary that a Court passing a sentence for an offence under the Penal Code must itself lay down the period for which the sentence is to run and if no such period is laid down, it cannot be held that the Court must be deemed to have passed the sentence for the maximum period permissible for that offence under the Code.

Similarly, in this case it was essential that the District Magistrate of Aligarh, who passed the order of detention, should have exercised his own mind and arrived at a finding about the period for which the detention of the applicant was necessary for purposes mentioned in S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950). If the District Magistrate did not do so, it cannot be said that the maximum period permissible under S. 12 of the Act is the period for which the District Magistrate desired the applicant to be detained. In these circumstances, it would appear that the detention of the applicant is not in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law and he is, therefore, entitled to be released."

[18] I have had occasion to consider several petitions under S. 491, Criminal P. C. against orders of detention passed under the Detention Act or under previous Acts or Ordinances dealing with the preventive detention. So far as I am aware, the period of detention was never mentioned in the initial order of detention, and the point that the detention order is invalid unless it mentions the period of detention was never taken in any previous case. The fact that a point was never taken previously is no ground for holding that it is a bad point, and in view of the decision of Bhargava J. quoted above, which is undoubtedly entitled to great respect, it is necessary that the point should be very carefully considered. Bhargava J. has mainly relied on an analogy from punitive detention. There is, however, a very marked distinction between 'preventive detention' and 'punitive detention'—a distinction which has been often referred to in many judicial decisions, English and Indian. Preventive detention is a purely precautionary measure which "must necessarily proceed in all cases, to some extent, on suspicion or anticipation as distinct from proof" (per Lord Atkinson in Rex v. Halliday, 1917 A. C. 260 at p. 275 : (86 L.J.K.B. 1119). This is also made clear in the words used in cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3, Detention Act : the words used are

"if satisfied with respect to any person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to, etc."

I have underlined (here italicised) the words which bring out the main purpose of preventive detention. In cases of punitive detention, the sentence awarded is moulded, so far as humanly possible, to the crime committed. Various circumstances are taken into consideration in awarding the sentence, e. g., age, motive for the crime, mitigating circumstances (if any), provocation, aggravation of the crime, etc. But all these factors are known factors proved in the case. The position is different with regard to preventive detention.

[19] In a criminal trial or enquiry, under the ordinary procedure of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the judgment or final order comes at the conclusion of the trial, after both parties have been heard. The scheme or procedure envisaged in the Detention Act is and must necessarily be different; because the object or purpose of preventive detention is different from that punitive detention. Let us examine the scheme of the Detention Act, 1950. The order of detention is made under S. 3 of the Act. The order is made when the detaining authority is satisfied with respect to any person that with a view to preventing him from acting in a prejudicial manner (I am leaving out clauses which are not relevant for the argument), it is necessary to make an order directing that such person be detained. The section does not require, in express terms, that the period of detention should be mentioned. What is of greater importance, however, is that the order is made on ex parte materials, and before the detenu has had an opportunity of making a representation, in other words, before the detenu has been heard. This must necessarily be so, as the executive on whom rests the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order, must act quickly in order to prevent prejudicial acts. Therefore, it is obvious that there is no real analogy between a detention order passed under S. 3, Detention Act and a judgment of conviction in which a sentence is awarded. The person against whom a detention order is made may be absconding at the time, and action contemplated by S. 6, Detention Act may have to be taken. If the detention order mentions the period of detention from the date of the order and not from the date of arrest, the order may spend its force by the time the man is arrested. Under S. 7, Detention Act, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to the detenu the grounds on which the order has been made, and shall afford the detenu the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order. This opportunity is meaningless, unless the intention is that the detaining authority shall consider the representation, and in appropriate cases, if satisfied with the representation, order the release of the detenu. If that be the meaning and purpose of S. 7, Detention Act, how can the period of detention be fixed before the detenu has been heard? Section 8, Detention Act deals with the constitution of Advisory Boards, and S. 9 states in which cases a reference to the Advisory Board is necessary. Section 10 deals with the procedure of Advisory Boards. Section 11 is, I think, very important. It states :

"In any case where the Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for the detention of the persons concerned, the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, may confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned for such period as it thinks fit."

[20] I have underlined (here italicised) the words which, in my opinion, are important for our present purpose. It is clear from S. 11 that, at least, in those cases where a reference to the Advisory Board is necessary, the order of detention made at the initial stage need not mention the period of detention; otherwise, the section would not have said "confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned for such period as it thinks fit." It is true that S. 11 has no application to those cases in which there is no reference to an Advisory Board—a point which has been emphasised by Mr. Ghosh for the petitioner; but the words used in S. 11 give an insight into the scheme of the Detention Act, and indicate, in my opinion clearly enough that the detention order passed under S. 3 of the Act need not mention the period of detention. Section 12, Detention Act, is the section which applies in the present case. I accept the argument that the period of one year mentioned in sub-s. (1) is the maximum period prescribed by Parliament under sub-cl. (b) of cl. (7) of Art. 22, Constitution of India, for a particular class or classes of cases. The period of one year is the maximum period, and it is not necessary that every person detained must be detained for the maximum period. But there is nothing in sub-cl. (1) of S. 12 which requires the detaining authority to state the period of detention in detention order. Sub-section (2) of S. 12 requires the case of every person detained under a detention order to which the provisions of sub-s. (1) apply, to be reviewed by the appropriate authority in consultation with a person who is, or has been or, is qualified to be appointed as a Judge of a High Court. This review further shows that the circumstances in which a person detained may be released and the detention order revoked or cancelled against him, are circumstances which may change and may not be known at the time when the detention order is passed on ex parte materials. Section 13 deals with revocation of detention order, and sub-s. (2) of S. 13 states that the revocation of a detention order shall not bar the making of a fresh detention order under S. 3 against the same person. This, again, shows that the scheme of the Detention Act is different, as it must necessarily be, from the procedure of an ordinary criminal trial or enquiry where the punishment comes at the conclusion of the trial and not at the beginning. In my view, it would be wrong and misleading to draw an analogy, and base a decision thereon, between the procedure of an ordinary criminal trial or enquiry and the procedure with regard to preventive detention, as envisaged in the Detention Act.

[21] Our attention has been drawn to the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is pointed out that under S. 112, Criminal P. C., when a Magistrate acting under S. 107, S. 108, S. 109 or S. 110 deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such section he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, etc. Learned counsel has emphasized the words "the term for which it is to be in force." After the conclusion of the enquiry, when the Magistrate makes a final order under S. 118, Criminal P. C., he cannot ask a person to give security for a period longer than what was specified in the order made under S. 112. Learned counsel has also referred to S. 117 (3), Criminal P. C., under which the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may direct the person in respect of whom the order under S. 112 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace, etc. until the conclusion of the enquiry, and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or, in default of execution, until the enquiry is concluded. If there is any analogy between the procedure laid down in the aforesaid sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the procedure of the Detention Act, the object or purpose for which a detention order is passed has, perhaps, some resemblance to that of sub-s. (3) of S. 117, Criminal P. C., at least as regards the immediacy of action for preventive purposes. The detention under sub-s. (3) of S. 117 is not for a definite period but "until the enquiry is concluded." The obvious reason for this is that until the enquiry is concluded, it would not be known finally whether it is necessary to ask the person to execute a bond; yet even before the conclusion of the enquiry, the person is asked to execute a bond or, in default of execution, is detained until the enquiry is concluded.

[22] Then, there is another aspect of the matter. There are decisions to the effect that the failure to comply with the provisions of S. 112, Criminal P. C., does not necessarily make the order null and void, unless the accused person has been prejudiced by the omission. Therefore, even if the analogy of the procedure of the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure is pressed fully into service, it would not result in any such axiomatic statement that a detention order is invalid because it does not mention the period of detention at the initial stage.

[23] The Detention Act came under examination of the Supreme Court in the recent decision of A. K. Gopalan v. The State of Madras, 1950 S. C. J. 174: (A.I.R. (37) 1950 S. C. 27: 51 Cr. L. J. 1383). There are observations in the judgments delivered by their Lordships which seem to me to indicate that the view contended for on behalf of the petitioner is not correct. Dealing with the argument that S. 3, Detention Act, prescribes no limit of time for detention, and therefore, the legislation is ultra vires his Lordship Kania C. J. observed as follows :

"It was also contended that S. 3 prescribes no limit of time for detention and therefore the legislation is ultra vires. The answer is found in Art. 22 (7) (b). A perusal of the provisions of the impugned Act, moreover, shows that in S. 12 provision is made for detention for a period longer than three months but not exceeding one year in respect of cls. (a) and (b) of that section. It appears, therefore, that in respect of the rest of the clauses mentioned in S. 3 (1) (a) the detention is not contemplated to be for a period longer than three months, and in such cases a reference to the Advisory Board under S. 9 is contemplated."

[24] Dealing with S. 11, Detention Act, his Lordship made the following observations:

"It was argued that S. 11 of the impugned Act was invalid as it permitted the continuance of the detention for such period as the Central Government or the State Government thought fit. This may mean an indefinite period. In my opinion this argument has no substance because the Act has to be read as a whole. The whole life of the Act is for a year and therefore, the argument that the detention may be for an indefinite period is unsound. Again, by virtue of Art. 22 (7) (b), the Parliament is not obliged to fix the maximum term of such detention. It has not so fixed it, except under S. 12, and therefore, it cannot be stated that S. 11 is in contravention of Art. 22 (7)."

[25] Similar observations will be found in the other judgments. Though the point was not specifically taken in the Supreme Court in the form in which it has been taken before us and there is no decision on the point, it seems to me, and if I may say so with respect, that the observations quoted above explain the true meaning and import of Ss. 3, 11 and 12, Detention Act.

[26] For these reasons, I hold that the detention order under S. 3, Detention Act is not invalid by reason of a failure to mention therein the period of detention.

[27] I now proceed to a consideration of the second point. I agree generally with what my learned brother has said on this point. There is, however, one point urged by Mr. Basanta Chandra Ghosh which, I think, requires a more detailed consideration. The Detention Act, in S. 3, refers to several matters, e. g., the defence of India, the relations of India with foreign powers, the security of India, the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, etc. Section 12 of the Act refers to some of these subjects only in cls. (a) and (b). The order of detention passed in the present case states that it was necessary to detain the petitioner with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order; in other words, the detention in the present case comes under cl. (b) of S. 12, Detention Act. It is contended before us that the grounds of detention relate either to the security of the State or the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community. It is contended that if the grounds of detention do not relate to the maintenance of public order but relate to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, then the detention of the petitioner does not come under S. 12 but will attract S. 9, and a reference to the Advisory Board should have been made. Having examined the grounds, I am satisfied that they relate to the maintenance of public order, though indirectly they may affect other matters. The decision in Rex v. Basudeva, A.I.R. (37) 1950 F. C. 67: (51 Cr. L. J. 1011), on which Mr. Ghosh placed reliance, has been explained in the later decision in Machindar Sivaji v. King, A. I. R. (37) 1950 F. C. 129: (51 Cr. L. J. 1480). Even applying the test laid down in Basudeva's case, (A.I.R. (37) 1950 F. C. 67 : 51 Cr. L. J. 1011), I am satisfied that the activities referred in the grounds of detention against the petitioner are such as have a close and direct relation to the maintenance of public order.

[28] Learned counsel for the petitioner further drew our attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in Romesh Thapper v. The State of Madras, (A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 124: 51 Cr. L. J. 1514). He particularly relied on the following observations of Patanjali Sastri J. :

"Similarly, the Constitution, in formulating the varying criteria for permissible legislation imposing restrictions on the fundamental rights enumerated in Art. 19 (1) has placed in a distinct category those offences against public order which aim at undermining the security of the State or overthrowing it, and made their prevention the sole justification for legislative abridgment of freedom of speech and expression, that is to say, nothing less than endangering the foundations of the State or threatening its overthrow could justify curtailment of the rights to freedom of speech and expression, while the right of peaceable assembly (sub-cl. (b)) and the right of association (sub-cl. (c)) may be restricted under cls. (3) and (4) of Art. 19.

in the interests of 'public order' which in those clauses includes the security of the State. This differentiation is also noticeable in Entry No. 3 of List III (Concurrent List) of Sch. 7 which refers to the 'Security of a State' and 'Maintenance of Public Order' as distinct subject of legislation. The Constitution thus requires a line to be drawn in the field of public order or tranquillity marking off, more or less roughly, the boundary between those serious and aggravated forms of public disorder which are calculated to endanger the security of the State and the relatively minor breaches of the peace of a purely local significance treating for this purpose differences in degree as if they were differences in kind."

[29] It is to be observed, however, that the distinction which his Lordship was drawing, was with reference to Art. 19 of the Constitution of India, cls. (2) to (5). In cl. (2) amongst other things, the expression that occurs is "the security of the State." In cls. (3) and (4), however, the expression which occurs is "the interests of public order." His Lordship made a distinction between these two expressions, and further referred to a similar distinction made in Entry No. 3 of List III of Sch. 7 of the Constitution of India. I am unable to agree that the distinction made has any application to the facts of the present case, or that the detention order in the present case is bad, because the grounds do not relate to the maintenance of public order. In my opinion, they relate primarily to the maintenance of public order, though indirectly they may affect other matters.

[30] As to the third point that the date of detention must be counted from the date of detention under previous orders, I agree entirely with my learned brother. Mr. Ghosh has emphasised before us that S. 12, Detention Act states "not exceeding one year from the date of his detention." He has contended that the expression is not "detention order" which expression is defined in S. 2, Detention Act. He has further pointed out that in some other sections, the expression used is "detention order." I think that the argument is sufficiently answered by stating that the reference to detention under S. 12 (1) of the Act can mean only detention under the Act of which S. 12 is a part. This is made more clear by sub-s. (2). It states: "The case of every person detained under a detention order to which the provisions of sub-s. (1) apply shall, etc." The expression "detention order" is used in this sub-section, and means an order made under S. 3. If the detention referred in sub-s. (1) of S. 12 meant detention under any other law, nothing could have been easier for the Legislature than to say so. If sub-s. (1) refers to previous detention under any other law, then the question of the legality of that detention would also have to be considered for the purpose of calculating the period of one year. In the course of the arguments I put to Mr. Ghosh whether he contended that previous illegal detention, if any, would also go into the computation of one year. Mr. Ghosh reserved his opinion on the matter. Other absurdities are likely to result if the period of one year mentioned in S. 12 (1) is computed in the way desired by Mr. Ghosh. The word "detention" in the ordinary sense will include preventive detention as well as punitive detention. If the word "detention" in sub-s. (1) of S. 12 has no reference to a detention order under the Detention Act, then a person who had been previously imprisoned for any offence for more than a year, cannot be detained under S. 12 (1). Similarly a person who had been detained (under any Ordinance or Act for preventive detention) some time in the past for more than a year, cannot be detained again. I do not think any such result was intended by Parliament; nor do the plain words of the section convey any such result. For these reasons, I am unable to read sub-s. (1) of S. 12 in the way desired by Mr. Ghosh.

[31] As to the fourth point, I have nothing further to add to what my learned brother has said. What is reasonable time, within the meaning of the expression "as soon as may be" in S. 7, Detention Act, which is a reproduction of cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India, will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down.

[32] I now come to the last and the most important point of all. Clause (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India is in the following terms:

> "When any person is detained in pursuance of an order made under any law providing for preventive detention, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to such person the grounds on which the order has been made and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order."

Section 7, Detention Act, reproduces the exact words of cl. (5). In the grounds communicated to the detenu in this case the following sentence occurs in para. 4 of the grounds:

> "The Provincial Government is of opinion that it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh."

[33] This sentence occurring in the grounds communicated to the petitioner has caused all the trouble in this case. It is contended by Mr. Basanta Chandra Ghosh that it is not open to the State Government to withhold some of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, and such withholding amounts to a violation of cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India. It is necessary here to refer to the clause which immediately follows cl. (5), namely, cl. (6), which is in these terms :

"Nothing in cl. (5) shall require the authority making any such order as is referred to in that clause to disclose facts which such authority considers to be against the public interest to disclose."

[34] If cls. (5) and (6) are read together, it is clear that a distinction is drawn between the grounds on which the order of detention has been made and the facts relating to those grounds. The detaining authority need not disclose facts which such authority considers to be against the public interest to disclose, but no such power or saving is given with regard to the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. If the intention were that the grounds could also be withheld in the public interest, nothing would have been easier than to say so in the Constitution. It must be remembered that the constitution making body must be taken to have been aware of the existing law on the subject. In the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, which came into force on 4-1-1950, the relevant section was S. 5, sub-s. (1). A proviso to that sub-section said that a "detention order shall not be invalid or unlawful or improper on the ground of any defect, vagueness or insufficiency of the communication made to the detenu."

Therefore, under the law as it stood in Bihar, before the Constitution of India came into force on 26-1-1950, it was open to the State Government to withhold some grounds, and any defect in the communication made to the detenu would not, in the very express terms in the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, render the order of detention invalid. That position, however, changed when the Constitution of India came into force. Though the word "all" does not occur in cl. (5) of Art. 22, it seems clear to me that no exception is made in respect of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, and no power has been given to withhold any of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made. In my view this result inevitably follows from reading together cls. (5) and (6) of Art. 22 of the Constitution in the background of the existing law on the subject on the date on which the Constitution of India came into force.

[35] One point must, however, be made quite clear. The detaining authority need only communicate such grounds on which the order of detention has been made or is founded. The position may be made clear by the following example. The State Government gets a report against 'A' alleging several grounds, founded on a series of facts, for his detention. The State Government, or whoever be the detaining authority, considers the report and accepts only some of the grounds and not others. In that case, the order of detention is made or based only on those grounds which the detaining authority accepts, and the detaining authority need communicate to the detenu only those grounds on which the order of detention has been made. This, I think, is the true meaning of cl. (5), because the word "grounds" is followed by the adjectival clause "on which the order has been made." But the detaining authority has no power to make a further distinction in the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, and say to the detenu : "I have detained you on several grounds, but I shall disclose to you only some and not all the grounds of the order of detention." This, in my opinion, will be a denial of the right guaranteed to a person under cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution. I emphasise here the words in cl. (5) "shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order." The detenu can make a representation only with reference to the grounds which have been communicated to him. It is obvious that he can say nothing about grounds of which he has no information. Suppose, for example, that the detenu is in a position to clear the apprehension or suspicion against him with regard to the grounds which have been communicated to him. If the detaining authority is satisfied with the representation, it ought to release the detenu. If, however, the detaining authority keeps some of the grounds up its sleeves, then how does the detenu get an opportunity of making a representation against the order of detention? The opportunity then ceases to be a real or effective opportunity. Let us take another example. Suppose there is only one ground for the detention of a person, and the detaining authority considers that that ground should not be disclosed in the public interest. Then, the person detained can have no opportunity of making a representation against the order of detention, if he is denied information of that one ground.

[36] The learned Government Advocate has urged two points in support of his contention that a failure to disclose all the grounds need not necessarily invalidate the order of detention; firstly, he has urged that the only effect of not disclosing some of the grounds is that the detaining authority shall be deemed to have waived those grounds; secondly, if the grounds disclosed are good grounds, then the failure to disclose other grounds should not invalidate the order of detention. I am unable to accept these contentions of the learned Government Advocate. If the detaining authority is entitled to withhold some of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, then logically the detaining authority will be entitled to withhold the ground of detention even in a case where there is only one ground of detention; that would make cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution meaningless. The principle of waiver which the learned Government Advocate has invoked does not, in my opinion, apply. This Court does not sit in appeal or review over the detaining authority, so far as the grounds of detention are concerned. Whether the grounds are adequate or not is a matter for the detaining authority only. The safeguard provided by cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India is a safeguard in favour of the detenu, and the detenu is entitled, as a matter of right, to show the grounds on which the order of detention has been made against him. No question of waiver can arise in such circumstances.

[37] The second contention of the learned Government Advocate is apparently based on the decision In re Rajdhar Kalu Patil, A.I.R. (35) 1948 Bom. 334: (49 Cr. L. J. 465 F. B.). That was a case under the Bombay Public Security Measures Act, 1947. Some of the grounds given for the detention were vague and indefinite, though not outside the scope and ambit of the Act. It was held that if some of the grounds given were not outside the scope and ambit of the Act but were merely vague and indefinite, it could not be said that some extraneous consideration had weighed with the detaining authority in making the order it had made; therefore the Court must draw a sharp distinction between a ground which is outside the purview of the statute and a ground which is bad because it lacks precision and accuracy. It was further observed that if after eliminating the grounds which were no grounds at all, there still remained a ground or grounds which were precise and accurate and which could justify the order, then there was no reason why the order made by the detaining authority should not stand. The principle laid down in the aforesaid decision does not apply, in my opinion, to the present case. The distinction between the two cases is obvious: in the Bombay case, all the grounds were disclosed, though some were vague and indefinite; whereas in the case before us, the detaining authority has itself stated that it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh. In a case where all the grounds are disclosed, though some are vague and indefinite, it cannot be said that the detenu was kept in the dark and had no opportunity of making an effective representation. He could make a representation with regard to those grounds which were not indefinite or vague, and if the detaining authority were not satisfied with the representation with regard to those grounds which were clear and precise, it had power to keep the detenu in detention. The position is, I think, different where some of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made, are not disclosed at all. Thus, there is no real analogy between the Bombay case and the case before us. Moreover, the position has now to be considered with reference to cls. (5) and (6) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India, and those clauses, in my opinion, lend no support to the contention of the learned Government Advocate.

[38] There are observations in Gopalan's case, 1950 S. C. J. 174: (A.I.R. (37) 1950 S. C. 27: 51 Cr. L. J. 1383) referred to above, which support the view I have expressed. Referring to cl. (5) of Art. 22, his Lordship Kania C. J., stated:

"This clause is of general operation in respect of every detention order made under any law permitting detention. Article 22 (6) permits the authority making the order to withhold disclosure of facts which such authority considers against the public interest to disclose. It may be noticed that this clause only permits the non-disclosure of facts, and reading cls. (5) and (6) together a distinction is drawn between facts and grounds of detention."

In another part of his judgment, his Lordship stated:

"The Parliament by the Act has expressly given a right to the person detained under a preventive detention order to receive the grounds for detention and also has given him a right to make a representation."

Therefore, the right given under cl. (5) of Art. 22 is a guaranteed right, and cannot be whittled away by cutting out some of the content of that clause in the manner suggested by the argument of the learned Government Advocate.

[39] I must concede that the grounds, so far as they have been disclosed by the detaining authority, are precise and undoubtedly relate to the maintenance of public order. If the sentence to which I have made a reference in the earlier part of this judgment, relating to the non-disclosure of some grounds of the order of detention passed against the petitioner, were not there, I would have had no hesitation in saying that there was no reason for interference by us. We found it rather difficult to understand why it was necessary to state, in the midst of the grounds detailed in para. 4, that "it would be against the public interest to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh."

We thought at one time that, perhaps, a mistake had been made, and the word "grounds" was loosely used for "facts"; it might even be that really there were no other grounds on which the order of detention was passed, and the old formula in vogue under the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, was being blindly copied. Accordingly, we suggested to the learned Government Advocate to consider the advisability of filing an affidavit on behalf of the State of Bihar to clear up the mistake, if any. The learned Government Advocate took time and then stated that, for some reason or other, it was not possible to file an affidavit. In the absence of any affidavit, I fail to see how the sentence in para. 4 can be taken in any sense other than what the words used therein ordinarily mean. It is difficult to hold that the detaining authority was referring to grounds other than those on which the order of detention had been made. The words used are "to disclose all the grounds of the order of detention passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh." I have underlined (here italicised) the words which, I think, are important. Those words clearly qualify the word "grounds," and can have only one meaning, that is, the detaining authority considered it against the public interest to disclose all the grounds on which the order of detention was passed against Sri Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh.

[40] This, in my opinion, is a clear violation of cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution of India.

[41] I would, accordingly, hold that the present order of detention is bad. The application is allowed, and the petitioner must be released from detention.

Jani Kuer—Petitioner v. State of Bihar—Opposite Party.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 220 of 1948, D/-12-10-1950.

Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act (XXXII [32] of 1948), Ss. 6 (b), 7 (3) (b) — Estate under Court of Wards—Collection of general rate and audit rate by Government — Deduction as to, whether allowed.

An assessee whose estate is under the Court of Wards and is guided by the provisions of the Act in making payments of all demands is not entitled to deduction under Ss. 6 (b) and 7 (3) (b), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, of the general rate and audit rate paid to and collected by the Provincial Government under Bihar Court of Wards Act or the Public Demands Recovery Act in pursuance of rules having the force of law framed by the Government under the Government Management of Private Estates Act, 1892, as these payments cannot be deemed to be collections under S. 48, Bihar Court of Wards Act. [Paras 3, 4]

Baldeo Sahay and Jadubans Sahay—for Petitioner: Lalnarayan Sinha for Government Advocate and R. Prasad — for Opposite Party.

Sarjoo Prosad J. — This is a reference under S. 28 (3), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, made by the Board of Agricultural Income-tax. This reference was called for by the Court at the instance of the petitioner, the Maharani of Bettiah, whose estate is under the Court of Wards, and it refers to an assessment during the agricultural year 1352 Fasli corresponding to 1944-45. The only point under reference is:

"Whether the assessee whose estate is under the Court of Wards and is guided by the provisions of the said Act in making payments of all demands, is entitled to deduction of the general rate and audit rate under S. 6 (b) and S. 7 (3) (b), Agricultural Income-tax Act paid to and collected by the Provincial Government under Bihar Court of Wards Act or the Public Demands Recovery Act in pursuance of rules having the force of law framed by the Government of Bihar under Act X [10] of 1892 (Government Management of Private Estates Act)?"

[2] The reference has been necessitated because the petitioner assessee claimed deductions on account of certain payments made by her manager under the Court of Wards on account of the costs of audit and general rates levied under Act X [10] of 1892. The amounts under the above claim on account of the said deductions are a sum of Rs. 30,691 of the management charges paid to the Government of Bihar and Rs. 17,378 on account of the audit rate. The revenue authorities refused to allow these deductions on the ground that the retes were not levied in respect of the lands from which agricultural income was derived, and, therefore, the claim for the deductions was not sustainable under S. 6, Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act.

[3] On behalf of the assessee it is contended that the said deductions claimed by the assessee would come within the meaning of Ss. 6 (b) and 7 (3) (b) of the Act, and, therefore, it should have been held to be admissible by the revenue authorities. Now, S. 6 (b) of the Act refers to sums paid in respect of the land from which agricultural income is derived by way of local cess or rate collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act. Here the general rate and the audit rate in wards estates are levied under S. 3, Government Management of Private Estates Act, 1892, which is neither a Bengal Act, nor a Bihar and Orissa Act, nor a Bihar Act as contemplated by cl. (b) of S. 6. In regard to audit rate, there is no specific provision for deduction under S. 6 at all. Now S. 7 (3) provides rules prescribing the manner of determining the net amounts of agricultural income for the purpose of cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of the section which is to be on the net amount of such income after making the permissible deductions, namely, the sum actually paid in the previous year in respect of each land as any local cess or rate collected under any Bengal Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act. Here again the same difficulty arises and S. 7 (3) (b) also has no application to the case. Mr. Baldeo Sahay for the petitioner, however, contends that the Government Management of Private Estates Act only provides for the levy of the management and audit charges and the rules framed thereunder prescribe the rates for such charges, but there is no machinery in the Act for realisation of these charges. These charges, therefore, on his submission become payable and are collected from the estate by virtue of S. 48, Court of Wards Act under which the manager of the Court of Wards is bound to make certain payments of public demands and other charges. It is, therefore, contended that the payment having been made by the operation of S. 48, Court of Wards Act, it should be deemed that the payment was collected under a Bihar Act, and, as such, would fall under S. 6 (b) or under S. 7 (3) (b), Agricultural Income-tax Act. This argument, in my opinion, is too far-fetched to be accepted. It is true that the Government Management of Private Estates Act does not provide for the realisation of the charges leviable under S. 3 of the Act but the power to collect the charges must be implied in the power to levy the charges in question, and in any case there is a provision under S. 7 of the Act enabling Government to frame rules for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Act. Even though Government may not have framed rules for that purpose, they can always do so, and, in any event, the charges leviable under S. 3 can be recovered by suit. Under S. 48, Court of Wards Act, although the manager of the Court of Wards is under the law bound to make the payments as required by the Act, still it cannot be said that the various payments made by the manager are collected under that section. The manager may have to pay public demands, may have to pay Government revenue, may have to pay income-tax and various other charges; and, the payments so made are not collected under S. 48 of the Act but they are actually collected under various other Acts under which the liability of the estate arises to make those payments. It is contended that the manager in making these payments is really fulfilling a double function; on the one hand, he is making payments as the manager of the estate, and, on the other he should be deemed to have collected these payments on behalf of Government. The underlying fallacy to this argument is that it is not the manager who is collecting but the collections are made by the Government treasury in respect of these charges. Therefore, it cannot be contended with success that the aforesaid payments should be deemed to be collections under S. 48, Court of Wards Act, and, as such, are deductions permissible under Ss. 6 (b) and 7 (3) (b), Agricultural Income-tax Act. At first sight it may appear a little hard on the assessee not to be allowed these deductions although the payments have been made in respect of Government demands but the Agricultural Board of Revenue points out that there is no hardship involved inasmuch as a general deduction of 12½ per cent. on account of collection charges is permissible under the law as provided in S. 6 (c), Agricultural Income-tax Act. It is stated by the Board that private estates are also audited but no separate deductions are allowed to them in respect of audit charges, and in its opinion these costs incurred by the estate are in the nature of costs of supervision and management all included in collection charges. There may be some strength in this observation of the Board though it is unnecessary for us to decide the matter in answering the present reference. I have held above that the deductions claimed do not come within the language of S. 6 (b) or S. 7 (3) (b), Agricultural Income-tax Act, and, as such, the assessee is not entitled to the deductions.

[4] The answer to the question submitted to us is, therefore, in the negative, and the reference may be answered accordingly. The Department will also be entitled to the costs of this reference, hearing fee Rs. 100.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (xi) (e) — Applicability — Suit by tenant for possession against purchaser of landlord's interest.

A suit by a tenant for recovery of possession of the land from which he had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant who was a purchaser of the landlord's interest in part of the demised land is governed by S. 7 (xi) (e). The Court has jurisdiction to investigate in such a case whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties even though the investigation of such question may involve an investigation of a question of title involving a third party : A. Rahman — for Petitioners; Ugrah Singh — for Opposite Party.

Reuben J.—This petition has been filed by the defendants first party, in a suit for recovery of immovable property.

[2] The plaintiff's story is that a raiyati settlement of 1.78 acres of land was made with him by the original landlord, that, out of this land, the landlord's right in respect of 1.07 acres, which comprises the subject-matter of this suit, was purchased by the defendants first party, and that, since the purchase, the defendants first party have wrongly dispossessed the plaintiff. He, therefore, seeks recovery of possession, and has paid court-fee under S. 7, cl. (xi) sub-cl. (e), Court-fees Act. The objection of the defendants first party is that the suit raises a question of title and should be valued for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction under S. 7, cl. (iv) and, on this valuation is beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif.

[3] The case came before me sitting singly, and I referred it to a Division Bench in view of a decision of Ross J. in Krishna Chandra v. Raja Mahakur, 5 Pat. 208 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 251) with which I found myself unable to agree.

[4] It has been laid down that, for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction, valuation should be made on the plaint as it stands (Narayan Jha v. Jogni Prasad Jha, 13 Pat. 329 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 184 S. B.).) Reading the plaint in this suit, I have no doubt that it is covered by S. 7 cl. (xi), sub-cl. (e), Court- fees Act.

[5] The case before Ross J. arose out of a suit for declaration of title as an occupancy raiyat and for recovery of possession on the allegation that the plaintiff having settled the land with the appellant and having further agreed to make a perpetual settlement of it with him, wrongfully dispossessed him from the land. His Lordship, relying upon Balasidhantam v. Perumal Chetti, 27 M. L. J. 475 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 654) and Pramatha Nath v. Amiraddy, 24 C. W. N. 151 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 205) held that the suit involved an investigation of a question of title and, therefore, fell within the provisions of S. 7 (v), Court-fees Act. With all respect, it seems to me that neither of these decisions is an authority for the conclusion arrived at by his Lordship. The Madras case was a suit under S. 7, cl. (xi), sub-cl. (cc), for the recovery of immovable property from a tenant after expiry of the tenancy. The defendant raised a question of title, namely, that the plaintiff was not the landlord but merely a mortgagee whose right to possession had terminated by the deposit of the mortgage dues. The High Court, being satisfied as to the plaintiff's right to possession, refused to investigate the nature of his title and upheld the decision of the Courts below decreeing the suit. All that the High Court refused to investigate was, as I say, the nature of the interest of the plaintiff in the suit, but it did investigate the question as to whether there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant to form the basis of a suit of this kind. In the Calcutta case, the suit was for the recovery of immovable property from two sets of defendants, again, on the allegation that the tenancy under which they held had terminated. The first set of defendants admitted the tenancy. The second set denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and set up the title of a third party as landlord. The Court of first appeal refused to investigate the title as between the rival landlords, but investigated the existence of the alleged relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the second set of defendants and answered it in the negative. On this finding, the High Court held that the suit under S. 7, cl. (xi), sub-cl. (cc), could not proceed against the defendants second party. This was a case where their Lordships refused to investigate the title as between the plaintiff and the third party set up by the second set of defendants, but the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the contesting set of defendants was investigated and, being answered in the negative, it was held that the suit under S. 7, cl. (xi), sub-cl. (cc), could not proceed. In this view of the matter, it cannot be said that, merely because a question of title arises, the suit will not lie under S. 7, cl. (xi). For this clause to apply, the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant is necessary, and an investigation into its existence is within the jurisdiction of the Court. Further, it is possible to imagine cases where the investigation of this question may involve an investigation into what may appear, at first sight, to be a question of title involving a third party. I may cite as an instance Shanmuga Nadar v. Kandasami Nadar, A. I. R. (24) 1937 Mad. 91 : (168 I. C. 462) another suit under S. 7, cl. (xi), sub-cl. (cc), in which the plaintiff claimed as a transferee from the landlord who had created the tenancy in question. The jurisdiction of the Munsif to try the suit was challenged on the ground that the suit was governed by S. 7, cl. (v), Court-fees Act, and was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. In dismissing the petition, Cornish J. made it clear that it was open to the Munsif to go into the question of the validity of the assignment under which the plaintiff claimed his title—a question necessary to be decided in order to determine whether there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties.

[6] That a suit of this sort is covered by S. 7, cl. (xi), Court-fees Act, is clear from Gobinda Kumar Sur v. Mohinimohan Sen, 57 Cal. 349: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 42), a case under sub-cl. (cc), in which their Lordships held that the Court was entitled to find if there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant, and whether the defendant's tenancy had been validly terminated. They ruled that, if any question of title is raised in the suit, it can only be gone into for the purpose of determining the main question about the existence of this relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant. There is a further proposition about a possible conversion of a suit into a suit of another nature—a proposition with which we are not concerned here and which I have discussed elsewhere. This decision, so far as it is relevant to the present case, was approved by a Special Bench of this Court in Narayan Jha v. Jogni Prasad, 13 Pat. 329 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 184 S. B.).

[7] Mr. Rahman, on behalf of the petitioners, has referred to Furzand Ali v. Mahanth Lal Puri, 32 Cal. 268, Mt. Bhagobai Devisingh v. Shiamlal Dwarka Prasad, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Nag. 312 : (29 N.L.R. 367), Palaniappa Chetti v. Sithravelu Servai, 31 Mad. 14 : (17 M. L. J. 478) and Ram Ekbal Singh v. Baldeo Singh, A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 791 (1) : (25 I. C. 507). These were all cases between the tenant who alleged that he was wrongly dispossessed on one side and the landlord and a rival tenant said to have been settled by him on the other. These suits involved a question of title as between two rival tenants and were rightly held not to be covered by S. 7, cl. (xi).

[8] On the above grounds, I would dismiss this petition with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohar.

(c) Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 4—Scope — Gambling, if per se an offence.

Anno. Public Gambling Act, S. 4, N. 1.

Baldeva Sahay and N. N. Roy — for Petitioners; Sidheshwar Prasad Singh—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioners in these two applications have been sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 50 each under S. 4, Gambling Act. According to the charge-sheet, they were found in a room in the quarters occupied by a person named Sanyal in Jamshedpur, where they are employed by the Tatas, with the exception of Tapadia, who is an employee of the Imperial Bank. At the time of the arrival of the police they were playing cards. They were arrested and were released on bail and appeared before the Magistrate the next morning. On application they were permitted to appear by a pleader. Thereafter, the pleader was examined under S. 242, and it is recorded that he pleaded guilty, with the result that the petitioners were convicted and fined as above, and the amount of the stake money Rs. 34-13-6 which the police had seized was declared forfeited to the Crown. In addition, out of the amount of fine realised from the fines, Rs. 100 was directed to be paid to the police officers as reward.

[2] The Magistrate's procedure in accepting the plea of guilty, in the circumstances of this case, was entirely wrong. Section 205, Criminal P. C., declares that whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may, if he sees reason so to do, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader. In Emperor v. Dorabsha Bomanji, 50 Bom. 250 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Bom. 218 : 27 Cr. L. J. 440), it was held that, if the accused are permitted to appear by a pleader under this section, the pleader may plead on their behalf. But in this Court it has been held that S. 205 applied only when a summons is issued. In these cases no summons was issued. The decision to which I refer is Abdul Hamid v. Emperor, 2 Pat. 793 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 46 : 24 Cr. L. J. 872). That was a case in which a warrant was issued in the first instance.

[3] There is also a further objection to the procedure adopted by the Magistrate. Section 242 requires that when the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted. Section 243 provides that, if the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him; and if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly. It is not sufficient for a conviction that the accused should admit the facts which the prosecution allege. Unless the facts alleged amount to an offence the accused cannot be convicted. It is for that reason that S. 242 requires that the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall then be called upon to show cause why he should not be convicted. There is no indication in the record of this case that the particulars of the offence were ever explained to the accused, or their pleader. The mistake that has been made in the Courts below appears to be in assuming that gambling is per se an offence under the Gambling Act. That is not so. It is only an offence to gamble in a common gaming house, which has been defined as any house, walled enclosure, room or place in which cards, dice, tables or other instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying, using or keeping such house, etc. Unless, therefore, Sanyal was keeping the house or room in which the accused were found for the purpose of making a profit for himself out of the gambling, the premises did not constitute a common gaming house. This occurrence appears to be one that ought never to have been brought into Court. It appears that the accused merely met on the Diwali night for a friendly game of cards in the house of one of them. That does not constitute an offence under the Gambling Act. The convictions and sentences are, therefore, set aside. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

G.M.J. Conviction and sentence set aside.

S. Mehdi Imam —for Petitioners; R. J. Bahadur —for Opposite Party.

Order. — The facts of this case are as follows: The trial of the petitioners on a charge under S. 427, Penal Code, began in the Court of Mr. Ashraff, a Magistrate with second class powers, on 16-6-1948. Arguments in the case were concluded on 19-5-1949, when the case was postponed until 31st May for judgment. Judgment, however, was not delivered until 7th June when the accused were convicted and ordered to pay fines of Rs. 50 each. On 31-5-1949, the Magistrate was invested with first class powers.

[2] Against their convictions and sentences an appeal was preferred to the District Magistrate. The matter was heard by the Additional District Magistrate who treated it as an application in revision, holding that as Mr. Ashraff had first class powers on the date he delivered judgment, no appeal lay from the convictions and sentences passed by him in this case. Section 407, Criminal P. C., provides that any person convicted at a trial held by any Magistrate of the second or third class may appeal to the District Magistrate. The generality of this provision, however, is limited by S. 413 which opens with the words "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained," and then goes on to state that there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding Rs. 50. The Magistrate who passed the sentences in this case was a Magistrate of the first class at the time that he passed the sentences, and, therefore, S. 413 bars an appeal. This was the view which I took in Deonandan v. Chalitar Mahton, A.I.R. (29) 1942 Pat. 107 : (43 Cr. L. J. 7).

[2a] It is contended, however, that there has been a Division Bench decision of this Court in which a different view has been taken, namely, the case of Sheobhanjan Singh v. Emperor, A.I.R. (12) 1925 Pat. 472 : (26 Cr. L. J. 914). The facts of that case were that during the progress of a trial the second class Magistrate who was presiding was invested with first class powers. Thereafter the trial continued and some prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and discharged. Then, in the ordinary course, arguments were heard and judgment was delivered. The report does not state what sentence the Magistrate had passed. It appears that the matter came before this Court on a reference by the Sessions Judge who was of opinion that the appeal lay to the District Magistrate. The learned Judges held that as part of the trial was held while the Magistrate was a Magistrate of the first class, the proper tribunal for hearing the appeal was the Sessions Judge and not the District Magistrate. There is nothing in the judgment of that case affecting the decision to which I have already referred. No reference was made to S. 413 of the Code, and the report does not disclose what the sentence was.

[3] The judgment in Deonandan Mahton's case, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 107 : (43 Cr. L. J. 7) proceeded on the basis that the judgment is no part of the trial. The learned advocate for the petitioners states that this view cannot be maintained in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Basil Ranger Lawrence v. Emperor, A.I.R. (20) 1933 P. C. 218: (34 Cr. L. J. 886). That was an appeal from Nigeria. After the accused had been convicted he was sentenced by the presiding Judge to three years' imprisonment, and the jury was discharged. On the application of the Solicitor General who conducted the prosecution the Judge revised this sentence in chambers without notice to the accused and in his absence. Commenting on the impropriety of this, their Lordships observed that it is an essential principle of criminal law that the trial of an indictable offence has to be conducted in the presence of the accused; and, for this purpose, trial means the whole of the proceedings, including the sentence. An alteration and recording of the sentence in the absence of the accused is not legal. The facts of that case are entirely different from the facts of the present case, and the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council are not applicable to the facts of this case.

[4] It was lastly contended that Mr. Ashraff had no power to convict the accused in this case after he had been vested with first class powers. For this proposition reference was made to S. 245 of the Code, which states (1) that if the Magistrate, upon taking the evidence referred to in S. 244 and such further evidence (if any) as he may, of his own motion, cause to be produced, and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused, finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal; and (2) where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of S. 349 or S. 562 he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law. As I understood the argument, the contention is that when a second class Magistrate is invested with first class powers, after the trial is completed and before judgment is passed, he ceases to be the Magistrate who conducted the trial. No authority was quoted for this proposition, and I can find no support for it anywhere. The Magistrate obviously continues to be the same Magistrate, although his powers are enhanced.

[5] Lastly, I was invited to examine this case on the merits. But the Magistrate in the Court of first instance has done that already, and the Additional District Magistrate has stated that although it was not necessary for him to discuss the facts as he was dealing with the matter in revision, he had satisfied himself that the findings of the first Court were supported by the evidence.

[6] The rule is discharged.

A. F. O. O. No. 45 and Civil Revn. No. 117 of 1947, D/- 31-3-1949.

Debt Laws—Bengal Money-lenders Act (X [10] of 1940), Ss. 34 (1) (b) (ii) and 36 (6) (a) (i) — Applicability—Decree passed by Court in Bihar—Application for scaling down and fixing instalments under Bengal Act, if maintainable.

A decree on the basis of a simple mortgage passed by the Patna Court in Bihar was transferred for execution to a Court in Bengal. The judgment-debtor filed an application for scaling down the decree and for fixing instalments, under Ss. 34 and 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act, to the Patna Court when the execution was pending in the Court in Bengal :

Held, that the application was not maintainable as the Bengal Money-lenders Act was not applicable to the case notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary between the parties. The Bengal Money-lenders Act and the Bihar Money-lenders Act are special laws vesting their Courts with jurisdiction over reviewing and revising decrees already passed in the matter of scaling down of interest or fixing of instalments. Such provincial legislations can bind and affect Courts within their jurisdiction and a Court in Bihar cannot be forced to apply the Bengal Money-lenders Act to a decree which it had passed. They create substantive rights of parties and Courts which have to decide such rights are to be governed by the law enacted in their Province. [Paras 2, 5]

Per Das J. (obiter.) — Even if the Bengal Act applied S. 36 (6) (a) (i) was not applicable as no proceeding in execution of the decree was pending before the Patna Court. The granting of instalments under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii) being discretionary the judgment-debtor was not entitled to the exercise of such discretion in the circumstances. [Paras 6 and 7]

Bhabanand Mukharji and Narottam Chatterjee — for Appellant; Sudhir Chandra Ghose and Ramanugrah Prasad (for Deputy Registrar Guardian) — for Respondents.

Nageshwar Prasad J. — The facts out of which this civil revision application and the miscellaneous appeal arise are these. The plaintiffs-opposite party in this case, Nitai Chandra Ghose, had advanced a sum of rupees two thousand on two simple mortgage bonds dated 5-5-31 and 7-5-31 to the petitioner-defendant in this case. On the principal and interest not being paid, Nitai Chandra Ghose brought a suit on the basis of the said two bonds against the defendant-petitioner in the Court of 3rd Sub-Judge of Patna, for a sum of Rs. 8500. The reason why the suit was brought in Patna was that there was stipulation in the bonds that the money loaned to the defendant was to be paid in Patna and thus the Court at Patna got jurisdiction over this matter, though the bonds were executed in Murshidabad and a part of the contract was fulfilled there. After contest, there was a decree for rupees four thousand passed by the Court on 15-4-40 in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendant in accordance with the provisions of Bengal Money-lenders Act of 1933, according to which a sum not more than the principal was to be decreed for interest whatever the stipulations in the contract might have been. The plaintiffs-decree-holders executed the decree and the execution proceedings were transferred to the District Judge of Murshidabad, and execution was started in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Berhampur, district Murshidabad. It appears that the execution proceedings there lingered on on account of various objections and in 1943 the defendant-petitioner filed an application before the executing Court at Berhampur purporting to be under Ss. 11 and 13, Bihar Money-lenders Act, and S. 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act (Act X [10] of 1940) which had come into operation on 1-9-1940. This application was rejected by the executing Court and an appeal was filed by the petitioner-defendant before the Calcutta High Court which by its judgment and order dated 12-4-1945 dismissed the appeal and held that the Bengal Courts had no jurisdiction to reopen the decree which was passed by a Bihar Court. On 8-6-1945 an application under Ss. 34 and 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act (Act X [10] of 1940) was filed by the petitioner-defendant in the Court of the 3rd Sub-Judge at Patna. The gist of this application was that the petitioner-debtor sought further relief from the obligations of the decree by way of some further reduction in interest and thus an application was made to reopen the decree and request was made by this application to further reduce the interest and to fix instalments for payment of the reduced decretal amount. By its judgment dated 27-11-1946, the Court of the 3rd Sub-Judge at Patna rejected this application of the petitioner-judgment-debtor and hence an appeal and a revision have both been filed against the said judgment and order.

[2] Before the lower Court both the parties agreed to the application of the provisions of the Bengal Money-lenders Act of 1940 to this case as the transaction had taken place within the province of Bengal and as the defendant was a resident of Bengal. Though the learned Subordinate Judge decided this case on the basis of the parties conceding on this point he expressed his doubts as to the correctness of the proposition. In this Court the learned advocate for the plaintiffs-decree-holders has urged that the Bengal Money-lenders Act cannot govern this case as the decree in this case has been passed by a Court in Bihar and it is the Bihar Money-lenders Act, which would give powers to a Bihar Court for scaling down decrees and not the Bengal Act. It may be noted that this petition was filed before the Court of the 3rd Sub-Judge at Patna under Ss. 34 and 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act, and if that Act is found incapable of governing Bihar Courts the application has to be rejected. I propose, therefore, to consider this aspect of the matter also in spite of agreement between the parties in the Court below to have the matter decided according to the provisions of the Bengal Money-lenders Act. To my mind agreement on such points of law cannot by itself vest jurisdiction in a Bihar Court to apply the provisions of a law of the Bengal Legislature to the case. The learned advocate for the petitioner-judgment-debtor has cited before us the case reported in State Aided Bank of Travancore Ltd. v. Dhrit Ram, A. I. R. (29) 1942 P. C. 6 : (I. L. R. (1942) Bom. 318), which says that in cases arising out of contract it is the place of contract which governs the law applicable to it and not the place where the suit is brought. That was a case in which the contract had been found to be fully entered into in the Native State of Travancore and the suit had been brought in Bombay. In order to determine the right and liabilities of the parties arising out of the contract it was held in that case that the law of the State of Travancore where the transaction of the contract had been fully entered into was the proper law applicable to it. We have also been shown some observations in Westlake's Private International Law which says that the law of the country where the contract was entered into will govern cases arising out of the contract. Even if I were to agree to this principle of law, it appears, and it is conceded, that the contract entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant on the basis of the two bonds was performed partly in the district of Murshidabad, namely in Bengal and partly it had to be fulfilled in Patna where the plaintiffs-decree-holders reside inasmuch as the stipulation in the bonds was that the repayment of the loans due on the bonds was to be made in Patna. That is why the Court at Patna got jurisdiction over this matter. Therefore, even applying the principles enunciated in the Privy Council case, cited before us, the Bihar Court had jurisdiction in this matter and it passed a decree apparently without objection on the question of jurisdiction. But this is not all. The analogy of a contract will hardly apply to the circumstances of this case. The decree in this case arising out of that contract based on the two bonds was passed on 15-4-1940 by the Court of the 3rd Subordinate Judge at Patna and whatever the rights and liabilities of the parties were based on that contract had already been decided by that judgment and decree and the contract had merged in the decree. There was nothing more about the rights and liabilities arising out of the contract to be decided. On 1-9-1940, a law came into force, passed by the Bengal Legislature, which under certain circumstances gave rights to a debtor to apply before a Court, either before the passing of a decree or during execution proceedings, to move for scaling down of the decree and to fix periods of payment. This was a right given to the debtor not accruing to him from any contract but as a result of a special law which vested Courts with a jurisdiction to scale down decrees and to grant instalments for payment of the decrees on the request of the debtor. It cannot be said that this right arose because of the contract, and as such it cannot be said that the place of the contract was the determining factor in applying the law governing it. The Bengal Legislature had vested its Courts with special jurisdiction and responsibilities in the matter of scaling down decrees. Can the Bengal Legislature make special laws of this kind applicable to Bihar Courts and can they command the Bihar Courts to enforce the provisions laid down in their legislation in such cases? This is an intricate question. The Bengal Money-lenders Act and the Bihar Money-lenders Act are special laws vesting their Courts with jurisdiction over reviewing and revising decrees already passed in the matter of scaling down of interest or fixing of instalments. To my mind such Provincial legislations can bind and affect Courts within their jurisdiction and a Court in Bihar cannot be forced to apply the Bengal Money-lenders Act to a decree which it had passed. A Bench of this Hon'ble Court has held Inder Chand v. Bansropan Sahu, A.I.R. (35) 1948 Pat. 245 : (26 Pat. 307) in a case where a decree was obtained in the original side of the Calcutta High Court and it was transferred for execution to the Shahabad Court in the Province of Bihar that the transferee Court has to execute it in accordance with the law of procedure obtaining in the Courts in Bihar but it has to determine the rights and liabilities of the parties in accordance with the substantive law obtaining in the Court which passed the decree, that is, the transferor Court. In that case the judgment-debtors had made an application under Ss. 13 and 14, Bihar Money-lenders Act, and they applied to the Court to fix a valuation about the properties of the judgment-debtors and to sell only a small portion of the judgment-debtors' properties which are rights given to a judgment-debtor under the Bihar Money-lenders Act (Act VII [7] of 1939). The Bengal Money-lenders Act excepts commercial loans from the operation of the Bengal Money-lenders Act and the question in that case was whether the Bengal Act or the Bihar Act would apply. The Subordinate Judge in that case had held that the Bihar Money-lenders Act applied to the transaction and in appeal Meredith and Sinha JJ. reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and held that in matter where the question was about the determining of the rights and liabilities of the parties the law of the land which passed the decree was to govern. Meredith J. has observed the following in his judgment :

> "In my opinion, it is quite impossible to regard Ss. 13 and 14, Bihar Money-lenders Act, taken together as merely prescribing rules of procedure for execution. On the contrary, a substantive right is enacted by those provisions for the protection of the judgment-debtor. It is a matter of the substantive rights of the parties, that is of substantive law. As such the current of authority seems to be that in such matters the law of the province where the decree was passed will be applicable, and not the law of the province in which the decree is being executed."

In my opinion, the Bengal Money-lenders Act and the Bihar Money-lenders Act create substantive rights of parties and Courts which have to decide such rights are to be governed by the law enacted in their Province. In this view of the matter the application made by the judgment-debtor-petitioner before the 3rd Subordinate Judge at Patna must be rejected and, therefore, the civil revision and the appeal filed here fail.

[3] In this view of the matter, it is unnecessary to decide whether under S. 36, cl. (6) (a) (i),

Bengal Money-lenders Act, it was open to the lower Court to scale down the decree when no proceedings in execution were pending before it; or whether under S. 34 it was competent for the lower Court to fix instalments under the Bengal Money-lenders Act. I would, therefore, dismiss this application for civil revision and the miscellaneous appeal with costs to the decree-holders-opposite party. There will be no separate hearing-fee for this civil revision.

[4] Das J.—The principal question for decision in these two cases is if the petitioner, who is also the appellant in the miscellaneous appeal, is entitled to any benefit under the provisions of the Bengal Money-lenders Act (X [10] of 1940), hereinafter to be referred to as the Bengal Act. If the Bengal Act does not apply, then it follows that he is not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that Act. If, however, the Bengal Act applies, then the further question arises if the particular provisions under which he wants relief apply in the present case.

[5] I agree with my learned brother that the Bengal Act does not apply in the present case, but in view of the importance of the question raised, I should like to explain my reasons very briefly. The principle for which Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji appearing for the petitioner-appellant has contended, was expressed most succinctly by Turner L. J. in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Shand, (1865) 3 MOO. P. C. (N.S.) 272 at p. 290 : (12 L. T. 808) :

"The general rule is that the law of the country where a contract is made governs as to the nature, the obligation, and the interpretation of it. The parties to a contract are either the subjects of the power there ruling, or as temporary residents owe it a temporary allegiance; in either case equally they must be understood to submit to the law there prevailing, and to agree to its action upon their contract."

Those observations were made in connection with a case in which a contract was made between British subjects in England, substantially for safe carriage of goods from Southampton to Mauritius. The performance was to commence in an English vessel, in an English port; to be fully completed in Mauritius, and the question was whether the English law would apply, or the French law which was in force at Mauritius. The decision was based on the ground

"that the actual intention of the parties must be taken clearly to have been to treat this as an English contract, to be interpreted according to the rules of English law."

Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji, therefore, contends that the law of the place of contract, which was in Bengal, will govern the present case. He has placed reliance on State Aided Bank of Travancore, Ltd. v. Dhrit Ram, A. I. R. (29) 1942 P. C. 6 : (I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 318), where the law on the subject was thus stated :

"The law which governs a contract depends upon the intention of the parties express or implied. There is no intention expressed in these documents and the Courts are left to infer the intention by reference to considerations where the contract was made and how and where it was to be performed."

Their Lordships came to the finding

"that not only the place where the contract was made, but also the place where the contract was to be performed was Travancore; therefore the law of that State governed the transaction."

In the case before us the contract was made in Bengal, but it had to be fulfilled in Bihar. It cannot, therefore, be said for certainty that the intention of the parties was that the law of the place of contract should govern the transaction. In cases of this nature, where the contract is made at one place, but has to be fulfilled at another, there is "a competition between the lex loci contractus celebrati and the law of the place of fulfilment, intending by the latter the law of that jurisdiction which would be the forum contractus according to true Roman principles" (see Westlake's Private International Law, Edn. 5, p. 301).

There have been dicta of English Judges, some on the side of the former and some in favour of the place of fulfilment. It would have been necessary to go into this question more thoroughly and examine the decisions in favour of one principle or the other, if this case really turned upon contract or the intention of the parties express or implied in that contract. When the suit was brought in Patna, the parties agreed that the Bengal Money-lenders Act, 1933, would apply, and the Court applied the provisions of that Act so far as they were relevant. At that stage the question was still in the region of contract, depending on the intention of the parties express or implied in the contract. But after the passing of the decree, the rights of the parties arising out of the contract have already been adjudicated on and merged in the decree. The rights and liabilities which now arise, arise not out of the contract but out of the decree. A similar view was expressed by the Federal Court in Subrahmanyan Chettiar v. Muttuswami Goundan, 1940 F. C. R. 188 : (A.I.R. (28) 1941 F. C. 47), where their Lordships had to consider the validity of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1938. At p. 202 of the report, Gwyer C. J., said as follows :

"It was then contended that, even if not wholly invalid, either the Act was invalid in part, in so far as it did or might affect promissory notes, or that it ought to be construed as not applying to promissory notes at all. But these questions do not, in my opinion, arise in the present case, because the liability on which the Act operated was a liability under a decree of the Court passed before the commencement of the Act. It had ceased to be a debt evidenced by or based on the promissory note, for that had merged in the decree and had become a judgment-debt; nor could the appellant any longer have sued upon the note."

In the case before us also the debt on which learned counsel for the petitioner-appellant wishes the Bengal Act to operate is a judgment-debt. If the rights and liabilities of the parties now arise out of the decree or the judgment-debt, there is no room for the application of the principle that the law of the place of contract should govern those rights and liabilities. Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji has stated that he wants relief under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii) and S. 36 (6) (a) (i) of the Bengal Act. The former provision relates to the granting of instalments by the Court and the latter to a re-opening of the decree. It is clear that these are special powers given to the Bengal Courts which have nothing to do with the intention of the parties express or implied in a contract. Such powers cannot be exercised by the Bihar Courts in respect of a decree which was passed in Bihar, unless the Bihar Money-lenders Act gives such powers. Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji has conceded before us that if the Bihar Money-lenders Act applies, his client is entitled to no relief at this stage. For these reasons I would agree with the view of my learned brother that the Bengal Act does not apply at this stage.

[6] I may further state that, in my opinion, the petitioner-appellant is entitled to no relief under S. 36 (6) (a) (i) or under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii) of the Bengal Act, even if we were to hold that the Bengal Act applied. Section 36 (6) (a) (i) does not apply because there is no proceeding in execution of the decree pending before the Patna Court in which the application for relief was made. Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji has relied on some decisions, such as, Dwarkadas Gobindram, Firm v. Saligram Rekhraj, Firm, 17 Pat. 617 : (A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 144), where in an entirely different set of facts and in connection with an entirely different question an observation was made to the effect that

"a Court which transfers a decree for execution does not thereby altogether lose control over the decree and is quite competent to recall it."

The point which has been urged by Mr. Mukherji is concluded by a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Dr. S. Roy v. Karuna Kishore Kar, A.I.R. (32) 1945 Cal. 452 : (I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 70). It was observed in that case as follows:

"The sub-section does not say that the Court which passed the decree may exercise the powers granted by sub-ss. (1) and (2) whenever execution proceedings are pending anywhere. The order must be passed in execution proceedings, and not in any other proceeding. This means that execution proceedings must be pending before the Court which is asked to exercise such powers. One Court cannot pass orders in execution proceedings pending before another Court. Orders must be passed by a Court in its own proceedings. As no execution proceedings are pending before this Court which passed the decree, no application lies to this Court under S. 36 (6) (a) (i)."

[7] As to the relief under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii), I am of the opinion that having regard to the words used in the sub-section, it is a matter of discretion for the Court concerned whether to allow in stalments or not, this is so in spite of the fact that the word "shall" is used at the beginning of the sub-section and also in cl. (ii). If the matter is one of discretion, the circumstances are such that the petitioner-appellant is not entitled to the exercise of such discretion, in his favour.

[8] It was also contended before us that the application for relief under S. 36 (6) (a) (i) should be treated as a suit for relief under S. 36 (1) of the Bengal Act. Reliance was placed on the decision of Bhupendra Nath v. Sushil Chandra, A.I.R. (32) 1945 Cal. 370 : (49 C. W. N. 542). Having regard to the circumstances of this case, I do not think the application should be allowed to be treated as a suit. It is, however, unnecessary to examine these matters in detail in view of the findings that the Bengal Act does not apply.

[9] For these reasons I agree that the application in revision and the miscellaneous appeal must be dismissed with costs to the decree-holders-opposite party.

Ramswarath Thakur — Petitioner v. The King.

Criminal Revn. No. 1441 of 1949, D/- 18-11-1949.

(a) Cotton Textiles (Control of Movement) Order (1948), Cl. 3 — General permit, cls. (2) and (3) —Railway parcel—Meaning.

A comparison of the language of cls. (2) and (3) of the general permit makes it quite clear that the Textile Commissioner intends to draw a distinction between a passenger's personal luggage and a railway parcel, and between goods carried by a goods train and goods carried by a passenger train. Clause (3) of the permit is not intended to apply to personal luggage at all, and, therefore, railway parcel does not include personal luggage as used in the general permit.

[Para 2]

(b) Cotton Textiles (Control of Movement) Order (1948), Cl. 3 — General permit, cls. (2) and (3) — Applicability.

Clause (3) of the permit is intended to permit an unlimited quantity of textiles by passenger train only if it does not constitute the personal luggage of a passenger travelling by train. If it constitutes the personal luggage of a passenger, it is governed by cl. (2) and the amount is limited to 10 pounds in weight. A person who, therefore, carries in his compartment as his personal luggage cloth weighing

2 mds., 20 srs., contravenes the provisions of the Order. [Para 2]

Akbar Imam — for Petitioner; G. P. Shahi — for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 under S. 7, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, for contravention of an Order issued under S. 3 of the Act. The facts are that the petitioner was travelling between the stations of Laheriasarai and Darbhanga on the Oudh Tirhut Railway, and had with him in his compartment, two gunny bags containing cloth weighing 2 maunds and 20 seers.

[2] In exercise of its powers under S. 3 of the Act referred to above the Central Government has issued the Cotton Textitles (Control of Movement) Order, 1948. Section 3 of this Order provides :

"No person shall transport or cause to be transported by rail, road, air, sea or inland navigation any cloth, yarn or apparel except under and in accordance with, (1) a general permit notified in the Gazette of India by the Textile Commissioner, or (2) a special transport permit issued by the Textile Commissioner."

It is not claimed in the present case that the petitioner was protected by a special transport permit issued by the Textile Commissioner. On 10-9-1948, the Textile Commissioner prescribed a form of general permit referred to in R. (3) of the Order of 1948, and this was published in the Gazette of India dated 11-9-1948. This permit divides India into a number of zones. Rule 2 of the permit is as follows :

"Transport as personal luggage : Any person may transport or cause to be transported by rail, road, air, sea or inland navigation, cloth or apparel as part of his luggage if such cloth and apparel do not together exceed 10 pounds in weight."

It will be observed that there is no limitation with regard to interzonal transport. The limitation is merely with regard to the weight that may be transported. Rule 3 is as follows :

"Transport within a zone : Any person may transport or cause to be transported by road, air, sea or inland navigation, or by goods train or as a railway parcel by a passenger train, any cloth, yarn or apparel from any place in any zone described in para. 1 to any other place in the same zone."

It is for a contravention of the former clause of the general permit that the petitioner has been convicted. It is not disputed now that in the compartment in which he was travelling he had 2 maunds and 20 seers of textiles in two gunny bags, and that he was travelling with these goods between Laheriasarai and Darbhanga, that is to say, he was travelling within one of the zones into which the country had been divided by the general permit, with the quantity of textiles referred to. It is contended, however, that the accused was entitled by cl. 3 to travel within any zone with an unlimited quantity of textiles and that the term "railway parcel" in this clause includes the personal luggage of a passenger. The term "railway parcel" has not been defined either by the Central Supplies Act or by the Order passed under it, or by the general permit or by the Railways Act. But a comparison of the language of cls. (2) and (3) of the general permit makes it quite clear that the Textile Commissioner intended to draw a distinction between a passenger's personal luggage and a railway parcel. It is also clear that he intended to make a distinction between goods carried by a goods train and goods carried by a passenger train. Bearing in mind that as personal luggage a passenger is permitted to carry either inside a zone or betwern zones textiles up to the weight of 10 pounds as personal luggage, it is not difficult to reach the conclusion that cl. (3) of the permit is not intended to apply to personal luggage at all, and, therefore, that railway parcel does not include personal luggage as used in this general permit. Normally goods are carried by a goods train. But a certain amount of merchandise is carried by passenger trains, if the appropriate rates of conveyance by such a train are paid. A passenger train, therefore, may carry both goods and the luggage of passengers travelling by the train. Clause (3) is not intended to exclude from its operation the luggage of passengers travelling by a train. Clause (3) is not intended to permit a passenger travelling by a train to carry an unlimited quantity of textiles, but to permit an unlimited quantity of textiles, by a passenger train only if it does not constitute the personal luggage of a passenger travelling by the train. If it constitutes the personal luggage of a passenger, it is governed by cl. (2) and the amount is limited to 10 pounds in weight. There is no merit in this application which is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 1364 of 1949, D/- 18-11-1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 145, 537—Omission to state grounds for satisfaction as to existence of dispute—Effect.

The omission to comply with the express direction of the statute that the Magistrate shall make an order stating the grounds on which he is satisfied that a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace exists cannot be treated as a mere irregularity, curable under S. 537. Where, therefore, neither the notice issued to the parties nor the order passed by the Magistrate after hearing the parties indicated that he was satisfied as to the existence of any dispute likely to cause breach of the peace, the Magistrate could not be held to have jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint: A.I.R. (22) 1935 Oudh 316, Dissent.; A. I. R. (20) 1933 All. 264 (F.B.), Disting. [Para 3]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 145, N. 15, Pt. 3.

Bindeshwari Prasad Sinha — for Petitioners; K. D. De and S. C. Mukherjee—for Opposite Party.

Agarwala C. J. — This is an application made to set aside an order passed in a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The facts are that an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police reported to the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Bihar that the chaukidar of village Mathura had made a report at the police station that certain persons were obstructing the ploughing of the field of Dukhit Singh, and that hence there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace, and that, in consequence of this, he, the Assistant Sub-Inspector, had been sent to the village by the Officer-in-charge of the police station. The Assistant Sub-Inspector proceeded to state that he went to the village and asked the parties not to quarrel and to produce before him the evidence relating to their possession. Both the parties did this. The Assistant Sub-Inspector ended with a suggestion that notices under S. 144 of the Code should be issued to both parties. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate issued notices against both parties on 21-7-1947, restraining them from going to the land in dispute and calling upon them to show cause why the prohibitory order should not be made absolute. Both parties appeared and filed written-statements in which each of them denied that he was likely to commit a breach of the peace, but asserting that his opponent might do so. On 10th September, the Magistrate decided to convert the proceeding into one under S. 145, and issued a notice to each party that from the police report and from the show-cause petitions he was satisfied that a bona fide dispute relating to possession of the land in question existed between the parties, and he, therefore, required them to appear in his Court and put in their written-statements regarding possession over the subject-matter of the dispute. Thereafter, evidence in the case was heard, and the order complained of was made. The order is challenged on the ground that the Magistrate has nowhere recorded that he was satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace. He did not state so in the notice which he issued to the parties, nor record it in the order-sheet, and his final order makes no mention of the existence of a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace. It is, therefore, argued that, although the Magistrate may have been satisfied that there was a bona fide dispute with regard to possession between the parties, there is no indication that he was satisfied that that dispute was likely to occasion a breach of the peace.

[2] Section 145 of the Code provides that whenever a District Magistrate, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land, he shall make an order in writing stating the grounds for his being so satisfied. The statute, therefore, quite clearly requires that the Magistrate shall be satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace and requires him to make an order in writing, stating the grounds for his being so satisfied. It is contended on behalf of the opposite-party, however, that the omission of the Magistrate to record that he is satisfied that the dispute between the parties is likely to occasion a breach of the peace is a mere irregularity to which S. 537 of the Code applies, and reliance is placed on the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad, 55 ALL. 301 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 264 : 34 Cr. L. J. 414 F. B.). The facts of that case were that one Suraj Prasad filed a petition under S. 145 of the Code alleging that his master Chunni Lal was in possession of a house, and that the opposite party were trying to interfere with that possession, with the result that there was likely to be a breach of the peace. The Magistrate took down the statement of Suraj Prasad on oath, and directed a police enquiry into the matter. On receipt of the police report he recorded the following order :

"There appears to be some basis for this complaint, to judge from the police report."

The case was then transferred to another Magistrate, who issued notices under S. 145 to both parties without recording that he was satisfied that the dispute between the parties was such as might lead to a breach of the peace. The opposite party, however, when he appeared before the Magistrate raised this point, and the Magistrate, on the evidence that was adduced before him, came to the conclusion that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. The final order that was passed in that case was challenged on the ground that the Magistrate had not recorded his satisfaction with regard to the likelihood of a breach of the peace prior to the institution of the proceedings or in the notice to the parties. The Full Bench took the view that the omission to do this was covered by S. 537 of the Code. They drew a distinction between a case in which a Magistrate is not satisfied regarding the existence of a likelihood of a breach of the peace before initiating the proceedings and a case in which although satisfied, he has not recorded that he is so satisfied. This is quite clear from the following observation :

"In these circumstances, although we are of opinion that the Magistrate did not follow the letter of the law, we have every reason to believe that he was satisfied in his mind, on a perusal of the police papers and the sworn statement of the applicant, that there was a likelihood of the breach of the peace. Further, it appears that the opposite parties, on receipt of the notice, did raise the question as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace. The learned Magistrate expressly applied his mind to that point, and, on the evidence before him, came to the conclusion that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace."

In the present case there is no indication that either of the parties raised this question before the Magistrate, or that at any stage of the proceedings the learned Magistrate applied his mind to that question.

[3] One of the learned Judges of the Full Bench case, King J., subsequently became Chief Justice of the Chief Court of Oudh. A decision of King C. J., in B. B. Asghari Khanam v. Emperor, 11 Luck. 157 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Oudh 316 : 36 Cr. L. J. 656) was also relied on by the opposite party. In the course of the judgment in that case the learned Chief Justice observes that it must be conceded that a Magistrate cannot take action under S. 145 unless he is satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and the mere fact that a Magistrate issues an order under S. 145 (1) would not necessarily lead to the inference that the Magistrate was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. In that case the proceedings stated on the complaint of one Ragho Ram who applied to the Sub-divisional Magistrate for action under S. 145 stating that he had been in possession of the land in dispute for some years, that he had sown the kharif crop during the current year and that on the 7th July certain of the opposite parties came to the land armed with lathis and tried to turn him out by force. He also alleged that on the 23rd of July when he went to the field to weed the crop the opposite party appeared armed with lathis and prevented him forcibly from weeding the crops and threatened to kill him if he did not desist from cultivating the plot in dispute. The Magistrate took down the statement of Ragho Ram on oath and the latter supported the allegations which he had made in his complaint. Thereupon the Magistrate issued an order directing the issue of notices under S. 145 (1) and calling upon the parties to put in their written-statements, but without recording the fact that he was satisfied that the dispute between the parties was likely to occasion a breach of the peace. The learned Chief Justice held that this omission was a mere irregularity. I am not so sure myself that the omission to comply with the express direction of the statute that the Magistrate shall make an order stating the grounds on which he is satisfied that a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace exists can be treated as a mere irregularity. But, for the purposes of this case, assuming it to be so, the question still remains whether the materials before the Magistrate were so coercive that it should be held that he must have been satisfied that the dispute was likely to occasion a breach of the peace, although he has not recorded that he was so satisfied. Unlike the two cases to which reference has been made, there was no statement on oath before the Magistrate. All he had before him was the report by an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police in which the only reference to the existence of a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace was the statement of a chaukidar, that is to say hearsay evidence. He had, of course, before him also the written-statements which the parties filed in the proceeding under S. 144. In these statements, however, both parties disclaimed any intention of committing a breach of the peace, although purporting to be apprehensive that their opponents might do so. It may well be, in these circumstances, that the Magistrate, while being satisfied as to the existence of the dispute, was not prepared to accept the allegations that the opposite party was likely to cause a breach of the peace. In fact, the language of the notice issued to the parties in this case indicates either that the Magistrate was oblivious of the necessity of being satisfied that the dispute was one likely to occasion a breach of the peace or that, from the materials before him, all that he was satisfied about was that a bona fide dispute existed. Even after hearing the evidence of the parties his order makes no reference to any evidence that was before him of the likelihood of the dispute leading to a brerach of the peace, and does not state that he had come to any such conclusion. In the circumstances, I must hold that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to enquire into this complaint in view of the absence of any reason to suppose that he was satisfied that the dispute before him was such as to be likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The order is, therefore, set aside. The Magistrate will, of course, be entitled to start a fresh proceeding if he is now satisfied that there is between the parties a dispute that is likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

A decretal debt is an actionable claim. The provisions of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., do not necessarily indicate that the Legislature regarded a decree as outside the scope of actionable claims. [Paras 5 & 8]

Reuben J. — This appeal by the executing decree-holders is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge at Gaya allowing an application under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[2] The decree under execution was obtained by one Puran Dai, proprietress of village Kathar, against Jagmohan Singh and twentythree others for arrears of rent for the years 1338 to 1343 Fasli in respect of a mokarrari tenure in the village. The decree was for an amount of Rs. 9774. After realising Rs. 7000 out of this sum by execution Mt. Puran Dai, on 8-7-1943, sold her milkiat interest in the village and the balance of the decretal dues to Ambica Prasad Singh, appellant 1, Mahesh Pandey, appellant 2 and one Adit Singh. The shares of these vendees are specified in the sale deed as being 0-5-6 pies, 0-6-6 pies and 0-4-0 annas respectively. Execution was taken out by the two appellants in the year 1946 under O. 21, Rr. 15 and 16, Civil P. C. It was sought against only three of the judgment-debtors, who are residents of Mauza Jarao, the other judgment-debtors being residents of Kathar. The objection under S. 47 filed by two of these judgment-debtors has succeeded on two grounds: (1) that twelve annas of the decretal dues have been transferred to one or other of the judgment-debtors and, therefore, an application for their recovery by execution does not lie under proviso 2 to O. 21, R. 16, and (2) that, as to the remaining four annas share, the appellant Ambica Prasad is legal practitioner and, therefore, is debarred by S. 136, T. P. Act, from enforcing by execution a decree obtained by him by assignment. The correctness of the decision is challenged in respect of both these grounds.

[3] As regards the first ground, the challenge has been somewhat half hearted, the reason being that the case of the applicant judgment-debtors is practically conceded by the execution petition itself. It seems to have been admitted before the Subordinate Judge that, subsequent to the transaction by which Puran Dai transferred her interest to Ambica Singh and others, there have been several transactions by which Mahesh Pandey and Ambica Singh have transferred portions of their interest to either the judgment-debtors or to close relatives of the judgment-debtors, the resulting distribution being that from Ambika Singh the daughter-in-law of Odai Nath Singh judgment-debtor has got a share of one and a half annas, and from Mahesh Pandey, Mahabal Singh judgment-debtor, the wife of Basudeo Singh judgment-debtor, the mother of Matukdhari Singh judgment-debtor, daughter-in-law of Jagmohan Singh judgment-debtor and the wife of Ramdeo Singh judgment-debtor have got respectively the shares of ten dams, fifteen dams, fifteen dams one anna and one anna making a total of four annas, thus leaving Mahesh Pandey with a share of two and a half annas. We find in the execution petition that all these purchasers are named as pro forma judgment-debtors, that is to say, judgment-debtors against whom no relief is sought in the execution proceeding. Further among the judgment-debtors, we find Adit Singh and in the explanation given in the execution petition, there is a note that he is the farzidar of the wife of Gariban Singh another of the judgment-debtors. The inclusion of all these persons as judgment-debtors clearly supports the case of the appellant-petitioners that these purchases were benami purchases by the judgment-debtors themselves. As regards the two and a half annas share remaining with Mahesh Pandey, the case of the applicant-judgment-debtors is that he is the farzidar of the judgment-debtors Chhabinath, whose son-in-law he is. The relationship was denied, but the evidence strongly points to the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that he is, in fact, so related. Direct evidence to this effect was given by Ram Charitar applicant (A. W. 2) and Jhako Singh (A. W. 3). The applicant judgment-debtors took the bold course of examining as a witness on their behalf one of the judgment-debtors belonging to village Kathar, in respect of whom the allegation of farzi purchase had been made, namely, Ramdeo Singh. Naturally, the witness did not support the story of the alleged relationship, but instead of a direct denial, he said that he did not know if there is any such relationship. An equal uncertainty was shown by Balbhadar Singh, witness 1 for the executing decree-holders, who began by a statement that Chhabinath is not the father-in-law of Mahesh Pandey, went on to the pretence that, though Chhabinath is his co-villager and his uncle he does not know if Chhabinath has or has not one daughter and ended by saying that he "cannot deny if Mahesh Pandey is the son-in-law of Chhabinath." This assumption of ignorance, which cannot but be false, speaks for itself, and, if we take this behaviour and consider the purchase in the name of Mahesh along with the numerous purchases in the names of close relatives of the judgment-debtors and relating to small portions of the decree, there can be little doubt that the purchases were, in fact, on behalf of the judgment-debtors. Apparently, the judgment-debtors by a series of purchases are trying to apportion between themselves the liability for satisfying the decretal dues, and execution has been taken out in the present case against the judgment-debtors who belonged to another village and, apparently, have not come into this scheme of adjusting the liability by private transactions.

[4] In connection with the plea of farzi purchase by the judgment-debtors, it has been suggested to us that the Subordinate Judge was under a mistake as regards the nature of the interest purchased by Mahesh Pandey and Adit Singh and transferred by the former to the persons named above. The fact is, we were told, that the purchase of these two persons was confined to the milkiat interest alone and that the decretal dues were entirely purchased by Ambica Singh. This was not the case of the executing decree-holders before the Subordinate Judge and is contradicted by the execution petition itself, since Mahesh Pandey is included as an executing decree-holder. This case has not been made out in the memorandum of appeal to this Court, and it is not open to the appellants to take this ground now.

[5] I come now to the second point. Section 136, T. P. Act, provides that no Judge, legal practitioner or officer connected with any Court of Justice shall buy or traffic in, any share of or interest in any actionable claim, and no Court of Justice shall enforce at his instance, any actionable claim so dealt with by him as aforesaid. It is urged that decretal dues are not an actionable claim within the meaning of this section. In support of this contention reference is made to Afzal v. Ramkumar, 12 Cal. 610, Dagadu v. Vanji, 24 Bom. 502 : (2 Bom. L. R. 414) and Krishnaswami Naidu v. Andi Chetti, 51 Mad. 681 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 478). Of these decisions, only the first is a reasoned judgment. Their Lordships gave four reasons for their holding that a decree is not an actionable claim, firstly, that what is intended by this term is an actionable claim and not a claim which has already passed into a decree, secondly, that the Code of Civil Procedure, which was passed in the same year as the Transfer of Property Act, distinguishes between debts and decrees, thirdly, that in S. 232, Civil P. C., there is special provision regarding the transfer of decrees and the notice necessary to be given in such cases and, fourthly, that S. 233 of the Code lays down the same rule in the case of decree as is prescribed by S. 137, T. P. Act, in the case of debts. The decision in Dagadu's case, 24 Bom. 502 : (2 Bom. L. R. 414) merely follows the authority of the Calcutta decision. Krishnaswami's case, 51 Mad. 681 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 478) follows these two decisions and cites also Govindarajulu Naidu v. Ranga Rao, 40 M. L. J. 124 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Mad. 113), which merely decides that a judgment debt is property and that a transfer of it by the guardian of a minor does not require the Court's consent under O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C. Analysing the reasons given by their Lordships in the case of Afzal, 12 Cal. 610, they do not by themselves appear conclusive. The first ground seems to be plausible enough, but it is based on a mere consideration of the meaning of the words "actionable" and "claim" that is to say, a claim in respect of which an action lies is an actionable claim, and one in respect of which action has been taken and has fructified in a decree is not an actionable claim. It may be true that the Civil Procedure Code makes a distinction generally between debts and decrees. But there is necessarily a difference between the two independent of the question as to whether decrees are or are not actionable claims. A debt may arise in various ways; a decretal debt is a particular form of debt in which the liability of one party to another has been determined and fixed by a Court. The two are, therefore, not the same thing, although one is included in the other. Section 232, Civil P. C., of 1882 corresponds to O. 21, R. 16 of the present Code. It provides for the execution of a decree at the instance of the transferee, where the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law. It requires as a condition precedent to execution, that where the transfer is by assignment, notice in writing of the application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor. These provisions merely specify the conditions requisite for a transferee to obtain execution of the transferred decree. They do not necessarily indicate that the Legislature regarded a decree as outside the category of actionable claims and not affected by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating thereto. Section 137, T. P. Act, enacts that the person to whom a debt or a charge is transferred shall take it subject to all the liabilities to which the transferor was subject in respect thereof at the date of the transfer. Section 233, Civil P. C., makes an equivalent provision in respect of decrees. This may have been done ex majore cautela, the idea being that a judgment-debt, being ascertained by a Court, might be treated as carrying greater weight than an ordinary debt and, therefore, being likely to be regarded as over-riding equities.

[6] The decisions in the above mentioned cases may at first sight be justified by the definition of an actionable claim in S. 130, T. P. Act, as originally enacted :

"A claim which the civil Courts recognise as affording ground for relief is actionable whether a suit for its enforcement is or is not actually pending or likely to become necessary."

The mention of the pendency of a suit in the latter part of the definition suggests that the word "actionable" is used with reference to the possibility of the debt being sued for. Some doubt on this interpretation is cast, however, by cl. (d) of S. 135 as originally enacted :

"Where an actionable claim is sold, he against whom it is made is wholly discharged by paying to the buyer the price and incidental expenses of the sale, with interest on the price from the day that the buyer paid it. Nothing in the former part of this section applies . . . .

(d) where the judgment of a competent Court has been delivered affirming the claim, or where the claim has been made clear by evidence and is ready for judgment."

[7] Some doubt arose as to the meaning of this clause. It was interpreted by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts to mean that the transferee of an actionable claim could recover the whole amount due if he succeeded subsequently to the transfer in obtaining a decree for this sum. The Allahabad High Court, however, held that the clause referred to the state of things existing at the time of the assignment, that is to say, the claim had already become fixed by a judgment of a competent Court or had been made clear by evidence and ready for judgment at the time of the assignment. The latter view was accepted and, in my opinion, rightly by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Nilakanta v. Krishnasami, 13 Mad. 225 (FB). On this interpretation, it would appear to follow that a judgment-debt is an actionable claim.

[8] In the course of argument before us, several other decisions were referred to as authorities for the proposition that a judgment-debt is not actionable claim. Venkatarama Aiyar v. Ramasami Aiyer, 44 Mad. 539 : (AIR (8) 1921 Mad. 56), Prasanno Kumar v. Ashutosh Roy, 18 Cal. W.N. 450: (A.I.R. (1) 1914 Cal. 60) and Hari Prasad v. Kodo Marya, 1 Pat. L. J. 427 : (A.I.R. (3) 1916 Pat. 10) are merely authorities that a decree for the ascertainment of mesne profits is not a "right to sue" within the meaning of cl. (e) of S. 6, T. P. Act. There is no reason for thinking that the words "right to sue" connote the same thing as the words "actionable claim." The terms "sue" and "suit" are well understood in India. They occur in the Code of Civil Procedure and have acquired a technical meaning. In cl. (e) of S. 6, there is, therefore, a distinct reference to a right on the basis of which a suit can be brought. Had the Legislature intended that the terms "actionable claim" should have a similar meaning, it seems unlikely it would have used the word "actionable" rather than a word derived from the terms "suit." The difference in language between S. 6, cl. (e) and the provisions of chap. 8, T. P. Act, therefore, suggest that there was no intention on the part of the Legislature to exclude judgment-debts from the category of actionable claims. Ganpat Rai v. Sarupi, 1 ALL. 446, which has also been cited, is merely an authority that the purchaser of a simple mortgage decree does not acquire a lien on the property mortgaged.

[9] Coming to the Transfer of Property Act, as it now stands, it is doubtful whether Afzal v. Ram Kumar, (12 Cal. 610) (ante) can be regarded as an authority for the proposition for which it is cited. Actionable claim is now defined as,

"a claim to any debt, other than a debt secured by mortgage of immovable property or by hypothecation or pledge of movable property, or to any beneficial interest in moveable property not in the possession, either actual or constructive of the claimant, which the civil Court recognise as affording grounds for relief, whether such debt or beneficial interest be existent, accruing, conditional or contingent."

The reference to the pendency or otherwise of a suit which occurred in the previous definition has been omitted. The definition has been brought into accord with the concept in English law of a chose in action, vide Halsbury's Laws of England, second Edn., Vol. 4 at p. 418 :

"The expression 'chose in action' or 'thing in action' in literal sense means a thing recoverable by action, as contrasted with a chose in possession, i.e., a thing of which a person has not only ownership, but also actual physical possession. The meaning of the expression has varied from time to time, but it is now used to describe all personal rights of property which can only be claimed or enforced by action, and not by taking physical possession. It is used in respect of both corporeal and incorporeal personal property which is not in possession."

The term "chose in action" appears to be very elastic and Halsbury mentions that it includes claims which are not enforceable in Court but which depend for their reduction into possession, if they are so reducible at all, upon a variety of conditions (ibid, Art. 782). The distinction in English law appears to be between a chose in action and a chose in possession. The former term indicates a claim in respect of which some action is necessary before it comes into possession of the person entitled thereto. This action is not confined to something indicated by the word "action" in a technical sense, and as just mentioned, no legal proceeding may be possible for reducing it into possession. Further it is clear that the term "action" covers proceedings in execution, and that judgment debts are regarded as choses in action (ibid, Art. 786). They seem also to have been treated as choses in action in the Supreme Court of Judicature Act of 1873, 36 and 37 Vict. Ch. 66 : Forster v. Baker, (1910) 2 K. B. 636 : (79 L. J. K. B. 664) and in the Law of Property Act, 1925, vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Second Edn., Vol, 4. Art. 794).

[10] In the case of choses in action, therefore, there is no reason for interpreting the word action in a technical sense so as to exclude a judgment-debt. Still more in India, where the word "action" is not used in a technical sense, there is no reason to interpret it in this manner. I am supported in this conclusion by S. 130, T. P. Act, as it now stands, which provides in sub-s. (2) that the transferee of an actionable claim, may upon the execution of a proper instrument of transfer, "sue or institute proceedings" for the same in his own name without obtaining the transferor's consent to such "suit or proceedings."

[11] I may further cite in support of this conclusion Govardhan Das v. Friedmans Diamond Trading Co. Ltd., A I.R. (26) 1939 Mad. 543 : (188 I. C. 878) which unfortunately gives no reason, and Digambar v. Satish Chandra, A.I.R. (26) 1939 Cal. 717 : (185 I. C. 368) which, however, is based on some special facts. I may also refer to Vythilingam Padayachi v. Sitharam Ayyar, 23 Mad. 449 : (10 M.L.J. 77) where the decree in question was the decree of a foreign Court.

[12] In the result, I must hold that the Subordinate Judge has decided correctly on both the grounds and this appeal has no merits. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Public Safety — Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance (4 [IV] 1946), S. 6 (1) — Notification prohibiting any meeting or procession without sanction is ultra vires.

Section 6 enables the Provincial Government to prohibit public meetings and in sub-s. (2) enacts that a public meeting would be deemed to include a meeting which is open to any class or portion of the public whether held in a public or private place and whether admission thereto is restricted by the issue of tickets or otherwise. But the statute does not confer upon the Provincial Government the power to prohibit other meetings, for instance, meetings to which the public or any class of them are not admitted. [Para 5]

Where, therefore, a notification by the Provincial Government prohibits any meeting or procession without the sanction of the District Magistrate or Additional District Magistrate the Provincial Government acts in excess of the authority conferred upon them under S. 6 (1) of the Ordinance and the notification is ultra vires and no offence committed by violating it. 1917 A. C. 260 and (1929)1 K.B. 619, Rel. on.[Para 6]

Lakshmi Narain Sinha — for Petitioners; K. P. Varma — for the Crown.

Ramaswami J.— It is essential at the outset to relate the material facts giving rise to this rule.

[2] On 14-11-1946, Provincial Government issued a notification under S. 6 (1), Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance, 1946. By this notification, Government banned all processions, meetings, or assemblies except with the permission of the District Magistrate. The Ordinance was repealed on 15-3-1947, but the notifications issued under it were kept in force by S. 19, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947. The applicants were prosecuted before a Magistrate on the allegation that on 11-12-1948 they had assembled in uniforms to hold R. S. S. parade in the compound of the hospital at Teghra. On 29-12-1948 the learned Magistrate convicted the applicants under S. 6 (4) of the Act and sentenced them to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months each and to pay a fine of Rs. 500 each. On 5-2-1949 the learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction but reduced sentence of imprisonment to the period already undergone and the amount of fine to Rs. 300 each.

[3] The first argument in support of the rule is that the notification issued by the Provincial Government is beyond the scope of the powers conferred under S. 6, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance. Learned Advocate referred to the unreported decision, Ramkhelawan Singh v. The King (Cr. App. No. 270 of 1948 decided on 8-12-1948) in support of his argument.

[4] Section 6 of the Ordinance provides :

"6. (1) The Provincial Government may, for the purpose of securing the public safety or the maintenance of public order, by general or special order, prohibit, restrict or impose conditions upon, the holding or of taking part in public processions, meetings or assemblies.

(2) For the purposes of sub-s. (1) any procession, meeting or assembly, which is open to the public or any class or portion of the public, whether held in a public or a private place and whether admission thereto is restricted by the issue of tickets or otherwise, shall be deemed to be a public procession, meeting or assembly as the case may be.

(3) Any police officer may take such steps, and use such force, as may be reasonably necessary for securing compliance with any order made under this section.

(4) If any person contravenes any order made under this section he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or with fine or with both."

[5] The section enables the Provincial Government to prohibit public meetings and in sub-s. (2) enacts that a public meeting would be deemed to include a meeting which is open to any class or portion of the public whether held in a public or private place and whether admission thereto is restricted by the issue of tickets or otherwise. But the statute does not confer upon the Provincial Government the power to prohibit other meetings, for instance, meetings to which the public or any class of them are not admitted. The Government notification dated 14-11-1946, reads as follows :

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of S. 6, Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance, 1946 (Bihar Ordinance IV [4] of 1946), the Governor of Bihar, in view of the communal situation in the province, is pleased to direct that no meeting or procession shall be held without the sanction of the District Magistrate or Additional District Magistrate, as the case may be."

[6] Since this notification prohibits any meeting or procession without the sanction of the District Magistrate or Additional District Magistrate, it is manifest the Provincial Government have acted in excess of the authority conferred upon them under S. 6 (1) of the Ordinance. In my opinion, the notification is ultra vires and the petitioners committed no offence by violating it.

[7] It is axiomatic that an executive order made subordinately by the Government by virtue of the authority of a statute is subject to the judicial test whether the order falls within the periphery of the power thus conferred. If it does not, it is utterly void and of no effect. The high constitutional importance of this function is well expressed by Lord Shaw in Rex v. Halliday, (1917) A. C. 260 at p. 287 : (86 L. J. K. B. 1119) :

"The author of the power is parliament ; the weilder of it is the Government. Whether the Government has exceeded its statutory mandate is a question of ultra or intra vires such as that which is now being tried. In so far as the mandate has been exceeded, there lurk the elements of a transition to arbitrary Government and therein of grave constitutional and public danger. The increasing crush of legislative efforts and the convenience to the Executive of a refuge to the device of Orders in Council would increase that danger tenfold were the judiciary to approach any such action of the Government in a spirit of compliance rather than of independent scrutiny."

[8] In King v. Minister of Health; Ex parte Davis, (1929) 1 K. B. 619 : (98 L. J. K. B. 636), an improvement scheme purporting to be made under the provisions of the Housing Act, 1925, after providing for the acquisition and clearing of an unhealthy area, proceeded to empower the local authority to sell, or otherwise dispose of as they thought fit, the cleared area or to appropriate it for any purpose approved by the Minister of Health. The scheme further provided that if the Minister so required the local authority should provide a number of dwellings, not exceeding 72, suitable for accommodation of persons of the working classes, on a site either within or without the area. The scheme had been presented to the Minister with a petition for its confirmation. The Court of appeal held that a rule nisi for a writ of prohibition prohibiting the Minister from proceeding further in the matter of the scheme must be made absolute on the ground that the Act did not authorise an improvement scheme containing an unrestricted power to sell or lease the cleared area, so that the Minister had no jurisdiction to consider the scheme. At p. 625, Lord Hewart states :

"There is indeed a precise and limited power conferred on the local authority to sell or let all or any part of the area comprised in the scheme. But it is a power guarded by special conditions and limitations. The selling or the letting is to be for the purpose of enabling the purchasers or the lessees to carry the scheme into execution and not otherwise. In other words in the Act there is a limited power to sell or to let while the purpose of the scheme before us is to confer on the local authority a power to sell, or to let freed from those or any limitations."

[9] The conviction in the present case must also be quashed upon the ground that the extension of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, has been declared invalid by a judgment of the Federal Court.

[10] Section 1 (3) of the Act enacted that it shall remain in force for a period of one year from the date of its commencement. The proviso contained a power to extend the operation of the Act for a further period of one year by the resolution of the two Houses of Legislature of the Province, and further gave the Provincial Government the power of modification, if any, of the Act. The Federal Court decided by their judgment dated 28-5-1949, (reported in Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, A.I.R. (36) 1949

F.C. 175: 50 Cr.L.J. 897) that the proviso was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and the extension of the Act beyond one year was invalid. The Federal Court also held that Bihar Act V [5] of 1949 was infructuous as the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act of 1947, which it sought to amend, had come to an end when the first year expired. On 3-6-1949 the Governor of Bihar promulgated ordinance II [2] of 1949. On 21-6-1949, this ordinance was declared ultra vires and invalid by a judgment of this Court. On the next date, that is, on 22-6 1949, the Governor of Bihar promulgated ordinance IV [4] of 1949 which re-enacted, in substance, the provisions of ordinance II [2] of 1949, which it purported to repeal. Mr. K. P. Varma referred to Ss. 23 and 24 of this Ordinance. Section 23 states :

"The Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, as extended for one year by a notification issued by the Provincial Government on a resolution passed by the Bihar Legislative Assembly and agreed to by the Bihar Legislative Council and as amended by the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (Amendment) Act 1948 and the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order (Amendment) Act, 1949, hereinafter referred to as the said Act), and the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Ordinance, 1949 (hereinafter referred to as the said Ordinance) are hereby repealed."

Section 24 is to the following effect :

"All proceedings commenced, officers appointed or authorised, rules and orders made, sentences passed or acts ordered or done whether in exercise of any jurisdiction or power conferred or purporting to have been conferred by or under the provisions of the said Ordinance shall be continued and be deemed to have been respectively commenced, appointed or authorised, made, passed, ordered or done under this Ordinance and any enactment or document referring to any of the said provisions shall be construed to refer to this Ordinance or to the corresponding provision thereof."

[11] But it is manifest that S. 24 does not save orders made or sentences passed under the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, or the Amendment Acts XXIX [29] of 1948 and V [5] of 1949. Section 24 only refers to orders made or sentences passed under the provisions of ordinance II [2] of 1949.

[12] It must, therefore, be held upon the authority of the decision of the Federal Court that the conviction in the present case is illegal.

[13] Upon these grounds I should make the rule absolute and set aside the sentences imposed on the applicants.

[14] Manohar Lall J.—I agree. The extension of the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, has been declared ultra vires by their Lordships of the Federal Court. To get over this difficulty, Mr. K. P. Varma relied upon Ss. 23 and 24 of ordinance IV [4] of 1949 which was promulgated on 21-6-1949, and which re-enacted, in substance, the provisions of ordinance II [2] of 1949 which it purported to repeal. Section 23 is irrelevant for consideration in the present case. Section 24 does not refer to orders made or sentences passed under the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1947, or the Amending Acts XXIX [29] of 1948, and V [5] of 1949. It only refers to orders made or sentences passed under the provisions of Ordinance II [2] of 1949—the present sentences were not passed under the provisions of these ordinances. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the conviction in the present case must be set aside.

A. F. O. D. No. 72 of 1944, D/- 10-5-1949.

(a) Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI [11] of 1825), S. 4 — Acquisition of land from river—Conditions to be satisfied — Claim founded on reformation on original site—Conditions to be fulfilled—Principle applicable to question between two riparian owners.

An acquisition of land from the sea or a river must satisfy two conditions before it can be claimed by an adjoining proprietor under the law of accession; (a) the acquisition must be by gradual, slow and imperceptible means. (b) The acquisition must be made from that which is part of the 'public territory,' the 'public domain' or the 'public waste,' as it is sometimes called, and not out of that which is the property of a private individual. A claim founded on the doctrine of 'reformation on original site' must also satisfy two conditions : (a) The site over which the land reforms must be clearly ascertained to be the property of a private owner. It must be shown that such owner has a subsisting title to the site at the time when he makes the claim. The rule which awards alluvial accretion to the owner of the adjoining land is subject to one very important qualification, namely, that the site over which the accretion forms is not proved to belong to another private individual because in determining the right of competing claimants to such accretion the law prefers the owner of the submerged but identifiable site to the owner of the bank. So long as the bed of a navigable river remains covered with water and is not vested in any private individual, it is regarded as 'public domain' or 'public territory' by means of alluvion. It is only where a portion of such 'public domain' adjoining the bank is vested in any private individual, that the title of the riparian proprietor of accretion yields to the title of the owner of the submerged site by what is called 'reformation.' The principle applies even where the question arises, between two riparian owners, who own property on either side of the river and where the land is washed away from one side of the river and reformed on the other side on the old ascertained site : 13 M. I. A. 467 (P.C.), Foll.; Case law referred. [Paras 17, 19, 20]

(b) Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI [11] of 1825), S. 2—Custom—Proof—Proof by user — Allegation as to custom that mid-stream line of certain river is boundary line between two named villages.

The user whereby it is sought to prove a custom must not be too wide. Where the custom alleged is that mid-stream line of a certain river is the constant boundary line between two named villages and what has been attempted to prove is that the mid-stream of the river wherever it runs forms the boundary of the riparian estates, and is consequently, the boundary between the two villages and there is no evidence to the effect that although the mid-stream of the river may not be the boundary of the riparian estates in other localities, it is so by custom in the locality in question, which in substance, is the custom pleaded the custom cannot be taken to be proved : (1876) 24 W. R. 603; (1908) 2 Ch. 586 and A.I.R. (14) 1927 P. C. 89, Rel. on. [Para 32]

(c) Compromise—Evidentiary value — Decision of Court—Subsequent compromise between parties.

Where after the decision of Court in a litigation there is a compromise between the parties, the compromise deprives the decision of much of its evidentiary value : A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 59, Foll. [Para 34]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 — Diluviated lands reforming on old site—Indefeasible title acquired by third person—Lands if remain property of original owner.

The doctrine that diluviated lands, reforming on their old site, remain the property of their original owner does not apply to lands in which after their reformation an indefeasible title has been acquired by long adverse possession or otherwise: 3 Cal. 796, Foll. [Para 40]

Judgment. — This appeal by the plaintiffs arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of 111 bighas and odd of land described in schedules I and II of the plaint.

[2] The question, which it raises for determination, is, whether these lands in suit, which, on the finding of the Court below, are reformations on the old site, which is clearly identifiable as being part of village Salha on the south-western bank of river Bakeya belonging to the plaintiffs, now, by reason of the flowvial action of the river, on its north-eastern bank, attached to village Hasanpur Khurd, belonging to the defendants, still belongs to the plaintiffs.

[3] The facts, which are no longer in dispute, are these; river Bagmati or Bakeya, as it is known in the locality, flows between villages Salha Tauzi Nos. 618 and 16072 belonging to the plaintiffs, and Hasanpur Khurd Tauzi No. 2704 belonging to the defendants. The mid-stream line of the river was the boundary line between the two villages, Salha and Hasanpur Khurd, at the time of the revenue survey in 1846, and, it appears that the whole of schedule II lands and a part of schedule I lands were, then, on the north-eastern bank of the river and within the boundary of Hasanpur Khurd. River Bakeya seems to have shifted its course slowly and gradually towards north-east, and at the time of the cadastral survey in 1900, the entire schedule I land, consisting of 76 bighas and odd, was on the south-western bank of the river appertaining to village Salha, and was surveyed as part of that village. The whole of Schedule II land, consisting of 35 bighas and odd, was, at that time, on the north-eastern bank of the river appertaining to village Hasanpur Khurd and was surveyed as part of that village. The mid-stream line of the river Bakeya was shown in the map prepared by the cadastral survey as being the boundary between the two villages. It appears, further, that the river Bakeya kept on shifting its course slowly and gradually towards north, in consequence of which, the last mentioned in Schedule II diluviated from the Hasanpur side and alluviated on the Salha side, and was taken possession of by the plaintiffs as having accreted to their estate without any objection whatsoever on the part of the maliks of Hasanpur Khurd. There was a partition between the maliks of Salha in the year 1914-15 and the lands mentioned both in schedules I and II were partitioned amongst them as appertaining to their village Salha.

[4] There is no dispute between the parties regarding the position which the river occupied up to the year 1915. The difference arises in regard to the time when, and the manner in which the river shifted its course thereafter. According to the plaintiffs, there was slow and gradual shifting of the course of this river towards west and south which led to 10 bighas of land out of the disputed lands being cut away and accreted to the land of Hasanpur Khurd on the north-east. Three or four years after, the plaintiffs allege, the river shifted again to the north and the east, and thus the 10 bighas of land came back to the Salha side, and the river Bakeya began to flow close to the north-east of the disputed land mentioned in schedule II of the plaint. The position thus occupied by the river in 1923, which, according to the case of the plaintiffs, remained fixed and unchanged until 1934, when as a result of the great earthquake and severe flood following in the wake of it, the levels in the locality having become disturbed, there was a sudden change in the course of the river shifting it to the west and south of Hasanpur Khurd throwing the lands in dispute on the north-eastern bank of the river and attaching them to Hasanpur Khurd. According to the case of the defendants, on the other hand, there was no change in the course of the river after the earthquake of 1934. According to them, after the partition of village Salha in 1914-15, the river began to shift slowly and gradually towards the west and south. The lands on the Salha side began slowly and gradually to diluviate and similarly to alluviate on the side of Hasanpur Khurd. This process went on from 1915 to 1923 when the entire area mentioned in schedules I and II slowly and gradually came over to the side of Hasanpur Khurd, and was taken possession of by them as accretion to, and part of, and within the boundary of, their village Hasanpur Khurd Tauzi No. 2704, the mid-stream line of the river being by custom the boundary between the two villages Salha and Hasanpur Khurd. According to them, there has been no appreciable change in the course of the river since 1923 up till now, and the present course of the river which runs just to the west and south of the entire disputed land has been the course of the river since 1923.

[5] The plaintiffs base their claim to the land in dispute, on its having been cut off from their village by sudden change in the course of the river, and having reformed on the original site and being identifiable as part of the land appertaining to the village Salha, which was in their possession and which belonged to them before the river suddenly changed its course. They deny that there was slow and gradual shifting of the course of river from 1915 to 1923 from north-eastern side to the west-southern side of the disputed land as alleged by the defendants.

[6] The defendants, on the other hand, assert their right to retain possession of these lands on account of their having accreted on the lands of their village Hasanpur Khurd Tauzi No. 2704, slowly and gradually as also on account of a custom which, they plead, is prevalent in the locality, namely, the deep stream of the river being always the boundary between the two villages on either side of the river irrespective of the position that the course of the river may occupy at a particular time.

[7] The main questions of fact, therefore, which fell to be decided by the Court below were : (1) Whether the river Bakeya which ran just to the north and the east of the disputed lands, shifted all of a sudden its course in 1934 on account of the earthquake, to the south and the west of the disputed lands, or whether the position which the course of the river at present occupies, is the result of slow and gradual shifting of its course from the north and the east to the south and west of the disputed lands during the period, 1915 to 1923 ; (2) Whether the lands in dispute now on the north-eastern side of the river are reformations on the original site, which is identifiable as having been previously on its south-western side appertaining to village Salha ; and (3) whether the custom of the mid-stream being the constant boundary between the two villages Salha and Hasanpur Khurd, as alleged by the defendants, in para. 10 of the written statement, has been made out.

[8] The learned Subordinate Judge held that since 1923 there has been no appreciable change in the course of the river Bakeya, and that the case of the defendants that the lands in dispute came over to the Hasanpur side by slow and gradual shifting of the course of the river was true. He did not accept the case of the plaintiffs, namely, that there was a sudden change in the course of the river by reason of the earthquake in 1934. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, held that the disputed land had re-appeared on its old site which is identifiable as being that which in 1915 formed part of Salha belonging to the plaintiffs. He further held that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants that the general custom of the deep stream as being the constant boundary between the two riparian estates wherever river Bakeya flowed was not made out, but, that such a custom was proved to have been prevalent in the locality of the disputed lands. He also held that the disputed lands as they went on accreting to the lands of Hasanpur Khurd between the years 1915 to 1923, were taken possession of by the defendants and had since been in their possession. He, accordingly, held that the defendants were entitled to retain possession of these lands as part of their village, not only by reason of these lands having accreted slowly and gradually to their lands but also, for the reason, that by custom the middle line of the river was to be permanent boundary between these two villages. He held also that for the reason that the defendants had been in possession of these lands for more than 12 years, the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Hence, this appeal.

[9] Mr. P. R. Das, appearing for the appellants, apart from attacking the finding of the Court below against the appellants on the question of the lands in dispute having been cut away from village Salha on account of the sudden change in the course of the river in 1934, as being erroneous, contends that the Court below, having found that the lands in dispute are identifiable as having reformed on its old site belonging to the plaintiffs, he should have held that the defendants had no title to retain these lands as accretions to their lands by slow and gradual process. He attacks the finding of the Court below in favour of the defendants on the question of custom pleaded by them as being inconsistent and self-contradictory. He contends further that custom to which S. 2 of Regulation XI [11] of 1825 refers applies only to cases of alluvion and diluvion, and not to reformation in situ by sudden change in the course of a river. If, as found, the land claimed by the plaintiffs is reformation on the site which belonged to them, and if it be found that it is so by avulsion, he contends, the case is taken out of the purview of Regulation XI [11] of 1825, and the plaintiffs cannot be deprived of their lands either by reason of any custom or law of accretion, as incorporated in the Regulation. A custom, which in the case of a sudden change in the course of a river, will deprive a man of what is proved to belong to him will be unreasonable, and, as such, not provable under law. He relies on a decision of this Court in the case of Bajrangi Raut v. Janak Prasad, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 637 : (166 I. C. 198). He further contends that no such custom has been pleaded, much less proved in the case. In regard to the finding of the Court below against the plaintiffs, on the question of limitation, Mr. Das submits that it will be futile to assail that finding, if the finding of the Court below that lands alluviated on the side of Hasanpur Khurd in the manner alleged by the defendants, that is to say, by slow and gradual process between the years 1915 to 1922 is maintained. There is no evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs that as lands went on alluviating on the side of Hasanpur Khurd slowly and gradually between these years, they went on taking possession of these lands. Their evidence is that as the disputed land came out suddenly on Hasanpur side in the year 1924, they took possession of it. If, the case of the plaintiffs that the formation of the land on the side of Hasanpur Khurd was due to a sudden change in the course of the river in 1934 is accepted, no question of limitation arises, as the suit is well within twelve years from that date, and whether the evidence adduced on their behalf that they took possession of the land as it came out suddenly in the year 1934 is believed or not is immaterial.

[10] Dr. Mitter, appearing for the respondents in reply, in support of the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge has taken us through the judgment under appeal and has nothing to add to the reasonings on which the judgment rests.

[11] For properly dealing with the contentions raised in this appeal, it will perhaps be convenient and useful to state, in as short a compass as possible, the law of alluvion and diluvion as declared and enacted by Regulation XI [11] of 1825, and as interpreted judicially by long chain of decisions beginning from the leading case of Lopez v. Muddun Mohan, 13 M. I. A. 467 : (5 Beng. L. R. 521 P. C.), such as Hursahai Singh v. Lootf Ali Khan, 2 I. A. 28: (14 Beng. L. R. 268 P. C.) and Sardar Jagjot Singh v. Brijnath Kunwar, 27 I. A. 81 : (27 Cal. 768 P. C.) running down to the case of Maharaja Bahadur of Dumraon v. Secy. of State, 54 I. A. 156 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 89) cited at the bar.

[12] For land on the bank of a river belonging to one proprietor to be cut off from one side and carried to the other and get attached to land belonging to another proprietor is of common occurrence. The process by which this transference of land from one side of the river to the other takes place may be : (1) that the bed of a river keeps on shifting slowly and gradually from one side to another, and it is only in course of years that any perceivable change takes place in the position of the bed of the river, and it is discovered that there has been diluvation of land on one side and alluviation of land on the other, and that the bed of the river has come to occupy a position different than what it originally did, (a) it being impossible, in some cases, to ascertain as to what the original site of the land so gained was : whether it has been gained from out of the bed of the river or out of the land on the high bank on the other side which is the property of a private individual ; (b) it being possible, in some cases, to determine with the help of maps and ancient documents the site on which land has reformed as being the site, which it originally occupied and which was the property of another although by long submergence of the land all external marks and means of identification have been obliterated ; (2) that there is a sudden change in the course of a river and the channel shifts in such a way that a portion of riparian estate is cut off without destroying the land-marks and the estate so cut off reforms on a clearly identifiable site of the diluviated property.

[13] The process last described is known as 'avulsio' or avulsion, meaning that which is being detached from the land of one person by open violence of a river becomes afterwards united with the land of another, as distinct from that, which is slowly and gradually added to land by what is called (alluvio) or alluvion first mentioned.

[14] Clause 1, S. 4 of Regulation XI [11] of 1825 indicates that

"when land may be gained by gradual accession, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed, whether such land or estate be held immediately from Government by a zemindar or other superior landholder, or as a subordinate tenure, by any description of under-tenant whatever."

[15] This rule is subject to an all important overriding proviso introduced by Courts of justice guided by the "principle of equity and justice" described by cl. 5 of section 4 of the Regulation.

[16] That proviso may be shortly stated thus :

"Where land is formed on a diluviated but ascertainable site, or where an ascertainable site is discovered by the recession or subsidence of waters, such land or discovered site belongs to him who has a subsisting title thereto."

[17] This is called the doctrine of 'reformation on original site', and it rests upon the principle that in contemplation of law, land covered by water is the same as land covered by crops. Law knows no difference between land covered by water and land covered by crops, provided the ownership of the land can be ascertained. The leading case on the subject is that of Lopez v. Muddun Mohan, 13 M. I. A. 467 : (5 Beng. L. R. 521 P. C.), already mentioned. The principle enunciated therein may shortly be formulated thus : (1) An acquisition of land from the sea or a river must satisfy two conditions, before it can be claimed by an adjoining proprietor under the law of accession ; (a) The acquisition must be by gradual, slow and imperceptible means. (b) The acquisition must be made from that which is part of the 'public territory', the 'public domain' or the 'public waste', as it is sometimes called, and not out of that which is the property of a private individual. (2) A claim founded on the doctrine of 'reformation on original site' must also satisfy two conditions : (a) The site over which the land reforms must be clearly ascertained to be the property of a private owner. (b) It must be shown that such owner has a subsisting title to the site at the time when he makes the claim.

[18] James L. J., who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee, assimilates the doctrine of reformation on original site to the law of accretion by alluvion, and describes the latter as 'an accretion and annexation longitudinally' to the riparian frontage, and the former as 'an accretion and annexation vertically' to the site.

[19] The rule which awards alluvial accretion to the owner of the adjoining land is subject to one very important qualification, namely, that the site over which the accretion forms is not proved to belong to another private individual because in determining the right of competing claimants to such accretion the law prefers the owner of the submerged but identifiable site to the owner of the bank. So long as the bed of a navigable river remains covered with water and is not vested in any private individual, it is regarded as 'public domain' or 'public territory' by means of alluvion. It is only where a portion of such 'public domain' adjoining the bank as here is vested in any private individual that the title of the riparian proprietor of accretion yields to the title of the owner of the submerged site by what is called 'reformation'.

[20] In the case of Maharaja of Dumraon v. Secretary of State, 54 I.A. 156 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 89) their Lordships of the Privy Council reviewed all the relevant decisions in the cases of Nogendra Chunder Ghosh v. Md. Esof, 10 Beng. L. R. 406 : (18 W. R. 113 P. C.), Hursahai Singh v. Lootf Ali Khan, 2 I. A. 28 : (14 Beng. L. R. 268 P. C.), Sarat Sundari v. Surya Kant, 25 W. R. 242, Radha Proshad v. Ram Coomar, 3 Cal. 796 : (1 C. L. R. 259), Jaggot Singh v. Rani Brijnath Kunwar, 27 I. A. 81 : (27 Cal. 768 P. C.) and while re-affirming the principles enunciated in Lopez v. Muddun Mohan, 13 M. I. A. 467 : (5 Beng. L. R. 521 P. C.), held, that the principle applied even where the question arose, as here, between two riparian owners, who owned property on either side of the river and where the land was washed away from one side of the river and reformed on the other side on the old ascertained site.

[21] The rules relating to alluvion and diluvion as well as the doctrine of reformation on old site just stated, are subject again, to one sweeping exception enacted by S. 2 of the Regulation, which lays down :

"Whenever any clear and definite usage of shikast and paiwast respecting the disjunction and junction of land by the encroachment or recess of a river may have been immemorially established for determining the rights of the proprietors of two or more contiguous estates divided by a river (such as that the main channel of the river dividing the estates shall be the constant boundary between them, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river by encroachment on one side and accession on the other), the usage so established shall govern the decision of all claims and disputes relative to alluvial land between the parties whose estates may be liable to such usage."

[22] The question may arise whether the custom mentioned in the section, just quoted, will apply irrespective of whatever the nature of the change in the course of a river may be, whether it be sudden, or whether it be gradual, whether the channel shifts in such a way as to cut off a portion of the riparian estate, the cultivated fields, trees and houses and all other landmarks remaining intact, or whether it encroaches upon a riparian estate so completely that portions of it reform on the opposite bank on the clearly identifiable side of the diluviated property.

[23] A decision of this Court in the case of Bajrangi Raut v. Janak Prasad, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 697 : (166 I. C. 198) cited on behalf of the appellants, holds that such a custom which will deprive a man of what is proved to belong to him in the case of sudden change in the course of a river will be unreasonable and is not provable under law. Dr. Mitter for the respondents has drawn our attention to a decision of the Allahabad High Court to the contrary in the case of Radhey Shyam v. Ram Dhan Lal, A. I. R. (30) 1943 ALL. 68 : (205 I. C. 505) which holds :

"Where the custom of the dhura is proved to exist between the proprietors of two villages whereby the main channel of the river dividing the villages was to be the constant boundary between them when the change in the course of the river was gradual and also when it was sudden, then even if the river left the villages altogether and went to the extreme limit of any of the villages, that fact can make no difference to the observance of the custom. Such a custom is not unreasonable and can be enforced."

[24] The question, however, does not fall to be determined in the present case for, as it will be seen presently, the custom pleaded by the defendants is limited to a transference of land from one side of the river to the other, by slow and gradual recession of the bed of the river, and it is not alleged that it applies also to such transference of land by sudden change in the course of the river, that is, by avulsion.

[25] In view of the principles applicable as between different riparian owners being that, unless well established and invariable custom to the contrary is proved, the title to the land, which re-appears in situ, is always in the original owner, and, in view of the finding of the Court below, which has not been challenged in this Court, that the lands in dispute have reformed on their original ascertained site, which, if held to belong to the plaintiffs, the defendants can resist the claim of the plaintiffs in the suit only if they succeed in establishing, as pleaded by them in their defence (1) that the lands in dispute alluviated and got annexed to their land by slow and gradual process between the years 1915 and 1922, and (2) that by an established immemorial and invariable usage and custom, the mid-stream line of the river is the constant boundary between villages Salha and Hasanpur Khurd, whatever changes may take place in the course of the river from time to time, excluding an enquiry as to whether the land so alluviating is a reformation on a site ascertainable and identifiable as the original one.

[26] The Court below, as already stated, has come to the finding that the case of the defendants, namely, that of slow and gradual accretion has been made out, and that the custom of the midstream line of river Bakeya as being the constant boundary between the two estates in the locality has also been proved.

[27] What, therefore, falls to be determined in this appeal is whether the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in coming to these findings and they can be set aside.

[28] We take up, first, the question of slow and gradual accretion. (After discussing evidence their Lordships came to the following conclusion.) We are inclined to rely on the evidence of these (plaintiffs') witnesses and come to the conclusion that it has been proved that the appearance of the disputed land on the side of Tauzi 2704, Hasanpur Khurd, on its original identifiable site belonging to the plaintiffs has been occasioned by sudden change in the course of the river in 1934, and is a case of reformation in situ by avulsion and not a case of slow and gradual alluviation. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to the contrary is erroneous and must be set aside.

[29] We would next take up the question of custom. The custom pleaded by the defendants, even if held as proved, and the finding of the Court below is affirmed in that respect, it will not avail the defendants in the present case because they have not pleaded nor attempted to prove that mid-stream line of the river Bakeya was to be the boundary between the two estates even in the case of transference of land from one side to the other by sudden change in the course of the river. The witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants depose to the custom of mid-stream line as the boundary between the two estates in cases of alluvion by slow and gradual process. The finding, therefore, that there was sudden change in the course of the river in 1934 and the transference of the land on the side of Hasanpur Khurd was due to such a change in the course of the river, which we have reached, is sufficient to dispose of this appeal, but as the finding on the question of custom in favour of the defendants has been given by the Court below and has been assailed on behalf of the appellants, it is necessary to consider it.

[30] The ground on which this finding has been attacked, in the first place, is, as already stated, that the Court below has come to conclusions in this regard which are self-contradictory. The custom pleaded by the defendants as contained in para. 10 of the written statement is :

"That in mauza Salha and Hasanpur Khurd and their other neighbouring villages there has been, from time immemorial, a custom and usage to the effect that the river Bakeya, which is also known as Bagmati may shift its course wherever it may, but the middle line of the bed of the said river will be the constant boundary limit between both the villages lying on either side of the river."

The evidence adduced in the case in support of the custom pleaded in the written statement is that the mid-stream is the boundary between the two villages not only in all the places where river Bakeya runs but such a custom is prevalent in all the places where other rivers, such as, Gandak and Lakhandei flow. The Court below came to the definite finding that the evidence of these witnesses could not be accepted in regard to the custom being prevalent in all the places where the river Bakeya runs or in all the places where Gandak and Lakhandei flow. Relying on the same evidence, it is pointed out, the Court came to the contradictory conclusion that it was proved that the mid-stream line of the river Bakeya was the constant boundary between the villages Salha and Hasanpur Khurd, whatever changes there may be from time to time in the course of the river.

[31] Secondly, it is urged that of the documentary evidence, which has been relied upon by the Court below for the finding survey maps of 1847 and cadastral survey maps of 1898 have been misread and misconstrued by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is pointed out that the revenue survey maps and the cadastral survey maps showing mid-stream line of the river as boundary between the two villages Salha and Hasanpur indicate nothing more than that half the bed of the river was measured as part of each of the two villages at the time those maps were prepared, and that it is not permissible to draw therefrom an inference in regard to that line being the constant boundary between the two villages. The revenue survey maps and cadastral survey maps of the villages just below and above the two villages in question unmistakably show that mid-stream line has not always been taken as boundary between the villages on either side of the river. At some places adjacent to the locality in question, the river has been measured as wholly within the boundary of the village on one side. At places the river cuts the villages in two parts and runs through the villages. The contention on behalf of the appellants that these maps do not therefore afford any evidence in regard to the custom pleaded by the defendants must be accepted. It has not been shown that the land gained on one side and treated as part of the village on that side was not addition to that village by reason of alluviation by slow and gradual process, and, therefore, apart from any question of custom, was an accretion within the meaning of Regulation XI [11] of 1825, and the person to whose village it got annexed was entitled to retain it as part of that village. It is common ground that whatever accretions took place either to village Salha or to village Hasanpur up to 1915 were by process of slow and gradual alluvion. That being so, the proprietors of Hasanpur Khurd were entitled to treat the transference of small bits of land by such process as alluvial accretions. It is again clear therefore that mere proof of the fact that plaintiffs omitted to claim such lands from the defendants or the defendants did not claim such lands from the plaintiffs in the past, does not prove that by reason of the custom pleaded by the defendants claims to those lands were not made. It may well be that the parties, whose lands were so cut, could not identify that they were reformations on the original site, and, therefore, the maliks of the villages to whose lands they got attached were considered entitled to retain it. Something more indeed is required to be proved than mere abstention from laying claim to such lands on the part of the parties affected, before such conduct on their part can be considered adequate to prove the custom of the mid-stream line alleged by the defendants. It is justifiably urged that the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of this custom based on what he misconstrued as conduct of the plaintiffs themselves is erroneous.

[32] Thirdly, it is urged that the witnesses for the defendants state that the custom of mid-stream of the river being the constant boundary between the two estates prevailed in regard to the villages Hasanpur Buzurg on the south-west and Hasanpur Khurd on the north-east of the river. The revenue survey maps as well as the cadastral survey maps of these two villages belie this statement. The learned Subordinate Judge did not accept the evidence of these witnesses in this regard. The maliks of the other tauzis of Hasanpur Khurd, such as, D. Ws. 4, 7, 10, 14, 15, 26, 33, 34, 42 and 45 to whose evidence our attention was specifically invited by Dr. Mitter also state not only that the custom of deep stream is prevalent in the locality of Hasanpur Buzurg and Hasanpur Khurd, contiguous to the locality in dispute, but that this custom is prevalent in respect of all the villages on the banks of river Bakeya. These statements were not accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge as they were not supported by the revenue and cadastral survey maps of those villages. One fails to see how the learned Subordinate Judge came to rely upon the evidence of these witnesses for coming to the finding that the custom alleged was at any rate proved to have been prevalent in the disputed locality. We are inclined to concede to the contention urged on behalf of the appellants that the evidence of custom adduced was of a nature too wide to prove the custom alleged and this evidence having been discarded, there was practically no material on which the finding, viz., that so far as the disputed locality was concerned, the custom was made out, could be based. Mr. P. R. Das referred us to Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition) vol. 10, p. 12 and the cases of Hammerton v. Honey, (1876) 24 W. R. 603 and Farquahar v. Newbury Rural Council, (1908) 2 Ch. 586 for the proposition that

"the user whereby it is sought to prove the custom must not be of a nature too wide to support the custom alleged."

In Hammerton v. Honey, (1876-24 W. R. 603) Jessel, M. R. at p. 604 referring to the nature of the user necessary to support a custom said:

"It must not only be consistent with the custom alleged, but, if I may use the expression, not be too wide. For instance, if you allege a custom for certain persons to dance on a green, and you prove in support of that allegation, not only that some people danced, but that everybody else in the world who chose danced and played cricket, you have got beyond your custom."

In Farquahar v. Newbury Rural Council, (1908) 2 Ch. 586 at p. 589, Warrington J. found that the user of a roadway was too wide to support an alleged customary churchway confined to the inhabitants of the parish. In the case of Maharaja of Dumraon v. Secretary of State, 54 I. A. 156 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 89) where the pleading was that by reason of an immemorial custom in the locality in question by which land adhering by gradual alluvion to a riparian village becomes a part of the village to which it accretes, and evidence called for the defendant was directed to show that there was a custom by which accretions to the Sahabad side vested in the Shahabad Zamindar the deep stream of the Ganges being the constant boundary between the districts of Shahabad on the south and Ballia on the north of the river, their Lordships observed :

"The first thing to be noted is that the custom which the Maharaja by his witnesses attempted to prove was not the custom pleaded."

On a proper analysis of the evidence called for the defendants, it will be found that what has been attempted to prove is that the mid-stream of the Bakeya wherever it runs forms the boundary of the riparian estates, and, is consequently, the boundary between Salha and Hasanpur Khurd. There is no evidence to the effect that although the mid-stream of the river may not be the boundary of the riparian estates in other localities, it is so by custom in the locality in question, which in substance, is the custom pleaded. The contention of Mr. Das, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge has found the custom alleged by the defendants as proved on practically no evidence to that effect is well founded. The learned Subordinate Judge has at p. 235 of his judgment drawn a sketch showing the course of the river in question as it runs from north to south and has noted the riparian villages on its either side. At pp. 236 and 237, he has detailed the riparian estates where the survey and cadastral survey maps show the mid-stream as the boundary as also those, where they do not. From a mere look at the sketch it will appear that the places where the mid-stream is not shown as the boundary between the two estates, are those, where the river abandoning its straight course from north to south, makes a sudden loop either to the east or to the west, as for instance, between Pandaul and Kalujar, between Ugra and Tira, between Dath and Mankauli and between Aliabad and Rasulpur. At places, such as, village Jatmalpur the river cuts it into two parts and flows through the village. It appears, therefore, that except where the river runs in an even course from north to south, the mid-stream line is not adhered to as the boundary between the riparian estates specially so, where the river takes a sudden turn making a loop either to the west or to the east like the one it makes to the west in the locality in question.

[33] When the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge was drawn to the fact that the witnesses called for the defendant deposed falsely to the existence of the custom of deep-stream being the constant boundary between Hasanpur Buzurg and Hasanpur Khurd and in other places where the mid-stream line was not shown as the boundary line between riparian estates, he made the following observation:

"This is no doubt true, but merely on this ground the entire evidence of the defendants cannot be rejected as contended by the learned lawyer for the plaintiffs so far as their statements regarding all those places where the mid-stream line forms the boundary line is concerned. They are supported not only by the survey maps but there is practically no evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to show that in places within the Darbhanga district or even outside the Darbhanga district there was any departure from the custom where the mid-stream line of the river is shown in the survey maps as the boundary line."

It will be clear from the observation of the learned Subordinate Judge, just quoted, that his finding that the custom alleged was proved is not really based on the oral evidence called by the defendants but on the survey maps showing the mid-stream of the river in question as the boundary of the riparian estates. In relying upon the survey map for this purpose, the learned Subordinate Judge was, as already pointed out, in error in that he failed to appreciate that what was intended by drawing the mid-stream line in the survey maps was to indicate that the bed of the river in question was the property of the riparian proprietors and not a public domain. At places where the bed of the river formed part of the riparian estates on either side half and half, the mid-stream line was drawn and at places it formed a part wholly of one estate either on one side or the other, such line was not drawn. The learned Subordinate Judge clearly failed to realise that the drawing of such a line in these maps had nothing to do with the custom alleged. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge regarding the existence of the custom in the disputed locality not being based on his appreciation of the evidence of the witnesses examined before him, we feel no hesitation in coming to a conclusion on the question of custom contrary to that arrived by the learned Subordinate Judge who had the opportunity of seeing those witnesses.

[34] The documents, apart from the maps which were relied upon on behalf of the defendants in proof of the custom alleged were EXS. Y series, compromise petitions, in cases which arose between the maliks of the riparian estates close to the locality, in question. Exhibit Y is a compromise petition between the maliks of Sarisherpur lying on the west of Morojairam on the east of the river in question ending a litigation between them regarding the lands having slowly and gradually alluviated on the side of Morojairam. Exhibit Y-1 is a similar compromise ending a similar litigation between the maliks of Rupauli and Mankhauli. Exhibit Y-2 is a compromise petition between the maliks of Sarisherpur and Godhaura ending a similar litigation between the proprietors of these riparian estates. The custom of mid-stream of the river as the constant boundary between the two estates was recognised by those compromises. As to the evidentiary value of these documents, we need only cite the following passage from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Ibrahim Rowther v. Sheikh Ibrahim Rowther, A.I.R. (9) 1922 P. C. 59 at p. 62 : (45 Mad. 308) :

"The documents on which the defendants rely for proving the usage, begin in order of time with a decree of the Madras High Court in O. S. 5 of 1887, Ex. XII in which James J. decided in its favour. There was, however, an appeal from his decree which ended in a compromise, a circumstance which deprives his decision of much of its evidentiary value."

The only document which is a decision in favour of the custom alleged is EX. W-2, judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga in a dispute between the maliks of Gangaura, a village to the north of Salha and Morojairam, situated north of Hasanpur Khurd, regarding lands diluviated from Morojairam and alluviated in Gangaura on account of the gradual recession of the river Bakeya from its original bed. At the time the present suit was heard in the Court below this judgment was pending in appeal before this Court. The appeal was heard by a Bench of this Court and the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge was upheld. The judgment of this Court has been filed before us. It no doubt holds that the custom of the deep stream being the boundary between riparian estates was proved so far as that case was concerned. The decision of custom in that case appears to have been specifically limited to the locality in dispute in that case. Imam J., who delivered the judgment of this Court guarded himself by observing :

"For the purposes of this appeal I am not prepared to go so far as to hold that there is a custom that the mid-stream of the river Bakeya is in all circumstances the boundary line between the villages Morojairam and Gangaura. Having already found that the change in the course of the river Bakeya was slow and gradual I am satisfied on a consideration of the entire evidence that the plaintiffs have at least proved the custom that when the river Bakeya changes its course gradually the lands which alluviate belong to the village to which they accrete."

It will be seen, therefore, that the decision does not go so far as to hold that even if the lands in dispute are reformations on the original site they will by custom belong to the village to which they accrete. The evidence afforded by the judgment also is inadequate to prove the custom on which the defendants rely in the present case. The decision at any rate is not a decision showing an assertion of the custom alleged in respect of the locality in dispute in the present case. It will be seen that this dispute related to the villages on the banks of that part of the stream which was known as Lakhandei, and the river Bakeya had not at the time when the lands in question in that suit alluviated, ceased to run into Lakhandei. The custom alleged and proved in that case was in respect of river Lakhandei and not Bakeya. Bakeya, as already found in the earlier part of the judgment, no longer runs into Lakhandei, and as a result of the diversion of river Bagmati through Nandna Baha in Bulandpur the stream which was known as river Bakeya and used to meet Lakhandei just to the north of Gangaura at Tirmohanighat has completely dried up. The judgment of this Court, therefore, relating to a dispute between Gangaura and Morojairam can be of no assistance in deciding the custom regarding the locality in the present case. Reliance was also placed on EX. D-1 a notice issued by the cess revaluation officer to the defendants as maliks of Hasanpur Khurd TAUZI NO. 2704 for the lands which on the report of the supervisor (EX. C) was supposed to have diluviated from Salha and accreted to that tauzi. The notice no doubt mentioned that "the custom of that locality is that the land which is accreted towards either side of the river belongs to the proprietor who is on that side."

There is nothing to show as to how and on what information the cess revaluation officer came to make this statement. It appears that the cess revaluation officer was more concerned with fastening the liability for the payment of that amount of cess, which the Salha maliks were claiming to be deducted from the amount of cess payable by them in respect of lands which had become submerged. The statement in this notice can hardly be said to possess any evidentiary value for the purpose of proving the custom alleged in the present case.

[35] It appears that in support of his finding that the lands in dispute accreted to Hasanpur Khurd as alleged by the defendants between the years 1920 to 1923, and the defendants went on taking possession as the lands went on accreting in accordance with the custom pleaded by them, the learned Subordinate Judge has also relied upon the fact that the dispute regarding possession of these lands between the defendants and the plaintiffs arose in the year 1940 and not immediately after 1934. He says :

"If the disputed land had remained in Salha side upto 1934 and if by the creation of a phat by the earthquake the course of the river Bakeya there was diverted from the north and eastern side of the disputed land to the west and southern side, the defendants must have tried to take possession of that land immediately thereafter in 1934 on the basis of the custom and the dispute would have arisen at that time. There is absolutely no reason why the defendants would try to take possession of the land in 1940 as alleged by the plaintiffs."

The learned Subordinate Judge in the reasoning adopted by him has committed two obvious errors. The dispute regarding possession of these lands did not commence in 1940 but in the year 1938 when the plaintiffs were finally restrained by a notice under S. 144, Criminal P. C. dated 4-12-1938. Another error which he has committed is that he has failed to realise that the lands in dispute could not possibly have been culturable immediately on their re-appearance and must have remained water logged for a year or so as stated in the Flood Report already mentioned. He should have seen, to the contrary, that the fact that the dispute regarding possession of these lands arose during the cultivating season of 1938 is more consistent with the lands having come out suddenly towards the end of 1934, as alleged by the plaintiffs, than with the case of the defendants that it had alluviated slowly and gradually by the year 1923. To use the reasoning adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge, it has to be observed that there is no explanation for the dispute regarding possession of these lands to have arisen as late as 1938, if, as alleged by the defendants, these lands had alluviated in 1923, and the defendants had taken their possession peacefully in accordance with the custom alleged by them, without any obstruction on the part of the plaintiffs. The immediate cause for the dispute in regard to these lands between the plaintiffs and the defendants assigned on behalf of the defendants as being the dispute between the maliks of Gangaura and one Abdul Rahman of village Moro whose house and the masjid of the Musalmans had been cut away, and the site on which they stood had re-appeared on the side of Gangaura, is too thin to be accepted.

[36] In view of these considerations, we have no hesitation in setting aside the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendants have been able to prove that, apart from the law of accretion which awards to the proprietors of the villages to which lands accrete by slow and gradual alluviation, contained in Regulation XI [11] of 1825, such accretions, although reformations on their original site and identifiable as such, can be claimed by the proprietors of riparian estates by reason of the custom of the deep stream being the constant boundary, as contemplated by S. 2 of the Regulation. We hold that the defendants have failed to prove the custom alleged.

[37] It should be stated again that regard being had to the finding which has been reached in the present case that the lands in dispute were transferred to the side of Hasanpur Khurd by a sudden change in the course of the river in the year 1934, the custom as alleged, even if proved, would not have entitled the defendants to resist the claim of the plaintiffs to such portion of the lands in dispute admitted or proved to be reformations on the side which belonged to them and to which their title is still subsisting.

[38] The question for consideration, which now arises, is as to whether on the findings arrived at, the plaintiffs can be held to have proved a subsisting title to the whole of the lands in dispute covered by Schs. I and II of the plaint.

[39] It is common ground that only a portion of Sch. I land is reformation on the site, which was part of Salha, as it existed at the time of the revenue survey in 1846. A part of land of that schedule is on the site of Hansanpur Khurd Tauzi No. 2704, as it existed in 1846. By slow and gradual diluviation the land on this site accreted to lands of Salha between the years 1846 and 1898 and was measured as part of Salha at the time of cadastral survey and remained in possession of the plaintiffs till it started diluviating in 1915, according to the defendants, or was suddenly cut away in 1934 and got attached to Hasanpur Khurd, according to the plaintiffs. It is clear, however, that even the site which originally belonged to Hasanpur Khurd and the land on which site accreted to the lands of Salha before 1898, remained in possession of the plaintiffs for a sufficiently long time to have given them indefeasible title to it by adverse possession, before it diluviated. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the whole of Sch. I land on the finding that it has reformed on the site of Salha as it existed at the time of the cadastral survey in the year 1898.

[40] Different considerations, however, are applicable to the lands covered by Sch. II which are reformations on the site which was originally the part of Hasanpur Khurd Tauzi No. 2704 before the lands on this site slowly and gradually diluviated between the years 1898 and 1915. Although the plaintiffs do not accept that the Sch. II lands wholly diluviated, and slowly and gradually accreted to Hasanpur Khurd between the years 1920 to 1923, but they do admit, as the fact is, that the lands adjacent to the river in question on the side of Salha used to be submerged every year and were not fit for cultivation. The cess re-valuation papers establish beyond doubt that the lands close to the river were submerged, and the plaintiffs claimed reduction of cess in respect of 77 bighas of land on that account. Thirtyfive bighas covered by Sch. II alluviated to Salha long after alluviation of Sch. I lands. The land of Sch. II was last to alluviate and is admittedly close to the river. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs have not shown and cannot show that they have been in actual cultivating possession of Sch. II lands continuously for 12 years to have given them indefeasible title to the site covered by this land which admittedly was originally part of Hasanpur Khurd and belonged to the defendants before it was cut away in 1934. The Sch. II lands having reformed on their original site of Hasanpur Khurd to which the plaintiffs had not acquired title by adverse possession before they diluviated, and to which the title of the defendants is still subsisting, the defendants must be held entitled to retain them. It will be seen that on the doctrine in Lopez v. Muddun Mohan, 13 M. I. A. 467 : (5 Beng. L. R. 521 P. C.) as affirmed in the case of Maharaja of Dumraon v. Secy. of State, 54 I A. 156 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 89) while the defendants are entitled to retain the land covered by Sch. II as reformed on the old site which is their property, they are not entitled to retain possession of that part of Sch. I land which is also reformation on the old site of their village, because in those lands an indefeasible title has been acquired by the plaintiffs by long adverse possession. In the case of Radha Prasad Singh v. Ram Kumar Singh, 3 Cal. 796 : (1 C. L. R. 259), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the doctrine in Lopez v. Muddun Mohan, (13 M. I. A. 467 : 5 Beng. L. R. 521 P. C.) that diluviated lands, reforming on their old site remain the property of their original owner, does not apply to lands in which after their reformation an indefeasible title has been acquired by long adverse possession, or otherwise.

[41] It may be stated that Mr. P. R. Das conceded that the appellants were not on strong ground in respect of their claim to Sch. II lands.

[42] It is clear that, as submitted by Mr. Das on the finding that the land in dispute was transferred to Hasanpur in 1934, no question of limitation arises. The suit is clearly within time.

[43] In the result, the appeal is allowed in part, the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge is varied, the plaintiff's title to lands covered by Sch. I of the plaint is declared, and it is ordered that they do recover possession of the same and the defendants be evicted therefrom. The plaintiffs' suit in respect of lands covered by Sch. II is dismissed, and the decree passed by the Court below to that extent is affirmed. The appellants are entitled to costs in this Court and the Court below proportionate to their success in the appeal.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 79 of 1949, D/- 17-8-1949.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 4 (3) (i) — Fees received by Bar Council for enrolment of advocates and registration of apprentices—Income if exempt under S. 4 (3) (i).

Fees realised by the Bar Council for putting an advocate's name on the list of advocates and the registration of apprentices for their training under an advocate approved by the Bar Council are not exempt from income-tax as the income therefrom is not income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation: A.I.R. Anno. Income-tax Act, S. 4 N. 15.

A. C. Sinha — for Petitioner; S. N. Dutt — for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act. The question referred to this Court is "whether the income received by the Bar Council, Patna High Court by way of fees paid by the advocates for enrolling themselves to practise in the High Court and/or registration fee from apprentices of law is exempt under S. 4 (3) (i), Income-tax Act."

[2] The Bar Council maintains a list of advocates, and it is condition precedent to the right to practise in this Court that an advocate should be on the list maintained by the Bar Council. In order to have his name on this list an advocate is charged a fee prescribed by the Bar Council. A further condition to practise in this Court is that an advocate shall have served a certain term of apprenticeship with an advocate whose name appears on a list of advocates maintained by the Bar Council and approved by the High Court. These appear to be the only functions of the Bar Council with which we are concerned. The question referred to us is whether the fees realized by the Council for putting an advocate's name on the list of advocates and the registration fee for apprentices for their training under an advocate approved by the Bar Council are exempt from income-tax. The question specifically refers to S. 4 (3) (i). Section 4 (3) provides that:

"Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them."

Clause (i) is:

"Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied, or finally set apart for application, thereto."

[4] It is quite obvious that fees received by the Bar Council for enrolling advocates or for registering apprentices is not income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation. The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Bar Council, Madras, (1943) 11 I. T. R. 1 : (A.I.R. (30) 1943 Mad. 137). The answer to the question referred to us, therefore, must be in the negative. The Income-tax Department is entitled to the costs of the reference which we assess at Rs. 250.

A. F. A. D. No. 175 of 1947, D/- 30-8-1949.

Debt laws—Bihar Money-lenders Act (III [3] of 1938), S. 8, second proviso — Payment made by debtor being sufficient to cover interest payable on date of payment at bond rate and also portion of principal—It would go to reduce principal—Proviso does not violate general law in this respect.

The obvious meaning of second proviso to S. 8 is that, in spite of cls. (a) and (b) which empower the Court to reduce the interest in the case of a secured loan advanced before the commencement of the Act to 9 per cent. per annum, if any payment has been made by the debtor in excess of 9 per cent. per annum, it cannot be appropriated towards the principal, but it can by no means be interpreted to mean that, even if the amount paid is so high as to cover not only the interest payable on the date of the payment at the bond rate, but also a portion of principal, it would not go to reduce the principal. When the Legislature used the expression "to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan", it meant that, if the amount paid exceeds the amount of interest payable on the date of the payment, if calculated at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, and is less than the amount of interest payable on the date of payment, if calculated at the bond rate, it would not go to reduce the amount of the principal. The proviso does not violate the general law that, when there is a payment covering the entire amount of interest due at the bond rate and also towards the principal, the excess payment will go to reduce the principal. According to the general law and also according to the common sense, a payment made on a certain date has to be appropriated towards interest and principal payable on that date and, if the payment exceeds the amount of interest due, it will go to reduce the principal : A. C. P. Sinha and Shivashwar Pd. Sinha — for Appellants; R. K. Choudhari and Lala Atul Chandra —for Respondents.

Narayan J. — This is a defendants' second appeal arising out of a suit based on a simple mortgage bond. The bond had been executed on 18-9-1925, by defendants 1 and 2 and by their deceased father Dhana Mahton in favour of the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 2250, which was to bear interest at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per month with yearly rests. It was stipulated that the entire principal amount with interest would be paid by the mortgagors on the 30th of Baisakh 1333, but only a sum of Rs. 400 was paid in Baisakh 1333 and subsequent to that, other paywents were made, all of which were endorsed on the back of the bond, the last payment having been made on 24-4-1932. All these payments have been credited by the plaintiffs towards interest, and they have sued for the recovery of the principal amount only, which is Rs. 2250.

[2] The defendants resisted the plaintiffs' claim on the ground of limitation, and they further contended that, according to the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, they were entitled to have the account re-opened, and that, if the account was re-opened, the plaintiffs would be found to have been overpaid.

[3] The Court of first instance negatived the plea of limitation, but it held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim interest at a higher rate than 9 per cent. per annum. That Court credited the payments made by the defendants towards the principal and interest calculated at the rate of 9 per cent. and found that the plaintiffs had realised their entire dues besides Rs. 50 in excess.

[4] The plaintiffs appealed against the decision of the learned Munsif and the lower appellate Court, while agreeing with the learned Munsif that the claim was not time-barred, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover Rs. 1201. The lower appellate Court arrived at this figure after deducting the total payment, Rs. 3299, from Rs. 4500, which is the double of Rs. 2250, the view of the learned Subordinate Judge being that, as under S. 7, Bihar Money-lenders Act, the plaintiffs could claim only Rs. 4500 including principal and interest, the amount paid should be deducted from this amount.

[5] Mr. C. P. Sinha, for the appellant, has not presented before us the contention that the claim of the plaintiffs is time-barred, but he has tried to support the Munsif's view that the defendants were entitled to have the account re-opened under S. 8, Bihar Money-lenders Act and that, if the account was re-opened, the plaintiffs would be found to have been overpaid. Clauses (a) and (b) of S. 8, Bihar Money-lenders Act, are important for our purpose and they are in these terms :

" . . . . . the Court may exercise all or any of the following powers :

(a) re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan;

(b) notwithstanding any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation, re-open any account already taken between them and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan."

[6] There are two provisos attached to this section, and the second proviso, which is being relied upon by the plaintiffs-respondents runs as follows :

"Provided further that if anything has been paid or allowed in respect of any liability for interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan, nothing in cl. (a) or (b) shall be deemed to require the creditor to repay any amount so paid or allowed in excess or to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan."

There can be no doubt that, even though this loan had been advanced before the commencement of this Act, the Court can under S. 8 of the Act relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum. According to the proviso if any amount has been paid in respect of any liability for interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum, nothing in cls. (a) and (b) shall be deemed to require the creditor to refund the excess payment, nor would the excess payment go to reduce the principal. In this case, it is common ground that when the payments were made, neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee thought of crediting the payment, towards interest to be calculated at any rate less than the stipulated rate and, therefore, when the payments were endorsed on the bond, the implied understanding was that they would be credited towards interest to be calculated at the bond rate. Even the last payment, as already pointed out, was made on 24-4-1932, that is, long before the Bihar Money-lenders Act was passed, and, therefore, it is manifest that at that time the understanding must have been that the payments would be credited towards interest at the bond rate. Of course, even if the amounts paid are credited towards interest at the bond rate, they would exceed the amount of interest due and would consequently go to reduce the principal. Mr. Sinha has argued that this proviso cannot be applied to this case, because the payment were made not only towards interest but also towards principal and he has relied on the words "nothing in cl. (a) or (b) shall be deemed to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan". The obvious meaning of this proviso is that, in spite of cls. (a) and (b) which empower the Court to reduce the interest in the case of a secured loan advanced before the commencement of the Act to 9 per cent. per annum, if any payment has been made by the debtor in excess of 9 per cent. per annum, it cannot be appropriated towards the principal, but it can by no means be interpreted to mean that, even if the amount paid is so high as to cover not only the interest payable on the date of the payment at the bond rate, but also a portion of the principal, it would not go to reduce the principal. When the Legislature used the expression "to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan", it meant that, if the amount paid exceeds the amount of interest payable on the date of the payment, if calculated at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, and is less than the amount of interest payable on the date of the payment, if calculated at the bond rate, it would not go to reduce the amount of the principal. Mr. Sinha was not right in contending that one cannot put such an interpretation on the proviso unless one imports something which does not exist therein. The Bihar Money-lenders Act has never been regarded as a very ably drafted Act, and nobody can be allowed to take advantage of the bad drafting by putting an interpretation upon the section which is against reason and common sense. The proviso was intended to help the creditor, but only to a limited extent, it being never the intention of the Legislature that even if the debtor pays something in excess of the amount of interest due calculated at the bond rate, it will not go to reduce the principal. It would be absurd to contend that, whenever there is a payment of interest at the bond rate as well as of a portion of the principal amount, the proviso cannot at all be applied. Whatever comes within the purview of the proviso would be governed by it, and certainly the proviso is neither exhaustive nor so wide in terms as to cover all cases of payment it does not violate the general law that, when there is a payment covering the entire amount of interest due at the bond rate and also towards the principal, the excess payment will go to reduce the principal. In Jagatmaya Kumari v. Ram Bahadur Prasad, 22 P. L. T. 293 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 459), a Division Bench of this Court had to consider the proviso, and the head-note in the law report correctly enunciates the principle laid down in this case. The head-note runs as follows :

"The proviso states that if any amount has been paid in respect of any liability for interest in excess of nine per cent. simple in the case of a secured loan, nothing in cl. (a) or (b) of the section shall be deemed to require the creditor to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan. The creditor is entitled to charge interest at the bond rate on that date and where on calculation it appears that the interest which was due to him on those dates was far in excess of the amounts actually paid, under the law the creditor was entitled to appropriate the payments towards interest and after the appropriation had been made those amounts could not be used to reduce the principal under S. 8, Bihar Money-lenders Act."

When their Lordships said that, after the appropriation had been made, the amount paid could not go to reduce the principal under S. 8, their Lordships meant that the advantage which would have otherwise accrued to a debtor because of cls. (a) and (b) would not accrue to him because of the proviso. Nothing more and nothing less is meant by this proviso, and any other view would render the proviso inept. The position, therefore, is that because of proviso 2 attached to the section the plaintiffs were at liberty to appropriate the payment towards interest at the bond rate in spite of what is contained in cls. (a) and (b) of the section, and, if there is any payment in excess of interest calculated at the bond rate, then it will go to reduce the principal. The calculation has to be made on this basis, and we are surprised to find that the learned Subordinate Judge, instead of crediting the different payments towards interest and principal on the dates the payments were made, had added them altogether and deducted the entire amount paid from the sum of Rs. 4500 which is double the principal amount of Rs. 2250. According to the general law and also according to common sense, a payment made on a certain date has to be appropriated towards interest and principal payable on that date and, if the payment exceeds the amount of interest due, it will go to reduce the principal. The decision made by the learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, an arbitrary one; and not only he did not care to read S. 8 and understand the proviso, but he did not care to notice even what the learned Munsif had said with regard to S. 8, though the learned Munsif had, in his turn, committed a serious mistake by ignoring the provisos to S. 8. We have got a calculation made which has been accepted by both sides to be correct and, according to this calculation, if the payments made are credited towards interest at the bond rate and the principal, then the principal on the date of the last payment, that is, on 24-4-1932, would be reduced to Rs. 1185-13-9. Mr. Sinha has relied on a Full Bench decision of this Court in Deo Nandan Prasad v. Ram Prasad, 23 Pat. 618 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 303 F. B.) and specially on the observation of Meredith J. at pp. 631 and 632 of the report, which runs as follows

"It was open to the Court under cl. (b) to re-open the account between the parties notwithstanding the execution of the hand note of 1937 purporting to close previous dealings and creating a new obligation and, having done so it was open to the Court to relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of interest in excess of 12 per centum simple per annum, the loan being an unsecured one. Having regard to the nature of the provisions the word 'loan' in the section must be used, I consider, with respect to the original loan, and not the final transaction and the original loan in the present case was Rs. 400. The proper course in applying the section would, therefore, be to take the principal as Rs. 400, calculate interest at 12 per cent. per annum simple on that sum up to the date of the suit and give a decree for the amount left unpaid as so ascertained, if anything is still found due."

[7] But no further calculation is necessary in this case because the respondents' learned counsel has stated that he is not going to press for a decree for any interest on the principal amount of Rs. 1185-13-9 which is payable according to the calculation already made. In this suit, therefore, there will be a decree only for Rs. 1185-13-9. Mr. Sinha probably thought that this Full Bench ruling helps him to such an extent that we can adopt the calculation made by the learned Munsif, but if such a calculation is made the proviso would be rendered nugatory and the Full Bench could never have intended that this proviso should be ignored. In this view, I am of the opinion that the plaintiffs-respondents in this case are entitled to a decree for Rs. 1185-13-9 only.

[8] The appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the lower appellate Court is modified to this extent that the plaintiffs will have a mortgage decree for Rs. 1185-13-9 only. The defendants are allowed six months' time for the payment of the decretal amount, and the plaintiffs will get interest at 9 per cent. per annum on the principal amount of Rs. 1185-13-9 from the date of the institution of the suit till the period of grace and future interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the entire decretal amount. The plaintiffs-respondents will get corresponding costs throughout. Because the appeal has substantially failed, the appellants will get no costs of this appeal.

Misc. Judicial Cases Nos. 170 and 140 of 1950, D/- 13-10-1950.

(a) Constitution of India, Arts. 19 (e), 10 and 226 — Married woman - Order for deportation — Right to relief — Bihar Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (III [3] of 1949), S. 11.

Where an order for deportation is served on a person residing in Great Britain or the United States of America, that person, if he can make out a prima facie case that he is a citizen & not an alien, is entitled to a writ of certiorari & on the return to that writ being made, to a judicial determination of the question of his status.

On marriage, a woman takes the domicile of her husband, &, during the continuance of the marriage at least, cannot, by any act of hers, acquire another domicile. [Para 3]

A woman born in India & married to a citizen in India, taking up temporary residence in Pakistan for medical treatment, would neither fall under cl. (i) of the definition of "evacuee' contained in cl. (c) of S. 2, Bihar Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance, 1949 nor under cl. (ii) as the word "resident" occurring there must be construed as meaning a person who has taken up his or her residence in Pakistan permanently.

Even if that person comes within the definition of 'evacuee' in the Ordinance, nevertheless, she is also a citizen of India &, as such is entitled to remain in India. If, while in Pakistan, her conduct was such as to create suspicions as to her loyalty to the Indian Union, she may, on her return to India be subjected to such restrictions on her movements as Parliament may consider advisable & not be deported. [Para 4]

Per Sarjoo Prasad J. - A woman acknowledged by her husband as his wife can claim her husband's domicile, though it is not clear in what form that marriage was solemnised. [Para 8]

(b) Constitution of India, Arts. 31, 226 — Deprivation of possession by Custodian of Evacuee Property — Special remedy available under Administration of Evacuee Property Act — Right to writ of mandamus — Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), S. 28.

A lady executed & registered a deed of wakfnama on 4-5-1946, in respect of her property, which provided that she was to be the mutawalli & that on her death or her relinquishing the office her three sons were to be joint mutawallis. She resigned her office as well as her right to receive a share of the income by a letter on 2-5-1949. The Deputy Custodian of Evacuee Property holding her to be an evacuee & that her letter of 2-5-1949 amounted to a transfer of property took possession of the property. The sons who were admittedly citizens of India applied for a writ of mandamus. It being also found that the lady who was born in India & married to an Indian citizen was herself a citizen of India :

Held (1) that there was an infringement of the fundamental right of the petnrs. to hold & enjoy property; [Para 7]

(2) that there was no transfer of property subsequent to 14-8-1947 so as to bring it within the meaning of the expression "evacuee property" in the Administration of Evacuee Property Act 1950, & the question was of no consequence since the lady was found to be a citizen of India; [Para 6]

(3) that Art. 226 gave the H. C. original jurisdiction in all such matters to issue a mandatory injunction & the special remedy of an appeal provided by the Act was no bar to the exercise of the jurisdiction. [Para 7]

Per Sarjoo Prasad J.— Though it is a matter for concern whether when a special remedy is available the Ct. should not leave the petnrs. to pursue that instead of seeking to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of the H. C. under Art. 226 yet where in the circumstances of the case that remedy is not equally effectual, convenient & beneficial & would cause him irretrievable loss & damage by the time he gets it the H C. must act in the exercise of its powers to protect his interest. [Para 11]

P. R. Das, Khaleel Ahmed, Balbadra Pd. Singh & Padmanand Jha — for Petnrs ; Govt. Advocate & S. C. Chakravarty — for Opposite Party.

Shearer J. — These two applns. which have been heard together are applns. under Art. 226 of the Constitution. Very elaborate arguments have been addressed to us by Sir Sultan Ahmed, who appears in support of one of the applns. & by Mr. P. R. Das, who appears in support of the other. Mr. P. R. Das, for instance, invited us to declare that the Bihar Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance. 1949, was an unconstitutional law. It is, however, quite unnecessary to go into this point or into some of the other points which were raised & the applns. can be very shortly disposed of. The petnr. in Misc. Judl. Case No. 170 of 1950 describes herself as Kumar Rani Sayeedah Khatoon, wife of Captain Maharaja Kumar Gopal Saran Narayan Singh. Kumar Rani Sayeedah Khatoon landed at the Palam Air Port in New Delhi on 14-5-1950. She was in possession of a permit granted by the High Comr. for India in Pakistan, which entitled her to remain in India permanently She was, therefore, admitted, & proceeded to Gaya where her husband resides. On 19-5-1950, in accordance with the instructions contained on her permit, she made the permit over to the Sub-Inspector in charge of the police station within the jurisdiction of which the Maharaja of Tikari resides.

[2] On 23 7-1950, a notice was served on her by the Sub-Inspector stating that the High Comr. for India in Pakistan had withdrawn her permit & requiring her to return to Pakistan within seven days. It was further stated in the notice that, in the event of her failing to do so, she would be prosecuted. The learned Govt. Advocate has not been as fully instructed as he ought to have been, & is not in a position to tell us exactly what the nature of the prosecution, which was contemplated, was. As will appear presently, it is quite clear that in the appln. which she made for this permit, the petnr. did not make any statement which was untrue. It appears that she originally went to Karachi in the middle of 1948 & at the end of that year, being desirous to pay a visit to her family in India, applied for and obtainad a temporary permit. Presumably she did this in order to be able to go back to Pakistan &, presumably, in order to obtain such a permit, she stated that she was domiciled in Pakistan. This statement as will also appear presently, was erroneous & may conceivably have been untrue.

[3] I was at first disposed to take the view that the appln. was premature, & it would have been premature if it had been clear that the authorities intended to prosecute her & did not intend to make an order for her deportation until the conclusion of the criminal trial. Sir Sultan Ahmed, for the petn. has, however, pointed out that orders for deportation, which in England can only be made by a Secretary of State, in the case of persons who have migrated to India from Pakistan, be or at any rate are being made by quite subordinate officials including Sub-Inspector of Police. On further consideration I accept the contention of Sir Sultan Ahmed that the order which was se ved on the petnr. was, in substance an order for her deportation. It is well settled that, when an order of that kind is served on a person residing in Great Britain or the United States of America, that person, if he can make out a prima facie case that he is a citizen & not an alien, is entitled to a writ of certiorari &, on the return to that writ being made, to a judicial determination of the question of his status. The petnr. contends that she is a citizen of ndia, & the contention is well grounded. The petnr. was born in India, & is domicfled in India. On marriage, a woman takes the domicile of her husband, & during the continuance of the marriage at least, cannot, by any act of hers, acquire another domicile. That is, & always has been, the British law, & was incorporated into British law from the Canon law which, in matrimonial matters, regulated the conduct of Christians throughout the whole of Western Christiandom. It is obvious that to permit a married woman to acquire a domicile distinct from the domicile of her husband would be to undermine the marriage tie &, indeed, render the purpose for which the marriage was contracted no longer capable of performance. I can see no reason to suppose that the position under the Hindu law or under the Muhammadan law is otherwise. Quite certainly the Hindu conception of marriage is that it creates a tie no less inadmissible than was the tie created by the rite of marriage among Christians belonging to the Roman Catholic Church.

[4] The Sub Inspector of Police or whatever superior official, under whose directions he acted, appears to have taken the view that, the petnr. being as evacuee & having entered India under a permit, which, he erroneously thought, had been improperly obtained, he was bound to make an order for her deportation. An affidavit has been put in by the petnr. in which she states that she went to Karachi to obtain medical treatment under a hakim who had migrated from India to Pakistan in or after 1947. If that was really so, she would not fall under cl. (i) of the definition of "evacuee" contained in cl. (c) of S. 2 of the Ordinance nor would she fall under cl. (ii) as the word "resident" occurring there must be construed as meaning a person who has taken up his or her residence in Pakistan permanently & is not residing there temporarily for any such purpose as obtaining better medical treatment then he or she is, or thinks himself, or herself to be, in a position to obtain in India. I am by no means satisfied of the truth of what is contained in this affidavit &, if I had to act on it, I should have required a supplementary affidavit to be filed giving further & better particulars, such, for instance, as the name of the hakim & the address at which he practised in India & now practises in Karachi. Even, however, assuming that the statements made in the affidavit are untrue & that the petnr. comes within the definition of "evacuee" in the Ordinance, nevertheless, she is also a citizen of India & as such, is entitled to remain in India. Where the wife of a citizen of India goes to Pakistan, then, if, while in Pakistan, she conducts herself in such a manner as to create suspicions as to her loyalty to the Indian Union, she may, on her return to India, be subjected to such restrictions on her movements as Parliament may consider advisable, restrictions, for instance, similar to those which were imposed on the wives of British subjects who, prior to their marriage, had been enemy aliens during the war. Parliament has, however, not yet considered it necessary, so far at least as I am aware, to impose such restrictions.

[5] The petnrs. in Misc. Judl. Case No. 140 of 1950 are the three sons of Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon. These petnrs. are the joint mutwallis of certain wakf property. On 2-10-1949, this property was taken possession of by the Deputy Custodian of Evacuee Property. It is not disputed that the petnrs. are citizens of India, & prima facie, therefore, the action taken by the Deputy Custodian was an infringement of their fundamental right to hold & enjoy property. The reason why the Deputy Custodian took the action which he did was that this property belonged originally to Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon. On 4-5-1946, she executed & registered a deed of wakfnama in respect of it. Under this deed, she appointed herself the mutwalli & appointed the eldest of her three sons as the naib mutwalli, who was, in her absence, to manage the property. The deed provided that one-half of the income should be paid to her & that the other half should be paid in equal shares to her sons. The deed further provided that, on her death or on her relinquishing the office of mutwalli, her three sons should at once become joint mutwallis. On 2-6 1949, Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon wrote a letter to the eldest of her sons, who was the naib mutwalli, stating that she relinquished her office of mutwalli & also relinquished her right to receive one-half of the income from the wakf property.

[6] The Bihar Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance, 1949, came into operation on 21-6-1949, but was repealed & replaced by Ordinance XXVII [27] of 1949 of the Central Govt. which was subsequently enacted as the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (XXI [21] of 1950). The latter Ordinance & the Act gave a more extended meaning to the expression 'evacuee property" & brought within the purview of the expression any property which had belonged originally to an evacuee which the evacuee had transferred after 14 8-1947. The Deputy Custodian apparently took the view that, on 2 6-1949, there had been a transfer of this property by Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon to her sons. In taking this view, the Deputy Custodian clearly misdirected himself. No transfer of property took place on 2-6-1949. The transfer & theonly transfer, of this property which had taken place, took place on 4-5-1946, when the deed of wakfnama was executed. What Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon did on 2 6-1949, was to resign her office of Mutwalli, & this she was entitled to do by writing under her own hand & was under no obligation to execute & register any deed. I see no reason myself to suppose that she could not similarly renounce her right to a share in the income from the property. But, as she is a citizen of India, it is quite unnecessary to go into this point.

[7] The learned Govt. Advocate referred us to S. 28 of the Act & contended that this Ct. had no jurisdiction to interfere. The remedy open to the petnrs. was, Mr. S. K. Mitra suggested, to appeal against the order of the Deputy Custodian General, Mr. P. R. Das, for the petnrs., has invited our attention to two decisions of the H. C. of Australia in which it was held that a statute which took away the right of a citizen to obtain a prerogative writ was void in so far as it was repugnant to Art. 75 (v), Australian Constitution Act, 1900 The King v. Hickman, 70 Comm. L. R 593 & The King v. Commonwealth Rent Controller, 75 Comm. L. R. 361. Article 75 (v), Australian Constitution Act, 1900, (Provides that):

"in all matters in which a writ of mandamus or prohibition or an injunction is sought against an officer of the Commonwealth, the High Court shall have original jurisdiction."

Article 226, Indian Constitution, operates in exactly the same way. It is quite clear that under Art. 226 it is not merely open to us, but it is our duty, to interfere when, as in these cases, there has been a flagrant & unjustified invasion of the fundamental rights of citizens. The appnls. ought, in my opinion, to be allowed & the rules, which have been issued ought to be made absolute. In Misc. Jud. Case No. 140 of 1950 I would issue a mandatory injunction requiring the opposite party forthwith to make over to the petnrs. the property of which three of them are the mutwallis & of which he has wrongly taken possession. The petnrs. are also entitled to their costs.

[8] Sarjoo Prasad J.—I agree.

M. J. C. 170 of 1950—The petnr. may well be entitled to claim the domicile of her husband, Captain Gopal Saran Narain Singh of Tikari. It is not clear from the records as to in what form the marriage of the petnr. with the said Captain was solemnised. Sir Sultan Ahmed appearing for the petnr. could not throw any light on the point. It appears, however, that Captain Gopal Narain Singh acknowledges the petnr as his wife, & there is nothing on the record to the contrary. In that view she can claim the domicile of her husband though I am not certain that the petnr. does not come within the definition of "evacuee" as given in the Evacuee Property Ordinance subsequently followed by an Act. My learned brother has, if I may respectfully say so, correctly pointed out that if her conduct creates suspicion as to her loyalty to the Indian Union, she may be subjected to such restriction as the Legislature may consider advisable.

[9] M. C. J. 140 of 1950 — M. C. J. 140 of 1950 should be allowed on the short ground that the petnrs. who are the joint mutwallis of the waqf property are entitled to be in possession of the property & not the custodian who had no jurisdiction to take possession of the same. It is to be remembered that Kumar Rani Sayeedeh Khatoon, the mother of these petnrs. relinquished her interest as mutwalli of the said waqf-ul-aulad long before the Bihar Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (III [3] of 1949) came into force on 21-6-1949. In the circumstances on the terms of the deed these petnrs. became joint mutwallis. These petnrs. are undeniably citizens of India. The genuineness of the letter dated 2-6-1949, under which the mutwallishiip was relinquished by Sayeeda Khatoon has not been questioned before us. Therefore, under S. 11 (2) (a) of the Ordinance the "mutwalli" not being an "evacuee" the waqf properties could not vest in the custodian & even assuming that Sayeeda Khatoon herself was an evacuee she had already ceased to be a mutwalli & to represent the waqf property before the Ordinance came into operation. For these reasons the action of the custodion was ultra vires the Ordinance itself.

[10] It is contended by the learned Govt. Advocate that there is a procedure provided under the Ordinance which should have been followed by the petnrs. in order to get redress against any illegal act or conduct on the part of the custodian or the Deputy Custodian. He refers to Ss. 24, 25 & 28 of the Ordinance for this purpose. I agree with my learned brother that S. 28 of the Ordinance cannot stand in the way of our exercising the powers which have been vouchsafed to us under Art 226 of the Constitution.

[11] But the thing which has caused me most serious concern is whether when a special remedy is provided under a particular statute, we should not leave the petnrs. to follow that remedy instead of seeking to invoke our extraordinary jurisdiction by way of a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution. I am, however, impressed with the argument of Mr. P. R. Das to this extent that in case of flagrant & unjustified invasion of the fundamental rights of a citizen we must act in the exercise of our powers to protect him against injury & give him the relief provided the circumstances of the case are such that otherwise the alternate remedy available to the citizen may not be equally effectual, convenient & beneficial & by the time he gets the relief, the citizen may have suffered irretrievable loss & damage. We are informed that in this case the petnrs. did prefer a claim which was dismissed by the custodian & against which an appeal has been presented to the Custodian General in Delhi. But the said appeal has been pending since long & no attempt has been made to dispose of the same ; while in the meantime the petnrs. are being put to great loss & harassment. Particular reference in this connection may be made to the statements in paras. 18 and 19 of the petn. which have not been controverted before us by the learned counsel for the State. P. R. Das rightly contends that in the circumstances of this case there is no other efficacious remedy left to the petnrs. than to apply to this Ct. under Art. 226 of the Constitution otherwise irreparable injury was likely to be caused to them. In his petn. he has given details of the various instances of damage caused & apprehended, & those details have not been disputed. For the above reasons I agree with my learned brother that there is pre-eminently a case where mandatory injunction should be issued on the opposite party to make over forthwith the possession of the properties to the petnrs. who are the joint mutwallis of the waqf-ul-aulad.

LAKSHMIKANTA JHA C. J. AND REUBEN J.

Criminal Revn. No. 492 of 1950, D/- 24-4-1950.

Constitution of India, Art. 134 (1)(c)—Certificate of fitness for appeal in criminal cases—Guiding principles—Appeal against orders in revision.

Some guidance as to the meaning of the phrase "a fit one for appeal to the S. C." in Art. 134 (1) (c) can be furnished by the decisions relating to similar provisions for civil appeals contained in S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., regarding which it has been held that certificate should not be granted in a case which does not involve question of wide public or private importance. Where there is no want of jurisdiction in the Mag., an error of law or an error in the procedure adopted by him, is not a sufficient ground to grant leave to appeal to the S. C., unless there was something so irregular or outrageous as to shock the very basis of justice. These principles apply with greater force in a case where a certificate is sought for an appeal against an order of the H. C. passed in exercise of discretionary revisional powers. [Paras 4, 6, 7]

K. P. Varma—for Petnrs.

Order.—This is an appln. by three persons who have been ordered to execute bonds for Rs. 1000 each with two sureties in the like amount for keeping the peace.

[2] The Mag. on the basis of a petn. filed on 1-2-1949, by one Lakhan Gope & a police report thereon, started a proceeding under S. 107, Cr. P. C., & ultimately passed the order referred to above. The order was upheld in appeal by the 3rd. Addl. Ses. J., Patna. The matter then came to this Ct. in revision, and the Chief Justice by his order dated 4-4-1950, rejected the appln summarily.

[3] We are asked to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c), Const. Ind., which provides that an appeal shall lie to the S. C from any final order in a criminal proceeding of H. C. in the territory of India if the H. C. certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the S. C. There is a proviso to Art. 134 (1) which lays down that an appeal under sub-cl. (c) shall lie subject to such provision as may be made in that behalf under cl. (1) of Art. 145 & to such conditions as the H. C. may establish or require; we are not concerned in the present case with any such provision or condition.

[4] The only ground on which we can grant a certificate is that it is a fit case for appeal to the S. C. It is conceded that the Mag. took cognizance on a police report of a likelihood of a breach of the peace. The Mag. had territorial jurisdiction & he being responsible for the peace in the sub-division, considered the case one in which the petnrs. should be called upon to show cause against the execution of bonds for keeping the peace. Therefore, he did exercise his jurisdiction bearing in mind the peace of the sub-division. That being so, there is no want of jurisdiction in the Mag. There may or may not have been an error of law or an error of fact. Even if there was an error of law or an error in the procedure adopted by the Mag., we do not think that that is a sufficient ground to grant leave to appeal to the S. C.

[5] The provision for a certificate of fitness for appeal in original cases was unknown before the commencement of the Constitution. An appeal to the Privy Council could lie only by special leave, & the settled practice of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was not to act as a Ct. of appeal, review or revision. They interfered only if it was shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial or grave injustice had been done. Unless there was something so irregular or so outrageous as to shock the very basis of justice their Lordships refused to interfere. It was pointed out by Lord Dunedin in Mohindar Singh v. Emperor, 59 I. A. 233: (A.I.R. (19) 1932 P.C. 234: 34 Cr. L. J. 18) that "their Lordships have repeated ad nauseam the statement that they do not sit as a Ct. of criminal appeal. For them to interfere with a criminal sentence there must be something so irregular or so outrageous as to shock the very basis of justice."

This observation was repeated in Otto George Gfeller v. The King, A.I.R. (30) 1943 P. C. 211 at p. 216: (45 Cr. L J. 241). The same view has been reiterated by their Lordships of the F. C. in the case of Kapildeo Singh v. The King, (A.I. R. (37) 1950 F. C. 80: 51 Cr. L. J. 1057) (Cr. App. No. 1 of 1949 of the Federal Court—an appeal arising by special leave against an order of the Patna H. C.). Their Lordships have held that the F.C. does not act in the exercise of its power to review the course of justice in criminal cases in the free fashion of a fully constituted Ct. of criminal appeal. A mere mistake on the part of the Ct. below, for example, in the admission of improper evidence, will not suffice if it has not led to injustice of a grave character.

[6] It is not pointed out that any injustice of a grave character has been done to the petnr. by reason of a mistake in the procedure. The observations of their Lordships apply with all the greater force in a case like the present, where a certificate is sought for an appeal against an order of the H. C. passed in exercise of discretionary revisional powers.

[7] Under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the new Constitution, the H. C. has to certify that the case is "a fit one for appeal to the S. C." Some guidance as to the meaning of this expression may be furnished by the decisions relating to the similar provision for civil appeals contained in S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., regarding which it has been held that a certificate should not be granted in a case which does not involve question of wide public or private importance: see Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain, 28 I. A. 11 at p. 13; (23 ALL. 227 P. C.), Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar, 48 I.A. 31 at p. 34: (A.I.R.(8) 1921 P. C. 25), Mritunjoy v. Balmakund, 6 Pat. L. J. 125: (A.I.R. (8) 1921 Pat. 33), Maung Ba Than v. District Council, Pegu, 6 Rang. 43: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Rang. 187), Ruchcha Saithwar v. Hansrani, 50 ALL. 640; (A.I.R. (15) 1928 ALL 220).

[8] Further guidance is afforded by the decision of their Lordships, of the Judicial Committee in the case of Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Income-tax Commr., Delhi,

54 I. A. 421 : (A.I R. (14) 1927 P. C. 242). This was a case under the Income-tax Act. There was no provision for appeal to the P. C. under the Income-tax Act, 1922, till S. 66A was added by S. 8, Income-tax (Amendment) Act (XXIV [24] of 1926). The relevant provision with which we are concerned is S. 66A, cl. (2), which runs as follows:

"An appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any judgment of the H. C. delivered on a reference made under S. 66 in any case which the H. C. certifies to be fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council."

[9] While interpreting the words "to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council" Lord Blanesburg observed:

"These words are textually the same as the concluding words of S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., & coupled with the carefully limited referential words to the Civil P. C., in sub-s. (3), suffice, in their Lordships' judgment, to exclude from any right of appeal cases which fall within the requirements of S. 110 of the Code, & are operative to confine that right to cases which are certified to be otherwise fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It was conceded in argument that if sub-s. (2) of the section had stood alone, it would be difficult to escape from the construction of it which has just been indicated." (The underlinings (here italicised) are ours).

[10] Therefore, their Lordships have in interpreting S. 66A, sub-s. (2), adopted the same rule of interpretation as they have laid down for interpretation of the provision of S. 109, cl. (6), Civil P. C.

[11] In view of these decisions, we think we shall not be justified in granting a certificate under Art. 134, cl. (c) of the Constitution.

[13] A similar matter came up before us in Mahanth Ramkishun Das v. The State, (Cr. Revn. No. 91 of 1950) where we refused to grant a certificate. At that time the recent judgment in Kapildeo Singh v. The King, (A.I.R. (37) 1950 F. C. 80: 51 Cr. L. J. 1057) was not brought to our notice. We feel satisfied that the view we took in the case of Mahanth Ramkishun Das (Cri. Revn. No. 91 of 1950) is fortified by the recent order of the F. C. The appln. is rejected.

Federal Court Appeal No. 64 of 1949, D/-12-9-1950.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 109 and 110 — Question involving right of public servant to sue State for arrears of salary — Leave to appeal to Federal Court.

The decision on a question of law as to the right of a public servant to sue the State for arrears of salary is not of such sufficient urgency as to justify the Court in granting leave to appeal to the Federal Court, though it cannot be disputed that the point involved is a substantial question of law. [Para 1]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 109, N. 10; S. 110, N. 17.

Govt. Advocate — for Appellant; M. Rahman and S. S. Asghar Husain —for Respondent.

Order.—Speaking with the greatest respect, we are unable to appreciate the ground on which Manohar Lall and Mahabir Prasad JJ., declined to follow the decision of the Judicial Committee in High Commissioners for India and Pakistan v. I. M. Lall, 75 I. A. 225 : (A.I.R. (35) 1948 P. C. 121). It cannot be disputed that a substantial point of law arises. The sum of money involved in the proposed appeal is, however, comparatively small. The learned Government advocate suggested that the question that arose was one of general public importance, being, namely, a question as to the right of a public servant to sue the State for arrears of salary. Suits of this kind may from time to time be instituted but, so far as we are aware, the necessity for instituting them can only occur at infrequent intervals. The decision on the question of law that arises is not, in our opinion, of such sufficient immediate urgency as to justify us in the present case in granting leave to appeal. The application will, accordingly, be dismissed, but there will be no order for costs.

JAMUAR AND RAI JJ.

Mohit Lal Pandit — Petitioner v. The State.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 485 of 1950, D/-4-10 1950.

(a) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3—Jurisdiction.

The mere fact that the detenu's activities extended over places within the area of adjoining district over which the Dist. Mag. has no jurisdiction does not deprive the Dist. Mag. of his authority to order his detention when at the time of making the order the detenu was admittedly within his district. [Para 3]

Per Jamuar J.—The order being one for preventive detention the Dist Mag. is entitled to draw an inference from the past acts of the detenu in those places. [Para 11]

(b) Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) — Grounds of detention — Detention under S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 — Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3.

The expression "the maintenance of public order" is comprehensive enough to include "the security of the State" as used in S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950. Therefore, when the grounds supplied to the detenu do not suggest that there were other grounds besides those mentioned it cannot be said that they do not disclose all the grounds merely because they were described as concerning maintenance of public order while the order of detention stated that the detention was for the security of the State as well. [Paras 4, 12]

(c) Constitution of India, Art. 22 (5) — Grounds of detention—Vagueness of —Public Safety—Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3.

The grounds on which the officer passes the order for detention within the meaning of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 should not necessarily mean the detailed facts on which a prosecution in a criminal Ct. may be launched. It is not necessary to mention in the grounds the particulars in the same way as they are mentioned in a charge of a criminal offence.

It is not safe to judge the vagueness of grounds in a particular case with reference to the grounds in other cases. The decision will depend on the contents of the grounds in each case. Hence, where in a case of detention for instigating in collaboration with a notorious outlaw, the landless labourers to loot foodgrains the grounds served upon the detenu clearly mentioned the places at which the disturbances have taken place & also the period when they took place the mere fact that the exact date & hour & the part played by the detenu in each of the occurrences were not set out in detail will not render the grounds vague. [Para 5]

(d) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 3—Mala fides.

Preventive justice in all cases must proceed to a certain extent upon suspicion or anticipati n as distinct from proof. For passing an order for detention it is really the satisfaction of the Magistrate which is necessary. If the police have sufficient material to satisfy him he can act under the Act, even though there is no detailed evidence of the type on which a Ct. of law can convict an accused. Hence, the fact that the police were unable to furnish a detailed report till a date very near the one on which the order was passed cannot lead to the inference that the order was passed mala fide in the absence of materials. [Para 6]

(e) Constitution of India, Art. 25 (5)—"As soon as may be" — Held, delay of 22 days was not unreasonable in the case. [Para 8]

B. C. Ghosh and D. K. Sinha — for Petnr.; Govt. Advocate—for the State.

Rai J.—This is a petn. under Art. 226, Const, Ind., for issue of a writ in the nature of habeas corpus & for the release of the petnr.

[2] The facts relating to the detention of the petnr. may be stated as follows. The petnr. along with others was arrested by the Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police, Rupauli police station, & was forwarded in custody to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar Purnea, with the following note :

"I have the honour to forward herewith in custody the following accused persons who are members of communists dacoits & who are exploiting the station in order to create trouble & breaking the peace, tranquillity of the locality. They are reported to be concerned in several looting & agitating the men in order to create chaos & confusion in the locality. They have acted in a manner prejudicial to the public safety & maintenance of the public order & it is, therefore, necessary that in order to maintain peace & tranquillity in the locality, they have to be detained under S. 2 (1) (a) of Bihar Maintenance Public Order (No. 2) Ordinance, 1949. Report for their detention is being submitted."

[3] The said learned Sub-Divisional Officer thereupon passed the following order :

"6-6-50 (1) Mohit Lal Pandit, son of Sukhai Pandit of Gaddighat; (2) Baldeo Mandal, son of Faudi Mandal of Sripur; (3) Nasib Mali son of Madhu Mali of Sripur; (4) Jagannath Mandal, son of Chuman Mandal of Sripur ; (5) Thothai Mandal, son of Ghina Chaudhury of Sripur; P. S. Rupauli, have been brought in custody for alleged offence under S. 151/107, Cr. P. C. They do not complain of any ill treatment. They are remanded to jail hajat till 9.6.50. If any bail petn., let it be put up."

The petnr. was not successful in getting bail before the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. He, however, moved the Ses. J. of Purnea & was granted bail on 3-7-1950. On 4-7-1950. the Dist. Mag. of Purnea was pleased to pass the following order for his detention :

"Whereas I am satisfied with respect to the person known as Mohit Lal Pandit, son of late Sukhai Pandit of village Gaddighat, P. S. Rupauli, Dist Purnia, that with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State & maintenance of public order, it is necessary to make the following order :

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (2) of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950), I hereby direct that the said Mohit Lal Pandit be detained for a period of 6 months from 5-7-50.

He shall be placed in detention in Purnea jail & classified as Division III "X"."

The grounds of detention which were served on the petnr., are to the following effect :

"1. In league with notorious communist outlaw Nakshatra Malakar he is indulging in activities prejudicial to maintenance of public order.

2. He has been moving from village to village instigating the landless labourers to loot food-grains of the richer section of the people.

3. Directly as a result of these instigations & taking advantage of the scarcity of food-grains in the locality, the incited landless labourers & others organised a number of raids in different villages in the area comprised of the police stations of Naugachia, Bihpur & Rupauli within the period of 28th May till 3-6-1950, in course of which food-grains & other properties were looted from Kamats, shops & other premises by mobs sometimes numbering more than a thousand.

4. In these organized loots Shri Mohit Lal Pandit personally led some of these raids & played a big part in organizing all these lootings, synchronizing them with similar lootings perpetrated by an absconding criminal named Nakshatra Malakar of the Communist Party of India.

In these circumstances I am satisfied that if he is allowed to remain at large, he will indulge in activities prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. For the prevention of such activities I consider his detention necessary. Shree Mohit Lal Pandit is informed that he may make a representation in writing against the order under which he is detained. His representation, if any, may be addressed to the Under Secretary, Political Department, Special Section, & forwarded through the Superintendent of the Jail, as soon as possible."

In support of the petn. Mr. Ghosh, the learned Advocate for the petnr., urged several points. He urged that some of the places of loot & disturbance as mentioned in ground No 3 quoted above were outside the district of Purnea & hence the Dist. Mag. had no jurisdiction to issue the order of detention under S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950. Now, out of the three police stations, namely, Naugachia, Bihpur & Rupauli within which the raids had been organised & loot had taken place, two of the police stations are within the adjoining district of Monghyr, & police station Rupauli admittedly lies within the district of Purnea. The detenu was admittedly within the district of Purnea when the order in question was passed. In my judgment, there was no want of jurisdiction in the Dist. Mag. in passing the order in question. Section 3 of the Act does not contemplate any such restriction on the power of the Dist. Mag. If the activities of the detenu were carried out in villages situated within the adjoining police station of another district as well as in villages situated within the district of Purnea, it would not take away the jurisdiction of the Dist. Mag. of Purnea to take action as contemplated by the Act.

[4] Mr. Ghosh further contended that the order of detention contemplated the detention of the petnr. "with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State & maintenance of public order". But grounds that were served on the petnr. disclosed grounds concerning "the maintenance of public order" only. According to him, therefore, the authorities concerned had withheld some of the grounds on which the detention of the petnr. had been based. He, in this connection, referred to Art. 22, cl. (5) of the Constitution which runs as follows :

"When any person is detained in pursuance of an order made under any law providing for preventive detention, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to such person the grounds on which the order has been made and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order."

He stressed that when the Constitution enjoined the service of the "grounds", it certainly contemplated all "grounds" on which the order was based & not only some of the "grounds". In support of his contention he further relied upon a recent decision of a Bench of this Ct. in the case of Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh v. The State, Cr. Misc. C. No. 126 of 1950 : (A. I. R. (38) 1951 Pat. 389). He also relied upon a decision of the S. C. in the case of Romesh Thapper v. State of Madras, A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 124 : (51 Cr. L. J. 1514), wherein Patanjali Sastri J. dealt with the distinction between "public order" & "public safety". According to Mr. Ghosh, the grounds relating to the maintenance of public order must necessarily be different from the grounds relating to the "security of the State". The Division Bench of this Ct. in the case of Chandra Shekhar, (A. I. R. (38) 1951 Pat. 389) has fully considered this aspect of the case & has also dealt with the judgment of their Lordships of the S. C. in the case of Romesh Thapper A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 124 : (51 Cr. L. J. 1514). It has been clearly held in that case that the expression "the maintenance of public order" is comprehensive enough to include "the security of the State" as used in S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950. The grounds served on the petnr. do not suggest that there were other grounds which led to the passing of the order of detention. In my judgment, therefore, there is no merit in the contention of the learned Advocate for the petnr. that the detention is invalid because some of the grounds have been withheld from the detenu.

[5] Mr. Ghosh further contended that the grounds served on the petnr. are vague & indefinite with the result that he is not in a position to make an effective representation to the proper authorities as contemplated by the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. In my judgment, the grounds are not vague or indefinite. The grounds do mention loot at several places within the police stations of Naugachia, Bihpur & Rupauli between the 28th of May & 3.6.1950. It may be kept in mind that the grounds on which the officer passed the order for detention within the meaning of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950, should not necessarily mean detailed facts on which prosecution in a criminal Ct. may be launched. It is not necessary to mention in the grounds the particulars in the same way as they are mentioned in a charge of a criminal offence. In support of his contention, that the grounds are vague & indefinite, Mr. Ghosh relied upon the decisions of this Ct. in certain unreported cases, such as Cr Misc. No. 425 of 1948, decided on 7-10-1948 ; Cr. Misc. 175 of 1949, decided on 3-5-1949; Cr. Misc. 529 of 1949, decided on 21-7-1949 ; Cr. Misc. 608 of 1949, decided on 10-8-1949; & L. K. Barman v. The State, Cr. Misc. No. 124 of 1950, decided on 5-4-1950: (29 Pat. 502). He also relied upon the case of Nek Mohammad v. Province of Bihar, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 1: (50 Cr. L. J. 44 F. B.). At the outset, I may mention that it is not safe to judge the vagueness of grounds in a particular case with reference to the grounds in other cases. The decision will certainly depend on the contents of the grounds in each case. It is not necessary for me to deal in detail with the grounds in those cases. To me it appears that the circumstances of those cases were different from the circumstances of the present case. In this case the locality where the disturbances are said to have taken place is clearly mentioned. The dates between which the disturbance took place have also been mentioned. It is true that exact date & hour & the part played by the petn. in each of the occurrences in detail has not been given in the grounds served upon him. But, in my opinion, that is not necessary. The contention of the learned Advocate, therefore, that the grounds are vague & indefinite cannot be accepted.

[6] Mr. Ghosh further contended that the order of detention was male fide. He drew my attention to the various orders passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer before whom the petnr. was originally produced. On several dates, the Sub-Divisional Officer asked for a further report from the police regarding the activities of the petnr., but no such report was produced. He contended that if the police was not in a position to produce the report before the Sub-Divisional Officer, how could it produce the same before the Dist. Mag. on 4-7-1950, to enable him to pass the order of detention. It might have been that the police was not in possession of a detailed information regarding all the activities of the petnr. which were spread over several villages some of which were situated within the neighbouring district. The detailed evidence on which a conviction in a Ct. of law can be based may not have been available to the police by that date. Nevertheless, the police might have been in possession of such materials which would satisfy the Dist. Mag. to take action in accordance with the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. It is really the "satisfaction" of the Mag. that is material. In answer to the argument of the learned Advocate for the petnr. the learned Advocate for the State relied upon the case of Liversidge v. Anderson, 1942 A. C. 206: (110 L. J. K. B. 724). He particularly relied upon the following passage in that report:

"The legislature obviously proceeds on the footing that there may be certain persons against whom no offence is proved nor any charge formulated, but as regards whom it may be expedient to authorise the Secretary of State to make an order for detention."

In this connection the case of Rex v. Haliday, 1917 A. C. 260: (86 L. J. K. B. 1119) may be referred to. In considering the advisability of taking action under a statute for detaining a suspect Lord Atkinson said as follows:

"And as preventive justice proceeds upon the principle that a person should be restrained from doing something which, if free and unfettered, it is reasonably probable he would do, it must necessarily proceed in all cases, to some extent on suspicion or anticipation as distinct from proof."

There is no reason in the present case to presume that the Dist. Mag's. action was mala fide in any respect. It appears that the utmost in his mind was the maintenance of public order & the satisfaction on the materials placed before him that the detention of the petnr. was justifiable in the circumstances of the present case.

[7] Mr. Ghosh further contended that the grounds in this case were served long after the passing of the order of detention. The provisions of Art. 22, cl. (5) of the Constitution of India contemplate that "The authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to such person the grounds on which the order has been made & shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order."

In the present case the delay is said to have been a delay of 22 days.

[8] The learned Advocate for the State, in this connection, submitted that the grounds of detention have to be forwarded to the State Govt. for approval, & unless the detention is approved on those grounds, they are not served on a detenu. According to him, the delay made in this case was not such unreasonable as required the issue of a writ contemplated by the present petn. Whatever may be the reason, I do not consider the delay in this case to be so unreasonable as to require this Ct. to act under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

[9] For the reasons given above, the petnr. is not entitled to the reliefs claimed in this petn. which is hereby dismissed.

[10] Jamuar J.—In support of this appln. for the release of the petnr. on the ground that his detention is illegal, Mr. Ghosh argued a number of points.

[11] In the first place, he contended that the Dist. Mag. of Purnea, who made the order for the detention of the petnr. had no jurisdiction to pass that order. The contention was that in ground No. 3 of the grounds of detention served upon the petnr. there was stated that directly as a result of instigations (coming from the petnr.) a number of raids had taken place in different villages in the areas comprised of the police stations of Naugachia, Bihpur & Rupauli, & since the police stations of Naugachia & Bihpur are not within the district of Purnea, the Dist. Mag. of Purnea had no jurisdiction to take notice of incidents which had occurred within those police stations & that therefore since a part of the grounds for the detention of the petnr. related to incidents outside the dist. of Purnea, the order of detention of the petnr. by the Dist. Mag. of Purnea was without jurisdiction. I am quite unable to give effect to this contention. In the same connection it was suggested that the Dist. Mag. of Purnea should not have taken into consideration the past activities of the petnr. in villages within the police stations of Naugachia & Bihpur. At the time of the passing of the order by the Dist. Mag. of Purnea, the petnr. was within his district. The order was for preventive detention, that is to say, it was meant for preventing the petnr. from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety & maintenance of order. The Dist. Mag, was, therefore, in my opinion, entitled to draw an inference from the past acts of the petnr. within those two adjoining police stations.

[12] The next contention of Mr. Ghosh was that whereas the order of detention served upon the petnr. was "with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State & maintenance of public order," the last paragraph of the grounds served upon the petnr. shows that the grounds were only in respect of preventing the petnr. from indulging in activities "prejudicial to the maintenance of public order." Mr. Ghosh, in these circumstances, argued that the grounds served upon the petnr. disclosed merely the grounds regarding "the maintenance of public order" & not regarding "the security of the State," & hence his contention was that all the grounds had not been served upon the petnr.; the authorities having apparently withheld some of the grounds for the detention of the petnr. It is now well settled that the authorities making the order are bound to communicate all the grounds to a detenu & cannot withhold any ground on the basis of which the order of detention has been passed. The question in the present case, however, is whether any ground has been withheld. Mr. Ghosh's contention is based upon a distinction which he seeks to make between "the security of the State" & "the maintenance of public order." It has been recently decided by a Division Bench of this Ct. in the case of Chandra Sekhar in Cri. Misc. Case No. 126 of 1950 : (A. I. R. (38) 1951 Pat. 389) that the expression "the maintenance of public order" is comprehensive enough to include the expression "the security of the State." The distinction which Mr. Ghosh, therefore, seeks to make is not supported by the authorities. Clearly, therefore, the conclusion must be that the grounds served upon the petnr. are the grounds upon which the order for the detention of the petnr. is based & there is no suggestion that there were other grounds as well which have been withheld.

[13] The next argument in support of the petn. was that the grounds of detention served upon the petnr. are too vague & indefinite to enable the petnr. to make an effective representation to the proper authorities as contemplated by the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. The grounds have been set out in the judgment of my learned brother & I agree with the conclusions arrived at by him that this contention must fail.

[14] My learned brother has dealt with the other aspects of the case presented to us in the course of the argument & I find myself in general agreement with him.

[15] For these reasons I find no justification for ordering the release of the petnr. I would accordingly dismiss this appln.

(b) Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 2 — Proceedings for contempt—Nature of.

Proceedings for contempt of Court are of a summary nature; such proceedings are not suitable for the decision of a hotly contested question of fact. [Para 3]

Anno. Cont. of Cts. Act, S. 2, N. 2, Pt. 21.

(c) Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 1 — Distinction between criminal and civil contempts.

There is a fundamental distinction between contempts that are criminal and those that are civil. The former consist in a conduct that offends the Majesty of Law and undermine the dignity of the Court. A civil contempt, on the other hand, is a failure to obey a Court's order issued for the benefit of the opposing party, and the principal object of a civil contempt is to secure the enforcement of the order. The Courts do not ordinarily interfere unless the disobedience is shown to be wilful. [Para 3]

Govt. Advocate and S. R. Ghosal — for the State ; S. C. Misra and B. K. N. Singh — for Resp.

Narayan J. — This is a rule calling upon one Dasrath Jha, who is one of the defts. in Title Suit No. 20 of 1950 pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dumka to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of Ct. The rule was issued on a report submitted to this Ct. by the learned Subordinate Judge, the report being that the deft. has been interfering with the Receiver's possession over the tank which is the subject-matter of the aforesaid suit. The suit is for recovery of possession of the said tank and for compensation, the contention of this deft. being that he was allowed to take possession of the tank by the manager or the agent of the pltf. who had promised to execute a lease in his favour. By an order dated 3-7-1950 one Babu Ram Narain Prasad, Pleader, was appointed the Receiver, and on 14-7-1950 he submitted a report to the learned Subordinate Judge that it had been reported to him by Mukhi Muchi & Jugal Misra whom he had deputed for announcing his appointment, that the deft. had prevented them from making the announcement & had refused to give possession of the tank to them as the Receiver's men. On that very date the deft. was directed to make over possession of the property to the Receiver, & the Receiver was directed to report by 20-7-1950 as to whether he had taken possession of the tank or not. On 25-7-1950, the Receiver reported to the learned Subordinate Judge that he had received a letter from the deft. on 14-7-1950 in which he had stated that the Receiver might continue in possession & that he would never interfere with his possession. The Receiver, however, further reported that his men, Jugal Misra & Mukhi Muchi had again been prevented by one Tope Singh from making the announcement & that about thirty persons had been found angling in the tank. Five out of these thirty persons were alleged to have told Jugal Misra that they had been angling with the permission of the deft. Jugal Misra & Mukhi Muchi filed affidavit before the learned Subordinate Judge in which they stated that they had been prevented from making the announcement by Tope Singh who is an employee in the tea-stall of Dasrath Jha, & three out of the five persons who are said to have admitted that they had been angling with the permission of the deft. also filed affidavits stating that they had caught fish with the permission of the deft. & that the defendant had taken his share out of the fishes caught. No counter-affidavit was filed by the deft., & the learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that though the deft. had undertaken not to interfere with the Receiver's possession he had actually interfered with his possession inasmuch as he had permitted other persons to fish in the tank.

[2] In this Ct., however, one counter-affidavit was filed on 21-11-1950 by one Sarbanand Missir on behalf of the deft. in which the allegations made against the deft. were controverted. On 14-12-1950, the deft. himself filed another affidavit in which he made the same statements which had been made by Sarbanand Missir in the affidavit filed on 21-11-1950. The contention of the deft. is that he has no concern whatsoever with Tope Singh, & that while Mukhi Muchi is a tenant of the pltf. & a servant in the pltf.'s estate, Jugal Missir is a sipahi in the pltf.'s estate. About Amal Chandra Roy, one of the three persons who are said to have fished in the tank, the contention of the deft. is that he is his sworn enemy and had filed a number of false complaints against him before the Provincial Congress Committee. About the two other persons who have sworn the affidavits, namely, Bhola Rakshit, & Nabanidhar Gorain, the deft. says that the former was himself an applicant for taking a lease of the pond in suit and that the latter is the pltf.'s raiyat & a thikadar of the timber belonging to the pltf. Dasrath Jha has made one very important statement in his affidavit, & it is this that when the fishing took place the Receiver himself was present.

[3] No doubt, it is a circumstance against the defendant that he did not file any counter-affidavit before the learned Subordinate Judge controverting the allegations which had been made by Jugal Misra, Mukhi Muchi, Bhola Rakshit, Nabanidhar Gorain & Amal Chandra Roy in their affidavits. But the position of an alleged contemner is not exactly that of an accused person, & unlike the latter he can always file an affidavit or make a statement on oath. As already pointed out, the deft. has been able to allege in this Ct. something against each of the deponents on whose affidavit reliance is placed on behalf of the State. It has been repeatedly pointed out that proceedings for contempt of Court are of a summary nature & that such proceedings are not suitable for the decision of a hotly contested question of fact. Of course, there is nothing to prevent us from taking evidence, & there is no hard & fast rule to the effect that no evidence can be taken. But the question is whether it would be desirable to hold an enquiry into the truth or otherwise of the statements made in the affidavits filed by Amal Chandra Roy & others. There is a fundamental distinction between contempts that are criminal & those that are civil. The former consist in a conduct that offends the Majesty of Law & undermine the dignity of the Ct. A civil contempt, on the other hand, is a failure to obey a Ct.'s order issued for the benefit of the opposing party, & the principal object of a civil contempt is to secure the enforcement of the order. The Cts. do not ordinarily interfere unless the disobedience is shown to be wilful. What is important to note in this case is that on 14-7 1950 this deft. had written a letter to the Receiver in which he had stated that as the tank had been put under the management of the Receiver, he would never go to the tank with the intention of fishing & that the tank would continue to be in the Receiver's possession. The Receiver had no doubt deputed two persons to announce his appointment by beat of drum, but it appears that he personally never went to the tank to take possession or to arrange for the fishing. It is a very striking circumstance that the Receiver never stated before the Ct. that he had been to the tank & that in his presence the deft. interfered with his management or possession. The Receiver has depended entirely on the report of the two persons one of whom is a drummer & the other, according to the allegation of the deft., a sipahi of the pltf.'s estate. We cannot at all be sure in this case that Jugal Missir & Mukhi Muchi are not persons connected with the pltf.'s estate & are persons who can be regarded as independent & disinterested & as such it will not, to my mind, be safe to act on the affidavits of these two persons; & it will be still more unsafe to act on the affidavits of the three other persons, Amal Chandra Roy & others. Regarding Amal Chandra Roy the deft. has been bold enough to state that he is his sworn enemy & had filed a number of false complaints against him before the Provincial Congress Committee. The deft. further says that he had filed a complaint against one Kalachand Chakravarti in which the charge was of black-marketing & that this Kalachand Chakravarti is the Mama (maternal uncle) of Amal Chandra Roy. Bhola Rakshit is said to be a dismissed compounder of the Dumka hospital & the allegation is that he had himself applied for a lease of this pond in suit. He was thus, according to the deft., a competitor for the lease of the tank in suit. Nabanidhar Gorain is said to be a raiyat & a thikadar of the pltf. It is to be noted that the pltf. is an absentee landlord, & it would appear from paragraph (1) of the plaint that he ordinarily resides in England & that his estate in Dumka is managed by his managers & agents. Amal Chandra Roy & others are not fishermen by profession, & it is very doubtful if the deft. would engage them for fishing in this disputed tank. Nabanidhar Gorain says in his affidavit that he had obtained a permit from the deft. for catching fish after he had paid the deft. Re: 1. If so, that permit ought to have been produced. If a permit had been issued by the deft. to Nabanidhar Gorain, there is no reason why similar permits should not have been issued to Bhola Rakshit & Amal Chandra Roy. Thus, some substantial criticisms can be advanced against the affidavits that have been filed by Amal Chandra Roy and others. Proceedings for contempt of Court, though not criminal, are of a quasi-criminal nature & therefore, where there is any reasonable doubt, the person charged with contempt is entitled to the benefit of such doubt. The circumstance that the Receiver himself never visited the tank & has not come forward with the statement that there was any interference by the deft. in his presence is by itself a very strong circumstance, & it appears to me to be quite unsafe to place absolute reliance on the affidavits that have been filed by Jugal Missir, Amal Chandra Roy & others. All Cts. before exercising their jurisdiction to commit for contempt have to act with care & circumspection, & on the materials that are available in the present case I am of opinion that the alleged contemner is at least entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt.

[4] I would, therefore, discharge this rule.

(a) Arbitration Act (1940), S. 21—Parties to submission.

It is not necessary that all the parties to a suit should concur in an application for an order of reference in order to make the submission valid; it is only necessary that all the parties who are interested in the subject-matter of the reference should join in the submission. An award, therefore, in arbitration in a suit for partition of joint Hindu family, cannot be held to be invalid merely because the transferees from a coparcener whose interest is, however, protected by the order given by the arbitrator, were not parties to the submission. When a partition is admitted or proved, the presumption is that all the property was divided, & if anybody alleges that family property in the exclusive possession of any of the members after the partition is still to be deemed as joint property liable to be partitioned, he has to prove that allegation. But there must be either a clear admission or a definite finding to the effect that there was a partial partition, & in absence of an admission on the point a finding with regard to it can be given only after a consideration of the evidence adduced. Narayan J. — This appeal is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, setting aside an award. The award had been given by one Mr. Anant Prasad who had been appointed an arbitrator by the parties of Partition Suit No. 5 of 1947, to decide the dispute which is the subject-matter of that suit. After the award had been submitted, the defendant No. 1 filed an objection & contended that the award was not fit to be accepted. This objection found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge who set aside the award & directed that the suit be heard on the merits.

[2] The pltfs & the deft. No. 1 are the descendants of one Babu Baij Nath Sahai. Baij Nath Sahai left two sons, Bhagwat Sahai & Bhawani Sahai. The pltf. No. 1 is the son of Bhawani Sahai, & the other pltfs. are the sons or grandsons of the pltf. No. 1. The deft. No. 1 is the son of Bhagwat Sahai, the other defts. being transferees from deft. No. 1. These other defts. never appeared in the suit, & on a petn. that was filed on 24-9-1947 by the lawyers representing the pltfs & the deft No. 1, the case was referred to arbitration & Mr. Anant Prasad, a common relation of the parties, was appointed the arbitrator. The award was submitted on 5-6-1948.

[3] The allegation of the pltfs. was that after the death of Bhawani Sahai, there arose a dispute between the mother of the pltf. No. 1 & the mother of the deft. No. 1, both the pltf. 1 & the deft. No. 1 being minors at the time, & because of the dispute the mother of the pltf. No. 1 left the ancestral house in Mahalla Shujaganj of the Bhagalpur town & began to reside in the garden house in Chunihartoli lane, & for the sake of convenience in cultivation, 60 bighas of land were divided, half & half, between the pltf. 1 & the deft. No. 1, & two houses in Chuniharroli lane were allotted to the mother of the pltf. No. 1 for her residence. This arrangement was alleged to have been made in the year 1906, & according to the pltfs.' case, all the remaining properties remained in joint possession of the pltfs. & the deft. though under the management of the deft. No. 1. This suit was instituted because the deft. No. 1 did not agree to a private partition.

[4] The deft. No. 1 was contesting the suit, & according to his allegation, there was a complete partition in 1906, as a result of which all the properties were divided between the pltf. No. 1 & the deft. No. 1. The deft's contention is that ever since the year 1906 he and the pltf. No. 1 have been in separate possession of the properties & have also alienated some of the properties allotted to their respective shares. The deft. No. 1 challenged the award on the following grounds : (1) that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct; (2) that the award is invalid because of an error of law apparent on the face of the award; & (3) that the award is bad in law because it affects the interests of certain persons who did not join in the reference.

[5] The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the contention that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct & also the contention that the award is bad because all the defendants had not joined in the reference. The learned Subordinate Judge has given good reasons to support his view that the arbitrator is not guilty of misconduct, that he had not got annoyed with deft. No. 1, & that he did not refuse to take oral evidence which the deft. No. 1 was prepared to adduce. These findings could not be seriously challenged before us, & we are in complete agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge on these points.

[6] There is also no merit in the contention that the award is bad because defts. other than the deft. No. 1 had not joined in the reference. The other defts. did not appear in the suit in spite of service of summons & with regard to the properties in respect of which there are transferees the order of the arbitrator is that they should be allotted to the share of the deft. No. 1. The arbitrator has also directed that if there be transferees from the pltfs. the properties transferred to such transferees will be allotted to the share of the pltfs. In Raghu Nath v. Ram Rup, 2 Pat. 777 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 33) it was pointed out that it was not necessary that all the parties to a suit should concur in an appln. for an order of reference in order to make the submission valid & that it was only necessary that all the parties who were interested in the subject-matter of the reference should have joined in the submission. This is a suit for partitioning the properties belonging to a Hindu family, & the real parties interested are only the pltfs & the deft. No. 1. In view of the directions given by the arbitrator the interest of the defts. other than the deft. No. 1 who are transferees from the deft. No. 1 will not at all be affected. These defts. did not put in appearance, & in fact, between them & the parties to the submission there is no matter in difference in the suit. The case of Muhammad Khalil v. Abdul Rahim, 7 P. L. T. 644 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 810) is also an authority to the same effect, & in view of the principles laid down in this case it is quite immaterial if the other defts. were no parties to the reference. Relying on this decision & also on the decision of Calcutta H. C. in Jadu Nath v. Kailash Chandra, 14 C. W. N. 75 : (37 Cal. 63), it was held in Md. Syed Khan v Abdul Gafoor, 10 P. L. T. 53 : (115 I. C. 680) that the award is binding as between the parties to the reference even if some of the parties interested were not parties to the submission. The award, therefore, cannot be held to be invalid because the defts. other than the deft. No. 1 whose interest is, however, well protected by the order given by the arbitrator, were not parties to the submission. The Privy Council decision in Ram Protap v. Durga Prasad, 53 Cal. 258 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 293) has no appln. in this present case, as will be clear from the perusal of the following observation made by their Lordships :

" In their Lordships' judgment such an award is in no true sense one made in obedience to the order of 23-5-1922. While it would not be easy to segregate the findings with reference to the matters in question in the suit from those not so in question—the findings in which Annardeyi was interested from those in which she was not—it is, their Lordships think, impossible to uphold an award in relation to a suit the conclusions of which were plainly coloured, if not dictated, by the view taken by the arbitrators of other questions between the parties or some of them to which the suit had no reference.'

Taking even a narrower view of the matter the award so far as it purported to constitute a new partnership, giving to a party who refused to come into it only rights which were far below those to which as a member of a dissolved partnership he was entitled, was not in their Lordships' judgment an award in any way contemplated or authorised by the order of reference."

[7] That was a suit in which there was a prayer for a dissolution of a family partnership and accounts. The members of the family referred to arbitration all matters in difference between them, & some of the difference so referred were not subject of the suit, and a member of the family who was not a party to the suit was interested in certain of them. The Court made an order referring to arbitrators all matters in difference in the suit between the parties to the suit, & the arbitrators made an award as to all the matters in dispute without determining between those which were the subject of the suit & those which were not. In such circumstances it was held that the award was " otherwise invalid ", & I have quoted a passage from their Lordships' judgment in which the grounds on which the award was set aside have been indicated by their Lordships. In Gopal Das v. Baij Nath, 48 ALL 239 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 ALL 238), it was held that a partner in a firm against which a suit was pending was not entitled, unless there was a deed of authority, to enter into an agreement to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration so as to bind the other patnr. or patnrs. who had not agreed to or joined in the appln. to refer. Their Lordships took the view that in such a case it was open to a patnr. who had not agreed to a reference to challenge in revision the award & the decree based thereon upon the ground that the reference was illegal. Sulaiman J. had to make the following observation in this case :

" Where the appct. challenges the proceedings of the Ct. itself & attacks the reference made by the Ct. to the arbitrator, it is not merely a question of a wrong decision by the Ct. but may be one of irregularity or illegality committed by it in the exercise of its jurisdiction. . . . . The objection is not as to the validity of the award only, but as to the illegality of the reference to the arbitration."

And Mukherjee J. observed as follows :

" In order to establish the proposition that one of the members of a partnership business could refer a dispute to arbitration on behalf of all the members of the partnership, something more than the rules enacted in O. 30, Civil P. C. should be pointed out."

This ruling has certainly got no appln. to this case. We are not in this case concerned with a partnership business or a firm, it being quite manifest in this case that the real parties interested in the litigation are the surviving descendants of Baij Nath Sahai.

[8] It is the other objection which is more important & which was strenuously pressed before us. The contention is that there is an error of law apparent on the face of the award & that the award is consequently liable to be set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that the arbitrator had laid down a wrong proposition of law, and that as that wrong proposition of law formed the basis of his award, the award was invadid. The wrong proposition of law which the arbitrator is said to have enunciated is that even when a partial partition is admitted, the onus is on the deft. to prove the allegation of private partition as made by him. The learned Subordinate Judge has also pointed out that the arbitrator has been inconsistent, inasmuch as though he has accepted the story of private partition of two of the houses in Chunihartoli lane, he has ordered a partition of all the houses. In my opinion, there is no such inconsistency in the award, & the arbitrator has not laid down any such wrong proposition of law which can be deemed to have affected his award. Nobody can dispute the proposition that when a partition is admitted or proved, the presumption is that all the property was divided, & if anybody alleges that family property in the exclusive possession of any of the members after the partition is still to be deemed as joint property liable to be partitioned, he has to prove that allegation. But there must be either a clear admission or a definite finding to the effect that there was a partial partition, & in absence of an admission on the point a finding with regard to it can be given only after a consideration of the evidence adduced. It is certainly a question of fact in this case as to whether in the year 1906 there was a partition of some of the properties or a temporary arrangement with regard to some of the lands for the sake of convenience in cultivation. It is now very well recognised that any arrangement for the sake of convenience in cultivation does not amount to a partition, & in this case the pltfs. had come forward with a clear allegation to the effect that in the year 1906 & after the death of Bhawani Sahai, 30 bighas out of 60 bighas of land in village Nanan Pair & Gaura were allotted to the mother of the pltf. No. 1 for his maintenance, and two houses in Chunihartoli were allotted to him for residence, & that similarly 30 bighas out of 60 bighas were allotted to the mother of deft. No. 1.

[9] There is a distinct averment to the effect that this partition was only a partial partition "for the sake of convenience." It appears from the plaint that the feelings between the two widows, namely, the mother of the pltf. No. 1 & the mother of the deft. No. 1, had run so high that even a respectable relation of theirs like Rai Bahadur Shiva Shankar Sahai thought it desirable that the mother of the pltf. No. 1 should leave the residential house & should remove to the garden house at Chunihartoli. As advised by such a respectable relation, the lady with her infant son shifted to the garden house at Chunihartoli, & evidently under pressure from such a respectable person, there was an arrangement made for the cultivation of the 60 bighas of land. Each branch had to maintain itself, and it is simply natural that a temporary arrangement should have been made for the cultivation of the lands. The usufruct of such valuable lands could not have been allowed to be wasted, & without some temporary arrangement it was impossible to cultivate the lands when there was such estrangement of feelings between the two widows. There is great force in the contention of the applts. that with the pltf. No. 1 & deft No. 1 as minors it was impossible to make a permanent partition. It is stated in paragraph 14 of the written statement that the feeling between the mother of the pltf. No. 1 & the mother of the deft. No. 1 "grew from bad to wrose in 1906 & so the respective mothers of pltf. No. 1 & deft. No. 1, both of them being then minors & unmarried, & as guardians of their respective sons requested Rai Bahadur Shiva Shankar Sahai to partition all joint family properties between pltf. No. 1 & deft. No. 1 . . . . . & that the shifting of the pltf. No. 1 & his mother to the garden house in Chunihartoli lane was a result of an out & out partition, which was done & carried out by Rai Bahadur Shiva Shankar Sahai with the help of his brother Babu Anant Prasad."

[10] It is noteworthy that even according to the deft's. version the feelings between the two widows were very much strained, & the pltf. No. 1 & the deft. No. 1 were minors in the year 1906 when the private partition is said to have been effected. While it is quite probable that for the purposes of cultivation & residence some arrangement should have been arrived at, it is difficult to believe that a person of the status of Rai Bahadur Shiva Shankar Sahai would have a permanent partition made during the minority of the pltf. No. 1 & the deft No. 1. At any rate, it was a question of fact as to whether the pltf's. version that there was a partial partition in the year 1906 "for the sake of convenience", or the deft's version that there was a complete partition in that year of all the joint family properties was correct, & I fail to understand how the arbitrator can be said to have committed an error of law, if he has held, after a consideration of the evidence & the materials on the record, that the deft. had failed to prove that there was an out & out partition in or about the year 1906. If the arbitrator says that in 1906 the pltf. only got 30 bighas of land out of 60 bighas in villages Nanan Pair & Gaura & some houses in Chunihartoli lane, & the rest of the properties remained joint under the management of the deft. No. 1, that only shows that he has accepted the pltf's. version which is not that there was a complete partition but an arrangement for the sake of convenience. I need not repeat that the expression "for the sake of convenience" has been used in the plaint itself, and the arbitrator could not & has not attempted to make out a case for the pltfs. which they themselves had not made out. It is only a question of accepting the pltf's version or the deft's version, & certainly if the pltf's version is accepted, the question whether, because of an admission or proof of a partial partition, the onus will shift on the pltf. to show that there was a partition of all the joint properties does not arise.

[11] In this view, I am of the opinion that this is not a case in which it can be urged that the arbitrator has committed an error of law. There is no inconsistency in the decision of the arbitrator if he has ordered the partition of all the houses after holding with the pltf. that he had got the houses in Chunihartoli for temporary residence by him and his mother. This was also an arrangement which had to be made for the residence of the pltf. on account of the strained relations between the two widows after the death of:Bhawani Sahai. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan, 29 Cal. 167 :

: (29 I. A. 51 P. C.) the arbitrator had to give his award on the whole case, and he being the Judge of law as well as fact a mere error of law committed by him cannot vitiate his award. The Judicial Committee in Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Ballo Spinning & Weaving Co. Ltd., 47 Bom. 578 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 66) referred with approval to the following observation of Williams J. in the case of Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857) 3 C. B. (N. S.) 189 : (140 E. R. 712).

"The law has for many years been settled, & remains so at this day, that, where a cause or matters in difference are referred to an arbitrator, whether a lawyer or a layman, he is constituted the sole and final Judge of all quessions both of law and of fact .....The only exceptions to that rule, are cases where the award is the result of corruption or fraud, & one other, which, though it is to be regretted, is now, I think, firmly established, viz., where the question of law necessarily arises on the face of the award, or upon some paper accompanying & forming part of the award. Though the propriety of this latter may very well be doubted, I think it may be considered as established."

[12] In a very recent case Durga Prosad Chamria v. Sewkishendas Bhattar, 54 C.W.N. 74 :(A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 334), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows:

"However that may be, their Lordships are satisfied that the two points of law as to which it is said that the arbitrator's error vitiates the award were specifically referred to him to decide &, if this is so, it would be contrary to well-established principles such as are laid down in In re King and Duveen, (1913) 2 K. B. 32 : (82 L. J. K. B. 733) and F. R. Absalom, Ltd. v. Great West (London) Garden Village Society, (1933) A. C. 592 : (102 L. J. K. B. 648) for a Court of law to interfere with the award even if the Ct. itself would have taken a different view of either of the points of law had they been before it."

In this case it was a partition suit which was referred to the arbitrator, & as already pointed out there were two versions put forward by the contending parties. What has happened is that the arbitrator has accepted one of the versions; & this cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as a case in which the arbitrator can even be said to have committed an error of law. No Court will review the arbitrator's conclusions or findings if he has acted within his authority & according to the principles of justice & behaved fairly to both parties. The plea of misconduct has been overruled in this case, & there is no "legal misconduct" in this case. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the decision is vitiated because it is based on a wrong proposition of law enunciated by the arbitrator appears to me to be altogether unsustainable. In the result, I am of opinion that the award is fit to be acted upon & a decree should be pronounced in terms of it.

[13] The appeal is allowed with costs, and it is directed that a decree would be passed and prepared in terms of the award; and thereafter the usual proceedings for the division and allotments would be taken.

Criminal P. C .(1898), S. 203 — Enquiry under — Nature of.

A complainant is entitled to have his complaint properly considered before it is dismissed under S. 203. While no one wishes to place a person accused of an offence to suffer undue harassment, so far as a Ct of law is concerned, its function is essentially to see that cases are disposed of according to law. It is not right for a Mag to make enquiries under S. 203 in such a fashion that from the record it cannot be said whom he examined and what was the source of his information. Private enquiries, which may involve extra-judicial information, are dangerous in any event. (Para 2)

ORDER: This is an appln by the complainant against the order of the Subdivisional Mag, Arrah, dismissing his complaint under S. 203, Cr. P. C. The Ses J. was moved to order further enquiry, but he declined to do so. It is best to quote the order of dismissal in full as it is a short order:

"Complainant's case is that he went with his labourers to collect Mahua when he saw the accused collecting his Mahua fruits. The complainant objected. The accused became ready to assault him. I have made enquiries in to this case & I have cross-examined the complainant. The cross-examination has revealed that the complainant & the accused are both claiming the Mahua fruits. The record shows that one of the co-sharers is dead & accused Ramjanam is claiming his share on his behalf. The complainant also admits that the complainant & the accused are fighting since a long time. The present dispute of Mahua is absolutely of civil nature & I see no substance in the complaint & dismiss it under S. 203, Cr. P. C."

(2) The statement made by the complainant on solemn affirmation shows that he alleged that Ramjanam was instigating & the other two accused pushed him & threw him down. The petn of complaint alleged that offences under Ss. 323, 504 & 379, I. P. C., were committed. Whatever the dispute about the fruit & the mahua tree may be, there is not a word in the order of dismissal of the complaint — which shows that the Subdivisional Mag at all had in mind as to whether an offence punishable under S. 323, I. P. C. had been committed in view of the assertion of the complainant that he had been thrown down & pushed by two of the accused at the instigation of Ramjanam. I think the complainant is entitled to have his complaint properly considered before it is dismissed under S. 203 of the Code. While no one wishes to place a person accused of an offence to suffer undue harassment, so far as a Ct of law is concerned, its function is essentially to see that cases are disposed of according to law. I have very grave misgiving as to whether it is right for a Mag to make enquiries in such a fashion that from the record it cannot be said whom he examined & what was the source of his information. The Subdivisional Mag was no doubt entitled to make an enquiry, but he should have made the enquiry in such a manner as to give the complainant full knowledge of the nature of the enquiry & the source of the information which the Mag possessed in order that the complainant may know what exactly the Mag discovered which justified him in dismissing his complaint. Private enquiries, which may involve extra-judicial information, are dangerous in any event.

(3) The Mag states that he has cross-examined the complainant. I do not know under what procedure this cross-examination was done when the complainant was making his statement on solemn affirmation in support of his complaint. I do not think the Mag really intended to say that he had done cross-examination in the real sense. He may have put a few questions in order to elucidate the nature of the complaint & from the answers to those questions, the Mag may have come to the conclusion that the dispute about the mahua fruit was of a civil nature. It is difficult, however, to say that the order of dismissal as it stands today at all discloses as to what was the view which the Mag took concerning that part of the incident narrated by the complainant, namely that he was pushed & thrown down by two of the accused persons at the instigation of Ramjanam. In my opinion, the complaint has not been considered in accordance with law & the order of dismissal must be set aside. I would accordingly send the case back to the Subdivisional Mag for further enquiry when he should deal with the complaint & dispose it of according to law.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 212 of 1948, D/- 10-10-1950.

Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act VII (7) of 1938 — Rules under-Rules 19 (2) and 19 (3) — Difference — Refund of excess amount — Claim by assessee not necessary under R. 19 (2).

The proviso to R. 19 (3) is completely at variance with R. 19 (2). The former rule contemplates that no refund can be allowed unless and until a claim has been made, and provides that such a claim must be made within a certain limited period. The latter, on the other hand, imposes an obligation on the tribunal which deals with the matter to cause a refund to be made, and by implication to be made immediately without any claim by the assessee. Moreover, when an assessee appeals against an assessment, there is implied in his appeal a claim to a refund of any sum which he may already have paid in excess. (Para 1)

Rajkishore Prasad, Balram Kumar Sinha and Rai Parasnath, for Petnr — Advocate General and R. Prasad, for the State of Bihar.

ORDER: In our opinion, the first of the two questions referred by the Board of Revenue should be answered in the affirmative, & the second in the negative. Section 27 (2), Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, 1938, imposes an obligation on the Agricultural Income-tax Officer to refund any amount which may have been paid by an assessee in excess. Sub-R. (2) of R. 19 imposes a similar duty on the Bihar Assistant Comr of Agricutural Income-tax & the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax. In every case in which one of these tribunals is satisfied that the sum paid is in excess of what ought to have been paid, it is its duty to cause a refund to be made by the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Officer concerned. In the present case, the reason, presumably, why the assessee did not apply for the return of the excess amount he had paid as soon as the Assistant Comr allowed his appeal was that the department carried the matter to a higher tribunal. It was convenient to the assessee and also certainly to the department for him not to do so. However that may be, R. 19 (2) certainly imposed a duty on the final tribunal, namely, the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax, to cause a refund to be made. The proviso to R. 19 (3) is completely at variance with R. 19 (2). The former contemplates that no refund can be allowed unless & until a claim has been made, & provides that such a claim must be made within a certain limited period. The latter, on the other hand, imposes an obligation on the tribunal which deals with the matter to cause a refund to be made, &, by implication to be made immediately. The learned Govt Advocate appearing for the State of Bihar has invited our attention to S. 48 & S. 50 of the Indian Income-tax Act. Mr. Mitra is, no doubt, correct in saying that the draftsman of the rules under the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act had Ss. 48 & 50, Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, before him when he drafted R. 19. The draftsman, however, omitted to notice that refunds other than refunds of the kind referred to in S. 48 (2), Indian Income-tax Act are dealt with in the other sections contained in Chapter VII of the Act. It seems quite clear that S. 50 was intended to apply only to cases in which a claim had to be made for a refund, as, for instance, where double tax had been paid in India & in Pakistan, or in India & in the United Kingdom. In such a case, it is reasonable that if a claim for refund is not made within a certain period, the claim should not be entertained. When, however, an assessee appeals against an assessment, there is implied in his appeal a claim to a refund of any sum which he may already have paid in excess. The reference is disposed of accordingly. The petnr is entitled to his costs. The hearing fee is assessed at Rs. 100/-.

(2) Mr. Rai Paras Nath states that a sum of Rs. 100/- was deposited as costs, or as security for costs, in favour of the Board of Revenue. This amount must, of course, be refunded to him on an appln made to the Board of Revenue.

Where a receiver fails to pay the amount due from him as directed by the Ct appointing him and the Ct directs the receiver's property to be attached and sold, the matter comes directly under O. 40, R. 4 (b) and not under S. 47. Such an order is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (s) and not as an order passed under S. 47 having the force of a decree. The order passed on appeal from such order becomes final as an order passed on appeal in an appealable case. Second appeal is incompetent. (Para 2)

S. Mustafi, for Applt — S. K. Mazumdar, for Resp.

B. P. SINHA J: This is an appeal by the Receiver in a litigation. He had been called upon by the Ct appointing him as such to pay a certain sum of money to the resp who had worked for him as a lawyer in the case. This Second Appeal purports to have been made under the provisions of S. 47, C. P. C., but, as will presently appear, it is manifest that the second appeal is incompetent.

(2) In a certain partition suit, the applt was appointed a receiver by the Ct. As a Receiver, he engaged the resp as his lawyer. For professional work done by the resp, the applt owed him money. The resp put in a petn in Ct either to grant him permission to sue the Receiver for his dues or to direct the Receiver to pay his arrears of fees. The Ct accepted the second prayer of the lawyer, & ordered payment of the amount found outstanding by the Ct on the bills submitted by the lawyer. As the amount was not paid as directed by the Ct, the resp proceeded to execute that order by attachment & sale of the Receiver's property. In the Ct of first instance, the only objection raised on behalf of the Receiver judgment-debtor was that the property sought to be proceeded against should be valued under the provisions of the Bihar Money-Lenders Act. The Ct overruled that objection, holding that that Act had no application to the nature of the dues owing to the resp. Hence, the Ct directed that the valuation as stated by both the parties would be entered in the sale proclamation. An appeal was taken to the learned Dist J. of Bhagalpur who dismissed it after overruling all the objections raised before him on behalf of the applt. It is not necessary to reiterate here all the objections raised by the applt in the lower appellate Ct. It was contended in the Ct below on behalf of the Receiver that the lawyer could not levy execution by treating the order of the learned Subordinate Judge as a decree for payment of money. The learned Dist J. has pointed out that the right of the lawyer to receive the money from the Receiver had not been seriously challenged: what was challenged was the method of realisation. The Ct of appeal below has pointed out that, under O. 40, R. 3 (c), it is within the competence of the Ct appointing the Receiver to direct him to pay such amount as may be due from him. The lower appellate Ct has found that the Ct below acted in accordance with the provisions of R. 3 of O. 40. There was no appeal taken from the order passed upon the Receiver to pay the amount in question to his lawyer. In the Cts below, it appears that the matter was treated as one under S. 47, C. P. C. That appears to have been a mistake, because the matter comes directly under the provisions of R. 4, O. 40 which provides that, where a Receiver fails to pay the amount due from him as the Ct may have directed, the Ct may direct the Receiver's property to be attached & sold, & the sale proceeds applied to liquidate the amount due from the Receiver. It may be that both the parties were under a misapprehension of the exact legal position. But it appears to me that the order passed by the Ct of first instance would come within the purview of R. 4 (b), O. 40, Civil P. C. such an order is appealable as an order under the provisions of O. 43, R. 1 (s). It is clear, therefore, that the order passed by the Ct of first instance was appealable as an order & not as an order passed in S. 47 proceedings having the force of a decree. The order passed by the learned Dist J., therefore, became final as an order passed on appeal in an appealable case. It is manifest, therefore, that no second appeal lies.

(3) But Mr. Mustafi, the learned counsel for the applt, has contended that in that event this appeal should be treated as an appln in revn, & he has contended that the Ct of first instance had no jurisdiction to proceed against the so-called judgment-debtor, without first finding that the Receiver had failed to carry out the orders of the Ct to pay a certain sum of money. In the events which have happened there is no doubt that the conditions laid down in Rr. 3 & 4 of O. 40 have been satisfied; but even then it will be open to the applt to move the Ct of first instance to grant him sufficient time to pay the dues of the resp who worked for the Receiver as his lawyer. But it must be held that there is no want of jurisdiction in the Ct of first instance to proceed as it did in enforcing payment of the money directed by it. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed but, in the circumstances, without costs. If the applt does not pay the amount within the time to be fixed by the Ct below, the execution proceedings will naturally proceed.

The State v. Vishwanath Prasad Varma and another, Opposite Party.

Original Criminal Misc. No. 8 of 1950, D/- 27-10-1950.

Contempt of Courts Act XII (12) of 1926, S. 2 — Ct cancelling bail and remanding accused to jail custody — Flouting of such order by responsible officer of Ct — Contempt of Ct.

A bail granted to an accused was cancelled and a warrant for intermediate custody of the accused to a sub-jail was handed over to the Ct Sub-Inspector. Instead of complying with this order the Ct Sub-Inspector approached the

Sub-Divisional Officer to get an order for detention of the accused in the Ct-Lock-up. The Sub-divisional Officer without even varifying the statements contained in the petn filed on behalf of the accused purported to pass an order merely for the asking of the Ct Sub-Inspector under Rr. 9 and 164 A of the Rules for the Superintendence and Management of the Jails, directing that the accused may be sent either to the Central Jail or in the Ct-lock-up. The Ct Sub-Inspector then sent the accused to the Ct-lock-up:*

Held that the act of the Ct Sub-Inspector amounted to a clear disregard of the Ct's order and amounted to a Contempt of Ct; (Para 4)*

Held also that the Sub-divisional officer who was a responsible officer, ought not to have acted in the way that he acted and should not have allowed himself to be led away by the Ct Sub-Inspector who was out to see that the accused may not be sent to jail in spite of the order of the Ct. His action therefore also amounted to a contempt of Ct. (Para 6)*

Govt Advocate, for Opposite Party.

RAI J: In this case a rule had been issued by this Ct against Shri Vishwanath Prasad Varma, Ct Sub-Inspector of Police, Bettiah, & Shri Balaram Sinha, Sub-divisional Officer, Bettiah, to show cause why they should not be convicted for contempt of Ct for disobeying, evading or interfering with the course of justice.

(2) A case under Ss. 342, 392 & 323, I. P. C. was pending against one Rasdhari Singh, a constable of the local Police Station, in the Ct of Shri Viswanath Mishra, Munsif-Mag of Bettiah. The accused constable was continuing on bail granted by the learned Munsif-Mag. On 1-8-1950, an appln was moved before the trial Ct on behalf of the complainant mentioning that the accused constable was holding out threats to the prosecution witnesses & the lawyers. This appln was supported by five affidavits sworn by the prosecution witnesses & two affidavits sworn by the lawyers whom threats had been held out by the said Rasdhari Singh. The learned Munsif-Mag, after considering the matter, cancelled the bail of the accused. As usual a warrant for intermediate custody was issued on 1-8-1950, which has been exhibited in this Ct as Exh. 3. This warrant for intermediate custody was issued to the officer in charge of the Bettiah sub jail. On 2-8-1950, an appln was moved by the complainant before the trial Ct that the said Rasdhari Singh, who had been remanded to the jail custody had not been sent to Jail but was roaming about in the Ct. The learned Munsif-Mag at once called for a report from the Ct Sub-Inspector to whom he had handed over the accused with the custody warrant. He also called for a report from the jailor. The Ct Sub-Inspector reported that he had handed over the under-trial prisoner to Shri Vishwanath Prasad Varma & the latter in his report said that he had kept the under-trial prisoner in Ct-lock-up under the orders of the Sub-divisional Officer.

(3) The learned Munsif-Mag, after considering the explanation of the Ct sub-Inspector, Shri Vishwanath Prasad Varma, took his statement in open Ct on 3-8-1950 at about 12 hours. He was informed that even up to that date the under-trial constable Rasdhari had not yet been sent to Motihari Jail. The learned Munsif-Mag was of opinion that the Ct Sub-Inspector, Shri Vishwanath Prasad Varma, had intentionally flouted the orders of the Ct. He, however, reported the case to the Dist & Ses J. of Champaran for necessary action who has forwarded the matter to this Ct for appropriate action. This Ct issued the rule as mentioned above. The Ct Sub-Inspector as well as the Sub-divisional Officer have filed show-cause petns before this Ct. They both pleaded not guilty.

(4) I first propose to deal with the show cause petn of Shri Vishwanath Prasad Varma, the Ct Sub-Inspector of Bettiah. His statement was taken on 3-8-1950, before the learned Munsif-Mag. We have also examined him in this Ct. From his statement I am definitely of opinion that he was trying his best that evening to favour the under-trial prisoner, Rashdari Singh, in utter disregard of the order of the learned Munsif-Mag. From his evidence, as taken down in this Ct it is quite clear that he received the warrant of custody at 5 or 5.30 p.m. He says that he was shown an appln to be moved on behalf of the under-trial prisoner that he should not be removed to the Bettiah Sub jail. He gave an excuse before us that it was on account of that appln that he delayed sending the prisoner to Bettiah Sub jail, but I do not think that this was the real cause. Mr. A. A. Khan, Second Officer, who was in charge of the work of the Sub-divisional Officer at Bettiah at that time was, according to him, not approached till 6 or 6.30 p.m. Mr. Varma was the senior Ct Sub-Inspector in charge of the Bettiah Ct. He was so much partial to Rasdhari Singh that he also went to Shri Balaram Sinha, the Sub-divisional Officer, to get an order for detention of the under-trial prisoner in the Ct-lock-up. This act of his is a sufficient demonstration of his anxiety to so manoeuvre the whole thing that in spite of the order of the Munsif-Mag the under-trial prisoner may not be sent to Bettiah Sub jail. He anyhow persuaded Shri Balaram Singh to pass the order, Ex. 2. To me it appears that from the very inception he was trying to undo the order passed by the learned Munsif-Mag for the removal of Rasdhari Singh to jail custody. In my judgment his action amounts to a clear disregard of the Ct's order. He has, therefore, committed the offence of contempt of Ct. Though in this Ct he has tendered an unqualified apology, but in the circumstances of the present case I am of opinion that this apology is not a sufficient punishment so far as he is concerned. I, therefore, convict him under S. 2, Contempt of Cts Act XII (12) of 1926 & sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 25/- or in default to rigorous imprisonment for one week.

(5) As regards the explanation submitted by Shri Balaram Sinha, the Sub-divisional Officer of Bettiah, I may say that the order passed by him does not befit an officer of his position. We have examined him in this Ct & from his evidence it has been amply demonstrated that he passed the order merely for the asking of the Ct Sub-Inspector & the lawyer for the accused. He did not even take the trouble to verify the statements contained in the petn Ex. 1. The reason given by Rashdari Singh in the petn for not being sent to Bettiah Sub jail was that he had recently arrested about half a dozen dacoits who had been lodged in that jail. He pleaded in that petn that if he would be sent there his life would be endangered. The petn had been carefully kept vague regarding the dacoits & the place of dacoity . Shri Balaram Singh has admitted in his evidence that he did not know from before if the constable had arrested any dacoit who was lodged in the Bettiah Sub jail at that time. Neither the jailor nor the Superintendent of the Sub-jail was consulted in this matter. The Sub-divisional Officer claimed to have passed the order under Rr. 9 & 164 A of the Rules for the Superintendence & Management of the jails & Subsidiary jails in Bihar. These rules run as follows:

"9. Ordinarily the Sub-divisional Officer shall hold control of the local subsidiary jail & be the superintendent thereof. But at places where a civil assistant Surgeon is employed, he shall be the superintendent of the subsidiary jail, & the Sub-divisional officer shall exercise in regard to the subsidiary jail the same functions as are exercised by the Dist Mag in regard to a district jail. The local Govt may, however, appoint any other officer to be the superintendent of a subsidiary jail in lieu of either the Sub-divisional Officer or the civil assistant surgeon."

"164 A — When a large number of under-trial prisoners is arrested the Sub-divisional Officer may, in order to avoid serious overcrowding in the sub jail, commit, at his discretion, any of such prisoners to custody in the central or Dist jail to which the sub jail is affiliated, instead of in the sub jail. In such a case when, owing to the lack of sufficient escort or for any other reason, it is impossible to commit the prisoners direct to the central or Dist jail & they are therefore committed to custody in the sub jail, the Sub-divisional Officer may, when the necessary arrangements have been made, recommit the prisoners by warrant to custody in the central or Dist jail.

Whenever arrangements are made by the police to arrest a large number of prisoners at the same time, the officer making the arrangements should, if possible, inform the Sub-divisional Officer in advance & should at the same time make arrangements to supply a police guard to escort the prisoners to the central or Dist jail, or to assist in guarding the sub jail, if it should be necessary to commit the prisoners to the sub jail."

(6) To me it appears that there was no justification for passing the order, Ex. 2, which runs as follows:

"C. S. I. will take charge of the accused. He (accused) may be sent to Motihari Jail or may be kept in the Ct-lock-up."

He admitted in his evidence that the Ct Sub-Inspector could by this order keep Rashdhari Singh in the Ct-lock-up & not send him to Motihari Jail at all if he liked. In my opinion, if the matter would not have been brought to the notice of the learned Munsif-Mag subsequently, the accused might not have been sent to Motihari Jail. To me it appears that the Sub-divisional Officer was simply led away by the Ct Sub-Inspector who was out that evening to see that anyhow the constable may not be taken to jail against the specific orders of the Munsif-Mag. Though the learned Sub-divisional Officer in his evidence in this Ct said that he did not know as to what orders had been passed by the Munsif-Mag, but as a responsible officer he ought to have known it & he ought not to have acted in the way that he has acted in this case. In his case, however, I am prepared to accept the unqualified apology tendered by him.

Criminal Revn. No. 811 of 1950, D/- 13-11-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 209 — Sufficient grounds for committing the accused — Duty of Ct.

It is certainly open to a Mag holding a preliminary enquiry in a case triable by a Ct of Sessions to examine the credibility of the testimony of witnesses, but he can do so, only for the limited purpose of seeing whether there is a 'prima facie' case for commitment and not for the purpose of coming to a decision whether the accused is actually guilty. His function is to see whether the case is a fit one for trial or commitment, and not whether the case is a fit one for conviction. Therefore, if there are two views possible of the evidence, although the Mag may be inclined to a view in favour of the accused, he should not, merely on that account refuse to commit the accused so long as there is a possibility of another view being taken by the Ct which finally comes to try him. It is only where, on the evidence on record, no other view is possible except the one in favour of the accused, that a Mag should refuse to commit such a case because there is really no evidence for trial. ORDER: The petnr in this case has moved against an order of the Dist Mag of Champaran directing the commitment of the petnr accused for trial before the Ct of sessions for a charge under S. 376, I. P. C. The Dist Mag has passed the order of commitment after setting aside an order of discharge passed by Mr. A. A. Khan, Mag of the First Class, Bettiah, who held an enquiry under Chapter XVIII of Cr. P. C.

(2) The allegation against the petnr is that on 20-9-1949, at about 9 a.m. he committed rape upon the complainant Mt. Kaushalya. This occurrence took place in village Telpore, about eight miles off from police station Laurya & twenty-two miles away from the Sub-division of Bettiah. The complaint was lodged by the girl on 21-9-1949, in Ct, which the Sub-divisional Mag referred for investigation to the local police without taking any steps to have the girl examined by a medical officer. The Sub-Inspector of Police received the order on 27-9-1949 when he recorded a first information & proceeded to investigate the case. The medical examination of the girl actually took place on 1-10-1949, almost ten days after the occurrence. The evidence of the doctor is that the girl is below the age of 16 years. A number of prosecution witnesses have been examined in the case, two of whom purport to be eye witnesses to the occurrence itself; & the evidence of the girl as also that of the eye-witnesses is sought to be corroborated by the evidence of some other witnesses to whom the girl stated about the occurrence. The learned Dist Mag has observed that 'prima facie' the evidence of the eye witnesses is corroborated by some of the circumstances in the case, such as the absconding of the accused & the recovery of broken pieces of bangles from sugar cane field. He, therefore, thinks that 'prima facie' it was a case which should have been committed for trial & the learned Mag acted erroneously in discarding the prosecution evidence on balancing of probabilities. The learned Dist Mag has pointed out that although a committing Ct has every right to weigh the evidence before him in order to find out whether a 'prima facie' case has or has not been made out for the trial of the accused, he has no right to substitute his own judgment for the final judgment of the Ct which is competent to hold the trial. He has also pointed out certain errors in the judgment of the learned Mag in his appreciation of the evidence on the record.

(3) It is unnecessary for me to discuss the merits of the evidence & to make any observation which may be calculated to prejudice the trial of the accused. It seems to me that the view taken by the learned Dist Mag of the functions of a committing Ct is perfectly justified & is supported by numerous authorities of this Ct as also of other Cts. The main function of a committing Ct is to see whether the evidence is such that the accused should be sent up for trial or not. If he thinks that the evidence is of such a nature, then merely because ,as a trying Ct, he himself might not have been prepared to accept that evidence, he cannot discharge the accused. It may be that the trying Ct may take a different view of the evidence from the one which has been taken by the Mag himself. His function is to see whether the case is a fit one for trial or commitment, & not whether the case is a fit one for conviction. Therefore, if there are two views possible of the evidence, although the Mag may be inclined to a view in favour of the accused, he should not, merely on that account refuse to commit the accused so long as there is a possibility of another view being taken by the Ct which finally comes to try him. It is only where, on the evidence on record, no other view is possible except the one in favour of the accused, that a Mag should refuse to commit such a case because there is really no evidence for trial These propositions appear to have been well settled by various decisions of this Ct. In 'Moinuddin v. Sheogobind Sahu', A I R (28) 1941 Pat 505: (42 Cr L J 576), Meredith J. observed as follows:

"If the Mag, after weighing the evidence, is satisfied that it is evidence upon which no reasonable Ct could convict, it is his duty to discharge, but if it is a case of balancing probabilities, estimating pros & cons; if it is a case where a different Ct might possibly in his opinion come to a conclusion different from his own, then it is his duty to commit where the evidence is sufficient for conviction even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction."

(4) Again, in 'Ganga Prasad v. Bhagwat Deo', A I R (29) 1942 Pat 38: (42 Cr L J 767). Dhavle J. observed that it was the duty of a Mag making an enquiry under Chap 18 to decide on the materials before him whether or not there were sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, there could be no question that he was 'not only entitled but also bound to consider the evidence & weigh it. It is quite clear, however, that he must do so in order to discharge the limited duty laid upon him, & not by way of trying the case.

"Therefore, if the evidence was balanced however, unevenly in his opinion, then it was a matter which had to be tried, & it was the duty of the Mag to commit it for trial & not to discharge the accused."

This is what the learned Mag appears to have done, namely, that he has balanced the evidence in the light of probabilities. It may be that the sessions Ct may, in spite of these probabilities accept the direct evidence of the prosecution witnesses. The Mag in fact, as the learned Dist Mag points out, & there may be much substance in the reasons which he has advanced, relied upon probabilities which do not appear to carry much weight with the latter. My observations on this point should not be, in any manner, construed to prejudice the case of the accused, but I am only referring to it in order to illustrate the point that it was possible &, in my opinion, very reasonably possible to take a different view of the evidence, as the learned Dist Mag appears to have done. Reliance was placed upon a decision of this Ct, in 'Mander v. Karu Mander', 6 P L T 146: (A I R (12) 1925 Pat 279: 25 Cr L J 1089), & another decision of this Ct in 'Tincouri v. Emperor', 1 P L T 153: (A I R (7) 1920 Pat 46: 21 Cr L J 328). These decisions stand on their own facts & the propositions laid down there need not be disputed. As I have said, it is certainly open to a Mag holding a preliminary enquiry in a case triable by a Ct of sessions to examine the credibility of the testimony of witnesses, but he can do so, only for the limited purpose of seeing whether there is a 'prima facie' case for commitment & not for the purpose of coming to a decision whether the accused is actually guilty. It is true that this Ct has got full jurisdiction under S. 437, Cr. P. C., to revise the commitment order, under S. 436, made by a Dist Mag both on points of law as well as of facts. I have cursorily glanced through the evidence &, for the present, I am not inclined to differ from the view taken by the learned Dist Mag. The decision in 'Tincouri's case', (1 P L T 153: A I R (7) 1920 Pat 46: 21 Cr L J 328), was one in which Jwala Prasad J. pointed out that the evidence was such that no Ct would, upon the evidence, feel any hesitation in acquitting the accused. For these reasons, I am not inclined to interfere with the order passed by the learned Dist Mag. The rule is accordingly discharged.

JUDGMENT: The pltf has filed this appeal against the judgment & the decree of the Addl Subordinate J., Bhagalpur, reversing those of the Munsif of Madhipura.

(2) The pltf filed the suit for declaration of his title to & recovery of possession of 13 kathas & 8 dhurs of land out of an area of 1 bigha 5 khata which he claimed to have been sold to him by a registered sale deed dated 12-1-1948. There are some other facts relevant to the case which may shortly be stated as follows. One Janak & his cousin Uchit jointly took settlement of about 3 bighas 9 kathas 18 dhurs of land in the name of Janak. On 8-12-1947, Janak sold 1 bigha 5 kathas to the deft for Rs. 1000/-. The deft was to discharge the mtge debt over this property which was encumbered by a mtge transaction dated 29-4-1940, for a sum of Rs. 200/-. The pltf was the mtgee under the said mtge bond. The case of the pltf is that after the execution of the sale deed on 12-1-1948, he paid Rs. 313/- in cash, Rs. 337/- was to be set off towards the dues of the mtge bond of 29-4-1940, & Rs. 50/- was to be paid at the time of receiving the receipt from the deft. As the pltf fell short of the amount of Rs. 50/- at the registration office, he agreed to pay it to the deft at the village & get back the receipt.

(3) It appears that there developed some estranged feeling between the pltf & the deft on 12-1-1948, which appears from the circumstances enumerated below. On 13-1-1948, the deft lodged a sanha at the police station which runs as follows:

"Entry No. 177 at 12 hours. Uchit Tatwa, son of Bansi Tatwa of Dhurgaon Mainirathi reported that his one head of bullock of the following description strayed from Madhipura since 12-1-1948."

The sanha thereafter gave the description of the bullock, its price being mentioned as Rs. 250/-. On 13-1-1948, a notice (Ex. 4 C on the record) was sent to the pltf by a pleader on behalf of the deft calling upon him to pay Rs. 250/- as the price of the bullock which the pltf had borrowed from the deft & which, according to the information of the pltf had strayed away. On 20-1-1948, a notice was given by a pleader of the deft calling upon the pltf to pay the consideration money of Rs. 600/-. The relevant portion of the notice runs as follows:

"From the instruction of my client, it appears to me that you got a sale deed executed by my client in respect of 13 kathas & 8 dhurs of land for a cash consideration of Rs. 600/-. But the consideration money was not paid at the time of the execution of the sale deed & you asked for the receipt from my client to take back the deed. That my client did not make over the receipt. Thereupon, you left the place in great annoyance & kept with yourself the former sale deed of my client. My client always asked you for payment of the consideration money & for return of the former sale deed. But you did not pay the money. Hence, through this notice you are hereby informed to pay the consideration money of Rs. 600/- & to return back the former sale deed to my client within two weeks from the date of the receipt of the notice & to obtain the receipt for the withdrawal of the sale deed, otherwise, my client will have the aforesaid sale deed "cancelled". Be it known that you did not derive any title to the land on the ground of the execution of the sale deed. The said sale deed neither was nor would be valid without the passing of the consideration money."

The present suit was filed by the pltf on 21-1-1948.

(4) The deft contested the suit. His case was that it was agreed between the parties that, after payment of the full consideration money, the pltf would come in possession of the property. He further contended that the terms noted in the sale deed had not been explained to him. He further challenged the case of the pltf that only Rs. 50/- had remained to be paid to the deft out of the consideration money of the sale deed.

(5) The trial Ct accepted the case of the pltf & decreed the suit with costs. On appeal the Addl Sub-ordinate Judge has taken a different view of the evidence. He has come to the conclusion that the pltf's case of payment of Rs. 213/- at the time of the execution of the sale deed has not been substantiated. He has further come to the conclusion that, as there was no endorsement on the mtge bond, it could not be deemed to have been satisfied. He has further held that title did not pass by execution of the document, which was to pass on payment of the consideration money. In that view of the matter, he allowed the appeal & dismissed the suit.

(6) Before this Ct Mr. S. N. Dutta, the learend counsel for the applt has contended that the finding of the lower appellate Ct regarding the non-payment of Rs. 213/- at the time of the execution of the sale deed as is the case of the pltf is vitiated because it has relied upon the evidence of defence witnesses 2 & 3 to hold that in fact Rs. 213 was not paid at the time of the execution of the sale deed, though those two witnesses had admitted in their evidence that they had arrived at the place at a later stage. They, according to him, were not competent to disprove the case or the pltf that he had paid Rs. 213/- at the time of the execution of the bond. He urged that the case should be remanded to the lower appellate Ct for fresh hearing. From the judgment of the learned Addl Sub-ordinate J. it appears, however, that he has come to that conclusion by taking into consideration other pieces of evidence as well apart from the evidence of defence witnesses 2 & 3. The relevant portion of his finding runs as follows:

"I have given a serious consideration on the oral evidence in this case. There seems no reason to disbelieve the evidence of D. Ws. 2 & 3 who are admittedly the attesting witnesses of this document. Besides, the circumstances discussed above disprove payment of Rs. 213/- at the time of execution of the sale deed. I disagree with the finding of the learned Munsif & accepting the oral evidence on behalf of the deft I hold that Rs. 213/- was not paid at the time of execution."

In my opinion, it is not a case which I should remand for reconsideration of the evidence on the point of payment of Rs. 213/- at the time of the execution of the sale deed as is the case of the pltf.

(7) But as regards the other findings of the learned Addl Subordinate Judge, I am inclined to accept the submission of the learned counsel for the applt. Mr. Dutt has contended that from the sale deed itself it is clear that out of the consideration money of Rs. 600/-, Rs. 337/- was set off towards the mtge dues of the pltf. So, according to him, even if the finding of the lower appellate Ct regarding the non-payment of Rs. 213/- at the time of the execution of the bond were to stand, it was a case where a substantial portion of the consideration money had in fact been paid. The relevant portion of the sale deed dated 12-1-1948, runs as follows:

"I, the executant, require money for payment of mtge-debt under a deed executed by Janak Podar in favour of Babu Rajkumar Singh, purchaser of Sch. 2 (i.e.) a sum of Rs. 200/- (principal) besides interest, in all Rs. 337/- (three hundred & thirty seven); I am also in urgent need of money for household expenses. As a matter of fact, the aforesaid mahajan is ready to file a suit also which, if instituted, will cause great loss to me. Therefore, I, the executant, have of my accord & free will, in a sound state of body & mind, without coercion, pressure & intimidation on the part of anybody, executed this sale deed in favour of the aforesaid claimants in respect of the land specified above in Sch. 2 for a consideration of Rs. 600/-, half of which comes to Rs. 300/- & received the full amount in this way that I left Rs. 337/- (three hundred & thirty seven) in deposit with the aforesaid claimant (or vendee). The aforesaid vendee will set off the said amount, against the mtge debt & keep the mtge bond with himself as evidence of payment & received Rs. 263/- (two hundred & sixty three) in cash. Thus, I have received Rs. 600/- (six hundred). Now, not a single farthing is due from the aforesaid claimant. I, the executant, or my heirs & representatives, shall not put forth any claim on the score of non-payment of the aforesaid consideration money. If at any time (I, the executant, my heirs or representatives) do make any such claim, it is & will be deemed null & void. I have put the said vendee in possession & occupation of the vended property in my place. The aforesaid claimant should on payment of the zamindar's rent appropriate the produce of the aforesaid land, generation after generation, both in the male & female lines."

(8) Mr. Dutt has contended that from the recital in the sale deed as quoted above it is clear that the non-endorsement of the payment of Rs. 337/- on the back of the mtge bond in question would not change the position. The sale deed whose validity the pltf has accepted clearly shows that Rs. 337/- was to go to discharge the dues of the pltf. The mtge bond was to be kept in possession of the pltf himself. Hence, according to him, non-endorsement or non-tearing of the mtge bond would not change the position. In my opinion, there is much substance in the submission of the learned counsel. To me it appears that Rs. 337/- will be deemed to have been paid out of the consideration of Rs. 600/- which was the consideration under the sale deed in question. Mr. Dutta has further submitted that, according to the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, his client would be deemed to have acquired interest in the property vended. He further stressed that the pltf's claim for possession cannot be defeated for non-payment of the balance of the consideration money. Mr. Dutt further relied upon several decisions of this Ct in support of his contention that title would be deemed to have passed to the purchaser if part payment of the consideration is established. He relied upon the cases of 'Ramdhari Rai v. Gorakh Rai', 10 Pat 264: (AIR (18) 1931 Pat 236); 'Radhamohan v. Bipin Behari', 17 Pat 318: (AIR (25) 1938 Pat 505); & 'Pirtam Singh v. Jagannath', 27 PLT 426: (AIR (34) 1947 Pat 1). He contended that unless there was an intention on the part of the parties to the contract that title would not pass until the entire consideration money had in fact been paid, the title of his client could not be defeated. He further contended that he was all along anxious to pay the balance of the consideration money. In fact, the present suit was filed within nine days of the execution of the sale deed which showed the anxiety of his client to complete the transaction by paying the balance of the consideration money. The cases referred to above do support the contention of the learned counsel. In my opinion, in the circumstances of the present case title would be deemed to have passed by the execution & registration of the bond.

(9) Mr. Dutt further contended that from the notice (Ex. 4 (b)) which was sent by a pleader to the pltf, it was clear that there was no such intention that the title would not pass until the entire consideration had been paid. He referred to the various passages from the said notice which has already been quoted in the judgment. From the wording of this notice it is clear that there is no mention in it that it was the intention of the parties that title would not pass until the entire consideration money had been paid, though there is a mention that title to the land would not pass on the ground of the execution of the sale deed. But that is a different thing altogether. If in fact there was such an intention, it must have been mentioned in the notice sent by the pleader which was a very important aspect of the contract between the parties.

(10) The learned counsel for the resp, however, relied upon the case of 'Md. Murtaza v. Abdul Rahman', 27 Pat 122: (AIR (36) 1949 Pat 364). He contended that almost under similar circumstances a D. B. of this Ct had held in that case that title would not be deemed to have passed. He in that connection drew my attention to the judgment of, Meredith, J., in that case the relevant portion of which runs as follows:

"Once it is shown that what is stated in the document, though clear in itself, is not correct in relation to the existing circumstances, or unmeaning in reference to existing facts, then the problem arises as to what, by making these incorrect statements, the parties really meant.

The statements being incorrect a latent ambiguity arises. In this view there is a latent ambiguity in the present document, & that being so, we are, in my view, entitled to turn to extraneous evidence. Once we can do that, we can take into consideration the fact that the consideration was not paid, 'as bearing on the intention of the parties', & we can also take into consideration two other admitted facts, that the vendor retained the sale deed all along & never made it over to the vendee, & possession, though stated to have been delivered was never delivered."

It may be noted that the suit which had then come up in appeal before this Ct had been filed about eleven months after the execution of the sale deed in question. Therefore, the circumstances, the factum of non-delivery of the original document of sale, & non-delivery of possession, were considered relevant for the purposes of determining what was the intention of the parties. In the present case the suit has been filed only nine days after the sale, and, hence, those circumstances are of not much importance here.

(11) It, therefore, cannot be said that the circumstances lead to the conclusion that it was the intention of the parties that title would not pass until the entire consideration money had been paid. In the case of 'Md. Murtaza v. Abdul Rahman', 27 Pat 122: (A I R (36) 1949 Pat 364) & in the case of 'Motilal v. Ugrah Narain', (A I R (37) 1950 Pat 288) no consideration had passed at all.

(12) As regards the case of 'Motilal Sahu v. Ugrah Narain', (A I R (37) 1950 Pat 288) it may be mentioned that there the suit had been filed three years after the execution of the sale deed & so the delay in bringing the suit in that case might have been considered as a circumstance to show that it was not the intention of the parties that title would pass after the execution of the sale deed. The learned counsel for the resp relied upon the case of 'Raju Mahton v. Hossaini Mian', 59 I C 171: (A I R (7) 1920 Pat 774). In that case, however, the suit was filed ten years after the execution of the sale deed. Jwala Prasad, J., while delivering the judgment, observed as follows:

"It appears to me that the mere registration of the document in this case did not pass the title to the pltfs. Although more than 10 years after the execution of the sale deed have elapsed no attempt was made until the institution of the present suit by the pltfs to recover possession of the property or to enforce their right under the deed. The finding of the Ct that they were never in possession shows clearly that they never thought that they had acquired any title under the sale deed in question. It is impossible to conceive that a vendee would sleep over his right after paying the consideration money, for many years.

"I do not propose to discuss the various authorities on the point, for the principle appears to be simple & well established. Each case has to be determined according to the circumstances of that case, showing the intention of the parties."

The learned counsel for the resp further relied upon the case of 'Rasikananda v. Gangadhar', (1 Cut L T 1), but the facts & circumstances of that case are distinguishable. The relevant portion of the judgment of their Lordships in that case may be quoted as follows:

"The contract having been reduced into writing its terms must be sought from a consideration of the writing itself & having regard to the words which I have quoted that after taking from you the balance of Rs. 900/- we make you owner in possession thereof they clearly imply that the transfer of title & the payment of the Rs. 900/- were to be contemporaneous.....This is a simple case of a contract reduced into writing the terms of which are to be found from study of the writing & nothing else & to my mind the terms of the writing are quite specific.

This really concludes the case. The pltfs have not parted with their money nor have the defts parted with their title. Accordingly to my mind the suit should have dismissed."

But in the present case there is no such specific term in the sale deed in question. Hence, this case cannot come to the rescue of the deft-resp.

(13) In my view, the finding of the learned Addl Sub-ordinate Judge that the title would not be deemed to have passed to the pltf after the execution & registration of the document is not correct & must be set aside. The result is that the appeal succeeds in part & the suit of the pltf is decreed in a modified form. He is entitled to get possession after depositing the balance of the consideration money. As he has already deposited Rs. 50/- he may further deposit the remaining sum of Rs. 213/- before taking delivery of possession. Mr. Dutt is prepared to deposit the money in this Ct to the credit of the deft-resp. He is permitted to do so within one month from today. In the circumstances of the present case each party will bear its own costs throughout.

N. Bagchi and R. K. Bagchi, for Applt — Lalnarain Sinha and R. S. Sinha, for Resp.

C. P. SINHA J: The deft is the applt in this second appeal having lost in both the Cts below. The pltf Dulhin Butani Kuer, daughter of one Dwarka Choudhury, had brought this suit for declaration of her title to & recovery of possession over the disputed lands together with mesne profits on the allegation that the deed of gift dated 28-2-1921 & the bazidawa dated 13-3-1939, were fraudulent, illegal & void.

(2) The pltf's case was that the property in suit belonged to her father Dwarka Choudhury, who died leaving behind him his widow Mt. Gango Kuer & his daughter, the pltf Mt. Gango Kuer, on the death of Dwarka Choudhury, succeeded to his properties. As she was a purdanashin lady, her affairs were looked after by the deft who was a son of her sister's husband & this deft lived with her although he was a resident of another village. The deft was able to get deed of gift executed by the said Mt. Gango Kuer on 28-2-1921 in his favour, transferring to him all the properties left by Dwarka Choudhury & which are the subject matter of this suit. The pltf further alleged that fraud had been committed by the deft upon Mt. Gango Kuer in getting this deed of gift executed in his favour. Mt. Gango Kuer died in the year 1934 & the pltf succeeded her as the only daughter left by Dwarka Choudhury. She lived at her husband's place & the management of the properties was, as before, left with the deft. It is further said that the pltf who also is a 'purdanashin' lady, was fraudulently induced to execute a deed of 'bazidawa' dated 13-3-1939. Some two years before the suit, when the deft stopped giving produce of the lands to the pltf & when she attempted to take khas possession, she was resisted by the deft who disclosed the nature of the two documents on the basis of which he asserted title to the properties in suit.

(3) The defence was that the pltf was not the daughter of Dwarka Choudhury & that Mt. Gango having died in the 1928, the suit, which was brought in the year 1945, was barred by limitation & adverse possession. It was further alleged that the deft was the son-in-law of Dwarka Choudhury, the last male holder, having married his only daughter named Mt. Lagni & that the two ladies, namely, Mt. Gango Kuer & the pltf had, with full knowledge & free will & after having independent advice, executed the two documents in question in his favour. It was also said that the pltf had relinquished all her rights in the properties by means of the 'bazidawa', aforesaid, & that no title was left with her.

(4) The Cts below have concurrently found that the pltf is the daughter of Dwarka Choudhury & that Mt. Lagni, the wife of the deft was not his daughter & consequently the deft was not the son-in-law of Dwarka Choudhury; that Mt. Gango Kuer died in 1934 & so the suit was not barred by limitation or adverse possession. The Cts below have also found that no fraud was committed by the deft in getting the two deeds, & deed of gift & the deed of 'bazidawa', executed by the two ladies in his favour. The finding of the final Ct further is that Art. 91, Limitation Act has no application.

(5) The learned counsel for the applt has contended, firstly, that upon the findings the deed of gift by the pltf's mother to the deft being a valid document & the pltf not having repudiated the same — rather having affirmed the said gift by her 'bazidawa' deed of 1939 — she was not entitled to maintain the present suit, &, secondly, that the suit was barred by three years' limitation under Art. 91, Limitation Act.

(6) It is true that under the Hindu Law an alienation by a widow of her husband's estate without legal necessity is not altogether void but only voidable by the next reversioner. He may affirm it or he may treat it as nullity. If the reversioner elects to affirm the alienation, he & the persons taking under him are precluded from exercising his or their rights to avoid the alienation & from questioning the transaction, (Ramgouda Annagouda v. Bhausaheb', 54 I A 396: A I R (14) 1927 P C 227). It appears however that this point was not raised by the deft at any stage of the litigation & if this point had been a question of law, pure & simple, the applt had been entitled to raise this point even in second appeal. In my view, however, the determination of this point depends upon the finding of fact — whether or not this deed of 'bazidawa' was executed by the pltf, a 'purdanashin' lady, with the knowledge as to the import of the document she was executing. As the point was not raised in the manner in which it is raised before this Ct, there was no consideration by the Cts below as to whether or not the pltf had substantially understood her rights & that she was in any manner affecting her rights by executing this deed of 'bazidawa'. Although independent legal advice is not in itself essential, "the disposition made must be substantially understood & must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it". ('Wajid Khan v. Ewaz Ali Khan', 18 I A 144: 18 Cal 545 P C). This view of the matter was re-affirmed by the P. C. in the case of 'Kundal Lal v. Mt. Musharrafi Begam', 63 I A 326: (A I R (23) 1936 P C 207). The only points pressed before the Cts below were, the question of limitation & whether Mt. Lagni, the wife of the deft, was the daughter of late Dwarka Choudhury; & no other point appears to have been pressed there. I, therefore, find that the question of affirmance of the deed of gift by the pltf cannot be gone into at this late stage in second appeal & I would accordingly hold that there is no merit in the first contention of the applt.

(7) It has been urged by Mr. Bagchi, the learned counsel for the applt that the suit is barred under Art. 91, Limitation Act. I find, however, that this point had been expressly abandoned by the applt in the Ct below, as the Ct below says:

"Before me three years' limitation under Art. 91, Limitation Act has not been urged. Probably the learned Advocate accepted the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point."

In view of the fact that deft had accepted the finding of the trial Ct on the question of applicability of Art. 91 to this case, I do not feel inclined to let the applt re-open the matter once again before this Ct. The applicability of Art. 91 will depend upon, whether or not the terms of the deed of 'bazidawa' were understood by the pltf at the time she was executing that document, that is to say, whether this document was executed after the pltf had understood the 'pros' & 'cons' of the transaction into which she was entering. I have already said that in the Cts below the question, whether the pltf had understood the terms of the document, was not raised. The applt, therefore, is not entitled to raise that point once again in this Ct when he had abandoned this point in the Cts below. In the view I take, it is not necessary to decide, whether the deed of relinquishment, by which no title to any property was conveyed, is covered by the provisions of Art. 91, Limitation Act.

(8) The result is that the appeal fails & it must be dismissed with costs.

Brahmadeva Narayan and Rameshwar Prasad Sinha, for Applt — S. N. Banerjee, for Resp.

B. P. SINHA J: This is a decree-holder's appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Arrah, dated 8-5-1948, partly allowing objections under S. 47, C. P. C. raised on behalf of the resp judgment-debtor.

(2) It appears that the applt instituted a suit for partition of properties said to have been joint family properties against a number of defts, including deft 5, Bansidhar Sahu, the resp in this case, who happens to be the nephew of her husband. The suit related to many items of immovable property as also of movables, including ornaments & pieces of furniture & clothing. The matter came up to this Ct on appeal from an order passed by the Ct below refusing to record a certain compromise. That case was Misc App No. 454 of 1945. A D. B. of this Ct succeeded in getting the applt, who was then also the applt & deft 5 to agree to certain terms of compromise which are as follows:

"1. That Mt. Bilas Devi shall be declared entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 125/- (one hundred & twenty five) a month which shall be payable to her on the 7th of each English calendar month.

2. That the lady shall also get Rs. 5,000/- & the same shall be paid to her by deft 5 at the rate of Rs. 2,000/- a year & the balance of Rs. 1,000/- shall be paid in the third year after the first two instalments have been paid. The first two thousand rupees is to be paid on or before 15-1-1948, the second instalment on or before 15-1-1949, & the balance on or before 30-6-1949. In the event of non-payment of any of the instalments, the lady shall be entitled to realise the whole amount then due by execution.

3. That the lady shall also be paid Rs. 1,400/- on account of ornaments. Rs. 700/- must be paid by the deft 5 on or before 15-7-1947, & the balance of Rs. 700/- on or before the 15-1-1948. In the event of non-payment of the first instalment on the date fixed, the lady shall be entitled to realise the whole of Rs. 1,400/- by execution.

4. That it is also agreed that the lady shall be entitled to live in the house situated in Mahalla Abarpool in the town of Arrah. Neither the lady nor any of the parties to the suit shall be entitled to sell the house during the lifetime of the lady.

5. That, in the event of these instalments not being paid to the lady, interest shall run at six per cent from the date of default.

6. That the lady is entitled to arrears of maintenance at this rate from 7-4-1945. Respondents, 6, 7, 9, & 11 are minors. They are not a party to this compromise. They are not affected by this."

(3) The matter did not rest there. The two parties aforesaid appeared before the Ct where the suit was pending, & a decree was passed in the suit itself, recording the terms of the compromise aforesaid. As the judgment-debtor, deft 5, did not pay the amounts covered by the terms of the compromise, the decree-holder was compelled to take out execution, which was numbered as Exen. Case No. 4 of 1948. She claimed a total sum of Rs. 11,079/6/- being made up of the cash amounts mentioned in the terms of the compromise as also interest accrued due thereon plus arrears of maintenance for 34 months at the rate of Rs. 125/- per mensem with interest. The judgment-debtor filed an objection petn under S. 47 of the Code, contending, inter alia, that the decree-holder was not entitled to realise the several sums constituting her total claim as laid in the execution petn, without having recourse to a separate suit, & that the decree passed in the partition suit was "quite illegal & invalid & inexecutable". The judgment-debtor further contended in his objection that the decree passed was against law, as laid down in O. 23 R. 3, C. P. C. & as such it was unenforceable. The question was also raised that the decree-holder was not entitled to any interest either on the sums of 1,400 or 5,000 or on the amount of maintenance.

(4) The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the judgment-debtor's objection that the decree was inexecutable as a whole. But the Ct below tion. As we propose to send this case back for a fresh decision, it will be open to the decree-holder to agitate this matter in the Ct. below, & the judgment-debtor cannot have any grievance on the score that he had no notice of that contention.

[3] Coming to the question of valuation of the property, it appears that the decree-holder sought to proceed against 71 bighas and odd out of the block of 144 bighas on the basis of the valuation arrived at by the Ct. during the execution proceedings, namely, Rs. 500 per bigha. That area perhaps would have been enough to liquidate the entire decree. But I find that, on material questions, the parties relied upon only affidavits and counter affidavits. The Ct. below was trying the case on the original side, & the persons who swore the affidavit & other competent witnesses could very well have been put in the witness-box, & subjected to cross-examination by the opposite party. That has not been done in this case. It is, therefore, directed that the case be re-heard by the Ct. below on evidence regularly recorded. The Ct. must make an attempt to come to a judicial finding as to the real value of the property. The proceedings under S. 13 (S. 16?), Bihar Money-Lenders Act are not a mere formal proceeding but a judicial proceeding meant to arrive at a fair valuation of the property, so that neither the judgment-debtor nor the decree-holder might be prejudiced.

[4] The orders passed by the Ct. below are, therefore, set aside, & the proceedings directed to be heard afresh. Costs here & in the Court below will abide the result.

Misc. Appeals Nos. 89 and 90 of 1950, D/- 14-12-1950.

(a) Bihar (War Acquisition of Property) Compensation Rules, 1943, R. 20 — Appeal against award filed beyond time—Delay if can be condoned under Limitation Act (1908), S. 5.

Limitation for an appeal against an award in a land acquisition case made under R. 75A, Defence of India Rules, read with S. 19, Defence of India Act, is prescribed by R. 20 Bihar (War Acquisition of Property) Compensation Rules, 1943. By virtue of the said R. 20, such an appeal is to be preferred within six weeks of the receipt by the parties of the notice of the signing of the award. Where, therefore, an appeal is filed beyond six weeks from the date of the receipt of the notice, the appeal is beyond time. And the delay cannot be condoned under S. 5, Limitation Act 1908, as that section has, by reason of S. 29, no application to such an appeal. [Para 6]

Anno. Lim. Act, S. 5, N. 4.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 29 — Special Law.

A special law means law enacted for special cases in special circumstances as distinguished from the general law which applies generally. Thus, the Limitation Act is an example of the general law of limitation which applies to all classes of cases dealt with by the Act. While, the rules framed under the Defence of India Act containing provisions about limitation are rules made for purposes of emergency & the exigencies of the War. And such provisions do come within the purview of special law within the meaning of S. 29. [Para 5]

Anno. Lim. Act. S. 29, N 6.

(c) Bihar (War Acquisition of Property) Compensation Rules, 1943, R. 20 — Applicability of rule to award arising in case instituted before rules were promulgated.

Even where the case in which an award is made is instituted before the Bihar (War Acquisition of Property) Compensation Rules, 1943, were promulgated, yet if the award comes into existence after those rules have been framed it will come within the mischief of those rules & an appeal against an award will be governed by R. 20. [Para 6]

Jyotirmoy Ghosh and S. S. Rakshit — For Applt.; Government Pleader — For Resp.

B. P. Sinha J.—These two cases raise questions of first impression which do not ordinarily arise in these Cts. The questions which arise in both these cases are (1) whether S. 5, Limitation Act, can be applied to them, & (2) whether, if we decide that the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, are available to the applt. in the peculiar circumstances of these cases, the delay in filing the two appeals should be condoned.

[2] The facts of these two cases are similar except in one respect that, whereas Misc. Appeal 80 of 1950 arises out of the award in Land Acquisition Case No. 40 of 1946 arising out of Case No. 1 of 1943-44, Misc. Appeal 90 of 1950 arises out of Land Acquisition Case No. 39 of 1946 arising out of Case No. 1 of 1942-43. This difference has been sought to be made use of by the learned Cousel for the applt. as will presently, appear. The other facts of the case may be stated as common to both the cases as follows : Two appeals were filed on 21-3-1950 from two awards dated 13-12-1949, of the District Judge of Bhagalpur under R. 75A, Defence of India Rules, read with S. 19, Defence of India Act. On 14-12-1949, the applt. made an appln. for a certified copy of the awards. The requisite stamps were notified on 22-12-1949, & were delivered on 23-12-1949. The copy was ready for delivery on 7-1-1950, & was actually made over on 9-1-1950. The formal notice of the signing of the award was served on the applt., according to the affidavit, on 6-1-1950, though, according to the statement of the learned Advocate for the applt. it was on 7-1-1950. The statement on affidavit may be acted upon in preference to the statement at the Bar. The learned Stamp Reporter made a report to the effect that, as the appeals had been filed beyond six weeks from the date of the receipt of the notice of the signing of the award, they were out of time. After that report of the Stamp Reporter, these applns. under S. 5, Limitation Act, have been made for condoning the delay, & the grounds stated for doing so are that, to the petnr's knowledge, there was no limitation for filing appeals provided under the Defence of India Act or the rules made thereunder; and that the petnr. was advised by his lawyer, a pleader of Bhagalpur, which advice he acted upon, that the ordinary period of ninety days provided for filing appeals to this Court would be applicable, & that he would get the benefit of the time requisite for obtaining a certified copy.

[3] There is no doubt that, if the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, can be invoked in aid of the petnr. in the special circumstances of this case, sufficient grounds had been made out for condoning the delay. It has taken us some amount of research to find out the relevant provisions of the law regulating to appeals to this Ct. from an award of the nature aforesaid. It is true that neither the Defence of India Act nor the rules made thereunder by the Central Government contain any provisions relating to the period of limitation for filing appeals against an award of the nature contemplated by the Act and the rules. By a notification, dated 26-5-1943, by the Govt. of Bihar published in the Bihar Gazette (Extraordinary) of that date, rules have been framed called the Bihar (War Acquisition of Property) Compensation Rules, 1943. Rule 18 is in these terms :

"When the Arbitrator has made his award, he shall sign it and shall give notice in writing to the parties to the reference of the making and signing thereof. He shall also send a copy of the award to the person or persons to be compensated and forward to the Collector, the award in original together with the records of the proceedings."

And R. 20 which is the rule providing for a period of limitation, is in these terms :

"Any appeal against the award of the Arbitrator shall be preferred within six weeks of the receipt by the parties of the notice referred to in R. 18."

[4] The relevant portions of S. 29, Limitation Act, are in these terms :

"(2) Where any special or local law prescribes for any suit, appeal or appln. a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the first schedule, the provisions of S. 3 shall apply, as if such period were prescribed therefor in that sch. & for the purpose of determining any period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law :

(a) the provisions contained in S. 4, Ss. 9 to 18, & S. 22 shall apply only in so far as, & to the extent to which, they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law; &

(b) the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply."

It will be seen from the provisions, quoted above, of S. 29, Limitation Act, that if these rules are within the purview of the words "special or local law" then S. 5, Limitation Act, is entirely out of the way. The sections of the Indian Limitation Act like S. 4, Ss. 9 to 18 and S. 22 are to apply not entirely but only to the extent they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law.

[5] It was attempted to be argued on behalf of the applt. that the special rule of limitation provided by the rules aforesaid do not come within the purview of special or local law & that, therefore, S. 29, Limitation Act, cannot stand in the way of the applt. But, in my opinion, there is no substance in this contention, because a special law means law enacted for special cases in special circumstances as distinguished frem the general law which applies generally. The Limitation Act is an example of the general law of limitation which applies to all classes of cases dealt with by the Act. The rules framed under the Defence of India Act were rules made for purposes of emergency & the exigencies of the war.

[6] It was next contended on behalf of the applt. that at least one of the cases, namely, Misc. Appeal No. 90, arose out of Case No. 1 of 1942 43 before the rules in question were promulgated. But the award has come into existence after those rules have been framed. Hence the award in question comes within the mischief of the rules which came into existence some years before the awards were made. Hence, the decision of a Division Bench of the Madras H. C. in Kollegal Silk Filatures Ltd v Province of Madras, I. L. R. (1948) Mad. 490 : (A.I.R. (36) 1949 Mad. 39) is of no assistance. In view of these considerations, it must be held that the applt. is not entitled to the benefit of S. 5, Limitation Act. The appeals must, therefore, be held to be barred by the special rule of limitation laid down by the rule quoted above made under the Defence of India Act.

[7] The appeals must, therefore, be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1949, D/- 21-12-1950, from judgment of Meredith J., D/- 26-7-1949.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 72—Money paid under illegal agreement—Recoverability.

Where money is voluntarily paid under an illegal agreement which has been carried into effect, the money so paid cannot be recovered back, if parties are in pari delicto & they had knowledge of the illegality of the agreement before payment.

Per Reuben J. — The principle applies whether money was paid under a contract or not.

[Paras 12, 21]

Anno. Con. Act, S. 72 N. 1.

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 65 — Applicability.

The provisions of S. 65 apply to a case only if the parties are competent to contract & the agreement, though void from its inception, is discovered, after they have acted on the faith of it to be not enforceable by law. It has no application where the parties, though competent to contract, were in pari delicto & they knew the unlawfulness of the agreement before they acted on it. Nor does it apply where the object of the agreement was illegal to the knowledge of both parties & they acted on it or derived benefit therefrom : A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 403, Expl. & Distd.

[Para 14]

Per Reuben J. — Section 65 cannot help a party where there is lack of mutuality, i. e., where he cannot himself restore the benefit he has received under the contract he cannot also recover the money he has paid under it. A further difficulty will arise for the application of the section when on his own argument there is no contract, for when there is no contract the section cannot apply. [Para 23]

Anno. Con. Act, S. 65 N. 1.

(c) Letters Patent (Patna), Cl. 10 — Points on which appeal may be heard.

Where a question raised for the first time in the appeal is a pure question of law, & can be decided on the findings of the Cts. below without investigation of any further fact, the applt. can be allowed to argue the question in the Letters Patent Appeal.

B. C. De & P. K. Bose — for Applt.; K. C. Sanyal & S. C. Mazumdar — for Resp.

Jha C. J. — This is an appeal by the deft. under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of this Ct. The pltf.'s suit is for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 646 (details of which are given in the schedules to the plaint), alleged to have been illegally realised from him by the deft. for the supply of electricity.

[2] The pltf. is a businessman & runs a flour Mill & also a business for charging batteries on a commercial basis. The deft. is a limited liability company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, (hereinafter referred to as "the Company") & supplies electricity in the Jharia Coal-fields & other places under a license granted by the Govt. of Bihar in 1941, under the Electricity Act, 1910 (IX [9] of 1910). The license lays down the rates at which electrical energy can be supplied by the Company to consumers for "domestic" purposes & for "power" purposes. Cl. 10 of the license fixes the limits of the prices to be charged by the company for energy supplied by it. The rates are classified under two heads; (1) Domestic Supply, & (2) Power. The rates for "domestic supply" are :—

	"Per unit Rs. a. p.
(a) Light & fans (subject to discount of 25 per cent. on bills paid within 10 days of presentation). . .	0 7 0
(b) Refrigerating, heating & cooking (subject to a discount of 25 per cent. on bills paid within 10 days of presentation	0 3 0
& the rates for "power" are :	Per unit
(a) Energy used at any time during the day or night (subject to a discount of 25 per cent. on bills paid within 10 days of presentation) . .	0 4 0
(b) Energy used only between the hours of 10 p. m. & 5 p. m. of the following day (subject to a dsicount of ½ anna per unit on bills paid within 10 days of presentation)	0 3 0

etc , etc., etc."

[3] On 6-7-1942, the Bihar Electricity Control Order, 1942, made by the Governor of Bihar in exercise of his powers under R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules, was published. Cl. 3 thereof lays down the limits of supply of energy to industrial undertakings, and reads thus :

"No supplier shall distribute energy for power to any industrial undertaking except in such quantities & at such times & under such conditions as may be directed :

(a) by the Provincial Govt. in respect of any case on class of cases;

(b) by the Electric Inspector & Electrical Engineer, Bihar, in respect of such cases or class of cases as may be specified by the Provincial Govt."

In January 1943, the pltf. filed three requisitions for the supply of electrical energy, (1) for domestic purposes (2) for a flour mill & (3) for battery charging, & though no supply for battery charging was sanctioned by the Provincial Authority, the Company provided the pltf. with electricity for the three different purposes regulated by three different meters, for which he had to pay at three different rates. The supply started from February 1943, & went on up to June 1943 the charges were for lights & fans at 7 annas per unit under the heading "domestic purposes", & under the heading "power", for battery charging at 3 annas per unit, & for the flour mill at the special contractual rate of 2 annas per unit, subject to the usual rebates.

[4] Mr. Sims, the then Electrical Engineer & Electric Inspector to the Govt. of Bihar, came to know that energy was being supplied to the pltf. for battery charging, & he directed that the supply for battery charging be stopped. His instructions to the company were that if consumers wished to utilise energy for battery charging, they should do so from the energy supplied for "domestic" purposes & within the limits imposed by the Control Order. Interpreting the view of Mr. Sims to be that it was open to the Company to permit consumers to use for commercial purposes energy supplied for 'domestic" purposes within the prescribed limits the Company published a general notification on 24-5-1943, in a local newspaper, stating inter alia :

"consumers are hereby informed that on & from 1-7-1943, the following rates will be charged for energy consumed : (1) for battery charging, radios & other unessential purposes at annas seven per unit."

[5] On 29-5-1943, the Company also served a notice on the pltf. that the charge for current used for battery charging would be increased from 3 annas to 7 annas per unit. The pltf. thereupon wrote to the Company a protest letter objecting to the increase, but, in spite of the protest, he used the energy for battery charging & paid at the increased rate with the surcharges, which the Company purported to charge under Cl. 10, Electricity Control Order.

[6] The present suit was brought, as already stated for recovery of Rs 646, as set out in the different schedules to the plaint. The case of the pltf. is that he is entitled to claim the refund with interest inasmuch as the payments were made under protest.

[7] The trial Ct. dismissed the suit with regard to the claim for refund of the money paid as the price of energy for battery charging (as set out in Sch. A), surcharge realised by the deft in respect of the use of energy for battery charging (as set out in Sch. C) & a charge, in excess of actual consumption of energy for the flour mill, made on the basis of a minimum consumption (as set out in Sch B), but decreed the suit in regard to other claims. There was an appeal by the pltf. & also a cross-appeal by the deft. but both the appeal & the cross appeal were dismissed. Thereafter, there was a second appeal by the pltf. which came up for hearing before Meredith. J., who decreed the whole suit, but granted leave to appeal under the Letters Patent, Meredith J., summarises the findings thus :

"I have held that it (i.e. supply of energy for battery charging properly fell, & could only fall, under the heading 'power' & was not domestic supply at all. To the knowledge of both parties & with the consent of the Company it continued to be drawn by the pltf. in his capacity of the owner of an industrial undertaking from the special power plug & measured by the special meter supplied by the Company for that specific purpose."

[8] On appeal under the Letters Patent, the only point urged by Mr. B. C. De, on behalf of the deft.-applt. is that the pltf. is not entitled to the refund of Rs. 205 claimed on account of money realised by the Company at the increased rate for the supply of energy for battery charging, nor to the refund of the surcharge levied at 100 per cent. thereon. In other respects the decree in favour of the pltf. is not challenged. The argument of Mr. De is is that, as the money was paid under an illegal agreement, & as the parties were in pari delicto & the illegal purpose has been carried out, the pltf. is not entitled to seek the aid of the Ct. for the relief.

[9] In my opinion, the argument of Mr. De is unassailable. The supply of energy for commercial purposes must fall under the heading "power", the usual rate for which could not exceed 4 annas per unit under Cl. 10 of the license.

[10] The pltf. & the deft. entered into the bargain in contravention of the provisions of Cl. 3 of the Control Order. Both parties knew that they were entering into an illegal agreement, the object of which was obviously opposed to law as well as public policy. They no doubt relied upon Mr. Sims' interpretation of the Control Order; but, in my opinion, Mr. Sims' interpretation seems to be a device intended to circumvent the mandatory provisions of the Control Order The parties might have acted in ignorance of law, but that cannot be pleaded as an excuse, & the Ct. cannot help the pltf. who has not come to Ct. with a clean hand. The consideration of the bargain was illegal, & its object opposed to public policy. The Control Order was made on 5-7-1942 & duly notified in the Bihar Gazette (Extraordinary) on 6-7-1942. The parties had full notice of the order since the date of its publication in the Gazette Mahadeo Prasad v. Emperor 24 Pat. 781 : (A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 1 : 47 Cr. L. J. 497 F.B.). The conduct of the parties shows that both sides were in pari delicto, & the bargain, which was in fraud of the provisions of the statute, was carried out by them. Therefore, the money paid by the pltf. though under protest, is irrecoverable with the aid of Ct.

[11] It is well settled that persons who have entered into an agreement forbidden by law or condemned by public policy are not entitled to seek the aid of a Ct of law for any relief if they are in pari delicto & the illegal purpose of the agreement has been carried into effect. It is useful to recall in this connection the well-known observations of Lord Mansfield in Holman Et Al', v. Johnson, 1 Crow p. 342 : 98 E. R. 1120 at p. 1121 which reads thus

"The objection, that a contract is immoral or illegal as between pltf. & deft. sounds at all time very ill in the mouth of the deft. It is not for his sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded in general principles of policy, which the deft. has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice, as between him & the pltf. by accident, if I may so say. The principle of public policy is this ex dolo malo non oritur actio. No Ct. will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act. If, from the pltf's. own stating or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi cause, or the transgression of a positive law of this country, there the Ct. says he has no right to be assisted. It is upon that ground the Ct. goes; not for the sake of the deft. but because they will not lend their aid to such a pltf."

Mellor J., enunciates the same principle in Taylor v. Chester, (1869) 4 Q. B. 309 at pp. 313-14 : (38 L. J. Q. B. 225) thus :

"The maxim that 'in pari delicto potior ast conditio possidentis', is as thoroughly settled as any proposition of law can be. It is a maxim of law, established, not for the benefit of pltfs. or defts. but is founded on the principles of public policy, which will not assist a pltf. who has paid over money or handed over property in pursuance of an illegal or immoral contract, to recover it back,' for the Cts. will not assist an illegal transaction in any respect."

Collins, M. R. in Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., (1904) 1 K. B. 558 at p. 563 : (73 L. J. K. B. 373) has observed that :

"It is clear law that where one of two parties to an illegal contract pays money to the other, in pursuance of the contract, it cannot be recovered back . . . . unless there can be introduced the element of fraud, duress, or oppression."

Halsbury in his Laws of England (Vol. 7, 2nd edition, page 175) summarises the law on the point thus :

"If, however, the illegal purpose has been carried out or the contract has been substantially performed, money paid under the contract can no longer be recovered, except where it appears that the parties were not in pari delicto, for instance, where the pltf. shows that he was induced to enter into the contract by fraud, duress or oppression on the part of the defendant."

Equally explicit is the condemnation of such contracts by Swayne J. in Meguire v. Corwine, (10 U. S. S. C. 108 Lawyers' Ed. Book 25, p. 899 at p. 901). He says :

"Frauds, of the class to which the one here disclosed belongs, are an unmired evil. Whether forbidden by a statute or condemned by public policy, the result is the same. No legal right can spring from such a source. They are the sappers and minors of the public welfare, and of free Govt. as well. The latter depends for its vitality upon the virtue and good faith of those for whom it exists, and of those by whom it is administered. Corruption is always the forerunner of despotism."

[12] The Madras H. C. has held in Ramanayudu v. Suryadevara Seetharamayya, 58 Mad. 727 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 440 F. B.) that money paid for carrying on an illegal contract is irrecoverable with the assistance of Court. Chapman J. in Bindeshwari Prasad v. Lakharaj Sahu, 1 Pat. L. J. 48 at p. 62 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 284) has observed that

"where the illegal portion of an agreement has been carried into effect, the whole matter is outlawed and the Court will not aid either party to retrieve his position if he is not able to show that he has been less to blame than the other. '

On a revise of the authorities referred to above. I am clearly of the opinion that, where money is voluntarily paid under an illegal agreement which has been carried into effect, the money so paid cannot be recovered back, if parties are in pari delicto and they had knowledge of the illegality of the agreement before payment.

[13] Mr. Sanyal has urged on behalf of the pltf. that the payment was made by the pltf. not voluntarily, but under undue influence, coercion or oppression ; therefore, the pltf. is entitled to recover back the amount so paid, because he is less to blame than the deft. and in support of this contention he relied upon the case of Ram Kumar v. Nanda Kumar, 50 Cal. 639 at pp. 645-647 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 248). In my opinion, the principle enunciated here has no application to the present case. In that case it was found, as a fact, that the transaction was the result of an undue influence practised upon the pltf. by the defts. and so relief was granted. In the present suit the case of fraud, undue influence or oppression was not set out in the plaint, nor any issue raised or argument advanced in any of the Courts below. There is no material on the record to show that the defendant company in any way brought pressure, undue influence or coercion on the pltf. to take the supply of energy for "power" purposes and pay at the rate prescribed for "domestic" purposes. Therefore, the principles governing cases where relief has been granted against a bargain brought about by undue influence, fraud or coercion cannot apply to the present case. In my opinion, the agreement was made by the free consent of parties and there is no manner of doubt that the pltf. and the deft. were equally guilty in entering into the bargain, knowing full well that the transaction was in contravention of the provisions of the Control Order.

[14] Mr. Sanyal has next contended that even if the agreement was void, the defendant, having received an advantage under it, must compensate the pltf., and in support of his contention he relies upon the provisions of S. 65, Contract Act, which provides that "when an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it."

In my opinion, the provisions of S. 65 cannot govern the present case. The provisions of this section can apply only if the parties are competent to contract, and the agreement, though void from its inception, is discovered, after they have acted on the faith of it, to be not enforceable by law. It has no application where the parties, though competent to contract, were in pari delicto and they knew the unlawfulness of the agreement before they acted on it. Nor does it apply where the object of the agreement was illegal to the knowledge of both parties and they acted on it or derived benefit therefrom. Mookerji J. in Ledu v. Hiralal, 19 C. W. N. 919 at p. 923 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 266), has observed that "the words of the section can only be aptly applied in such cases as that of an agreement which is subsequently found to be void on account of some latent defect or of circumstances unknown at the date of the agreement, or of an agreement which is afterwards made void by circumstances which supervene."

[15] Mr. Sanyal has strongly relied on the decision of the P. C. in Harnath Kuer v. Indar Bahadur Singh, 50 I. A. 69 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 403) and has urged that on the authority of this case the pltf. is entitled to be compensated under the provisions of S. 65, Contract Act. In my opinion, the facts of that case were quite different and the principles enunciated by the Judicial Committee cannot apply to the present case. In the case before the P. C., money had been advanced to the deft. to prosecute his suit for a declaration that a certain will was not genuine. The deft. as the reversioner of the testator got a declaration that the will was a forgery, and he was held to be the reversioner. Before the succession opened, he transferred his right in two villages by a sale to the pltf.'s husband in consideration of the money advanced to him for the prosecution of the suit. When the succession opened, the pltf. brought a suit for possession of the villages with an alternative prayer for payment of money. The pltf. erroneously set up a case that the right of the deft. was to be determined by reference to the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act. Though the transaction took place before the T. P. Act came into force, it was settled law that the reversioner has only an expectancy in the lifetime of the limited owner, and such an expectancy was inalienable. The Judicial Committee pointed out that the agreement of sale was void from its very inception, and therefore, the pltf. was not entitled to any relief for the recovery of possession of the villages specified in the plaint. But as there had been no actings of the faith of this illegal agreement the parties were held to be relegated back to the position before the transaction of sale took place, & in this view of the matter the pltf. was held entitled to recover compensation, & in assessing the compensation their Lordships took into consideration the amount advanced to the deft. by the pltf.'s husband. Neither the consideration nor the object of the transaction of the loan was unlawful within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act, Mookerjee J., in Ledu v. Hiralal, 19 C. W. N. 919 at pp. 921-22 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 266) has succinctly put the law on the point thus:

"It is plain that although where money has been paid under an unlawful agreement, but nothing else done in performance of it, the money may be recovered back, yet this exception will not be allowed if the agreement is actually criminal or immoral; where the contract is illegal because contrary to positive law or against public policy, an action cannot be maintained to enforce it directly or to recover the value of services rendered under it or money paid on it."

The principle, therefore, on which compensation was allowed to the pltf. by the Judicial Committee has no appln. to a case like the one before us.

[16] Mr. Sanyal has lastly contended that, as the question raised was never argued at any earlier stage, it is not open to the applt. to raise this question for the first time before us. In my opinion, this point is equally unsustainable. As the question raised is a pure question of law, & can be decided on the findings of the Courts below without investigation of any further fact, we have allowed the appellant to argue the question before us. In this connection I may quote the observation of Lord Reid in Shiba Prasad v. Srish Chandra Nandi, 28 Pat. 913 at p. 924 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 297).

"The learned Chief Justice appears to have overlooked the provisions of S. 72, Contract Act. This section was only mentioned in passing by the Subordinate Judge, & it would seem that it was not argued, or only faintly argued, before the Subordinate Judge or in the H. C. that S. 72 applied to the case. The applt. the resp. in the cross-appeal, submitted to their Lordships that in these circumstances their Lordships should not now receive an argument based on S. 72, but their Lordships are unable to exclude from their consideration the provisions of a public statute. It is regrettable that their Lordships do not have the assistance of the view of the H. C. on this matter. Their Lordships impute no blame to the learned Judges of the H. C., but they feel bound to consider the argument which has now been adduced."

We are also fortified in this view by the decisions in Maha Prasad v. Ramani Mohan, 41 I. A. 197 : (A. I. R (1) 1914 P. C. 140); M. E. Moola Sons, Ltd. v. Perin R. Burjorjee, 59 I. A. 161 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 118) & Debi Charan v. Mehdi Hussain, 1 Pat. L. J. 485 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 317). Under the circumstances, the appeal is allowed & the decree modified by disallowing the claim on account of the price received for energy supplied for battery charging & the surcharge thereon ; but as the point was not raised in any of the Cts. below, we make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

[17] Reuben J.— I agree.

[18] That there is no inflexible rule against the entertainment in a Letters Patent appeal of a point not raised previously appears from Debi Charan v. Mehdi Hussain, 1 Pat. L. J. 485 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 317), Sattappa

Gurusattappa v. Mahomedsaheb, 60 Bom. 516: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Bom. 227) & Fitzholmes v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., 8 P. L. T. 377 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 25). The principle that should guide appellate Ct. in entertaining a new point has been well stated by Lord Watson in a passage which has been cited with approval by the Judicial Committee in M. E. Moolla Sons Ltd. v. Perin R. Burjorjee, 59 I. A. 161: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 118). His Lordship observed :

"When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Ct. of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the place cannot be disposed of without deciding nice question of fact in considering which the Ct. of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Cts. below. But their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that the course ought not in any case to be followed unless the Ct. is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea." [Connecticut Fire Insurance Co. v. Kavanagh, (1892) A. C. 473 (61 L. J. P. C. 50)].

[19] A suggestion has been made that the Electrical Engineer & Electric Inspector sanctioned the supply of energy for battery charging in exercise of his power under sub-cl. (c) of Cl. 3, Electricity Control Order. The reference is to the record made by Mr. Sims in his Note Book (Ex. C) & Tour Note (Ex. C (2)) of, a discussion he had with the Company & the pltf. on 11-9-1943. From these documents it appears to me that Mr. Sims did not purport to act in exercise of his power under Cl. 3, Electricity Control Order ; he merely interpreted the law as modified by the Control Order & advised the Company & the pltf. as to the proper course to be pursued by them.

[20] There is another answer to this argument. If this was a direction under Cl. 3, Control Order, why should it not be held that the charging of the domestic scale of prices was a condition imposed by Mr. Sims in exercise of his power under Cl. 3, Control order ? If so, the supply made & the price realised was legal, & the pltf. not entitled to recover.

[21] Another argument addressed to us was that the cases cited relate to contracts, but here there was no contract since the pltf. did not agree to the price & surcharge charged by the Company. I do not think that the fact relied on makes any difference. The principle enunciated by Lord Mansfield in the passage cited by my Lord the Chief Justice is that the Ct. will not aid a man who founds his cause of action on an immoral or illegal act; if on the pltf.'s own showing or otherwise the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa or from the transgression of a positive law of the country, the Ct. is entitled to refuse its help to the pltf. Consider the facts of the present case. Under the control order it was not permissible to supply energy for battery charging for commercial purposes without the sanction of the Provincial Govt., or of the Electrical Engineer & Electric Inspector. To the knowledge of the company & of the pltf. this sanction had not been obtained. Nevertheless, the company supplied, & the plaintiff accepted, energy contrary to the provisions of the control order. There was a difference between the parties as to the proper charge for the supply, but the pltf. paid the price & surcharge demanded & went on doing this from month to month so that the illegal supply of current to him might continue. Therefore, the money was paid in order to effect an illegal purpose & that illegal purpose was effected. Could there be a case more apt for the application of the principles enunciated by Lord Mansfield ?

[22] It is useless for the pltf. to talk of coercion, & to urge that he was compelled to pay what was demanded because otherwise the supply of energy would have stopped. This contention might perhaps have been of avail if the pltf. had been entitled to a supply of the energy on a lower price than that demanded by the company. Here the pltf. was not entitled to the supply on any terms. Hence, the payment made by him, even though he made it under protest, was made to obtain an illegal supply & the Ct. will not help him to recover it.

[23] Finally, I think that, for lack of mutuality, S. 65, Control Act, will not help the pltf. The pltf. wants under this section to recover the money paid by him to the Company but it is not possible to make him restore the advantage that he has himself derived, namely, the supply of energy. Another difficulty arises out of the argument just urged, namely, that there was no contract between the parties. If there was no contract, S. 65 has no application.

[24] I would like to add that I see no reason to think that the interpretation given by Mr. Sims in Ex. C & Ex. C (2) was consciously intended to circumvent the law. His position is explained by another document. [Exhibit D (3) dated 30-7-1943] & he seems to have been honestly mistaken.

RAMASWAMI AND C. P. SINHA JJ.

Firm Ram Kishun Shah Etwari Sahu — Petnr. v. Jamuna Prasad and others — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 487 of 1950, D/- 28-11-1950.

(a) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 11 (3)—Occupation—Meaning of.

Occupation includes possession as its primary element, but it also includes something more. Legal possession does not of itself, constitute an occupation. The owner of vacant house is in possession but as long as he leaves it vacant he is not in occupation; nor is he an occupier. [Para 5]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 39, R. 1, S. 115 Temporary injunction — Grant of — Considerations — Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 53.

What the Ct has to determine in granting injunction is whether there is a bona fide contest between the parties & when there is a fair & substantial question to be decided as to the rights of the parties in the suit it is not necessary for the purpose nor is it right that the Ct. should further examine the question in dispute or anticipate the decision of the question in the suit itself.

No doubt it is in the discretion of the lower Cts. to grant or not to grant an order of temporary injunction but that discretion has to be exercised according to well settled judicial principles. Where on the contrary they act in an arbi rary manner & refuse the prayer without finding whether a prima facie case has been made out they fail to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them by law & the H. C. ought to interfere in revision for the ends of justice. [Paras 5 & 6]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 39, R. 1, N. 3 ; S. 115, N. 11; Specific Rel. Act, S. 53, N. 2.

Mahabir Prasad & Kanhaiyaji — for Petnr.; Sir Sultan Ahmad, Khaleel Ahmad & I. B. Singh — for Opposite party.

Ramaswami J. — The question to be examined in this case is whether the petnrs. are entitled to be granted a temporary injunction against the opposite party restraining the latter from executing the order of eviction made by the House Controller, Monghyr.

[2] The petnrs. alleged that they were the tenants of the house in dispute which belonged to one Khan Bahadur Mirja Noor Beg; that on 16-4-1949, Jaldhar Prasad & Dasrath Prasad purchased the house & on 6-8-1949, the opposite party filed an appln. under the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent & Eviction) Control Act (Act III [3] of 1947) for evicting the petnrs. The opposite party alleged that they had purchased the holding for the construction of a petrol pump & Dist Mag. of Monghyr had granted a "no objection" certificate for the construction & installation of the petrol pump. On 11-3-1950, the House Controller, Mr. S. N. Mallik, allowed the appln. & ordered the petnrs. to vacate the house. An appeal was filed before the Comr. of Bhagalpur, who by his order dated 16-6-1950 rejected the appeal. On 31-5-1950, the petnrs. filed a suit for declaration & permanent injunction against the opposite party on the ground that the House Controller had no jurisdiction to make an order of eviction under S 11, sub-s. (3), Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent & Eviction) Control Act, 1947. On 1-6-1950, the petnrs. asked for issue of an ad interim injunction against the opposite party restraining the latter from executing the order of eviction. The learned Munsif refused to grant ad interim injunction, which order was upheld by the learned Dist. J. in appeal.

[3] In support of this rule, the learned Advocate-General stressed the argument that there was a fair & substantial question at issue between the parties; that the petnrs. would suffer irreparable damage if temporary injunction be not granted & that the lower Ct's. had acted in an arbitrary manner & refused to grant the injunction asked for.

[4] In my opinion, the argument of the learned Advocate-General is well founded & must prevail. It is important to notice that in para. 6 of the plaint the petnrs. had asserted that the order of eviction made by the House Controller was illegal & without jurisdiction for the reason that the Standard Vacuum Oil Company had obtained the "no objection" certificate & would also construct the petrol pump &

"the defts. will become the company's tenants & pay rent to the company for the pump, & the defts. on the other hand would be getting a certain amount of rent from the company only for the land given or leased out to the company."

In the written statement, the opposite party asserted that

"they require the premises bona fide for their personal use for carrying on the business of Agency in petrol & mobil oil, & though the pump will be supplied by the company. the land & house belong to the petnrs. & shall remain their property and the business shall be the personal business of the defts as Agents of the Standard Vacuum Oil Co. Ltd., & even after the termination of the Agency, if it at all happens at any future date the house & land shall remain the property of the defts."

It should also be noticed that in the order of eviction, the House Controller has overruled the objection of the petnrs. on the ground that though "the premises if the petrol pump is installed will be only on hire to the Standard Vacuum Oil Co. for their use." Sub s. (3) of S. 11 would be applicable & the tenants ought to be evicted from the house in dispute. In another portion of the order, the House Controller has said that though the Standard Vacuum Oil Co. would be in occupation of the building

"that will be through the petnr. himself In that case also it can be safely held that the landlord requires the building reasonably & in good faith for his own occupation."

The question for decision in this suit would, therefore, arise whether the word "occupation" in sub-s. (3) of S. 11 of the (Act III [3] of 1947) covers, on proper construction, the case of the opposite party who, as alleged in the plaint, have become the agent of the Standard Vacuum Oil Co. & proposed to demolish the existing building & erect new one in its place for the purpose of installation of a petrol pump.

[5] Reference may be made in this context to the scope & meaning of the word "occupation" as used in S. 11 of the Act. As observed in Rex v. St. Pancras, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 581 at p. 588 :

"Occupation includes possession as its primary element, but it also includes something more. Legal possession does not, of itself constitute an occupation. The owner of vacant house is in possession & may maintain trespass against any one who invades it; but as long as he leaves it vacant he is not in occupation; nor is he an occupier."

In another case 31 M. L. T. 114 it was stated that :

"The word 'occupy' is a word of uncertain meaning. Sometimes it indicates legal possession in the technical sense, as when occupation is made the test of ratability; & it is in this sense that it is said that the occupation of (?) premises by a servant if such occupation is subservient & necessary to the service is the occupation of the master. At other times occupation denotes nothing more than physical presence in a place for a substantial period of time."

It is manifest, therefore, upon the pleadings that the decision of the suit will depend upon the proper construction of sub-s. 3 of S. 11 of the Act & also upon the disputed question of fact regarding which the parties have not adduced evidence as yet. In my opinion, there is a fair & substantial question to be decided as to the rights of the parties in the present suit. It is not necessary for our present purpose nor is it right that we should further examine the question in dispute or anticipate the decision of the question in the suit itself. What the Ct. has at this stage to determine is whether there is a bona fide contest between the parties or, as observed by Turner L. J. in Walker v. Jones, (1865) L. R. 1 P. C. 50 at p. 61: (35 L. J. P. C. 30):

"The real point is, not how these questions ought to be decided at the hearing of the cause, but whether the nature & difficulty of the questions is such that it was proper that the injunction should be granted until the time for deciding them should arrive."

It is quite sufficient if the Ct. find a case which shows that there is a substantial question to be investigated & that matters should be preserved in status quo until that question can be finally disposed of. Reference may be made to Israil v. Shamser Rahman, 41 Cal. 436 (A.I.R. (1) 1914 Cal. 362) which is an authority in support of this view. Applying this principle to the present case, I hold that the petnrs. are entitled to be granted a temporary injunction restraining the opposite party from executing the order of eviction passed by the House Controller until the disposal of the suit in the Ct. of the Munsif.

[6] On behalf of the opposite party, the argument was stressed that it was in the discretion of the lower Cts. to grant or not to grant an order of temporary injunction, & the H. C. ought not to interfere in such a case. But I am of the opinion that the lower Cts. have not exercised their discretion according to well-settled judicial principles but, on the contrary, have acted in an arbitrary manner. Instead of finding whether a prima facie case has been made out, the lower appellate Ct. has indeed decided the whole suit by finding that "there was no lack of jurisdiction on the part of the House Rent Controller in passing the eviction order & the title suit filed is merely a contrivance to extend the period of stay of the applts. in the house as long as possible."

It is manifest that the lower Cts. have in this case failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them by law & the H. C. ought to interfere in revision for the ends of justice.

[7] For these reasons, I would make the rule absolute, set aside the order of the lower Cts. and grant a temporary injunction restraining the opposite party from executing the order of eviction made by the House Controller.

[8] The appln. is accordingly allowed with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

[9] It is necessary that the learned Munsif should take up the hearing of the suit & dispose of it as soon as possible. If the suit is not disposed of by the middle of January next, an explanation should be submitted to the H C.

The King v. Baldeo Paswan and others — Accused.

Jury Reference No. 15 of 1949, D/- 11-1-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 307 (3)—Reference under S. 307—Powers of High Court.

The H. C. under S. 307 is not entitled to come to its own independent decision upon the evidence & adopt it. The verdict of the jury has to be respected unless it is perverse-unless it is one which no reasonable body of men could have arrived at upon the evidence. The Ses. J. cannot make a reference under S. 307 merely because he considers the verdict of the jury wrong. He can only do so if he considers it too wrong as to be impossible one for reasonable men to form upon the evidence. [Para. 7]

While the criterion of reasonableness or unreasonableness in the verdict is ordinarily to be applied, the test of reasonableness on the part of the jury might not be conclusive in every case. The ends of justice must be the determining factor both for the Ses. J. in making the reference & for the H. C. in disposing of it. [Para. 8]

Anno. Cr. P. C. S. 307, N. 11.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 307 — Reference under—Criterion to be applied.

The ultimate criterion which the Ses. J. has to apply in deciding whether or not to make a reference, is not the objective one or whether the verdict is reasonable or unreasonable, but the subjective one, whether he "disagrees with the verdict of the jurors and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice" [Para 9]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 307, N. 3, 4, 5.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367 — Evidence — Appreciation of—Duty of prosecution.

It is the duty of the prosecution to place all the relevant evidence before the Ct., & not to aim at a conviction at all costs, be the accused innocent or guilty. [Para 9]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 367, N. 8.

Awadhesh Nandan Sahay, Ayub and Chhatrapati Kumar Sinha — for the Reference; The Standing Counsel—Against the Reference.

Meredith A. C. J. — This is a reference against the verdict of a jury, made under S. 307, Cr. P. C., by the learned first Addl. Ses. J., Patna. The reference is in respect of four persons Baldeo Paswan, Tilakdhari Paswan, Gajo Mahto & Dwarka Dhanukard is against an unanimous verdict of guilty by the 7 jurors. The learned Judge is of opinion that the verdict is perverse, & that it is necessary to refer the case to the H. C. in the interests of justice.

[2] The four persons who are the subject of the reference were tried with six others for the murder of one Ram Saran Prasad alias Bhandariji of village Badi, police station Giriak, on the night of 23-4-1948. There were a number of charges, some of the accused being charged under S. 147, Penal Code, some under S. 148, all under S. 302 read with S. 149, all under S. 302 read with S. 34 & all under S. 120B for conspiracy, this last charge being triable with the aid of assessors. The verdict of the jury was unanimous throughout. They held all the accused not guilty under Ss. 147, 148 & 302/149 clearly for the reason that they did not consider it established that five or more persons took part in the crime, & they acquitted six of the accused altogether; but they found the four abovementioned accused guilty of murder under S. 302 read with S. 34 & as assessors, they expressed the opinion that these persons were also guilty under S. 120B. The learned Judge accepted all the verdicts of acquittal. Also, not accepting the verdict of the assessors, he found all the accused not guilty on the conspiracy charge. He, accordingly, referred only the cases of the four persons mentioned, & the question is whether the verdict of the jury finding them guilty of the murder should be accepted.

[3] The deceased was sleeping under a tree just outside the verandah of his dalan in village Badi. At about 11-30 P. M. he had his throat cut almost from ear to ear, causing immediate death. Only one other injury was found on his body, a skin-deep incised wound near the collar-bone. The murder was a remarkable one in many respects. First of all, it was the night of the full moon. Secondly, the deceased Bhandariji was sleeping almost surrounded by other people. At least six people, & possibly eight, were sleeping within a few feet of him. These circumstances disclose most remarkable boldness on the part of murderer or murderers. Secondly, it is not claimed that any one was recognised except Baldeo Paswan. Two persons Ramji Mahton (P. W. 4) & Basudeva Narayan (P. W. 6), who were sleeping within a yard or two of the deceased, claim that they were wakened on hearing a gurgling sound & recognised Baldeo Paswan running away to the south & east. They told three people, Ram Prasad Singh (P. W. 1), Prasadi Mahton (P. W. 7) & Gobind Mahton (P. W. 8), what they had seen, but did not inform the rest of those who had assembled, the reason they give being that they were afraid Baldeo Paswan might abscond. At 3 A. M. Ram Prasad Singh with the dafadar & chaukidar, who have not been examined, set out for the police station six miles distant, & first information was lodged by Ram Prasad at 6 A. M., it being mentioned therein that Ramji & Basudeva had recognised Baldeo Paswan as one of the assailants. During the course of the investigation the Sub-Inspector recovered a falsa from a bush near the scene of occurrence & a gupti or sword-stick was made over to him by Tilakdhar Paswan. He seized these as both appeared to be blood stained. But the report of the imperial Serologist is that though there were traces of blood on both, they were too disintegrated for it to be possible to say if the blood was human. As late as the 1st of May the Sub-Inspector examined one Lachmi Prasad (P.W. 14), who claimed to have been sleeping in the verandah of the dalan & to have witnessed the whole occurrence. This man is a teacher in the lower primary school at Badi, & his story was that he woke up at the sound of footsteps at about midnight, & saw the accused Sadasiva holding the legs of Bhandariji while the accused Baldeo Paswan was holding his head. Gajo Mahto, son of Sadasiva, gave a falsa blow on the throat of the deceased, & then the accused Dwarka Dhanuk cut his throat with a gupti. As he was afraid the accused had seen him, he ran off & went to the home of a relative, six or eight miles distant, where he remained until the 30th without speaking to anyone.

[4] The Sub-Inspector also succeeded in collecting some, not very satisfactory, evidence that the falsa recovered was the property of Sadasiva. Some of the witnesses sleeping near the deceased also told him a story that some time before the crime the accused Dwarka Dhanuk came to where the deceased was sleeping accompanied by one Kuldip Babaji, awakened the deceased by pressing his legs on the pretext of asking for ganja, & afterwards had some conversation with him & went away The suggestion is made that this was a sort of reconnaissance made to discover how soundly the deceased and those round him were sleeping.

[5] At a very late stage, the 19th of May, two absconding accused Lachhu Mahto & Ram Saroop Mahto surrendered before a Mag. & made confessions in which they told a story of the crime, corresponding very much in detail with that told by Lachmi (P. W. 14). The learned Judge, after hearing argument about these confessions in the absence of the jurors, came to the conclusion that they were inadmissible as they were adduced by pressure & promises held out by persons in authority. Accordingly, these confessions were not put to the jury. The two accused who made them have been acquitted. I may say at once that the Crown has not challenged the Judge's conduct in excluding these confessions; so the question whether they were rightly excluded does not arise. On the other hand, a point has been made on behalf of the accused that there was a misdirection because the Judge did not specifically warn the jury that they must pay no heed to these confessions. There is nothing in this point. Quite obviously, the jury did pay no heed to the confessions since they acquitted those who made them. They certainly could not have used them as against any of the persons they did find guilty because they were not told, & did not know, who had been named in those confessions. The most they could have known as a result of the evidence of the officer who recorded the confessions was that the two accused persons whom they acquitted had made confessions of some sort.

[6] The prosecution sought to ascribe a number of separate motives for the murder. It was said that some days before the occurrence a meeting had taken place to elect a village panchayat. Baldeo Paswan & some other villagers had objected to the election of the deceased & of P. W. 1. & there was some quarrel over that, & the deceased was said to have abused Baldeo Paswan. It was further said that he had also censured Baldeo Paswan because his daughter had illicit intimacy with another villager. Various other grounds of grievance on the part of the other accused persons were suggested, & in fact the prosecution case was that the deceased had made himself generally disliked in the village, & as President of the local Advisory Committee he had offended the villagers by the methods he adopted in the distribution of kerosene oil, cloth, sugar, etc.

[7] The method of approach to a reference like this has been finally laid down for us by the P. C. in Ramanuuraha Singh v. Emperor, 73 I. A. 174 : (A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 151). The gist of that decision is that the H. C. is not entitled to come to its own independent decision upon the evidence & adopt it. The verdict of the jury has to be respected unless it is perverse—unless it is one which no reasonable body of men could have arrived at upon the evidence. Section 307 says that "due weight" is to be given to the opinion of the jury & to the opinion of the Judge. Where the opinion of the jury is a possible one upon the evidence, it is only by accepting the view of the jury that the H. C. can give "due weight' to their opinion. Their Lordships do not explain what the section means by saying that due weight must also be attached to the opinion of the Judge; but clearly, on the view taken, the opinion of the Judge cannot enter into the picture at all unless & until the opinion of the jury be first found to be unreasonable. The effect of this decision is to make it very difficult for the Ses. J. to make a reference. He cannot do so merely because he considers the verdict of the jury wrong. He can only do so if he considers it so wrong as to be an impossible one for reasonable men to form upon the evidence. I do not know whether their Lordships intended or contemplated it; but I think the effect of this decision may well be to cause Govt. to modify the law with regard to jury trials in this country, if it does not decide to abolish the system altogether. The unsatisfactory manner in which the system is working is notorious, & all those connected with the administration of criminal justice in the country must know of numerous cases of miscarriage of justice.

[8] Let us now apply the criterion laid down by the P. C. to the facts of the present case. (After discussing the evidence the judgment proceeded :) In the P C. case already referred to their Lordships recognised that, while the criterion of reasonableness or unreasonableness in the verdict was ordinarily to be applied, the test of reasonableness on the part of the jury might not be conclusive in every case. They said it was possible to suppose a case in which the verdict was justified on the evidence placed before the jury. But, in the light of further evidence placed before the H. C., the verdict is shown to be wrong. In such a case the ends of justice would require the verdict to be set aside though the jury have not acted unreasonably. And their Lordships emphasized that the requirements of the ends of justice must be the determining factor both for the Ses. J. in making the reference & for the H. C. in disposing of it. There is no further evidence before the H. C. in the present case. The diary is not evidence. Nevertheless I venture to think that this case comes within the exceptional class contemplated by their Lordships. As I have pointed out, the Ct. is entitled to refer to the diary to aid it, & having done so, the ends of justice require that it should not be ignored. The learned Ses. J. is to be congratulated that he has had the courage to make this reference even in the case of Baldeo Paswan, where the verdict was not prima facie unreasonable.

[9] This case holds two lessons, & they cannot be too strongly emphasised. The ultimate criterion which the Ses. J. has to apply in deciding whether or not to make a reference, is not the objective one of whether the verdict is reasonable or unreasonable, but the subjective one, whether he (to quote the words of the section) "disagrees with the verdict of the jurors ..... and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice." Secondly, it is the duty of the prosecution to place all the relevant evidence before the Ct., & not to aim at a conviction at all costs, be the accused innocent or guilty. This has often been said before : it cannot be said too often.

[10] I would accept the reference in the case of Baldeo Paswan also & would, accordingly, set aside the verdict of the jury & acquit him.

[11] Ramaswami J.—I agree.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 307 — Trial by jury —Misdirection—Interference—Test.

Reference under S. 307 must fail where it is not possible to hold that on the evidence the jury could not reasonably come to the verdict it did. At the same time it is always necessary to remember that in the case of jury trial & a reference the final criterion, which must eventually determine the matter, is whether in the opinion of the H. C. there has been a miscarriage of justice or not. [Para 8]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 297 and 423—Jury trial — Misdirection — Omission to tell jury that order under S. 144 was not evidence of possession held no misdirection when the Judge gave them no reason to suppose that S. 144 order was evidence of possession. [Para 9]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Order under—Evidentiary value.

Though the decision in a proceeding under S. 144 is not by itself proof of possession, yet it is a circumstance supporting an inference that the persons in whose favour the proceeding terminated would not be likely to allow his possession to be disturbed from any part of the property. [Para 9]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 144, N. 8.

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 297 and 423—Jury trial — Misdirection — Omission to tell jury that prosecution had not relied on certain evidence when it was not altogether rejectable.

In a case where the occurrence related to a dispute about the possession of certain plot, simply because where the two versions differed as to the actual details of the occurrence, the Public Prosecutor chose to rely upon the version of the police witnesses rather than of the local witnesses, it by no means follows that the evidence of those local witnesses must be rejected altogether by the jury on the point of possession. In such circumstances, omission on the part of the Judge to tell the jury that they must place no reliance on the evidence of the local witnesses, does not amount to misdirection. [Para 10]

Meredith C. J. — We have to deal with a reference under S. 307, Cr. P. C. made by the learned Sess. J., Patna, & also with an appeal by such of the accused as were convicted by the jury & in regard to whom the learned Judge accepted the verdict. The persons who are the subject-matter of the reference are Banwari Singh, Ram Naresh & Shyam Dutt Singh. The verdict of the jury was in every case a majority verdict of four to three. In the case of Banwari Singh, the jury found him guilty under Ss. 148 & 324, Penal Code. The Judge thinks that the verdict was right under S. 148, but wrong under S. 324. In the case of Ram Naresh Singh, the jury also found him guilty under Ss. 148 & 324 but the learned Judge thinks that there was no sufficient evidence of identification, & accordingly he should have been acquitted altogether In the case of the third man, Shyam Dutt Singh, the jury found him guilty only under S. 148, but for lack of satisfactory identification the Judge wants him also acquitted altogether.

[2] The applts. are Awadhbehari Singh, Ramjatan Singh & Ramanuj Singh. Awadh Bihari was found guilty by the jury under S. 147, & the Judge, accepting that verdict, has convicted him & sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The same applies to Ramanuj. In the case of Ramjatan, the verdict of the jury was guilty under Ss. 148 & 324. The Judge, accepting, it has convicted under both sections, & sentenced him under S. 148, to three years' rigorous imprisonment, & imposed no separate sentence under S. 324.

[3] The case arose out of an occurrence which took place on 19-8-1948, at about 9 A. M. in village Koraitha situated three quarters of a mile from the Bikram Police station, & the trouble arose over the cultivation of plot No. 1126 of the village. This was claimed by both parties, Akura Singh (P. W. 1) claiming it by a deed of gift from one Dila Kuer. The prosecution party examined several witnesses to prove their possession of the plot & also put in the judgment of a Munsif. It appears that some of the plots of Dila Kuer, though not 1126, had been acquired by the Govt. in connection with Bikram Aerodreme, & the compensation had been awarded to Akura Singh as donee from Dila Kuer. The accused Awadhbihari filed a suit claiming half the compensation on the ground of the record of rights which showed the joint possession, half & half, of Dila Kuer and Suraj in 1911, & he claimed a half share through Suraj Singh & subsequent partition. This suit had failed, & been dismissed. It was also established that some months before the occurrence there had been an order under S. 144, Cr. P. C.. against Awadhbihari.

[4] The accused led no evidence of possession & merely put in a judgment of the appellate Ct. in which the decision of the Munsif had been modified, and Awadhbihari's claim to a half interest in the plots in suit (not 1126), had been accepted. This judgment, however, came into existence after the present occurrence. The learned Judge, both in his charge to the jury and in his letter of reference, pointed out that there were two different versions of what took place in the occurrence—one that of Akura Singh (P. W. 1) & his witnesses Baiju Ram (P. W. 2), Rajnandan (P. W. 5) & Indrasan Singh (P. W. 7) & the other the version of three police witnesses, an Assistant Sub Inspector, (P. W. 10) a constable (P. W. 11) & a chaukidar, Khaderan Dusadh (P. W. 12) who were actually present during the occurrence. The version of the first group of eye witnesses was that those four persons were uprooting paddy seedlings in their plot just on the north of plot 1126. The accused Awadhbihari, Banwari, Ram Jatan & Shyam Dutta came armed to the disputed plot with their ploughman Bifan Dusadh, who began to plough up the plot which was then fallow. Tarkeshwar (killed) sent P. W. 5 to Akura Singh in order to inform him, & Akura then came to the place of occurrence & protested to Awadhbihari, who ordered him to be assaulted. Just then several helpers of the accused persons arrived. Tarkeshwar also protested. Thereupon accused Ramnaresh gave a bhala blow to Tarkeshwar in the chest, & accused Banwari gave him one garasa blow on the head, & another garasa blow which he stopped with his hand. Tarkeshwar went to a short distance to the east & fell down. Alakh Narain (P. W. 6) was assaulted by several of the accused persons including Ram Naresh, Banwari & Shyam Dutt. Accused Ram Naresh & Ram Jatan gave bhala blows to Bindeshwari (also killed), & accused Harbans gave a bhala blow to Indrasan (P. W. 7). After the assaults were over the accused persons fled away. The injured persons were taken to the dispensary at Bikram where Tarkeshwar & Bindeshwari died an hour or two later after making dying declarations in the presence of a Sub-Registrar.

[5] The version given by the police witnesses was that the chaukidar (P. W. 12) gave information at about 8-10 A. M. at the Police station that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace between the two parties, & both were collecting men. The Sub-Inspector (P. W. 13) then deputed the Assistant Sub-Inspector & the constable to go to the spot & try to prevent a breach of the peace. When they came to the spot, they found accused Awadhbihari Singh & five or six others already standing armed with lathis & bhalas on the eastern ridge of the disputed plot which was being ploughed on their behalf. P. W. 10 began to make enquiries from Awadhbihari, & just then Alakh Singh, Indrasan, Tarkeshwar, Bindeshwari & three or four others came armed with lathis from the northeast. It should be explained that adjoining the disputed plot on the east is the field of one Jagu Dhobi. When the prosecution party arrived on the eastern ridge & Jagu Dhobi's field, one of its members threw out a challenge. This challenge was accepted by Awadh Bihari's party & both parties then advanced towards each other & a free fight took place in the field of Jagu Dhobi. In the course of that fight, Tarkeshwar & Bindeshwari, Alakh & Indrasan received injuries. They remained at the place of occurrence, but all others of both parties fled away. The constable & the Assistant Sub-Inspector did not see any body injured on the side of the accused, nor was it proved at the trial that any one on the side of the accused had received any injuries.

[6] The learned Judge expressed the opinion that the eye witnesses of the first group had not given out a truthful version. P. W. 1 had admitted before the police that the men of his party had lathis with them, & there was a free fight, but he did not stick to his statement in Ct. P. W. 2 admitted before the Sub-Inspector that Tarkeshwar, Bindeshwari Alakh Indrasan, Ramanand & Akura came to the place of occurrence with lathis at the same time as the police did. Rajnandan (P. W. 5) admitted before the police that his father & uncles were armed with lathis, & there was a free fight. He went back on that statement at the trial. According to these witnesses, the assaults took place on plot 1126, but the victims fell in Jagu Dhobi's field on the east. The Sub-Inspector found blood stains, a cut finger, a broken tooth, a lathi & some vomitted substance in Jagu Dhobi's field, & no blood stains in the disputed field, & there could be no doubt that the fight took place in Jagu Dhobi's field, as stated by the police witnesses. He mentions that he had taken all these circumstances into consideration. The learned Public Prosecutor stated before the Ct. that he would rely upon the second group of eye-witnesses (P. Ws. 10, 11 & 12) & not upon the first group of eye witnesses, namely P. Ws. 1, 2, 5 & 7.

[7] It should be mentioned that there were charges also under S. 302 against Ram Naresh, & charges under S. 302 read with S. 149 against the rest. The jury acquitted upon those charges, & evidently the learned Judge agreed with their acquittal because he has not suggested in his letter of reference that there should have been any convictions other than those actually made by the jury under Ss. 148, 147 & 324.

[8] Mr. S. N. Sahay who has appeared for the applts. & also for the persons who are the subject of the reference, has strongly argued that there are misdirections in the charge vitiating the verdict, & therefore, the applts should be acquitted & the reference should be accepted, even if it is not possible to hold that the verdict of the jury was such that no reasonable body of men could have arrived at that verdict. The criterion is laid down by the P. C. in the recent case of Ramanugrah Singh v. Emperor, 78 I. A. 174: (A. I. R. (33) 1946) P. C. 151 : 47 Cr. L. J. 905). It is quite obvious that the question of misdirection is most important in this case, & indeed the main question. If there has been no misdirection, the appeal must clearly fail, & I may add that the reference must fail also, because I do not think it is possible to hold that on the evidence the jury could not reasonably come to the verdict it did. At the same time it is always necessary to remember that in the case of a jury trial & a reference the final criterion, which must eventually determine the matter, is whether in our opinion there has been a miscarriage of justice or not because S. 423 (2), Cr. P. C. says:

"Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the Law as laid down by him."

I may say at once that, having considered the entire evidence of the case, I see no reason to think that there has been any miscarriage of justice, at least against the accused if the verdict of the jury errs, it appears to me that it errs in favour of the accused in not convicting of any offence except those I have mentioned.

[9] Coming now to the question of misdirection, Mr. Sahay in the first place says that the learned Judge was wrong in telling the jury about the order under S. 144, Cr. P. C., without telling them that that was not evidence of possession. The Judge, it is true, did not give them that direction, but at the same time he gave them no reason to suppose that S. 144 order was any evidence of possession. He referred to it only in narrating the history of the dispute, & in that he was right. The matter was not irrelevant because as pointed out by a Bench of this Ct. in the King v. Jagdish Tewari, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 79: (51 Cr. L. J. 551) though the decision in a proceeding under S. 144 is not by itself proof of possession, yet it is a circumstance supporting an inference that the persons in whose favour the proceeding terminated would not be likely to allow his possession to be disturbed from any part of the property. That is certainly a factor which the jury were entitled to consider. Would it be likely, after obtaining an order under S. 144, that the prosecution party would ever have allowed the accused to come into cultivating possession thereafter so as to be in peaceful possession at the time of the occurrence without there having been some previous occurrence at the time of the accused attempting to take possession on the expiry of the S. 144 order? Not only that, but the Judge in another part of his charge did make it clear to the jury that this was not evidence of possession, because he said to them: "If you do not believe the evidence of P. Ws. 1, 2, 5 & 7 there is no reliable evidence of possession over plot No. 1126."

[10] Next Mr. Sahay says there was a misdirection because the Judge did not tell the jury that they must place no reliance on the evidence of P. Ws. 1 2, 5 & 7 upon any point in view of the fact that the Public Prosecutor had not relied upon them. On the contrary, he simply narrated the entire facts, drew their attention to the difference in the versions & the attitude of the Public Prosecutor & quite clearly left the evidence of these witnesses to them, because, as I have stated he said "If you do not believe the evidence of P. Ws. 1, 2, 5 & 7 there is no reliable evidence of possession over plot No. 1126." That clearly means he left it open to them to believe these witnesses on the point of possession. In my opinion, the Judge was not wrong in taking that course. Simply because, where the two versions differed as to the actual details of the occurrence, the Public Prosecutor chose to rely & quite rightly, upon the version of the Police witnesses rather than that of the local witnesses it by no means followed that the evidence of those local witnesses must be rejected altogether by the Jury on the point of possession and on the point of identification I have read the evidence of those witnesses, & while no doubt they did distort the facts to some extent in their own favour it was not such as in my opinion, must be rejected altogether on all points. It could at least afford some corroboration of the Police witnesses, for example, on the point of identification & it also was not entirely irrelevant on the question of possession, having regard to the fact that the accused had put in absolutely no evidence of possession & the prosecution had in its favour, to some extent at that time, the facts that there was a civil Ct. decision completely negativing the claim to title on the part of the accused & an order under S. 144 against them shortly before. In my opinion there is no misdirection here either in the charge.

[11] I now come to the most important point made by Mr. Sahay. The learned Judge after telling the jury that there was no reliable evidence of possession unless they believed P. Ws. 1, 2, 5 & 7 went on to say:

"It seems to me that the question of possession over plot No. 1126 is not of any importance if you believe the evidence of P. Ws. 10. 11 & 12 because their evidence discloses that the fight was between two armed parties, both prepared for a fight in connection with the enforcement of a right or supposed right of possession over plot No. 1126. If you believe, in view of the evidence of P. Ws. 10, 11 & 12, that Awadhbihari's party consisted of five or more persons & that their common object was by criminal force to enforce a right or supposed right of possession in respect of plot No. 1126, you can hold that the members of that party have committed the offence of rioting."

Mr. Sahay says that this amounts to a very serious misdirection because the case was not of the type referred to in Kabiruddin v. Emperor, 35 Cal 368 : (7 Cr. L. J. 256) where it can be held that both parties having come armed determined on fighting the matter out neither can have any right of private defence.

[12] Mr. Sahay has cited a number of decisions on this point but, in my view, there is a clear line of distinction between the facts in those cases & the facts in the present case, which seem to me much more closely analogous with the facts in Kabiruddin v. Emperor, 35 Cal. 368 : (7 Cr. L. J. 256). Mr. Sahay first relies on Fauzdar Rai v. The Crown, 3 Pat. L. J. 419 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 193 : 19 Cr. L. J. 241) wherein it was laid down that there a person in possession of property sees an actual invasion of his rights to that property, if that invasion amounts to an offence under the Penal Code, he is entitled to assert his right by force & to collect for that purpose such numbers & such arms as may be absolutely necessary for this purpose. There is, however, a very important qualification in this case. The learned Judges add "Provided only that there is no time to have recourse to the protection of the Police authorities" & it is also to be noticed that this ruling refers to a person in possession of property, whereas in the present case the accused made no attempt worth the name to prove their possession of the property. Their Lordships in that case did not dissent from Kabiruddin v. Emperor, 35 Cal. 368 : (7 Cr. L. J. 256). They merely distinguished it, & indeed no case has been cited before us in which that ruling has been actually dissented from. On the contrary they quoted a passage without dissenting from it:

"There can be no right of private defence either on one side or on the other where both parties are evidently aware of what is likely to happen & turn out in force. The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, expecting to be attacked, go out of their way to court an attack."

[13] Mr. Sahay next relies upon Sunder Buksh v. Emperor, 3 Pat. L. J. 653: (A I.R. (5) 1918 Pat. 308 : 19 Cr.L.J. 983). But here again there is an obvious distinguishing feature. That was a case where a man found the opposite party actually cutting his crops. He sent a message to the Police, & then returned & found that he could not save those crops if he waited for the Police. They would have been already cut & therefore, he was held justified in resorting to force to put a stop to the cutting.

[14] Mr. Sahay's next case is Subedar Singh v. Emperor, A.I.R. (20) 1933 Pat. 434: (34 Cr.L.J.

1075). There it was held that a party in possession of a property is entitled to resist by force an attack made on his property. But the important qualification is added "provided there is no time to have recourse to the public authorities for protection" & it was also added that there was nothing in the case to show that the accused had any reason to believe that an attack would be made on them while they were ploughing. Hence this case is clearly distinguishable.

[15] The same remarks apply to Mr. Sahay's next case, Nareshi Singh v. Emperor, 2 Pat. 595 : (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Pat. 388 : 25 Cr. L. J. 1228). Here again Kabiruddin v. Emperor, 35 Cal. 368 : (7 Cr L. J. 256) was not dissented from but distinguished on facts. Their Lordships pointed out that in Kabiruddin case, (35 Cal. 368 : 7 Cr. L. J. 256) the applts. were members of an unlawful assembly, firstly because they were attempting to enforce a right or a supposed right by violence, & secondly, because there was sufficient time to inform the authorities. Then they said :

"Where, however, possession is, undisputed or where there is no time to seek the assistance of the authorities, I cannot agree that there is any obligation upon a person entitled to exercise the right of private defence & to defend his person or his property to retire from the field merely because his assailant threatens him with violence."

Nobody can quarrel with that proposition. But the important thing is that that was a case where possession was undisputed, & there was no time to call in the Police.

[16] Lastly Mr. Sahay cites Silajit Mahto v. Emperor, 36 Cal. 865 : (4 I. C. 19). But the facts there were entirely different from those in the present case. In that case they said upon the facts which had been established that the common object was not to enforce a right or supposed right but rather to maintain undisturbed the actual enjoyment of a right.

[17] The fact is it is difficult to lay down a general rule in these matters. Each case depends on its own facts. Now what were the facts in the present case? Both parties had been collecting men for a fight from the morning. Information had been sent to the Police. The thana was quite close & the parties must have known that the Police would come almost at once. Without waiting for the Police or giving the Police a chance to settle the matter peacefully, the accused persons, whose claim at that time was at the best extremely doubtful, collected a number of armed men knowing; as they must that the other side had also collected men, & they go to the spot, & having lined up their armed men, start the ploughing of this field, about which it does not appear that there was any urgency at all; & when the other side comes & issues a challenge, in the very presence of the Police they advance to meet them, accepting that challenge, not upon the land, but before the other party had reached the land, & despite the fact that the Police Officer present was doing his best to prevent a fight, & was telling both parties that they must not fight. In my opinion it was the duty of both parties in such circumstances to leave matters to the Police who could be trusted to see that the dispute was settled peacefully, if necessary by proceedings under S. 145. If the accused retired & left matters to the Police, they had no injury to expect. There was no crop in the land which could be cut. There was no possibility of any danger to the properties. It was the duty of both parties to obey the directions of the police officer, & in my opinion, both parties in fighting in those circumstances were entirely in the wrong & both were unlawful assemblies. I consider that this was a case where there was no right of private defence on the part of either. I think, therefore, that the learned Judge was not wrong in telling the jury that, if they did not believe the evidence of possession, they could nevertheless decide the case disregarding that aspect. We do not know whether the jury did discard the evidence of possession. It may well be that they came to the conclusion that the prosecution party were in possession, &, in my personal opinion, if that was the basis upon which they acted, it was a correct basis. But I also think that if they acted on the Judge's instruction that possession was irrelevant, then also their verdict could not be upset on that ground. There was undoubtedly a defect in the charge having regard to what happened. The charge should have specified that one of the common objects was to assault. In the circumstances it undoubtedly was so. If nothing more, it became a common object the moment the party of the accused advanced towards the other party against the orders of the Assistant Sub-Inspector. The charge, however, did not specify "assault" as a common object, but specified "by criminal force or show of criminal force to enforce a right or supposed right of possession in respect of plot 1126 from Akura Singh."

[18] There was, therefore, a defect in this charge. But it was not, in my opinion, such as to cause any prejudice to the accused, & it would be curable under S. 537, Cr. P. C. The charge at least does refer to the use of force or show of criminal force. That was the gravaman of the charge & the accused did use force knowing full well they had no justification, in the circumstances, for doing so, irrespective of whether they were in possession or not, though I am of opinion they were not in possession, & had no right of private defence of property.

[19] In my opinion there were no misdirections of a serious nature in the charge such as could occasion a failure of justice.

[20] Apart from the general questions, Mr. Sahay for the applts. has argued the case of Ramanuj, because, he says this man was identified only by the Chaukidar, & the chaukidar was short-sighted. He could not identify the accused at 25 feet in the dock, & had to go close. But the chaukidar said in his evidence that he identified the accused on the spot from a distance of three or four cubits. He was standing with them on the eastern ridge, & must have been at very close quarters, & had ample opportunity to make identifications. If the jury accepted the evidence of this solitary witness, they were certainly entitled to do so, & could not be called unreasonable in doing so. There was evidence. Then Mr. Sahay says the identification was only on the ridge before the fight. There was no evidence that this accused took an actual part in the fight. But the chaukidar did not identify the man as a spectator. He identified him as one of the armed group waiting to fight armed with a lathi & he went on to say that the party then fought with the other party. In such circumstances the jury, in my opinion, were fully entitled to draw the inference that this man must have been one of the rioters, & in my opinion, it was quite a reasonable inference too.

[21] Coming now to the reference. The learned Judge is quite satisfied with the identification of Banwari Singh & his conviction under S. 148. As to that, he is clearly right. The man was identified with a garasa not only by the chaukidar but also by the constable. This was the only man identified by this constable at a test identification parade & he made no mistakes. As for the conviction under S. 324, there may be no direct evidence of Police witnesses, but as I have said, there was no reason why the jury should absolutely discard the evidence of the local witnesses, & there were also the dying declarations. Therefore, I am not prepared to hold that the jury could not reasonably have found this man guilty under S. 324. The matter, however, is of no importance. In the case of the applt. Ramjatan, the learned Judge accepted the convictions under Ss. 148 & 324, but impose no separate sentence under S. 324. I think he might well have done the same in the case of Banwari instead of making a reference, & that is what I propose to do.

[22] As for the other two, Ramnaresh and Shyam Dutt, the identification is only by the Assistant Sub-Inspector. The Assistant Sub-Inspector at a test identification, a month after the occurrence, identified these two & one more. But he also identified three persons wrongly. Mr. Sahay, therefore, argues that the jury could not reasonably have acted on his evidence alone. Had they acted on this evidence alone, the case would be a marginal one. They saw the Assistant Sub-Inspector in the box. They must have noticed the manner, in which he gave evidence & in which he made the identifications, & they might conceivably, without being wholly unreasonable have decided to rely upon his evidence despite his mistakes at the test identification. But in fact, for the reasons I have already given, the evidence of the Assistant Sub-Inspector did not stand wholly alone. There was also the evidence of the local witnesses to which, I think, the jury were entitled, if they saw fit, to attach some weight as a corroboration, & here again there were also the dying declarations. Bindeshwari, who seems to have been in his full senses when he made his dying declaration & told a story consistent with the Police version, mentioned Ram Naresh as one of his assailants. Tarkeshwar told a confused story, & it appears to me that his mind was probably wandering as he was very near death. But the fact remains that he did expressly name both Ram Naresh & Shyam Dutt. The dying declarations were not very clearly put to the jury. They were not expressly told that they were good evidence, but nevertheless they were mentioned to the jury & it may be that the jury, as they were entitled to do, did attach some weight to them.

[23] In these circumstances I do not think that any sufficient ground has been made out for interference with the verdict of the jury in any case. I see no reason to think that in this case there has been any miscarriage of justice; rather I think some of the accused at least get off very lightly. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal & I would reject the reference & accept the verdict of the jury. It follows that Banwari Singh, Ramnaresh & Shyam Dutt must also be convicted under S. 148, & as in the case of Ramjatan, I would impose a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment. Banwari Singh and Ram Naresh must also be convicted under S. 324, but there is no necessity, in my opinion, for any separate sentences. They must now surrender to their bail.

Cr. Reference No. 4 of 1950, D/ 27-3-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 147—Proceedings under —Stay—Revival.

The Mag. is competent to pass an order staying or dropping the proceedings under S. 147 before him on the ground that a civil suit had been instituted & that there was no likelihood of breach of the peace after the institution of the civil suit & the Sub-Divisional Mag. has no jurisdiction to revive such proceedings subsequently. [Paras 1, 3]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 145 N. 48.

J. M. Ghosh — for the Reference; B. Mukharji — against the Reference.

Judgment. — This is a reference by the Addl. Ses. J. of Manbhum-Singhbhum recommending that the order of the Sub-divisional Mag. of Dhalbhum in relation to a proceeding under S. 147, Cri. P. C. be set aside. On the report of the Police that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed between the parties with regard to certain plots of land said to be a playground, a proceeding under S. 147 was drawn up on 14-5-1948. In this proceeding Ramkrishna Singh & another were the first party, & Bankim Chandra Chakraverty was the second party, & on 22 9-1948, the case was transferred to one Mr. G. K. Prasad for disposal. On 17-3-1949, the second party, Bankim Chandra Chakravarty, filed a petn. before the learned Mag. in which he stated that a civil suit having been filed before the Subordinate Judge of Chaibassa with regard to the land in dispute, the proceeding might be stayed till the decision of that civil suit. It was further stated in this petn. that there was no likelihood of any breach of the peace on account of the conduct of the second party & that the right, which was in question in the proceeding, was pre-eminently a matter to be dealt with by the Civil Ct. On this petn. the learned Mag. passed the following order :

"17-3-1949 —Second party file a petn. stating that a civil suit is pending between the parties & the suit lands are the same as the subject-matter of the present proceeding. I am satisfied from the papers shown to me by the party that a civil suit for the suit land is pending between the parties. The proceeding has been pending for a long time. There does not seem to be any apprehension of breach of the peace now that the matter is pending before a civil Ct. The proceeding is, therefore, stayed."

For about six months after this order had been passed, none of the parties took any step & the first party did not move any higher Ct. against this order of the learned Mag. It was on 6-9-1949, that a gentleman of the name of Priparesh Mukharjee filed a petn. before the Sub-divisional Mag. of Dhalbhum praying that he might be allowed to get the games played on the land in dispute. This petn. is an unstamped petn. & though on this petn. the learned Sub-divisional Mag. wrote an order on 6 9-1949, directing that the petn. should be sent to the Ct. concerned for disposal, on that very date he wrote another order in the order sheet of this case which runs as follows :

"This record has been put up to me today. I do not know of any provision of law under which a Mag. can stay a proceeding under S. 147, Cr. P. C. There does not appear to be any injunction from the Civil Ct. to that effect. As a civil suit is likely to take an indefinite period of time, this case is withdrawn to general file & transferred to Mr. B. Singh for favour of re-starting the hearing & concluding the trial."

The second party then moved the learned Ses. J. of Manbhum-Singhbhum against this order, & his appln. was heard by the Addl. Ses. J. who by his letter dated 23-12-1949, referred the matter to this Ct. with a recommendation that the order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. reviving the proceeding be set aside. The view taken by the learned Addl. Ses. J. is that the proceeding had come to an end by virtue of the order which had been passed by the Mag. Mr. G. K. Prasad under S. 145 (5), Cr. P. C., & that the subsequent order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. dated 6-9-1949, for "re-starting the hearing & concluding the trial" was without jurisdiction. In my opinion, the view taken by the learned Addl. Ses. J. is correct, & this reference must be accepted. Sub-s. (4) of S. 147 lays down that an order under this section shall be subject to any subsequent decision of a civil Ct. of competent jurisdiction, & sub-s. (1) of S. 147 says that an enquiry has to be made in the manner provided in S. 145, & that the provisions of that section shall as far as may be, be applicable in the case of such inquiry. It need not be pointed out that the object of S. 145 or S. 147 is to enable a Mag. to intervene & pass a temporary order with regard to the property in dispute which will be effective only so long as the actual right of one of the parties has not been determined in a civil litigation. The Legislature never intended that this section should be used by any party manoeuvring for possession for the purpose of civil litigation, the sole purpose, which the Legislature had in view, being the prevention of the breach of the peace. These provisions are additional weapons in the hand of the Mag. for maintaining peace in the area for the peace of which they are responsible. I have referred to this well-known principle, because the argument of Mr. Bhabanand Mukharji for the first party has been that the grounds as contemplated by sub-s, (5) of S. 145, Cr. P. C. did not exist in this case so as to enable the Mag. to drop the proceeding. In Manindra Chandra v. Barada Kanta, 30 Cal. 112 : (6 C. W. N. 417), it was held by a D. B. of the Calcutta H. C. that a Mag. had jurisdiction to cancel an order passed under sub-s. (1) of S. 145, Cr. P. C. & to stay proceeding if he felt satisfied, whatever the source of his information might be, that the state of things did not exist, which would give jurisdiction to proceed with the inquiry. In this case, their Lordships quoted a passage from the judgment of the same H. C. in Tarini Charan v. Amulya Ratan, 20 Cal. 867, which runs as follows :

"Now the first question which arises is the effect of an order striking off proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C. As Mr. Woodroffe has told us, there is a series of decisions with regard to the effect of striking off the file of a Court applns in civil matters; but we think that those stand on an entirely different footing from proceedings of a quasi-criminal description. The section itself provides for a case; where a Mag. can cancel his order. Those are cases where parties show him that no dispute exists, & if the likelihood of a breach of the peace has ceased to exist before the proceedings under S. 145 have terminated, it follows that there can be no necessity for a continuation of such proceedings. The result of those applns which were sanctioned by the Mag. practically amounted to cessation, at any rate, for the time being of any likelihood of a breach of the peace. That must have been the view which the Mag. took of it, as he considered it unnecessary to proceed, at any rate then, with those proceedings. We think that unless it can be shown that there is a legislative enactment, giving a power to that effect, cessation by the order of the Mag. of any criminal proceedings must, until that order is set aside, operate, not only as staying the proceedings, but destroying them."

It follows that whenever a Mag. is satisfied that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace, he discontinues the proceeding; the Mag. can stay it, & the order of stay passed by him will be tantamount to a termination of the proceeding. A single Judge of the Madras H. C. in Suryanarayana v. Ankineed Prasad, 47 Mad. 713 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Mad. 795 : 25 Cr. L. J. 978) observed that when the Mag. is able to act on a police report or other information in starting proceedings under S. 145, there is no reason why he should not stay further proceeding on similar information without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may produce with the same formality as he would have done, if he had gone on with his enquiry instead of dropping it. In another Madras case D. Narasayya v. C. Venkiah, 49 Mad. 232 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 1252: 27 Cr. L. J. 95) also the same principle was reiterated & it was pointed out that it was open to a Mag. to drop the proceeding if he was satisfied that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. Krishnan J. made the following observations with regard to cl. (5) of S. 145 :

"Clause (5) of S. 145 provides for a special case where as the Mag. is proceeding with the trial of the question of possession, the parties to the proceedings or even other persons who are interested are given the right to show that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists or has existed. The existence of this clause does not take away the power of the Mag. himself to drop proceedings, if he is satisfied that there is no further likelihood of a breach of a peace."

At one stage of his argument, Mr. Mukharji, expressed the view that 'staying the proceeding' does not mean 'dropping the proceeding,' & he also pointed that the order of Mr. G. K. Pd. does not show that he had cancelled the previous order under sub s. (1) of S. 145. But the word "stayed" has been used in cl. (5) and the authorities referred to above conclusively establish that it means the dropping of the proceeding or the termination of the proceeding. It is true that the learned Mag. did not say in so many words that he had cancelled the order under sub-s. (1) of S. 145; but when he said that he had stayed the proceeding, he certainly meant that the order under sub-s. (1) stood cancelled. There can be no doubt that in this case the Mag. had very good grounds to make the order which he made. As already pointed out, an order under S. 147 would be subject to any subsequent decree of a civil Ct. of competent jurisdiction, & the second party had rightly stated in his petn. that the right which was the subject-matter of dispute could only be properly determined by a civil Ct. & that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace when the parties had already begun to fight in the civil Ct. with regard to the right in question. The proceeding terminated when the order was passed on 17-3-1949, & this proceeding could not be revived unless the Mag. received fresh information about a breach of the peace. As was pointed out by the Calcutta H. C. in Kalananda Singh v. Rameshwar Singh, 15 C. W. N. 271 : (11 Cr. L. J. 729), the jurisdiction is solely based on the imminence of a breach of the peace, & the Mag. must be satisfied that a dispute exists which is likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The information & the grounds on which the proceedings could be revived in September 1949, could not be the same on the basis of which they had been started in October 1948. I have already pointed out that when the learned Sub-divisional Mag. passed his order dated 6 9-1949, for re-starting the proceeding six months had elapsed & during those six months the first party had not moved any higher Ct. against the order dated 17-3-1949, & had not applied for the revival of the proceeding. Mr. Mukharji was not right in submitting that the order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. should be taken to be an order under sub-s. (2) of S. 528, Cr. P. C. In fact, the order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. is open to very serious criticism. He revived the proceeding on an unstamped petn. filed by one who was no party to the proceeding, but a complete stranger, without at all considering the circumstances under which the Mag. Mr. G. K. Prasad had passed the order dated 17-3-1949 & the powers which he had for making an order in terms contemplated by sub-s. (5). The learned Sub-divisional Mag. has said in his order that he does not know of any provision of law under which a Mag. can stay a proceeding under S. 147, Cr. P. C. & that there was no injunction from the civil Ct. for staying the proceeding. As already pointed out, the word 'stayed' has been used by the Legislature in its wisdom & there are several authorities which have interpreted this word to mean the termination or the dropping of the proceeding. I, therefore, wonder how the Mag. thought that there was no provision of law under which a Mag. could stay a proceeding under S. 147, Cr. P. C. It further appears that he was unmindful of what is contained in sub-s. (4) of S. 147 & also of the fact that since the termination of the proceeding in March 1949, the first party had taken no step for the revival of the proceeding, which is a clear indication of the fact that he was satisfied that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace.

[2] Mr. Mukharji referred to a decision of this Ct. in Sastu Sahu v. Nathuni Thakur, 6 P. L. T. 258 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 689 : 26 Cr. L. J. 105). But the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. What happened in that case was that a Mag. after examining the witnesses & after hearing the arguments of a case under S. 145 did not pass any order for about ten months. To quote from the judgment of Kulwant Sahay J.,

"the learned Sub-divisional Mag. apparently forgot all about the case until he was reminded of it when he was going away on transfer" & he then hurridly disposed of the case with an order which runs as follows: I find I passed no final order in this case. As so long time has elapsed, I do not think any breach of the peace is likely. I, therefore, strike the case off."

Certainly this was a most dishonest way of disposing of a case under S. 145, Cr. P. C. & the decision in that case cannot be cited as a precedent in this case in which the proceeding was stayed or dropped because a civil suit had been instituted & because there was no likelihood of breach of peace after the institution of the civil suit.

[3] In my opinion, the order that has been passed by Mr. G. K. Prasad was an order which he was competent to pass according to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, & the learned Sub-divisional Mag. had no jurisdiction to revive the proceeding & to transfer it to another Mag. for disposal. As has been pointed out by this Ct. in Luti Singh v. Ramkirit Singh, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 105 : (42 Cr. L. J. 340), even a Dist. Mag. has no power to revise an order under S. 145 passed by a Mag. subordinate to him, & all that he can do is to call for the record under S. 435, & if he considers that the order should be interfered with, his duty is to refer it to the H. C. It seems obvious that this learned Sub-divisional Mag. assumed a jurisdiction which he never possessed & at the instance of one who had been no party to the proceeding. I, therefore, agree with the learned Addl. Ses. J. that the order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. should be set aside.

[4] The reference is accepted, & the order of the learned Mag. dated 6-9-1949, is set aside.

Cosharers—Joint possession—Compensation for occupation of excess land—Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142, 144.

Where one co-sharer is in separate possession of the common land without objection from, or ouster or exclusion of, the other co-sharers, he is under no obligation either to account or to pay compensation to such co-sharers in respect of the profits which have accrued to him by reason of the skill or industry which he has employed in making good use of the property while he was in possession. Chhatrapati Kumarsinha — for Applts.; Girja Nandan Prasad — for Resps.

Ramaswami J. — These appeals are presented against the judgment of the Addl. Subordinate Judge, Patna.

[2] The question to be examined in these appeals is whether the pltfs. are entitled to recover compensation for their share of the produce of the land in dispute for the years 1348 to 1350 Fasli from the various defts. To enable this question to be considered, it is necessary to state the material facts so far as they are proved or admitted. The pltfs. alleged that 00.28 acre of khata No. 4, 01.50 acres of khata No. 27 & 29.83 acres of khata No. 3 were undivided bakasht land which belonged to the sixteen annas maliks; that the defts. were to cultivate the land & to divide to (sic) the pltfs. their share of the produce. Defendants 1 to 7 contested the suit on the ground that khata No. 4 was not the bakasht land of the sixteen annas landlords. As regards khata No. 3, the defts. asserted that excepting 00.95 acre the entire area was divided amongst the maliks before the survey & the possession of the different maliks was noted in the record-of-rights. As regards .95 acre of khata No. 3 & 1.64 acres of khata No. 27, it was stated that these lands were also divided amongst the maliks before the survey had taken place. The defts. therefore, denied that the pltfs. were entitled to compensation representing any share of the produce. The learned Munsif, upon a consideration of the evidence, held that the pltfs. were entitled to a decree for compensation.

[3] In appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif holding that the pltfs. were not entitled to recover any compensation from the defts. The learned Subordinate Judge found (1) that khata No. 4 was not the bakasht land of the sixteen annas landlords, but defts. 12 to 14 alone were entitled to cultivate it; (2) that as regards khata Nos. 3 & 27, there is no complete partition, but the maliks were cultivating the land separately by some kind of mutual arrangement and (3) that defts. 1 to 7 were in possession of more than 14 acres of bakasht land, though, as a matter of fact, they were entitled to hold about 12 acres according to their sixteen annas milkiat share. After reaching at this finding of fact, the lower appellate Ct. considered that the pltfs. were not entitled to a decree for compensation because there was no proof that the defts.-cosharers had excluded the pltfs. or ousted them from their possession or had challenged their title to the joint possession of the land of which they were tenants-in-common.

[4] In support of these appeals, learned counsel for the appellants stressed the argument that since defts. 1 to 7 were found in possession of more than their proper share of the bakasht land, the pltfs. were entitled to a decree, though there was no ouster or exclusion alleged in the plaint. Learned counsel referred to the cases of the Midnapur Zamindary Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan, 29 C. W. N. 34 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 P. C. 144) & Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt, 18 Cal. 10 : (17 I. A. 110 P. C.) in support of his argument. But the facts of these cases are manifestly different from those of the present case. In case of those cases the cosharer was held entitled to a decree for compensation or mesne profits because the defts.-cosharers had excluded him or ousted him from possession or had impeached his title to the joint possession of the land of which they were cosharers. Learned counsel referred to the following passage in The Midnapur Zamindary Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan, 29 C. W. N. 34 at p. 40 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 P. C. 144) :

"Where the lands in India are so held in common by cosharers, each cosharer is entitled to cultivate in his own interests in a proper & husband-like manner any part of the lands which is not being cultivated by another of his cosharers, but he is liable to pay to his cosharers compensation in respect of such exclusive use of the lands. Such an exclusive use of lands held in common by a cosharer is not an ouster of his cosharers from their proprietary right as cosharers in the lands. When cosharers cannot agree as to how any lands held by them in common may be used, the remedy of any cosharer who objects to the exclusive use by another cosharer of lands held in common is to obtain a partition of the lands."

[5] But this passage has got to be read with reference to the context of the facts of that case. The Midnapur Zamindary Co., Ltd. had resisted the pltf's claim in that suit & had challenged the pltf's title both upon the ground of adverse possession & also because they had purchased in execution of a decree a jote which they had themselves granted in respect of a part of the land of which they were entitled to joint possession with the pltf. On the contrary, the present case falls within the ambit of Chandra Kishore v. Biseswar Pal, 55 Cal. 396 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 216) in which the Ct. refused to grant a decree in a suit brought by the cosharers against another cosharer of immovable property to recover compensation for the occupation by the deft. of more than his share in the land of which all the cosharers were tenants-in-common. The principle is that where one cosharer is in separate possession of the common land without objection from, or ouster or exclusion of, the other cosharers, he is under no obligation either to account or to pay compensation to such cosharers in respect of the profits which have accrued to him by reason of the skill or industry which he has employed in making good use of the property while he was in possession. The ratio of Chandra Kishore v. Biseswar Pal, 55 Cal. 396: (A. I. R (15) 1928 Cal. 216) was followed by a single Judge of this Ct. in Shiva Narain v. Chandrasekhar Prasad Singh, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 616 : (150 I. C. 251). The Calcutta case was also approved by a Division Bench of this Ct. in Raj Ranjan Prasad v. Khobhari Lal, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 90 : (20 Pat. 162) in which a decree was granted to the cosharer-pltf. for compensation because there was exclusion of the pltfs. & there was defiance of their title on the part of the defts.

[6] Reference should be made to Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein, 19 Cal. 253 : (19 I. A. 48 P. C.) in which the Judicial Committee held that property does not cease to be joint merely because it is used so as to produce more profits to one of the joint owners who had incurred expenditure for that purpose, than to the others, where the latter were not excluded. Joint property being used consistently with the continuance of the joint ownership & possession, without exclusion of the cosharers who do not join in the work, there was no encroachment on the rights of any of them, as regards common enjoyment, so as to give ground for a suit. The suit was brought against the Maharajah of Darbhanga in reference to a ferry over the river Bagmati, near the Kamtowl Indigo Factory, of which the Manager, Mr. Halliday, on behalf of the Maharaja who had purchased it, was made a deft. As purchaser of the factory, the Maharaja had become a proprietor of a two-annas share in village Baigra which village adjoined Kamtowl & of the ferry. The pltfs. were the owners of the remaining fourteen annas of this Mouza, & they brought this suit, for a declaration of their right to profits of the ferry proportionate to the amount of their shares of the village. The defence of the Maharaja was that he had an exclusive right to the ferry by prescription. On the ground that the Maharaja & his predecessors had for more than twenty years worked the ferry, thus acquiring a prescriptive right to do so, the suit was dismissed in the Munsif's Ct. The decision was reversed by the H. C. who held that the pltfs. are entitled to an account of the profits from the defts. & to recover their share thereof The Judicial Committee reversed on appeal the decree of the H C. & held that the suit ought to be dismissed. Lord Hobhouse who pronounced judgment of the Judicial Committee distinguished the case of Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt, 17 I. A. 110: (18 Cal. 10 P. C.) on the ground that there was exclusion of the pltf.-cosharers in that case.

[7] The principle has been clearly expounded in an English case Henderson v. Eason, (1852) 17 Q. B. 701 : (21 L. J. Q. B. 82) in which Parke B. laid down that :

"If one tenant-in-common occupied, & took the whole profits, the other had no remedy against him while the tenancy-in-common continued unless he was put out of possession, when he might have his ejectment, or unless he appointed the other to be his bailiff as to his undivided moiety, & the other accepted that appointment, in which case an action of account would lie, as against a bailiff as in the case of the owner of the entirety of an estate"

His Lordship further observed that :

"There are obviously many cases in which a tenant-in-common may occupy & enjoy the land or other subject of tenancy-in-common solely & have all the advantage to be derived from it, & yet it would be most unjust to make him pay anything. For instance, if a dwelling-house, or barn or room, is solely occupied by one tenant-in-common, without ousting the other, or a chattel is used by one co-tenant-in-common and nothing is received, it would be most inequitable to hold that he thereby by the simple act of occupation or use, without any agreement, should be liable to pay a rent or anything in the nature of compensation to his co-tenants for that occupation or use, to which, to the full extent to which he enjoyed it, he had a perfect right."

[8] Upon these grounds I would affirm the decree of the lower appellate Ct. & dismiss these appeals with costs.

[9] Rai J.—I agree.

Ramaswami J.—The question to be decided in this appeal is whether the lower appellate Ct. was right in granting the pltf. a decree for ejecting the deft. Surya Lall Karmakar, from a small piece of land located in Bhatta Bazar of the town of Purnea.

[2] The pltf. Tulsi Modak brought the suit alleging that he had taken settlement of 7 kathas of land in Bhatta Bazar from Sm. Charusila Debi & that he had executed a registered Kabuliat dated 27-7 1914 for a period of five years from 1321 to 1326 Mulki Sambat. It was said that the pltf. held over after expiry of the term & had been paying rent to the sons of Charusila Debi after the latter's death. The deft. had taken settlement from the pltf. by a registered Kabuliat dated 1-5-1939 for a period of six years. After the expiry of the period of the lease the pltf. had asked the deft. to give up possession & had also served upon him a notice to quit. Since the deft. refused to give up possession pltf. brought the suit for a declaration of title & ejectment of the deft. from the land. The main ground of defence was that the kabuliat executed by the deft. was not given effect to & the document was inoperative. The deft. on the contrary, alleged that there was a special agreement between him & the pltf. according to which deft. agreed to pay rent direct to Janendra Nath Dey & his brothers who were the successors in interest of Sm. Charusila Debi. The deft. maintained that the pltf. had no title & that he ought not to be granted a decree for ejectment. The learned Munsif accepted the defence case & refused to grant decree to the pltf. The learned Dist. J. Purnea, reversed the decision of the Munsif in appeal holding that the pltf. was entitled to a decree for ejecting the deft. from the land in suit.

[3] In support of this appeal Mr. Baidya Nath Jha submitted a twofold argument. In the first place he contended that no registered patta was executed by Sm. Charusila Debi in favour of the pltf. & in consequence the lease was invalid under S. 107, T. P. Act. The learned counsel argued that the pltf. was a mere trespasser & cannot succeed in the suit for ejectment. In my opinion, this argument is untenable & cannot succeed. It has been found in the present case that in pursuance of the invalid lease the pltf. had obtained possession of the land & had continued to remain in possession till the date of the institution of the suit. It has also been found by the lower appellate Ct. that the pltf. had paid rent to the landlord for several years & had obtained rent receipts. Upon these facts it is manifest that the ratio of the case Alauddin Ahmad v. Aziz Ahmad, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 369 : (148 I. C. 684) will apply & it must be held that the pltf. will be deemed to be a tenant from month to month under the provisions of S. 116, T. P. Act. In the case to which reference has been made the tenant remained in possession of the property under a verbal lease for six years & it was held by the Division Bench that a verbal lease for more than one year accompanied by delivery of possession was valid for the first year & if there was holding over on the part of the tenant he was estopped from denying the relationship of landlord & tenant & he cannot escape payment of rent for the period he was in occupation as tenant on the ground that the verbal lease was not binding as a lease for the period agreed upon. In the present case, therefore, it is plain that the pltf. had proved sufficient title to maintain the suit for ejectment of the deft. from the land.

[4] There is another aspect of the case which must be dealt with. The rule is well-established that possession is a good title against all persons except the rightful owner & entitles the possessor to maintain an ejectment suit against any other person than such only who dispossesses him. In Pemraj Bhawaniram v. Narayan Shivaram, 6 Bom. 215 (F.B.) S obtained a money decree against the sons & heirs of A, & under that decree attached a shop as part of A's estate. N (father of A) applied to have the attachment removed under S. 246, Civil P. C., (VIII [8] of 1859), alleging that the shop was his. The appln. was rejected & the shop was sold in execution & bought by P, the deft. N then brought this suit against P (the purchaser) to establish his title. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. In appeal, the Dist. J. reversed that decree, holding that the pltf. had been in possession of the shop, & had proved his title. The deft. appealed to the H. C. Upon these facts an F. B. held that the pltf. having his possession at the date of the execution sale, it lay upon the deft. (P), who claimed the property, to prove a title in himself or in the judgment-debtor A, & that, he having failed to do this, the pltf. was entitled to a decree declaratory of his right to the property as against the deft. At p. 215 the report states :

"It is true that the pltf. in the present case did allege title by conveyance, & that the Dist. Ct. has not found that title to be proved; but the pltf. by his plaint also relied upon his possession, & the Dist. Ct. has found that possession to be proved. We have seen that possession is a good title against all persons except the rightful owner & entitles the possessor to maintain ejectment against any other person than such owner who dispossesses him. The pltf. does not ask the Ct. to declare that he had a good title against the world. He merely asks for a declaration that he has a good title against the deft. Pemraj who has purchased the premises (whereof the pltf. is in possession) as the property of Anant Narayan, but is unable to show that Anant Narayan had either title to or possession of those premises. Nay more, we understand the Dist. J. as substantially finding that the pltfs. have shown that Anant Narayan had not any such possession. There cannot be any doubt that under those circumstances, if Pemraj had caused the plaintiff to be evicted, the pltf. would within the time limited by law, have been entitled to maintain ejectment against Pemraj, because the pltf's. possession was a good title against everybody except the true owner. This being so, we fail to perceive any good reason for requiring the pltf. to wait until he is evicted, or for preventing him from obtaining a declaration of that which is, beyond all doubt, his right, viz., that his title as possessor is good against a person who is seeking to disturb that possession, & who has not a colour of title to the land in dispute & has never had possession of."

[5] Reference may be made in this context to Asher v. Whitlock, (1866) 1 Q. B. 1 : (35

L. J. Q. B. 17) in which it was held that a person in possession of land, without other title, has a devisable interest; and the heir of his devisee can maintain ejectment against a person who has entered upon the land, & cannot show title or possession in any one prior to the testator. Cockburn C. J., said :

"I take it is clearly established that possession is good against all the world except the person who can show a good title; and it would be mischievous to change this established doctrine."

And again he said :

"It is too clear to admit of doubt, that if the devisor had been turned out of possession, he could have maintained ejectment. What is the position of the devisee ? There can be no doubt that a man has a right to devise that estate which the law gives him against all of the world, but the true owner."

and again :

"We know to what extent encroachments on waste lands have taken place; and if the lord has acquiesced, & does not interfere, can it be at the mere will of any stranger to disturb the person in possession"?

Finally he said :

"On the simple ground that possession is good title against all out the true owner, I think the pltf. is entitled to succeed."

Mellor J. after saying that "the fact of possession is prima facie evidence of seisin in fee", added :

"In the common case of proving a claim to landed estate under a will, proof of the will & of possession or receipt of rents by the testator is always prima facie sufficient, without going on to show possession for more than twenty-years. I agree with the Lord Chief Justice in the importance of maintaining that possession is good against all but the rightful owner."

[6] Upon a review of these authorities it is manifest that the pltf. can properly maintain the present suit for ejectment of the deft.

[7] It was pointed out by the learned counsel in support of the appeal that the pltf. has died subsequent to the filing of the second appeal in the H. C. Reference was made to Charan Mahto v. Kamakhya Narayan, 6 P. L. T. 98 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 357) & it was contended that S. 116, T. P. Act, did not contemplate the position of the heirs or assignees of the original lessee but it contemplated the position of the lessee himself after the determination of the lease & it was only in the case of the lessee of a property who remained in possession thereof after the determination of the lease granted to him that the lease is in the absence of an agreement to the contrary renewed from year to year or month to month according to the purposes for which the property is leased. But it is well established that as a general rule a Ct. of appeal in considering the correctness of the judgment of the Ct. below will confine itself to the state of the case at the time such judgment was rendered & will not take notice of any facts which may have arisen subsequently. As illustrations of the general rule, reference may be made to the cases of Govinda v. Perumdevi, 12 Mad. 136 where it was held that a suit for a declaratory decree by a reversioner to impeach the validity of alienations by a Hindu widow is not affected by the death of the widow during the pendency of the litigation; Ramananoan v. Pulikutti, 21 Mad. 288 : (8 M. L. J. 121) where a pltf. who had sued at a time when he had no subsisting title was not allowed the benefit of a title which had accrued to him during the pendency of the litigation & Wamanrao v. Rustomji, 21 Bom. 701 where a pltf. who had sued for a declaratory decree was allowed to proceed with the suit even after he had acquired title to the property & had become entitled to consequential relief. In Ponnamma v. Arumogam, (1905) A. C. 383 : (74 L. J. P. C. 102) a suit was brought in 1898 for partition, or alternatively for a sale of certain parts of an intestate's estate, & it appeared that the intestate had died in 1884, that no letters of administration had been taken out, that the widow & son had made a division of the immovable estate between themselves. The S. C. of Ceylon dismissed the suit on the ground that by S. 547, Civil P. C., which was the law in force when the action was commenced, it was not maintainable in the absence of any administrator on the record. Before the case was heard Ordinance No. 12 [XII] of 1904 was enacted by which a proviso was added to S. 547 to the effect that no action for the recovery of, or involving proof of title to, any property movable or immovable included in the estate of any person who died intestate before the commencement of the Ordinance of 1889 should be defeated by reason only that letters of administration to the estate of such person have not been issued. On behalf of the applt. it was contended that S. 547 was not applicable & the suit ought to have been decreed by the Judicial Committee in appeal. The prayer was rejected & Lord Davey pronouncing the judgment of the Judicial Committee states at p. 388:

"To the first argument it is sufficient answer to point out that the judgment of the S. C. was given more than four years before the new Ordinance was passed, & their Lordships have only to say whether that judgment was right when it was given. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the question whether any intention is sufficiently shown to take this case out of the well-known rule on the construction of statutes, that the rights of the parties must be decided according to the law as it existed when the action was commenced."

[8] It is true that the Ct. of appeal will in exceptional cases take into account the facts & events which come into existence after the decree appealed against; but the Ct. will do so only for the purpose of shortening litigation & for meeting the ends of justice. In the present case, there is no exceptional reason suggested on behalf of the applt. why the H C. should take into account in disposing of the appeal the circumstance that the pltf. is dead & his heirs have been substituted in his place.

[9] Upon these grounds I should affirm the decree of the lower applt. Ct. & dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14 (2) — 'For the same relief'.

An application for review of judgment of the High Court is substantially for the same relief as that prayed for in an application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court, the objective in each case being the reversal of the judgment of the High Court. [Para 4]

Anno. Lim. Act, S. 14, N. 19.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14 (2) — 'Good faith'— Ultimate result of proceeding cannot determine bona fides of a party - Person filing petition for leave to appeal to Supreme Court on advice of eminent counsel on ground that a substantial question of law was involved—Fact that applicant failed to make out substantial question of law does not affect his bona fides even if he might have been too optimistic in presenting application. [Para 5]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14 (2) — 'Defect of jurisdiction or other cause of like nature'.

Where an application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court is rejected on the merits on the ground that the petitioner had failed to satisfy the conditions precedent for granting of such leave, it can be said that the Court was unable to entertain it from a defect of jurisdiction or other cause of like nature within the meaning of S. 14 (2). The words 'or other cause of a like nature' in S. 14 (2) should be liberally construed. They must be construed ejusdem generis with defect of jurisdiction, that is to say, the defect must be of such a character as to make it impossible for the Court to entertain the suit or application and to decide it on merits. Sultan Ahmad and Janak Kishore — for Petnrs.; Ganesh Sharma & Medni Prasad Singh — for Opposite Party.

B. P. Sinha J. — This is an application under section 5 of the Limitation Act for condoning the delay in making the application for review of a judgment of this Court.

[2] During the course of the argument, it appeared to me that this was really not a case for condonation of delay under section 5 of the Limitation Act. I pointed out to Sir Sultan Ahmad that the application really turned on the interpretation of section 14 of the Limitation Act. If the case could come within the purview of section 14, the application would be in time, and, the petitioners need not have taken recourse to the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act: if, on the other hand, the case did not attract the provisions of section 14, it will be necessary for the petitioners successfully to bring the case within the purview of section 5, as will presently appear.

[3] The facts relevant to the present application are stated below. On the 10th of May, 1949, this Court delivered the judgment. On the 8th of June, 1949, the decree of this Court was sealed and signed. On the 14th of June, 1949, an application was made to this Court for leave to appeal to the Federal Court. This application stood dismissed on the 25th of January, 1950. On the 25th of February, 1950, an application for special leave was made to the Supreme Court, which rejected the application on the 9th of May, 1950. The application for review of judgment was made on the 19th of July this year, just on the re-opening day after the long vacation. It will be observed, on a reference to the dates aforesaid, that, if the time occupied in prosecuting the application for leave to appeal in this Court and for the special leave to appeal in the Supreme Court were excluded, the last date for making the application for review of judgment would fall during the long vacation, and that, therefore, the application presented on the 19th July, 1950, would be in time.

[4] Hence, it is necessary to consider the provisions of section 14 (2) in this connection. There can be no doubt that the applicants had been prosecuting, with due diligence, their application for leave to appeal filed in this Court and the application for special leave filed in the Supreme Court against the same party. But the question is : Were the petitioners prosecuting those applications "for the same relief" for which he has made the application for review of judgment? In my opinion the relief prayed for in the application for review of judgment is substantially the same as that prayed for in the application for leave to appeal the objective in each case being the reversal of the judgment of this Court. Though it may be said that the immediate relief in the application for leave to appeal in this Court or in the Supreme Court was for permission to lodge the appeal, the ultimate objective certainly was the reversal of the judgment to be appealed from.

[5] But it has been argued on behalf of the respondents opposite party that it cannot be said that those applications, which proved infructuous, were being prosecuted in good faith, because, it was argued, according to the definition of "good faith" in section 2 of the Limitation Act, the application was not being prosecuted with due care and attention. In this connection, it was urged that the valuation of the relief sought in this case was under ten thousand rupees, and that, therefore, the petitioners could have known that they could not succeed in getting the necessary leave without making out a substantial question of law. But, in my opinion, there is no substance in this contention. The petitioners were out to make out substantial questions of law. It is true they failed in doing so; but the ultimate result of the proceedings cannot determine the bona fides of the party. The petitioners were being advised by eminent counsel, and had left no stone unturned to obtain the relief asked for. The petitioners may have been too optimistic; but that consideration cannot affect their bona fides.

[6] The most serious controversy in this case arises on the interpretation and application of the last clause of sub-section (2) of section 14, that is to say—Can it be said in the present case that the application for leave to appeal either in this Court or in the Supreme Court was not entertained on account of "defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature"?

[7] The petition in the present case is that the suit had been found to have been properly valued at a sum less than ten thousand rupees. The judgment of this Court on appeal partly reversed the decision of the trial Court, and, therefore, if the value of the subject-matter of the suit and the appeal were ten thousand or above—and later twenty thousand or above—the appeal would have been admitted as a matter of course. But, as the valuation was less than the minimum prescribed for an appeal as a matter of course, the petitioners for leave to appeal had to make out that substantial questions of law were involved in the appeal. This they failed to do, in the opinion of the Courts concerned, though they may have been advised that they had a reasonable chance of getting their application for leave to appeal allowed. But this Court, when it refused the application for leave to appeal, or when the Supreme Court rejected the application for special leave to appeal, did so apparently on the ground that the petitioners had failed to satisfy the conditions precedent to the granting of the leave asked for. Can it be said in these circumstances that this Court, or the Supreme Court, was unable to entertain the application from a defect of jurisdiction? The term "jurisdiction" has been used in several senses. In a limited sense, it may include the power of a Court to do a certain thing. It may be argued on behalf of the petitioners that this Court, or the Supreme Court, was powerless to entertain the appeal, as the necessary conditions precedent had not been satisfied. On behalf of the opposite party, it may be argued that the application aforesaid had been dismissed by this Court or by the Supreme Court on their merits. But the fact remains that the appeal was not entertained. The broad principle underlying the provisions of section 14 of the Act is, naturally, the protection against the bar of limitation of a litigant honestly pursuing his remedies, or supposed remedies, to get his case tried on merits, and failing to get his relief on account of the inability of the Court to give him a hearing on merits—see in this connection the observations of their Lordships of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Mathura Singh v. Bhawani Singh, 22 ALL. 248 at p. 253 : (1900 A. W. N. 64). There is no doubt that the petitioners failed twice in their attempt to have their appeal entertained on its merits in this Court and in the Supreme Court, though their application for leave to appeal at both the stages was dismissed on its merits. Hence, in my opinion, the facts and circumstances of this case are within the terms of the last clause of section 14 (2). But, even assuming that I am not right in holding that the petitioners' appeal was not entertained from a defect of jurisdiction, in my opinion, their case would be covered by the alternative clause "or other cause of a like nature". These words, of course, have got to be construed ejusdem generis with defect of jurisdiction, that is to say, the defect must be of such a character as to make it impossible for the Court to entertain the suit or application, and to decide it on its merits—see in this connection the observations of their Lordships of the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in the case of Bhai Jai Kishun Singh v. Peoples Bank of Northern India, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Lah. 136 : (I. L. R. 1944 Lah. 451 F.B.). It has also been repeatedly held that the words of this section, and particularly the words "or other cause of a like nature", should be liberally construed : vide Mathura Singh v. Bhawani Singh, 22 ALL. 248 : (1900 A.W.N. 64 F.B.) and the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Lal Bihari Lall v. Bani Madhava, 30 P. L. T. 201 : (A. I. R. 1949 Pat. 293 F.B.) where the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Ramdutt Ramkissendas v. E. D. Sassoon & Co., 56 I. A. 128 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 P. C. 103) and Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram, 44 I. A. 218 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 156) have been referred. In my opinion, these words are wide enough to cover a case like the present.

[8] For the reasons given above, I would hold that the petitioners' application is covered by the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act, and that, therefore, the application for review of judgment is not barred by time. Though this application has been vehemently opposed by the opposite party, in all circumstances of this case, I would direct each party to bear its own costs in this proceeding.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 2 (d), 28 (2), 56 (3) proviso — Property — Meaning of — Provident Fund.

Whatever the nature of the property may be, the inslvt. should have an interest in present to dispose of the same, & not such an interest which may depend upon the fulfilment of certain conditions or contingencies. The definition of the term "property" as used in the Act contemplates that the power of disposition must be an unconditional power. It is only such a property that is divisible amongst the creditors of the inslvt.

Rules 17 & 18 of the Rules of the Provident Fund created by the Tinplate Co. of India Ltd. for the benefit of their employees show that the members of the fund have no disposing power over the fund. They are bound by the rules & it is only on the conditions mentioned in the rules that the fund under certain circumstances become payable to the members concerned. That being so, the said funds are not the property of the inslvt. members within the meaning of S. 2 (d) & are not divisible amongst the creditors as contemplated by S. 28 (2). By the mere act of inslvcy. the inslvt. members cannot compel the trustees to make payment of the funds standing in the various accounts, & if the inslvts. cannot do so, the receiver or the Ct. cannot remove the trustees from the custody of the same as enjoined by the proviso to sub-s. Sarjoo Prasad J.—This is a batch of misc. appeals arising out of an order of Mr. S. Ahmad, Dist. J. of Purulia, dated 26-6-1948. All these appeals have been heard together as they are directed against the same judgment & involve common questions for adjudication.

[2] The cases arise out of applns. filed by the resp.-creditor under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act (Act V [5] of 1920). In those applns., the creditor alleged that certain sums of money lying in deposit in the provident fund account of the Tinplate Co. of India Ltd. under the management & control of the trustees of the Tinplate Co. provident fund were the property of the inslvts. within the meaning of S. 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act, & that the said property accordingly vested in the receiver appointed in the inslvcy. proceedings & was available for distribution & division amongst the creditors under S. 28 (2) of the aforesaid Act.

[3] The applns. were opposed by the inslvts. as also by the Tinplate Co. Ltd. & the trustees of the fund aforesaid. Their contention was that the Tinplate Co. had created a fund by an indenture dated 15-7-1930, for the benefit of their employees & their families & had made a declaration of trust according to law transferring & vesting the said funds in the trustees who had admittedly the control, custody & management thereof. The fund being trust property & subject to rules & regulations framed under the instrument of trust, the inslvts. had no present interest in them. They, therefore, urged that the said deposits in the provident fund accounts could not be regarded as property of the inslvts. within the meaning of the Insolvency Act; nor were they available for distribution amongst the creditors of the inslvts.

[4] The learned Dist. J. who dealt with these applns. held by his order under appeal that the members of the provident fund, namely, the inslvts. had got disposing power over their provident fund monies standing to their credit in two of the accounts, & that, therefore, the provident fund was the property of the inslvts. which vested in the Insolvency Ct. & was available for distribution to the creditors under the provisions of the Insolvency Act. He also found that the property in the funds in question had not vested in the trustees who had simply the power of control & management over the funds in question. Against this order of the learned Dist. J the trustees of the provident fund of the Tinplate Co. of India Ltd, as also the Company have preferred the above appeals.

[5] On behalf of the applts. Mr. Bhabanand Mukherji contended that the decision of the learned Dist. J. is erroneous on both the points. His contention is that the inslvts. who were the employees of the Tinplate Co. had no present right of disposition over the funds in question except under the rules of the trust, & that the property in the funds was, as it appears from the terms constituting the fund, vested in certain trustees, & therefore, the trustees could not be divested of the funds in question so as to make them available to the Insolvency Ct. for distribution amongst the creditors of the inslvts. It appears to me that both these contentions of Mr. Mukherji are correct & must prevail.

[6] Section 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, requires that "on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the inslvt. shall vest in the Ct. or in a receiver as hereinafter provided, & shall become divisible among the creditors."

Therefore, if the funds in question are the "property of the inslvt," it cannot be doubted that they would vest in the Ct. or a receiver for purposes of distribution among the creditors. Now, the word "property" has been defined in S. 2 (d) of the Act. It includes any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. There is no doubt that this definition of the word "property" is not exhaustive because the language itself shows that it includes any property having the characteristics mentioned in the definition, namely, property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which power he can exercise to his advantage. It follows, therefore, that whatever the nature of the property may be, the inslvt. should have an interest in present to dispose of the same, & not such an interest which may depend upon the fulfilment of certain conditions or contingencies. In that case, the power of disposition cannot be exercised without let or hindrance by the person concerned. Therefore, the definition of the term "property" as used in the Act contemplates that the power of disposition must be an unconditional power. It is only such a property that is divisible amongst the creditors of the inslvt. This view of the law is also supported by reference to S. 56 (3) of the Act which lays down:

"Where the Ct. appoints a receiver, it may remove the person in whose possession or custody any such property as aforesaid is from the possession or custody thereof:

Provided that nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise the Ct. to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the inslvt. has not a present right so to remove."

The Ct. or for the matter of that the receiver appointed in the inslvcy. proceedings is in no better position in the exercise of this power of disposition than the inslvt. himself. If the inslvt. has no present right to remove a person from the custody & control of a certain property, then the receiver or the Insolvency Ct. cannot do so, because the latter only steps into the shoes of the inslvt. with respect to the inslvt.'s property.

[6-A] In Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 18 : (6 Lah. 1) the Judicial Committee when dealing with the definition of the term "property" in S. 2 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which is exactly in the same terms as S. 2 (d), Provincial Act, observed as follows: "Section 2 seems to contemplate an absolute & unconditional power of disposal". There can be no doubt that where this power of disposal is hedged in & surrounded with conditions, it cannot constitute the property so as to vest in the receiver or the Ct. As the case in question has given rise to some controversy, it would be useful to refer briefly to the facts in which the decision was given. The pltfs. in the case had sued to enforce a right of pre-emption. The defts. contested the pltf.'s right on the ground that the father of the pltfs. & the head manager of their family had been adjudicated an inslvt. & from the said date the whole of the family estate & effects including the property through which the right of pre-emption was claimed had vested in the Official Assignee. The contention, in other words, was that when a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school is adjudged an inslvt. under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, not only his own rights but all the rights & interests of his sons who are the coparceners in the joint family property vest in the Official Assignee by virtue of the adjudication alone. The learned Dist. J. did not accept the contention & decided in favour of the pltfs. On appeal to the H. C., there was a reference to a F. B. & the point formulated for decision was :

"Does an order of adjudication passed against a father vest in the Official Receiver his son's interest in the joint family property ?"

Sir Shadi Lal who delivered the judgment of the F. B. answered the point in the affirmative, but in doing so, he observed :

"I must say that if the matter were res integra, I should find considerable difficulty in subscribing to the doctrine that the son's interest in the joint family property should in the event of the father's inslvcy. be regarded as the latter's property which vests in the Official Receiver."

The learned Judge also held that upon general principles of Hindu law governing the rights of the father & his son in the coparcenary property, an order of adjudication against the father has only the effect of replacing the father by the Official Receiver, & that the order does not by itself vest in the latter the interest of the son in the property. The Judicial Committee did not agree that the point should have been answered in the affirmative, & set aside the decree of the H. C. restoring that of the learned Dist. J. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, however, pointed out that it may be that under the provisions of S. 52 or in some other way that property may in a proper case be made available for payment of the father's just debts, but it is quite a different thing to say that by virtue of his inslvcy. alone the interest of the sons also vests in the assignee, & no such provision should be read into the Act. It would be seen that the Judicial Committee quite clearly made a distinction between the vesting of the property itself & the power which a Mitakshara father exercises in making his son's share in the joint family liable for payment of his debts. This power, their Lordships held, might within the terms of S. 52 vest in the Official Receiver but not the interest of the son in the joint family property itself. Indeed Sir Shadi Lal himself in delivering the opinion of the F. B. was conscious of this distinction & felt difficulty in subscribing to the contrary view. It is important to note that there is no corresponding section to S. 52, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, in the Provincial Insolvency Act, & therefore, whatever may have been observed in regard to the scope of S. 52 is of little assistance to us in the construction of the present enactment.

[7] On behalf of the resps., Mr. B. N. Mitter has drawn our attention to a F. B. decision of this Ct. in Bishwanath v. Official Receiver, 16 Pat. 60 : (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Pat. 185 F.B.). Mr. Mitter contends on the authority of this decision that the definition of the term "property" as used in the present Act must be deemed to include property over which an inslvt. has a conditional & qualified right of disposition. It is difficult to see how the decision of the F. B. is really of any assistance to him on the point. In the F. B. in question their Lordships held that the power or the right which the father has under the Hindu law to sell his son's interest for the payment of his proper debts is property within the meaning of Ss. 28 (2) & 59, Provincial Insolvency Act. This decision appears to be based upon certain other decisions of various other Cts.; for instance, T. S. Balavenkata Seetharama v. Official Receiver, Tanjore, 49 Mad. 849 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 994 F.B.), Anand Prakash v. Narain Das, 53 ALL. 239 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 ALL. 162 F.B.), Haridas v. Lallubhai, 55 Bom. 110 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Bom. 50) as also on a decision of the P. C. in Sat Narain v. Sri Kishen Das, 17 Lah. 644 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 277). The power of a Hindu father to dispose of the interest of his sons in the joint family property is a power which he can always exercise to his benefit. If he does exercise such a power, the sale would be a good sale unless the sons choose to get it set aside on the ground that the father's debt was illegal or immoral; otherwise the power of disposition may be unconditionally exercised by the father. To this limited extent the power in question may be regarded as property within the meaning of the Act so as to vest in the receiver, on the father being adjudged an insolvent, but beyond that the receiver cannot displace the interest of the sons in the joint family property, and the said property remains the property of the sons. It is true that some of the observations made in the decision of the Judicial Committee, if pushed to their logical sequence, may be found not to be in complete accord with the view taken by this Court in the F. B. decision in Bishwanath Sao's case, (16 Pat. 60 : A. I. R. (24) 1937 Pat. 185 F. B.) but there is no doubt in my mind that the view taken by the Judicial Committee in regard to the meaning of the term "property" as used in S. 2 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act applies with equal force to the definition of "property" in S. 2 (e) (sic) of the present Act. Therefore, whatever may be said of the power or the right which the father has under the Hindu law to sell his sons' interest for the payment of his debts, I am of opinion that the property mentioned in the Insolvency Act must be such that the insolvent has "an absolute and unconditional power of disposal" thereof. Applying these principles, I shall now see whether in the present case the insolvents can be said to have such power of disposal over the trust funds in question.

[8] It is admitted that the insolvents are the employees of the Tinplate Co. The Tinplate Co. of India Ltd. have created a fund for the benefit of their employees and the insolvents are members of the said fund. In the provident fund there are three kinds of accounts, namely, A, B & C accounts. The 'A' account relates to the contribution made by a member of the provident fund out of his earnings. At the end of each year a sum equal to the amount contributed by the employee-member of the provident fund from his earning during that year is contributed by the Company in the name of the member, and this is called the 'B' account, while the 'C' account is a further contribution made by the Company in proportion to the dividends paid by the Company on its ordinary share capital during any financial year. This 'C' account is really a contribution by way of bonus. The claim of the creditors in particular relates to the funds lying in deposit in the 'A' and 'C' accounts. As to whether these funds are vested in the trustees or not, I shall deal with the point later. The rules of the funds which have been exhibited in the case show that the management and control of the fund is vested in the trustees. All the employees of the Company except certain covenanted employees on higher grades are eligible for membership of the fund on completion of one year's service if they apply for such membership with certain declaration relating to the disposition of the money available in the event of death of the member which declaration is of course open to be cancelled and revised by the member if he so desires. The monies of the fund, as R. 8 shows, are to be invested by the trustees in accordance with the provisions from time to time in force under the Provident Fund Relief Act, 1929. On retirement of any member with the consent of the General Manager of the Company before completion of fifteen years of service the member is entitled to be paid the entire amount standing to his credit in 'A' and 'C' accounts together with one-fifteeth of the monies standing to his credit in 'B' account for each completed year of service. In case of dismissal for misconduct or resignation without the consent of the General Manager before completion of 15 years' service, he is to be paid only the amount then standing to his credit in 'A' & 'C' accounts, the fund in 'B' account in that case being forfeited. On termination by any means of a member's service after completion of 15 years' service, the member shall be paid the entire amount then standing to his credit in 'A', 'B' & 'C' accounts. Therefore, the funds become payable under certain conditions of retirement or dismissal or termination of service according to rules governing the fund. It is important to notice that under R. 17 of the rules no member of the fund shall have any claim on the monies standing to his or her credit otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the rules. Rule 17 further provides that any assignment by a member of the monies which would otherwise be payable to him shall be void, and in the event of any member being assignee or being adjudicated insolvent, the monies shall be liable to be forfeited provided the trustees in their absolute discretion do pay and apply the same for the benefit of the member or his dependents. Rule 18 is another important rule which shows that withdrawals by members of the money standing to their credit in the fund shall not be allowed by the trustees except on special grounds. These rules, to my mind, quite clearly show that the members have no disposing power over the funds in question. They are bound by the provident fund rules specified above, and it is only on the conditions mentioned in the rules that the funds under certain circumstances become payable to the members concerned. That being so, it is difficult to hold that the said funds are the property of the insolvents within the meaning of S. 2 (d), Insolvency Act, or that they can be divisible amongst the creditors as contemplated by S. 28 (2) of the Act. By the mere act of insolvency these insolvents cannot compel the trustees to make payment of the funds standing in the various accounts, and if the insolvents cannot do so, the receiver or the Court cannot remove the trustees from the custody of the same as enjoined by the proviso to sub-s. (3) of S. 56 of the Act.

[9] In an unreported decision of this Court in Civil Revns. Nos 620 & 746 of 1948 decided on 20-12-1948, in which the present decree-holder-resp. was the petnr., Meredith J. (as he then was) had occasion to construe the rules in question. In that case, in pursuance of an attachment order a notice was issued upon the Tinplate Co. Ltd. to show cause why the sums in question standing to the credit of the debtors in the provident fund managed by the Company should not be paid in Court. The Company objected to the payment on the ground that under the provident fund rules the sums laying to the credit of any employee could not be paid to him until he retired from service or his service was otherwise terminated as contemplated by the rules. The decree-holder, on the contrary, asserted that the judgment-debtors had full disposing power over their provident fund deposits and so the Company could be compelled to pay. The learned Munsif held that the decree-holder had no better rights than the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors having no disposing power over these sums during the continuance of their service, the Company could not be compelled to pay the amounts in Ct. for payment to the decree-holder. Meredith J. upheld the decision of the learned Munsif. In construing the rules, Meredith J. observed as follows :

"These conditions are contractual, & there is nothing illegal about them or to prevent their enforcement either against the employee or in his favour. It would be absurd to assert that when a member joins the Fund & makes contributions he is entering upon a colourable transaction designed to defeat possible creditors. The object of the Fund is specified in R. 2 as 'to accumulate for the benefit of the Company's employees who have joined the Fund, certain sums as a future provision for them & for their families.' It is perfectly legal arrangement, & indeed a laudable one, & I can see no reason why the Cts. should regard it with disfavour. Under the Provident Funds Act Govt. & Railway Provident Funds, substantially similar in nature, have been completely protected from the hands of creditors—a sufficient indication of the view taken by the Legislature with regard to Provident Funds. Such Funds are established not as a devise to enable workers to defeat their creditors, but to protect them against themselves—against extravagance against running into debt, & so to ensure some provision for their old age & their dependants. A money-lender who lends money to a member of a Provident Fund as against his assets in that Fund surely does so with his eyes open, & can have, in my view, no legitimate grievance if he subsequently finds difficulties in his way."

I entirely agree with these observations. I must, however, make it clear that I am not in agreement with his Lordship in regard to his views as to whether the ownership of the fund had vested in the trustees.

[10] In this context reference may be made to a decision In re Earnest Clarence O'brien, 60 Cal. 926 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 701) on which reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the resps. In that case there was an adjudication order against an inslvt. on 23-5-1932. The inslvt. had entered the service of the Company on 1-1-1914, & he was discharged on account of his inslvcy. on 31-5-1932. Before he filed his appln. for inslvcy. certain sums of money stood to his credit in the books of the provident fund which were under three heads (1) London's contribution, (2) his contribution & (3) bank's contribution. I should observe that the provident fund in question was created under certain rules, as in the present case, by the Company for the benefit of its employees who were entitled to become members of the fund. The Official Assignee contended that the property in the funds had vested in him, & he asked for an order compelling the trustees to pay the fund forthwith. It was found that under the rules of the fund the member was entitled to claim payment from the fund only under certain circumstances as specified in the rules. The learned Judge who decided the case, therefore, held that the inslvt. on discharge could not claim any payment in respect of that part of the fund which was contributed by the Company because he had not served the requisite period. The learned Judge, therefore, held in regard to the amounts under the first & third heads that the Official Assignee could not get the same. In regard to the second head, that is, the personal contribution of the member, the learned Judge found that on the date of the inslvcy. the inslvt. had no property in the funds because he was still in the service of the Company, & that any claim he might have could only arise upon his discharge when he would cease to be a member. He, however, held that inasmuch as the inslvt. had been already discharged from service on account of his inslvcy., his claim to the amount under the second head had become vested in him when his service terminated & must be paid to the Official Assignee. This decision, therefore, does not in any manner support the contention of the resps. On the other hand, if at all, it shows that so long as the conditions mentioned in the rules are not fulfilled, the funds are not payable to the inslvt. &, as such, they cannot vest in the receiver appointed to take charge of the estate of the inslvt. This decision has been also relied upon by Mr. Mitter, counsel for the resps. in support of the argument that under S. 12, T. P. Act, R. 17 of the present rules which provides for forfeiture of the funds in case of assignment or inslvcy. is void. His argument is that if the provision as to forfeiture in the rules is void under S. 12, T. P. Act, the funds would become payable to the Official Assignee forming the assets of the inslvt. In my opinion, it is doubtful if S. 12 of the Act can apply to such a case. Section 12 invalidates only those conditions which are in derogation of the rights of the transferee & not those which are in derogation of the rights of the transferor. Be that as it may, it is really not necessary to decide the matter for our present purposes. I have already held that under the provident fund rules discussed above, the inslvts. have no right of disposition over the funds in question, &, as such, the amounts standing in those accounts cannot vest in the receiver.

[11] It has been further argued by the learned counsel for the resps, that the words of S. 28 (2) of the Act, viz., that "the whole of the property of the inslvt. shall vest in the Ct. or in a receiver" are wide enough to cover a property of this nature. It seems to me, however, that the language of S. 28 (2) by itself cannot solve the problem. One has again to look back to the meaning of the term "property" as contained in the definition in S. 2 (d) of the Act which means & includes any property over which the inslvt. can exercise his disposing power. It was held in Damodar Chaube & Co. v. Madan Makund, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 7: (223 I. C. 330) that "the definition of the word 'property' in the Provincial Insolvency Act is not exhaustive." It is, however, difficult to understand how the expression "property" in the Provincial Insolvency Act can mean property over which or the profits of which the inslvt. has not got disposing power. As has been observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Sat Narain v. Behari Lal, 52 I. A. 22 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 18)

"the property of an insvlt. which by S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, (which corresponds to S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act) vests in the Official Assignee must mean only the property which is divisible amongst his creditors."

In Damodar Chaube's case, (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 7: 223 I. C. 330) there was an argument advanced that the interest of the inslvt. in certain Govt. promissory notes vested in the receiver. This was claimed on the basis of a certain agreement under which after the demise of a lady, Mt. Rajwanti kuer, the inslvts. would be entitled to take the Govt. promissory notes from the Imperial Bank of India. The Ct. below held that the interest of the inslvts. in the Govt. promissory notes was not a mere chance of succession, & in view of the terms of the agreement they could not be assigned to the receiver or to any other person so as to be available for distribution amongst the creditors so long as Mt. Rajwanti Kuer was alive. The decision was affirmed by this Ct; & the contention that the word "property" in S. 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act, would include a property of this character did not find favour with their Lordships. Their Lordships held that during the lifetime of Mt. Rajwanti kuer the inslvts. had no disposing power in respect of the Govt. promissory notes, & had, therefore, no such property as would vest in the Ct. or the receiver under S. 28 (2) of the Act.

[12] Counsel for the resps. has in this connection relied upon a decision of this Ct. in D. Palaiya v. T. P. Sen, 16 P. L. T. 167: (A.I.R. (22) 1935 Pat. 211) in which it was held that under S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act on the making of the order of inslvcy. the provident fund money vested in the receiver, but the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable. In that case on the terms of the contract between the parties as embodied in the provident fund rules, it was found that at all times during the years of service the amount contributed by the employee was within his disposal. The receiver was, therefore, held entitled to attach the provident fund money of the employee. That being so, I cannot agree with the learned Dist. J. in his conclusion that the provident fund money vested in the receiver & was capable of distribution amongst the creditors of the inslvts.

[13] Mr. Mukherji has next argued that the property in the funds actually vested in the trustees & was not the property of the inslvts. under Ss. 5 & 6, Trusts Act. A trust in respect of moveable property is created by declaration of the intention creating such a trust, the purpose of the trust, the beneficiary, & the trust property & by transfer of the trust property to the trustee. The learned counsel for the resps. has contended that there is really no transfer of the trust property in favour of the trustees, & he contends on a reference to the rules that all that has been transferred is the control & management of the funds of the trust. He refers to R. 1 of the Rules & regulations which says that "the management of the fund & the control of its funds shall be vested in the trustees who will undertake such management . . . ." There would be much force in the contention if R. 1 stood alone, but I have shown from the other rules that the investment of the funds, the control of the funds & the distribution of the funds have all vested in the trustees. If after the creation of the trust the author of the trust has no interest in the trust property except under the rules thereof & the entire dominion over the trust property is to all intents & purposes vested in the trustees, which is so in the present case, I cannot see how it can be argued that there has been no transfer of interest in favour of the trustees. After all, the various emblems of ownership as evidenced by the rules are all vested in the trustees, & the members of the trust or the company for the matter of that have no control over it. In such a case, the only inference possible is that the trust fund was for all purposes vested in the trustees. I am conscious of the fact that a contrary view was taken by a single Judge of this Ct. in Gopal Das v. Abdul Jabber, A.I.R. (33) 1946 Pat. 430: (228 I. C. 478) & that the said decision was followed by another learned Judge of this Ct. sitting single in Muktilal v. Tinplate Co. of India Ltd., A.I.R (36) 1949 Pat. 337. With all respect to the learned Judges, I am afraid, I cannot agree with their view in regard to the construction of the rules. In this connection Mr. Mitter has relied upon a decision of the Judicial Committee in The King v. Paulson, A. I. R. (7) 1920 P. C. 190. In that case, it was quite obvious from the terms creating the alleged trust that there was no intention on the part of the author to divest himself of the interest in the property, & the P. C. therefore, held that it was in substance a scheme for the management of the property during the absence of the creater of the trust; as such the ownership in the property had not vested in the trustees. The case is quite different here. But even then it is contended by Mr. Mitter that the interest of a beneficiary under a trust can also vest in the inslvt. That again brings us to a consideration of the point whether it is such an interest as can be regarded as property within the meaning of the Insolvency Act. The beneficiary's interest may be assignable or may be in the nature of an actionable claim but that itself does not take us very far unless we also find that it is an interest capable of distribution amongst the creditors of the inslvts. as contemplated by S. 28 (2) of the Act. It has been held in Secy. Burma Oil Subsidiary Provident Fund India Ltd. v. Dadibhar Singh, A.I.R. (28) 1941 Rang. 256 that even though in a provident fund account an amount stands to the credit of a member, he obtains no interest in it until the payment. This shows that the mere fact that a certain amount is credited to a member's account does not indicate that he holds an interest in such amount. The member's right to have the money paid to him will arise only in the event of his dismissal or retirement as provided in the rules of the fund which may or may not happen before his death, or his becoming insane. And this applies both to contribution or subscription made by the member out of his salary & contribution made by the company. It was held in that case that such monies even though credited to the member's account could not be attached in execution of a decree against him. It was further held in that case that the word "debt" used in S. 60 & O. 21, R. 46, C. P. C., means an actually existing debt that is, a perfected & absolute debt, not merely a sum of money which may or may not become payable at some future time or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen. To a similar effect is a decision in Gajraj Sheokarandas v. Hukamchand Sarupchand, A.I.R. (26) 1939 Bom. 90: (I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 109). I find myself in complete agreement with the view taken in these decisions notwithstanding some of the observations made by the learned Judges of this Ct. sitting single in the two decisions referred to above, viz., Gopal Das v. Abdul Jabber, A.I.R. (33) 1946 Pat. 430: (228 I. C. 478) & Muktilal v. Tinplate Co. of India Ltd., A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 337.

[14] For the above reasons, the appeals must be allowed & the order of the learned Dist. J. set aside with costs. As the above appeals have been heard together, I consider that there should be only one hearing fee payable to the applts.

Shearer J. — This appln. in revision is directed against an order made by the learned Sub-divisional Mag. of Bihar in a proceeding under S. 144, Cr. P. C. This proceeding was instituted in consequence of an apprehension of a serious riot occurring between men belonging to four villages over the right to take water from a stream known as the Saraswati Nadi. Two pynes take off from this stream at point almost opposite to one another & irrigate land in Sabalpur & Naipokhar respectively. When the record of rights was prepared, the level of these two pynes was higher than the level of the bed of the Saraswati river, & in order that water might be taken into the pynes, a bandh was put across the river. This bandh consisted of blocks of stone & kankar. The other two villages concerned are Panditpur & Nahub which are situated about a mile or so further down the course of the stream. These two villages are also irrigated by pynes which take off from the stream more or less opposite to one another. The men of Panditpur &

Nahub, being in great need of water owing to the then prevailing drought, were anxious not merely to deepen the bed of the stream between the bandh & their own pynes but also to alter the bandh in such a way as to make water percolate through it. Apparently a large quantity of silt had been deposited on the bandh & the men of Panditpur & Nahub wished to remove this mud which had, as it were, caked on to it & transformed the bandh into a solid mud bandh. The learned sub-divisional Mag. made an order restraining the men of Sabalpur & Naipokhar from interfering with the men of Panditpur & Nahub while they were cleaning or deepening the channel of the stream at any point beyond a distance of one hundred yards from the bandh. As to the portion of the stream immediately below the bandh & as to the bandh itself, the learned sub-divisional Mag. stated in his order that nothing should be done unless he himself were present & directed it to be done. It further appears from his order that he did not intend to make any alterations in the bandh or in this part of the bed of the stream except in the presence of the pleader-commr. who, had, at instance relaid the survey map, & of the pleaders appearing for both parties. An appln. in revision was preferred against the order of the learned sub-divisional Mag. & this appln. was dismissed by the learned Dist. Mag. The order of the learned Dist. Mag. was made on 4-12-1950, & on the day following the present appln. in revision was made to this Ct. In admitting the appln. my Lord the Chief Justice directed that there should be a stay of further proceedings. A copy of this order was sent out by the office of the Ct. in accordance with the usual practice, on the day on which it was passed. Unfortunately, however, the copy was not sent, as, I think, it should have been, to the Ct. of the sub-divisional Mag. but to the Ct. of the Dist. Mag. In consequence of this & of some most regrettable delay which took place in the office of the Dist. Mag., the order did not reach the sub-divisional Mag. until 11-12-1950. Now, it so happened that on 10-12-1950, the Dist. Mag. & the sub-divisional Mag. were both at Rajgir on other business, & in connection with that business had to go to the immediate vicinity of the bandh. Certain men belonging to Nahub & Panditpur approached the sub-divisional Mag. & asked him to take the opportunity of his being there to go & make the alterations, which he proposed to make, in the bandh & in the bed of the stream. The learned sub-divisional Mag. gave them a reply which led to their going to the stream & proceeding to dig it up. At 11 a. m., that is, an hour or so after the villagers of Panditpur & Nahub had been to him, another individual appeared & told him that the H. C. had ordered a stay of further proceedings. In support of what he said, this man produced a letter which is said to have been written by the advocate who appeared for Bajo Singh of Sabalpur in the present appln. in revision to the pleader who had appeared for him in the Ct. of the sub-divisional Mag. The sub-divisional Mag declined to act on this assurance that a stay of proceedings had been granted while the Dist, Mag., it is said, took the letter & tore it up. This has not been specifically denied by Mr. K. N. Singh in his affidavit & I must take it that this is what actually happened. The Dist. Mag. & the sub-divisional Mag. went back to Rajgir to complete their other business & a couple of hours or so later while they were in the inspection bungalow, they were told that the men of Sabalpur and Naipokhar had collected a large mob, & that there was an immediate apprehension of a breach of the peace. The sub-divisional Mag. at once hastened to the scene of occurrence &, fortunately, on his arrival, the mob which had been collected & some men in which were armed dispersed. The petnr., Bajo Singh, then applied to this Ct. asking that a rule should be issued on Mr. K. N. Singh, the Dist. Mag., & on Mr. S. K. Mukherjee, the Sub-divisional Mag., requiring them to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Ct. on the ground that they had ignored or disobeyed the order staying proceedings. A rule was issued by my Lord the Chief Justice & Reuben J. & the rule has been heard along with the appln. in revision. I will deal in the first place with the appln. in revision.

[2] It is, I think, perfectly clear that the order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag., or, at all events, that portion of it relating to the bandh & to the bed of the stream immediately below the bandh was an order which was made wholly without jurisdiction. As I have said, the learned Sub-divisional Mag. proposed to go in person to the bandh & to the bed of the stream & to make certain alterations in them with a view to restoring them to the condition in which he believed them to have been, when the record of rights was prepared. Mr. Nawal Kishore Prasad, for the opposite party, said that a mandatory order could be made under S. 144, Cr. P. C., & cited in support of his contention the decision of Agarwala J., sitting singly, in Lachmi Narayan v. Nandkishore, A.I.R. (27) 1940 Pat. 57 : (41 Cr. L. J. 98). That, however, was a case in which an order was made for the removal of a bandh & the party against whom the order was made had an opportunity of appearing & showing cause against its removal. What, however, the learned Sub-divisional Mag. proposed to do in the present case was himself to make certain alterations in the bandh & in the bed of the stream. Presumably, he would, at the time, have considered any objections which might have been raised by the men of Sabalpur & Naipokhar; but even so, it is not at all as if he had made an order requiring certain specific things to be done & given the person against whom that order was made an opportunity of showing cause against it. Moreover, apart from this, the learned Sub-divisional Mag. appears to have acted on little or nothing more than a mere speculation that, at the time when the record of rights was prepared, a certain volume of water must have percolated through the bandh & reached Panditpur & Nahub. The entry in the fardabpashi, however, probably recorded no more than the fact that, at the time when it was prepared, the bandh was a bandh of a certain kind. There appears to be nothing in the fardabpashi to suggest that the men of Panditpur & of Nahub had any right to take water from the stream unless & until the level of the water in the stream was sufficient to overtop the bandh & reach their pynes in the ordinary course of gravitation. If the men of Panditpur & Nahub assert a right to have the bandh altered & to have the bed of the stream deepened immediately in front of the bandh, they must institute a suit & ask for a mandatory injunction. Clearly, unless evidence is adduced, it is impossible to say what changes have occurred since the record of rights was prepared, & whether in spite of these changes & of the length of time which has elapsed, the men of Panditpur & Nahub possessed & still possess the rights which they assert. Mr. Nawal Kishore Prasad for the opposite party contended that, in any event, the other part of the order made by the learned Sub-divisional Mag. could be supported. I agree that as the men of Panditpur & Nahub have a right to take water from the stream through their respective pynes, they must, as a necessary corollary, also have a right to clean out the bed of the stream from time to time so as to enable water to enter their pynes. If any further dispute arises regarding this part of the stream, the learned Sub-divisional Mag. would, I think, be well advised to deal with the matter under S. 147, Cr. P. C., unless it is quite plain to him that the men of Panditpur & Nahub are undoubtedly exercising a right which they possess, & the men of Sabalpur & Naipokhar are unreasonably obstructing them in the exercise of that right, in which case, action might perhaps appropriately be taken under S. 107 of the Code. The order of the learned Sub-divisional Mag. has ceased to be operative, & it is, therefore, not necessary to make any order formally setting it aside. With these observations the appln. in revision will be dismissed.

[3] I now turn to the rule which has been issued on Mr. K. N. Singh & Mr. S. K. Mukherjee to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt. A decision in this matter clearly depends on what, exactly, was said by the Sub-divisional Mag. to the men of Panditpur & Nahub. Mr. Mukherjee in his affidavit says that, while he permitted them to go & dig in or clean the bed of the stream, he made it quite clear to them that they were to do nothing in the area immediately below the bandh. Mr. Mukherjee also says that, when he went to the stream in order to prevent the riot or disturbance which was impending, the men of Panditpur & Nahub were carrying on their operations at a point some five hundred yards or so away from the bandh. In the affidavit of Bajo Singh, on the other hand, it is stated that the operations were being carried on within, what I may call, the prohibited area. Mr. Sri Narayan Sahay has said that, if the operations were in fact being carried on well outside that area, the men of Sabalpur & Naipokhar would not have collected in the manner they did, as they had not previously resisted the men of Panditpur & Nahub in cleaning out the lower portion of the bed of the stream. The learned counsel has also pointed out that on 10-12-1950, the period of sixty days during which the order was to be in operation expired & suggests that the men of Panditpur & Nahub deliberately went to the prohibited area as they knew that on the day following the order would cease to have any effect. It is not, however, at all clear to me that any digging had, in fact, been done previously in any part of the stream. It appears to me quite possible that neither party did anything as an appln. in revision had been made to the learned Dist. Mag. In any event, it is quite clear from the order made by the learned subdivisional Mag. that he intended that nothing whatever should be done in this prohibited area unless he were himself present to direct the operations. That being so, it appears to me in the highest degree unlikely that he intended that on 10-12-1950. when he himself was engaged elsewhere on other business, the men of Panditpur & Nahub should be permitted to go & carry on such operations as they themselves chose in it. I must accept the affidavit of Mr. Mukherjee that he made it clear to the men of Panditpur & Nahub that they were not to enter or do anything in the prohibited area although they might clean out or dig in the bed of the stream below it. So far as Mr. Mukherjee is concerned, the order made by this Ct., was an order prohibiting him from doing what he proposed to do in this prohibited area, & if, as I am satisfied in the case, he did & said nothing to countenance anything being done in it, there has been no contempt of any order of this Ct. Mr. Sri Narayan Sahay, for the petnr., said that the intention of this Ct. was not merely to stop the learned sub-divisional Mag. from himself carrying on or directing operations in this prohibited area, but also to stop anything being done in any part of the stream between the two sets of pynes. This may conceivably have been so, but if it was, the proper order to have been passed, would have been an order in the nature of an injunction addressed to the parties belonging to Panditpur & Nahub. I am not prepared to say that any duty was cast on the sub-divisional Mag. to see that nothing whatever was done anywhere in the bed of this stream pending the order finally made on the appln. in revision by this Ct. There has been a certain amount of argument at the bar as to whether the Dist. Mag , Mr. K. N. Singh, was shown justified in disregarding the letter which was to him. This point is really one which is now of no more than academic importance. I ought, however, I consider, to make certain observations regarding it. When an order of stay or other such prohibitory order has been made by this Ct. & when the subordinate Judge or Mag. is informed of the order by an advocate or pleader, he ought, I consider, ordinarily to accept what is stated by the advocate or pleader, & stay further proceedings. Certainly, he ought, to do so, if the advocate or pleader is in a position to satisfy him as to the source of his information & is prepared to support it by an affidavit. The reason why the subordinate Judge or Mag. should invariably take such a course is that an advocate or a pleadar is an officer of the Ct. & is not likely to supply information as to the correctness of which he is not himself completely satisfied. If an advocate or pleader acts improperly or carelessly & it eventually turns out that no prohibitory order has been made by this Ct. suitable action can be taken against him. If, on the other hand, the subordinate Judge or Mag. disregards such information & continues the proceeding, he may find it a matter of difficulty to satisfy this Ct. that he believed in goodfaith that no prohibitory order had been made. There are decisions both in India & in England which show that when a subordinate Judge or Mag. disregards a prohibitory order of which he has been given a notice in this way, it amounts to a contempt of Ct. vide Sati Nath v. Ratanmani, 14 I. C. 803 : (15 C. L. J. 335) & Ex-parte Langley, (1880) 13 Ch. D. 110: (49 L. J. Bk. 1). Mr. Sri Narayan Sahay, for the petnr., contended that it was the duty of the subdivisional Mag. to examine the document which was handed to him by Sheodeni Singh, & that if, on examination, he saw any reason to distrust its authenticity, to require Sheodeni Singh to put in an affidavit. The learned Counsel for the petnr. supported this part of his argument by reference to Babu Ratnessari v. Empress, 2 C. W. N. 498 ; Hem Chandra v. Mathur Santhal, 16 C. W. N. 1031: (13 Cr. L. J. 766) & Gouri Shanker v. Collector of Muzaffarpur, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 553 : (26 Cr. L. J. 965). These decisions support to some extent the contention which has been put forward. None of them, however, goes so far as to lay down that, when a subordinate Judge or Mag. neglects to take such steps to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the information supplied to him that a prohibitory order has been made, he is liable to be committed for contempt of Ct. I think myself that Mr. K. N. Singh acted improvidently in tearing up this letter without apparently reading it, & that he would have been better advised to have read it & to have considered whether or not it did not show, satisfactorily enough for him to have acted on it, that an order staying further proceedings had been made by this Ct. It is, however, quite impossible to say that either he or Mr. Mukherjee deliberately committed any contempt of Ct. The rule which has been issued on them will accordingly be discharged, but in the circumstances, I would not make any order for costs against the petnr. Bajo Singh.

Criminal Misc. Nos. 629 and 642 of 1950, D/- 14-12-1950.

Criminal P.C. (1898), Ss. 497, 498—Prosecutions under S. 7, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act—Non-bailable offence—Power to grant bail—Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (1946), S. 13A.

Where the petnrs. for bail are being prosecuted under S. 7, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, for non-bailable offences & S. 13A of that Act has no application, the stringent conditions necessary for the grant of bail under that section cannot be applied & the Ct. is free to enlarge the petnrs. on bail, like any other accused, on the well established principles.

[Paras 9, 11]

After the amendment of 1923, the principle to be deduced from Ss. 496 & 497 is that the grant of bail is the rule & the refusal is the exception. The discretion of the Cts. is now less fettered than it was before, & S. 497 as it now stands, draws a distinction between non-bailable offences which are punishable with death or transportation for life & other non-bailable offences. The result is that in the former case the Mag.'s power for granting bail are restricted but it is not so in the latter class of cases. Of course, in every case the Mag. has to exercise his discretion, but the discretion has to be exercised judicially & not arbitrarily. [Para 5]

Section 498 under which H. C. passes an order for bail has given an unfettered discretion to the H. C. or the Ct. of Session to admit an accused person to bail & it is a mistake to imagine that S. 498 is controlled by the limitations of S. 497 except when there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused committed the offence, or there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty, in which cases it becomes a duty to release him. [Para 9]

In every case it is the cumulative effect of all the combined circumstances that must weigh with the Ct. & considerations are too numerous to be classified or catalogued exhaustively. [Para 9]

Per Narayan J.—Bail is not to be withheld merely as a punishment, the responsibility as to bail being merely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. [Para 7]

Per Das J. — While it is true that bail cannot be withheld merely as a punishment & the primary object of the provisions relating to bail in the Cr. P. C. is to secure the attendance of the accused persons at the trial, securing the attendance of the accused person or the possibility of his absconding is not the only consideration at the time when an appln. for the grant of bail is made. There are many other considerations. [Para 13]

In the case of petnrs., accused under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, the Ct. is entitled to take judicial notice of the existing serious situation as to essential supplies of food, cloth, etc., & consider its bearing on such questions as the nature of the accusation, gravity of the offence alleged, chance of repeating the offence or of absconding, etc., when an appln. for the grant of bail is made. At the same time it must also be remembered that bail is not refused as a punishment, nor for putting obstacles in the path of the defence. [Para 13]

It would be wrong to refuse bail on a supposition that the defence may ultimately prove to be wrong. [Para 17]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 497 N. 4; S. 498 N. 1.

Baldeo Sahay, Kanhaiyaji & Devendra Prasad — for Petnrs.; Govt. Advocate—for the State of Bihar.

Narayan J.—These are applns. for bail by certain persons who are being prosecuted under S. 7, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act. The appln. which has been registered as Cr. Misc. No. 629 of 1950 has been filed by one Sagri Bhagat, son of Baldeo Bhagat, & by Sagri Bhagat's son Nathuni Bhagat. The other appln. is by three persons, named Ramsunder Panjiar, Dhanukdhari Ram & Ramprit Singh. Both the cases had been placed before my Lord the Chief Justice sitting singly & in Cr. Misc. No. 629 his Lordship passed the following order on 15-11-1950 :

"This appln. will be heard. Issue notice returnable within ten days. The question whether this matter will be referred to a Division Bench will be considered later on."

By virtue of an order passed in Cr. Misc. No. 642 of 1950 on 23-11-1950 both the applns. were ordered to be put up before a Division Bench for hearing, & the order of his Lordship the Chief Justice dated 23-11-1950 runs as follows:

"This appln. will be heard. Issue notice returnable within seven days. Let this appln. be put up for hearing with Cr. Misc. 629 of 1950 before a Division Bench."

It has been stated by Mr. Baldeo Sahay, who appeared for the petnrs., that the reason for placing these applns. before a Division Bench is to get an authoritative decision on the question whether bail can or should be granted in such cases.

[2] On 7-12-1950 we directed that the petnr. Sagri Bhagat of Case No. 629 & all the petnrs. of the other case be released on bail to the satisfaction of the Dist. Mag., & we have now to give detailed reasons for the order which we have passed. The question of bail does not arise so far as Nathuni Bhagat, the appct. 2 of Case No. 629, is concerned inasmuch as this appct. has since been detained by reason of a detention order passed under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950.

[3] Regarding the petnr. 1, Sagri Bhagat of Case No. 629 it is alleged that he is aged more than 70 years & on account of age & infirmity, is incapable of doing any business. This petnr. is being prosecuted on the ground that when his house, shop & godown were searched 552½ pairs of saris & dhoties were found, though, according to the Stock Register the stock should have been only 551 pairs. The other allegation against this petnr. is that he had kept a certain quantity of cloth concealed in a bhuskar. The alleged difference in the account is quite negligible, & the only allegation against this petnr. which has to be considered seriously is whether he had kept some cloth concealed in a bhuskar. The petner.'s answer to this allegation is that the bhuskar in which the cloth was found belong to one Mulchand Sah.

[4] The petnrs. in the other case are dealers in grains, & when their shop or godown was searched 106 bags of rice & 77 bags of gram were found, though, according to the stock register, there should have been a balance of 15 bags of rice & 41 bags of gram. Their explanation was that some time before the search 91 bags of rice had been received from certain other traders & that they had been brought in a country boat which was unloaded at a ghat known at Jehanabad Ghat. From the ghat 10 bullocks carts are said to have brought these bags, & it is said that the names of the cartmen are recorded in Gari Bhara Bahi which has been seized by the Govt. With regard to the bags of gram which were found in excess, the explanation was that they had been received on the day of the search from one Rameshwar Chaudhury on the understanding that they would be kept with the petnrs. temporarily & would be later despatched to Jaintpore Mela. These are the short facts of the two cases, & bail was refused not only by the Mags. before whom the cases against these petnrs. are pending but also by the Ses. Judges.

[5] There can be no doubt that the offences for which the appcts. have been charged are not bailable. The sentence provided for the offences charged is imprisonment for three years, & according to Sch. II, Cr. P. C. such offences against other laws as are punishable with imprisonment for three years & upwards are not bailable. Section 496, Cr. P. C, is, therefore, not applicable to this case, but Ss. 497 & 498 would be applicable, & the question is whether under the circumstances of these present cases, this Ct. can direct that these appcts. be admitted to bail. Sub-section (1) of S. 497 runs as follows :

"When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer, in charge of a Police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life;

Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail."

And sub-s. (2) of the section which is the appropriate provision applicable where investigation, enquiry or trial has been proceeding runs as follows :

"If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial, as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided."

Under the old S. 497, the general rule was that bail was not to be taken in respect of non-bailable offences, but as was pointed out by the Calcutta H. C. in the case of Nagendra Nath v. Emperor, 51 Cal. 402 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 476 : 25 Cr. L. J. 732) the alteration in S. 497 by S. 136 of Act XVIII [18] of 1923 which substitutes the words "an offence punishable with death or transporation for life" for the words "the offence of which he is accused" must be regarded as the result of a liberalising influence on the policy of the Legislature, & it is well-recognised that after this amendment the principle to be deduced from Ss. 496 & 497 is that the grant of bail is the rule & the refusal is the exception. The discretion of the Cts. is now less fettered than it was before, & the section, as it now stands, draws a distinction between non-bailable offences which are punishable with death or transportation for life & other non-bailable offences. The result is that in the former case the Mag's. powers for granting bail are restricted but it is not so in the latter class of cases. Of course, in every case the Mag. has to exercise his discretion, but the discretion has to be exercised judicially & not arbitrarily.

[6] Cases have laid down the tests which have to be applied in disposing of a petn. for bail, but no Ct. can lay down exhaustive or inflexible tests. Boys J. in Emperor v. H. L. Hutchinson, 53 ALL. 931 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 ALL. 356 : 32 Cr. L. J. 1271) mentioned the following circumstances which have to be considered in disposing of a petn. for bail.

"(i) The nature & the gravity of the charge.

(ii) The severity or degree of the punishment which might follow in the particular circumstances in case of a conviction.

(iii) The danger of the appct. absconding if he is released on bail.

(iv) The character, means & standing of the appct.

(v) The danger of the alleged offence being continued or repeated, assuming that the accused is guilty of having committed that offence in the past.

(vi) The danger of witnesses being tampered with.

(vii) Opportunity to the appct. to prepare his defence".

And Mukherji J. in the case of Nagendra Nath v. Emperor, 51 Cal. 402 : (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Cal. 476 : 25 Cr. L. J. 732) observed that the proper test to be applied in the solution of the question whether bail should be granted or refused was whether it was probable that the party would appear to take his trial, & that this test was to be applied by reference to the following considerations :

"(a) The nature of the accusation.

(b) The nature of the evidence in support of the accusation.

(c) The severity of the punishment which conviction will entail."

[7] The decision in Nagendra Nath v. Emperor, 51 Cal. 402 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 476 : 25 Cr. L. J. 732) was followed by a Division Bench of this Ct. in Krishna Chandra v. Emperor, 6 Pat. 802 : (A.I.R. (14) 1927 Pat. 302 : 28 Cr. L. J. 621) & Mullick A. C. J. observed that the principles on which the Cts. should exercise their discretion in regard to non-bailable offences had been set out in Nagendra Nath v. Emperor, 51 Cal. 402 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 476 : 25 Cr. L. J. 732) and that bail was not to be withheld merely as a punishment, the responsibility as to bail being merely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. We are bound by this decision which is not in any way affected by the decision made in a later case Hikayat Singh v. Emperor, 11 Pat. 280 : (A.I.R. (19) 1932 Pat. 209 : 33 Cr. L. J. 574). This decision was given in an appeal & a death reference matter, & during the course of the judgment Courtney-Terrell C. J. made the following observation :

"The accused persons when they appeared before him were at once released on bail & this fact together with the unpopularity of the deceased & his sons amply account for the refusal of the villagers to come forward & describe what they must undoubtedly have seen. We must point out in the most emphatic way for the future guidance of Mags. & Ses. Judges that save in exceptional cases, persons accused of crimes punishable with long terms of imprisonment should not be released by them on bail. The richer the accused & the more easy it is for him to find bail, less it is desirable that he should be released, & in no circumstances whatever, without an order of the H. C. should any persons accused of murder be allowed bail. In England a person charged with murder is never in any circumstances released on bail & the opportunities in India for the corruption of witnesses are so great that the risks involved cannot be exaggerated."

[8] The question did not directly arise in this case, & it cannot be said that the rule of law as laid down in Krishna Chandra Jagati's case, (6 Pat. 802 : A.I.R. (14) 1927 Pat. 302 : 28 Cr.L.J. 621) should be followed by us because of this observation of Courtney-Terrell C. J. In this case we are not concerned with an offence which is punishable with death or transportation for life, & even the learned Govt. Advocate did not oppose the appln. for bail filed by Sagri Bhagat. He, however, opposed the appln. for bail filed in the other case, & that on the ground that because of the insertion of S. 13A in the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act by Act LII [52] of 1950 called the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Amendment Act, 1950, the powers of granting bail in such cases have been very much restricted. Section 13A runs as follows:

"Special provisions regarding bail—Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal P. C., 1898 (Act V [5] of 1898), no person accused or convicted of a contravention of any order under S. 3 relating to foodgrains which is punishable under the proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 7 shall if in custody, be released on bail or on his own bond unless—

(a) the prosecution has been given an opportunity to oppose the application for such release and (b) where the prosecution opposes the application, it appears to the Court that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty of such contravention."

But it was conceded by the learned Govt. Advocate that the Proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 7 is not applicable to this case. This proviso runs as follows :

"Provided that where the contravention is of an order prescribing the maximum quantity of any foodgrain that may lawfully be possessed by any person or class of persons, and the person contravening the order is found to have been in possession of foodgrain exceeding twice the maximum quantity so prescribed the Court shall—

(a) sentence him to imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years and to a fine not less than twenty times the value of the foodgrain found in his possession."

[9] According to this proviso, the person contravening the order must be in possession of foodgrain exceeding twice the maximum quantity prescribed, & it is not the prosecution case that the appcts. Ramsunder Panjikar & others were found to be in possession of foodgrain exceeding twice the maximum quantity prescribed. These appcts., therefore, stand on the same footing as Sagri Bhagat of the other case, & if on the well-established principles Sagri Bhagat can be released on bail, as the learned Govt. Advocate has frankly conceded, these appcts. should also be enlarged on bail. As I have already pointed out these appcts. have offered some explanation for the excess stock that was found in their shop or godown, & this explanation will require a serious consideration at the time of the trial.

[10] Lastly, I must point out that S. 498, Cr. P. C., under which a H. C. passes an order for bail has given an unfettered discretion to the H. C. or the Ct. of Session to admit an accused person to bail & as was pointed out by an F. B. of the H. C. in Emperor v. Joglekar, 54 ALL. 115: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 ALL. 504: 33 Cr. L. J. 94 F.B.) it is a mistake to imagine that S. 498 is controlled by the limitations of S. 497 except when there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused committed the offence, or there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty, in which cases it becomes a duty to release him. It was further pointed out in this case that Mag. can proceed under S. 497 only, & their discretion is regulated by the provisions of that section, but that S. 498 confers upon a Ses. Judge or the H. C. wide powers to grant bail which are not handicapped by the restrictions of the preceding section. The discretion is certainly unfettered but as already pointed out every discretion should be exercised judicially. I respectfully agree with their Lordships' view that in every case it is the cumulative effect of all the combined circumstances that must weigh the Ct. & that considerations are too numerous to be classified or catalogued exhaustively. In the circumstances, in these two present cases, we are of opinion that there are reasonable grounds for admitting to bail the appct. Sagri Bhagat of case No. 629 & all the appots. of the other case. These are the reasons in support of our order which we passed in these two cases on 7-12-1950.

[11] First and foremost, it is clear & beyond dispute that in the cases before us S. 13A, Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act has no application; therefore, the stringent conditions necessary for the grant of bail under that section cannot be applied; & it is not necessary for us to examine those conditions.

[12] Second, the offences alleged to have been committed by the petnrs. are non-bailable offences; the grant of bail in such cases is governed by S. 497, Cr. P. C., so far as the Ct. or officer before whom the accused person appears or is brought initially; so far as the H. C. or Ct. of Session is concerned, the relevant section is S. 498, Cr. P. C.

[13] I agree with my learned brother as to the effect of S. 497. The matter is one of discretion, but it has to be exercised judicially & according to principles which are by now well established. These principles have been explained more than once in decisions to which my learned brother has referred it would serve no purpose to repeat them. But one thing must be made clear. While I agree that bail cannot be withheld merely as a punishment & the primary object of the provisions relating to bail in the Cr. P. C. is to secure the attendance of the accused persons at the trial, I do not subscribe to the view that securing the attendance of the accused person or the possibility of his absconding is, the only consideration at the time when an appln. for the grant of bail is made. I think that there are many other considerations some of which have been stated in the decisions referred to by my learned brother; the difficulty of laying down a formula of universal application is that the considerations will vary from case to case, & the exercise of the discretion, according as it must to certain principles cannot be confined within the framework of a cut & dried formula. I am even prepared to go to this extent that the Ct. is entitled to take judicial notice of the existing serious situation as to essential supplies of food, cloth, etc., & consider its bearing on such questions as the nature of the accusation, gravity of the offence alleged, chance of repeating the offence or of absconding, etc., when an appln. for the grant of bail is made. At the same time, it must also be remembered that bail is not refused as a punishment, nor for putting obstacles in the path of the defence.

[14] As to the observations in Nikayat Singh's case, 11 Pat. 280 : (A.I.R. (19) 1932 Pat. 209 : 33 Cr. L. J. 574) it is sufficient to state that they were made in a case of murder (in an appeal from a sentence of death) & do not purport to introduce any new principle in S. 497, Cr. P. C.

[15] I agree that S. 498, Cr. P. C., gives a wider discretion to the H. C. or the Ct. of Session; but again the discretion has to be exercised judicially & according to well-established principles, & it would be wrong to suppose that those principles are absolutely independent or in supersession of the limitations imposed by S. 497. Such a supposition would mean that the power given by S. 498 can be exercised arbitrarily a meaning which must be rejected.

[16] In the case of Sagri Bhagat, the important point to note is that he is not the licensee though his son Nathuni, is. Nathuni has been detained under a detention order, & no question of admitting him to bail arises. Sagri Bhagat in an old man aged about seventy, & his case is that he was neither the licensee nor was he engaged in the business. These circumstances, if true, are in his favour.

[17] In the second case, the excess of some bags of gram cannot be the subject of any complaint, because, as stated by the learned Ses. Judge, gram is not a controlled commodity. As to the excess of 91 bags of rice, the petnrs. have given an explanation. Whether that explanation is true or not will, no doubt, be considered at the trial. In refusing bail, the learned Ses. J. has stated that if the petnrs. are allowed bail, evidence is likely to be tampered with & even concocted. While I agree that such a consideration does properly arise on an appln. for the grant of bail, I am not satisfied that the petnrs. can, in any way, tamper with the prosecution evidence. The relevant books were seized by police & are in their custody. It is obvious that the petnrs. cannot tamper with those books. They have filed affidavits of several persons to show that the rice was received on the 11th October, on several bullock carts. This is the defence of the petnrs. & in my opinion, it would be wrong on principle to refuse bail so as to put an obstacle in the path of the defence. The defence may be right or wrong, & I am expressing no opinion on merits. All that I say is that it would be wrong to refuse bail on a supposition that the defence may ultimately prove to be wrong.

[18] These, in substance, are my reasons for granting bail to the petnrs.

A. F. A. D. No. 2144 of 1947, D/- 26-9-1949.

(a) Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI [11] of 1859), Ss. 37 & 53 — Revenue sale of estate — Re-purchase of by proprietor — His rights under re-purchase.

Section 37 is subject to the provisions of S. 53. Where, therefore, a proprietor re-purchases the estate after it has been sold for arrears under the Act, he acquires the estate subject to all its encumbrances existing at the time of the sale & does not acquire any rights in respect of under-tenants or raiyats which were not possessed by him at the time of the said sale. [Para 7)

(b) Adverse possession — Trespasser entering upon property under defective grant — Possession of part of property — Inference of adverse possession as to rest when can be raised — Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 & 144.

When a trespasser enters upon property under a defective grant, the grantor's intention to give possession of the whole of the property cannot be assumed, when the grantor is not the owner & the adverse possession operates to the extent of the actual possession. It may, however, extend further by the grantor's failure to assert his possession, though to his knowledge the trespasser is treating the property as forming one unit with the property in his actual possession. [Para 12]

(Position as regards constructive possession of trespasser when the grant is of the whole by the owner & when it is by a person who does not own the property exhaustively discussed.)

Anno. Limitation Act, Arts. 142 & 144 N. 12, 56, 60.

(c) T. P. Act (1882), S. 53A — Objection under, cannot be raised for first time in second appeal — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100. [Para 8]

Anno. T. P. Act, S. 53A N. 20 Pt. 1; Civil P. C. Ss. 100 101 N. 28.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Legal effect of facts proved is a question of law & can be raised at any stage. [Para 19]

Anno. Civil P. C., S. 100 & 101 N. 28, 32.

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 31—Duty of first appellate Ct. as final Ct. of fact. (Per Narayan J.)

Per Narayan J.—The Legislature has entrusted a very important duty to the first appellate Ct. It is for that Ct. to decide finally all questions of fact on which the disposal of the suit might depend. It must appear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Ct. that it has made an honest endeavour to make a proper appraisement of the merits of the cases put forward by the parties, & it should never appear to the litigant public or to the superior Ct. that it has agreed with the trial Ct. simply because it was not inclined to take much trouble over the case.

If the lower Appellate Ct. does not examine the facts & the evidence for itself & does not even mention the points which the case raises, it will be certainly failing in its duty. [Para 22]

B. De & K. D. Chaterji — for Applts; L. K. Jha, R. S. Chatterjee & Medni Prasad Singh — for Resps.

Reuben J.—This is an appeal by the pltfs. from a decision of the Addl. Dist. J. Purulia, confirming a decree of the Addl. Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad.

[2] Pltf. 1 is the proprietor of village Muraidih in pargana Newagarh of the Dhanbad Subdivision. Pltf. 2 is his minor son. Pltf. 1 has executed in favour of his son a mokarari lease in respect of 25 bighas of coal bearing land in this village. The suit was brought to eject the defts. from five kathas out of this land, on the allegation that they have wrongfully taken possession of a coal quarry therein sunk by the pltf. 1. Defendant 2 is the son of deft. 1. They contested the suit, alleging that they are holding the suit land as a part of 46 bighas of coal-bearing land in this village, the surface & underground rights in which were settled with deft. 1 in 1910 by the then proprietors, Shyamlal Pande & others under an unregistered grant, & claiming to have acquired an indefeasible interest in the land by holding it adversely since then.

[2] Pltf. 1 is the son of Shyamlal Pande, but does not derive his title by inheritance from him. According to the recitals in the plaint, this village was sold in execution of a mtge. decree against the proprietors Brijbehari Pande (uncle of pltf. 1) & others, & was purchased by Mukteshwar Trigunait, Sarat Trigunait & Kalipada Trigunait, from whom pltf. 1 purchased the village by a registered sale deed dated the 2nd of Baisakh, 1338. The mauza was then sold in a revenue sale & was purchased by one Sachindranath Chakravarti. Pltf. 1 brought a title suit to set aside the sale. In accordance with a compromise in the suit, Sachindranath Chakravarti sold the mauza to pltf. 1 by a registered sale deed dated 6-7-1940.

[3] The hukumnama (EX. A) under which the defts. claim is unregistered & purports to create a permanent heritable jagir. The Cts. below have accepted the story of the alleged settlement & hold that deft. 1 entered on the property in pursuance of it, but he did so as a trespasser, the hukumnama being unregistered. They hold that since then he has been continuously in possession of the whole area of 46 bighas. They have rejected the story of pltf. 1 having sunk a quarry in the suit land & having been forcibly dispossessed in 1944. Only three instances of the exercise of direct possession over the property have been found: (1) the sinking & working of a quarry to the north of the suit land for a period of over twenty years, (2) the sinking & working of a quarry to the east of the suit land in 1937 & (3) the sinking & working of a quarry on the suit land in 1943. The Cts. below consider that, the deft. 1 having entered under a grant from the proprietors, his act of possession over any portion of the property must be deemed to have given him constructive possession over the whole of the property covered by the grant. On these findings they hold that deft. 1 has been in possession of the suit property openly, peacefully & as of right for more than twenty years, that he has thereby acquired a tenancy right under pltf. 1 & cannot be ejected.

[4] Mr. De, on behalf of the pltfs. has contended, firstly, that the Cts. below misdirected themselves on the point of adverse possession in holding that the defts. had constructive possession over the suit property previous to 1943, & secondly, that, even if it be held that the defts. were in adverse possession of this property, their possession cannot affect pltf. 1, as he derives his title from a purchaser at a revenue sale.

[5] On the other side, Mr. R. S. Chatterji, who appeared for the defts. 1 & 2, has contended that, under S. 53A, T. P. Act, his clients are entitled to resist ejectment.

[6] Before taking up the question of adverse possession, I shall deal with the other two points which are readily disposed of neither of them having been raised in the Cts. below.

[7] There is no substance in Mr. De's second point. Under S. 37, Bengal Land-Revenue Sales Act, 1859 (Act XI [11] of 1859), a purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently settled districts of Bengal, Bihar & Orissa, sold under the Act for the recovery of arrears due on account of the same acquires the estate free from all encumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the time of settlement, & is entitled to avoid & annul all under-tenures & forthwith to eject all under-tenants. This right of the purchaser at a revenue sale is subject to an exception under S. 53, Bengal Land-Revenue Sales Act, which provides that, excepting sharers with whom the Collector has opened separate accounts, any recorded or unrecorded proprietor or co-partner, who may purchase the estate of which he is proprietor or co-ptner. or who by re-purchase or otherwise may recover possession of the said estate, after it has been sold for arrears under the Act, shall by such purchase acquire the estate subject to all its encumbrances existing at the time of the sale, & shall not acquire any rights in respect to under-tenants or raiyats which were not possessed by the previous proprietor at the time of the sale of the said estate. Here, according to the plaint itself, pltf. 1 was the previous proprietor by his purchase of the mouza from the Trigunaits. Therefore, when he purchased the estate back from Sachindranath Chakravarti, he brought himself within the mischief of S. 53.

[8] The objection under S. 53A fails because it raises questions of fact which should have been put in issue at the trial. The shield which this section provides is available only against "the transferor or any person claiming under him." Also, it is not available against a transferee for consideration who has no notice of the contract or of part performance thereof. Now, as I have indicated, there is said to be in the chain of title a revenue sale. At a revenue sale, the interest that passes is not the interest of the defaulting proprietor, but the interest of the Crown subject to the payment of Govt. assessment : Surja Kanta v. Sarat Chandra, 18 C. W. N. 1281 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 82), Narayan Das v. Jatindra Nath, 54 I. A. 218 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 135). Therefore, if the sale was in fact a revenue sale, it would have been open to the pltf. 1 to contend that he was not a person claiming under the "transferor". The question was a question of fact, & so also was the question of notice. Neither of these questions was put in issue.

[9] The question of prescribing for title by means of constructive possession is a difficult question, & it is disappointing to see the summary manner in which it was dealt with by the learned Addl. Dist. J. Having found that the first act of direct possession by the defts. over the property in suit occurred in 1943, he observed that the question was whether in these circumstances the defts. could be said to have acquired a title in it by adverse possession, & went on:

"This position has been very lucidly discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge & I have no manner of hesitation in agreeing with him on the principle of law propounded by him. The case laws on the subject that were cited before me are only those which have been referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment & it is not necessary for me to repeat the same. The main contention of the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the applts. was that the cases relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge are authorities for the proposition that where the lessee takes possession under a valid title & works on different portions at different times of the land which is not capable of direct possession in any other way his possession of a part would be considered to be possession for the whole land which was demised by the owner to him but these decisions are no authority for holding the same principles to be true in case of a trespasser in whose case the claim regarding adverse possession must be limited to the area actually worked on for the full period of twelve years in view of the observations made in Nageshwar Bux v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 at p. 188 : (10 Pat. 407). This decision has also been discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment & I do not think that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is displaced by the observations made by their Lordships in the P C. decision. It is no doubt true that as a matter of general rule as observed by their Lordships in the above decision where claim for a title is invented merely on adverse possession it must be limited to the actual area actually possessed by the trespasser for the full period of twelve years but, in my opinion, there is a wide distinction which should be maintained between a rank trespasser without any basis for title & one who claims to hold it on the basis of some grant from the owners of the lands which is incomplete & therefore invalid under the law. In the case of latter he cannot be treated on the same footing as a man having no grant whatsoever to claim the lands. In the present case the defts. have not squatted on the lands out of their own accord & it is clear that they have come upon the lands with the consent & with the permission of the landlords who had actually demised the lands to him but for want of registration such demise has become invalid. That being the position the defts. have practically been brought on the land by the landlords themselves & as such even according to the decision in the above case by their Lordships in the P. C. they must be held to have acquired title to the entire area."

The case referred to by the learned Judge is Nageshwar Bux v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd., A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 : (10 Pat. 407), which he evidently regards as entirely supporting the pltfs.' contention. It is true that their Lordships of the P. C. observed in that case that there is undoubted authority for the proposition that where a person without any colour of right wrongfully takes possession as a trespasser of the property of another, any title which he may acquire by adverse possession will be strictly limited to what he has actually so possessed, & that, in the case of a mine, there is no presumption in law that the possession of a part of a seam infers possession of the whole seam, much less of all the seams in the mineral field in which part of a seam has been worked. Had the learned Judge perused this decision more carefully, however, he would have found that their Lordships were not speaking of possession in the limited sense of direct working. In their words "possession is a question of fact & the extent of the possession may be an inference of fact." Their Lordships went on to consider several facts which, in their opinion, in the case before them entitled the defts. to the inference that they were in adverse possession of the whole area in suit. A perusal of this portion of the judgment would have indicated to the learned Judge a line of investigation directed to ascertain whether in the present case the area in suit formed one unit with the other areas worked by the defts.

[10] It is not clear how the learned Judge arrived at what, in his opinion, is the position of person who enters upon property under a defective grant from the owners of the property. He does not state the reasoning by which he came at this conclusion. Nor does he mention any authority, although a relevant quotation occurs in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge from the judgment of Lord Cranworth L. C. in Davis v. Shephard, (1866) 1 Ch. A. 410 : (35 L. J. Ch. 581) :

"When the owner of real property, whether surface land or minerals, binds himself by a written agreement to grant a lease, & suffers his intended lessee, without a lease, to take possession, he must be understood to allow the lessee to take possession of all which he has engaged to demise. In the case of demise of unworked minerals, there can hardly be said to be actual possession of any part of them except of what the intended lessee is actually working; but I think that when the lessor allows his intended lessee to take possession & the lessee does take possession & commences working accordingly, he must be considered as constructively in possession of all which the lessor has bound himself to demise."

[11] The normal position as regards adverse possession by a trespasser is as stated in the case of Nageshwar Bux Roy, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 : (10 Pat. 407) (supra). The law does not favour a trespasser & his adverse possession will be strictly limited to the area which is in his "possession." But we must be clear as to what is meant by "possession." The Cts. while not favouring a trespasser, must be fair to him & must treat him as in constructive possession where the nature of the property & the manner of holding it justify such an inference. In Mohammad Fateh Nasib v. Sir Swarup Chand Hukumchand, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 1 : (I. L. R. (1941) 2 Cal. 434), a Bench of the Calcutta H. C. stated the doctrine of constructive possession in the following words, which received the approval of the P. C. in Mohammad Eateh Nasib v. Sir Swarup Chand Hukum Chand Firm, A. I. R. (35) 1948 P. C. 76 : (50 Bom. L. R. 632) :

"The proper test to be applied in a case of this nature is whether the predecessors of the pltfs. for a period of twelve years or more exercised such dominion over the property in suit as to justify an inference of fact that they were in possession of the whole. It was not necessary that they should prove affirmatively that their predecessors had actually been in physical possession of every square inch of this land, but it should have been considered whether the acts of possession which had been proved would legitimately show that the predecessors of the pltfs. had enjoyed dominion over this property in the manner in which such dominion is normally exercised."

[12] That a trespasser is entitled in a proper case to an inference of constructive possession has been conceded by Mr. De & by Mr. K. D. Chatterji. They would confine this, however, to the kind of possession dealt with in the case of Nageshwar Bux Roy, (A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 : 10 Pat. 407) that is to say, where the property in dispute can be regarded as forming a unit along with other property of which the trespasser is in direct & immediate possession. They challenge strenuously the correctness of the proposition laid down by the Addl. Dist. J. that, in the case of a defective grant, the lessee on entering gets possession to the full extent of the grant. Mr. K. D. Chatterji crystallises the argument as follows. There is one kind of constructive possession which is on a par with actual possession. For instance, while I am holding only one end of a stick, I am in actual possession of the whole of it. In this way, a trespasser may be regarded as in possession of a whole unit of property of which he actually holds only a part. But, apart from this, the notion of constructive possession is inconsistent with adverse possession. This is a consequence of the principle that possession follows title; for, if the trespasser is not in actual possession of any part of the property, that part must be taken to be in the possession of the owner. The fallacy in this reasoning lies in regarding the constructive possession of the owner as automatically accompanying his title. In fact, it depends on his mental attitude, or supposed mental attitude. When property is not in the actual possession of anyone, & there is nothing to prevent the owner of the property from exercising his dominion over it, & he has not done anything to show that he has abandoned the property, the Ct. will presume on his part the intention of possessing the whole of that property, & will regard the absence of others from the property as due to his excluding them from it in pursuance of this intention. This constitutes his constructive possession & we say, "possession follows title." It is this mental element which explains the normal position as regards adverse possession by a trespasser; in the case of a trespasser coming upon property without any claim of right, there can be no presumption that he intends to hold anything more than he actually holds & on the other side, there is the constructive possession of the owner requiring to be displaced by something positive done by the trespasser. The positive element is supplied where there is something in the manner in which the trespasser holds the property to indicate an intention to hold more than the property in his direct possession. If that additional portion is not in the direct possession of anybody to that extent the constructive (possession ?) of the owner may be regarded as overborne & the possession of the trespasser may be taken to extend over this portion also. For this to happen, the constructive possession of the trespasser must have in it sufficient of the nature of real possession to overbear the constructive possession of the owner. This happens in the case of partial possession of the nature described by Mr. K. D. Chatterji, that is where the portion actually held forms part of what must be regarded as one unit of property. To my mind, entry under a defective grant constitutes another class of such cases. The grant itself has the effect of making the property granted into one unit, for when the grantee enters into the property in pursuance of the grant he must be taken to intend to take possession of the whole of the property & the grantor in allowing him to enter into possession must be taken to intend to allow him to take possession to this extent. It is, therefore, that the grantor's constructive possession is overborne. This latter element, the mental attitude of the owner, is important & constitutes the difference between the case of a grantee from the owner & that of a grantee from a person who does not own the property in question. In both cases the grantee enters with the intention of possessing the whole property, but in the latter case, the owner's intention to give him possession to this extent cannot be presumed & the adverse possession only operates to the extent of the actual possession of the grantee ; of course. it may extend further, if the elements necessary for the first class of cases are present. In one class of cases, the owner's constructive possession is overborne by his presumed consent, in the other by his failure to assert his possession, though to his knowledge the trespasser is treating the property as forming one unit with property which is in the trespasser's actual possession.

[13] I find support for my analysis in the following extract from Narayan Singh v. Dildar Ali, 3 Pat. 915 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 210) :

"Now possession, in the sense in which that term is used in jurisprudence, must be accompanied by an intention to possess, an animus possidendi. Now it cannot be said of a wrong-doer that there is any intention to possess that of which he has not a definite physical control. But of that of which he has a definite physical control, he is clearly in possession, provided the animus possidendi is established. I think this is at the bottom of the rule which lays down that a wrong doer cannot have recourse to the doctrine of constructive possession. But let us go a step further. Supposing a person without title acquires possession of part of the land & then proceeds to mark out the area of the entire land which he intends to possess. Clearly he has shown an intention to possess the entire area & he will be deemed to be in possession of the entire area though he has definite physical control only over a portion. I think that it is more correct to say that, in the absence of title, the law will raise from definite physical control of part of land a presumption of possession of that, neither more nor less, which the possessor has shown a clear & unambiguous intention to possess.

But here the defts. were in no sense wrong-doers. They were in by a document which purported to convey whatever title the vendor had in the villages conveyed. There was no dispute as to the boundaries of the village & the position is the same as if the defts. had marked out the entire area conveyed to them. It may be that the conveyance did not confer any title on them; but they were not aware of any defect in their title & there was clearly an intention to possess the entire area conveyed to them in the right of the vendor. In my opinion, the defts. were just as much in possession of the jungles & the minerals as of the tenanted portions of the villages."

[14] I have already cited above the words of Lord Cranworth L. C. in Davis v. Shepherd (1866-1 Ch. A 410 : 35 L. J. Ch. 581) (supra). Mr. K. D. Chatterji has contended that that was not a case of adverse possession but merely a contest between persons let into possession of adjoining underground rights. To my mind, the nature of the case makes no difference, because we are concerned with the principle. In that case, although the pltf. & the deft. were let into possession, no lease was executed, & the question was as to the extent of their possession.

[15] Another relevant decision is Low Moor Co. v. Stanley Coal Co. Ltd. (1876) 33 L. T. 436 in appeal (1876) 34 L. T. 186 In this case Holroyd came into possession under a defective deed purporting to transfer the minerals to him. He worked the two upper seams of coat & transferred the underlying seams to the pltfs. who sunk a deep bore in the property for the purpose of testing. It was held that by his working Holroyd took possession of the whole of the seams covered by the deed in his favour & that the pltfs. subsequently acquired possession over all the seams underlying the first two seams. Amphlett, B. expressly referred to the case of Davis v. Shepherd, (1866-1 Ch. A 410 : 35 L. J. Ch. 581) & observed :

"The owner has bound himself, upon this construction of the deed to give an estate to Holroyd of all these several seams of coal ; and, therefore, when Holroyd entered into possession of one or more of these seams, he appears to me to have had constructive possession of the whole of them."

In the Ct. of Appeal, the Lord Chancellor observed :

"It is true that in cases where a man has entered upon & taken possession of one seam of coal & by lapse of time has acquired some title to it the law will not assume that his possession extends to all the other seams of coal lying under the particular one; but in the case we have before us it was beyond all doubt intended that Holroyd should have possession & take possession of all the seams."

And Mellish, C. J. observed :

"I quite agree that Holroyd obtained possession of the mines, & it is equally clear that he gave possession to the pltfs."

This distinction in favour of a trespasser claiming under a grant is recognised also in the case relied upon by Mr. De & Mr. K. D. Chatterji, Glyn v. Howell, (1909) 1 Ch. D. 666 : (78 L. J. Ch. 391), in which Eve, J. summed up the law on the subject in the following words:

"The line of authorities which Mr. Upjohn has relied upon, commencing, I think, with Earl of Dartmouth v. Spittle, (1871) 24 L. T. (N. S.) 67 & coming down to the case of Thompson v. Hickman, (1907) 1 Ch. 550 : (76 L. J. Ch. 254), seemed to me to establish that where title is founded on an adverse possession the title will be limited to that area of which actual possession has been enjoyed & that as a general rule constructive possession of a wider area will only be inferred from actual possession of the limited area, if the inference of such wider possession is necessary in order to give effect to contractual obligations or to preserve the good faith & honesty of a bargain." And "Mr. Upjohn is right when he says the decisions have proceeded upon two lines, the one being those cases where the possession of the part has been treated as possession of the whole, because the Ct. has found, either by contract or according to conscience, that possession of the whole is what the person possessed on the part was intended to have, & the other being those cases in which the Ct. finding no just reason for inferring, in favour of a person relying solely on possession of a part, a constructive possession of the whole, has refused to make such inference."

[16] The important element in possession is animus possidendi. Where all that trespasser intends is to remove & appropriate the minerals, he may merely get a right to the minerals removed Ashton v. Stock, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 719 : (25 W. R. 862), Thompson v. Hickman, (1907) 1 Ch. D. 550 : (76 L. J. Ch. 254), Earl of Dartmouth v. Spittle, (1871) 24 L. T. (N. S.) 67 ; see also Lodna Colliery Co. Ltd. v. Bipin Behari, 1 Pat. L. T. 84 at p. 91 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 383), Pramatha Nath v. A. J. Meik, 1 Pat. L. T. 360 at p. 368 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 542), Gopi Ram v. Jagarnath Singh, 9 Pat. 447 at p. 472 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 685), Ranchi Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Pratap Udainath, 18 Pat. 215 at p. 232 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 209 : 40 Cr. L. J. 631). Where there is the necessary animus possidendi, the adverse possession will extend to the limit of possession. This possession may be confined to the area actually held; vide, in addition to the authorities cited above, Bhupendra Narayan v. Rajeshwar Prosad, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 162 : (59 Cal. 80), Shashi Bhusan v. Ramjas, 3 Pat. 85 at p. 114 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 402). The limit of possession may be increased by the manner of working showing that a larger area is intended to be appropriated than is in actual immediate possession; vide Naryan Singh v. Dildar Ali, 3 Pat. 915 at p. 928 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 210), Gopi Ram v. Jagarnath, 9 Pat. 447 at p. 472 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 685), Ashton v. Stock, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 719 at p. 726 : (25 W. R. 862), Glyn v. Howell, (1909) 1 Ch. D. 666 at p. 675 : (78 L. J. Ch. 391) and Nageshwar Bux v. Bengal Coal Co., Ltd., A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 : (10 Pat. 407). Extension may also arise, as I have indicated, by the consent of the owner when, in pursuance of a defective grant, he lets another into possession of his property.

[17] I find it difficult to apply the above principles to the present case as all the necessary facts have not been investigated. It appears to have been assumed that the settlement made by the hukumnama (Ex. A) had the approval of all the proprietors. From the written statement itself, we get it that hukumnama was granted by only two of them, Shyamlal & Brijbehari. It is alleged further that the grant was "confirmed by the other Pandes". The reference is apparently to the letters, Exs. B series, but there is nothing in either of the judgments of the Cts. below as to whether these letters establish the confirmation of the grant by the remaining proprietors. Two of these letters are written by a receiver who seems to have been in possession of the estate of the Pandes. There is no investigation as to the duration & extent of his possession, the authority to which he owned that possession, how far that authority empowered him to act on behalf of the estate of the Pandes, & as to what is the legal effect of the acts attributed to him. In these circumstances it seems to me to be necessary to remand the appeal for rehearing in the light of the principles laid down above.

[18] There is a further point. I am not certain that the point of adverse possession arises at all. Deft. 1 claims to have entered in pursuance of a settlement made by some of the proprietors & approved by the other proprietors, & to have remained in possession thereafter. It is a point for investigation as to whether at any time there came into being a relationship of lessor & lessee between the Pandes & deft. 1, which would prevent the possession of deft. 1 from becoming adverse to the Pandes: Nainapillai v. Ramanathan, 51 I. A. 83 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 P. C. 65).

[19] The question of the position of a person entering into & holding immovable property under a lease void for want of registration is far from easy & I do not wish to enter into a discussion of it without a finding of the Cts. below on the relevant questions of fact. Mr. R. S. Chatterji has urged that the point should not be allowed to be raised at all, that it was not taken by the pltfs. at any earlier stage & will change the nature of their case. I do not think that there is any substance in this contention. The point arises out of the defence case & is independent of the case of the pltfs. The pltfs. ask for the ejectment of the defts. on the finding that they are trespassers. The defts. resist on the plea that deft. 1 is a tenant. Having taken this position, the onus is on them to establish their right to remain on the property. It is true that they base their plea upon adverse possession, but it is for the Ct. to decide the legal effect of the facts alleged & proved by them. The pleadings of parties are confined by law to pleadings of fact. Therefore, the plea that on the facts alleged deft. 1 prescribed for the right of a permanent tenant does not preclude the Ct. from considering whether, on the facts proved, a tenancy came into being at an earlier stage & prevented the acquisition of prescriptive rights.

[20] On the above grounds, I would set aside the decree of the Addl. Dist. J. & remand the appeal for rehearing in the light of the above observations. The costs of this Ct. will follow the results of the case.

[21] I cannot part with this case without expressing our thanks to the learned counsel engaged, particularly Messrs. K. D. Chatterji, R. S. Chatterji, & Medini Prasad Singh, who have laboured ungrudgingly to help us in dealing with the several questions of law which arose for consideration.

[22] Narayan J.—I agree. Ever since this case opened, I was of the opinion that it could not be decided by us in this second appeal unless some necessary facts were investigated. It is regrettable that the final Ct. of fact did not apply itself properly to this case. As pointed out by my learned brother even the case of Nageshwar Bux v. Bengal Coal Company, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 186 : (10 Pat. 407) was not carefully read by the lower appellate Ct. It has been repeatedly pointed out that the Legislature has entrusted a very important duty to the first appellate Ct. It is for that Ct. to decide finally all questions of fact on which the disposal of the suit might depend, & as pointed out by Rowland, J. in Bhagwan Singh v. Ujagir Singh, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 33 the lower appellate Ct. has "to the best of his power, to weigh & balance the evidence, facts & considerations, appearing on both sides". It must appear from the judgment of the lower appellate Ct. that it has made an honest endeavour to make a proper appraisement of the merits of the cases put forward by the parties, & it should never appear to the litigant public or to the superior Ct. that it has agreed with the trial Ct. simply because it was not inclined to take much trouble over the case. Every litigant is entitled to have a decision from two Cts. on questions of law & fact, & if the lower appellate Ct. does not examine the facts & the evidence for itself & does not even mention the points which the case raises, it will be certainly failing in its duty. This case is on the whole a difficult case, & it could not so easily be decided in the manner it has been decided. Of course, the learned Addl. D. J. was so much satisfied with the judgment of the trial Ct. that it did not even like to refer to the rulings cited before it & gave a compliment to the learned Subordinate Judge that the points had been very "lucidly discussed" by him. My learned brother in his exhaustive judgment has pointed out how many different considerations arise & how many different principles have to be considered in this case. For applying the principles properly there must be further investigation of some necessary facts, & when we find that some other facts have to be investigated we have to send back the case though because of the remand the parties would be put to further harassment.

Das J.—These four second appeals arise out of three suits for rent & one title suit. The Cts. below dealt with the four suits, & the first appeal arising therefrom, by one judgment. We have also heard the four appeals together, as they raise a common question of law & fact, & the present judgment will govern all the four appeals.

[2] The relevant facts are the following. In the three suits for rent, the applts. were the defts. & in the title suit the applts. were the pltfs. The suits related to a pucca, one storeyed, brick-built house with the premises thereof, bearing holding No. 126 in Ward No. 3 of the Muzaffarpur Municipality. The aforesaid house & premises were leased for a term of ten years by means of registered lease dated 31-1-1928, at a monthly rental of Rs. 75. The lease was in favour of one Jagdish Chandra Mitra, who got possession, started an ice factory in the building & premises & paid the stipulated rent per month. In July 1930, Jagdish Chandra Mitra transferred his leasehold interest to the present applts. who also came in possession, & continued to work the ice factory on payment of the stipulated rent. Sometime after, they fell in arrears of rent & had some financial difficulty in running the ice factory. On 10-1-1935, they executed a mortge. bond for Rs. 4000 in favour of the resps.. a part of the consideration of which went towards the payment of arrears of rent up to December 1934. On 15-1-1934, the great earthquake of Bihar took place, & the case of the applts. was that the building suffered serious damage & part of it fell down as a result of the earthquake shock. According to the contract, as embodied in the lease of 1928, the lessor (that is, the resp.) was to make all repairs of bigger dimensions other than "petty repairs & white washing". The case of the applts. was that the lessor had failed to effect necessary repairs even after notice in 1939. It appears that after 1934 rent was not amicably paid, & the resps. had to bring suits for arrears of rent. Two such suits were brought, previous to the present suits, in which decrees were obtained by the resps. The money suits out of which three of the appeals have arisen related to three different periods from March 1939 to May 1942, for which the resps. claimed arrears of rent at Rs. 75 per month plus interest thereon. In these three suits various defences were taken by the present applts., some of which are no longer of any importance. One of the defences was that the applts. were entitled to a set off of Rs. 1268-13-0 on account of certain acts done by them, such as the filling up of some parti land by the deposit of engine ash, supply of ice, etc. Another defence was that there was a verbal agreement between the parties that the rent would be reduced to Rs. 50 a month on account of the damage done by the earthquake. A third defence was to the effect that the present applts. had suffered loss as a result of the failure to effect repairs, &, therefore, the Ct. should fix a proper rent for the building & premises. The first two defences are no longer of any importance, because of the findings arrived at by the Cts. below, and learned counsel for the applts. has frankly conceded that he is not in a position to press them at this stage. It is the third defence, embodied in a supplementary written statement, which is of importance in these appeals. As I shall have serious comments to make about the nature of this defence, I had better quote the words of the written statement, so far as the third defence is concerned :

"That after the rent-claimed building with its machinery therein was seriously damaged by the last earthquake of January 1934, & for non-repair of the said building by the pltfs. thereafter, these petnrs. could not run the ice factory & start their business of manufacture of ice when in January 1935, pltf. 1 promised to repair the said building, & further, to advance some amount for starting the business if these defts. would agree to execute a mtge. bond for consideration of Rs. 4000 including rent of the said damaged & fallen building for the period from January to December 1934, to which bait these defts. agreed, having been in a very embarrassed financial condition, but since after execution of the said bond in January 1935 the pltfs. have not effected any repair whatsoever to the rent-claimed building in spite of repeated requests with the result that these defts. have suffered much loss for not being able to make the best use of machineries for manufacture of ice due to the serious damage of the building.

That the plts. themselves verbally agreed to reduce the rent to Rs. 50 p. m., & got the same recorded in the last municipal assessment, but when this plea of reduction was taken in the Money Suit No. 86/39 this Ct. was pleased to disallow the reduction on the ground of verbal agreement, & as such these defts. submit that under S. 108, T. P. Act, the pltfs. are not entitled to any rent, but to such proper rent which the Ct. fixes after taking into consideration the circumstances stated above."

I have quoted above the supplementary written statement filed in one of the suits, viz. Money Suit No. 95 of 1940. In the other two suits also, there was a similar defence; for example, in Money Suit No. 140 of 1941, para. 11 of the written statement reads as follows :

"That the pltf. is not entitled to get any rent of the house under its present condition, & the defts. are ready to pay the pltf. proper rent which the Ct. fixes after taking into consideration all the circumstances set forth above."

In the title suit which the applts. had brought, they stated the above mentioned facts & then claimed the following relief :

"That it be adjudicated that the defts. are, under the circumstances set forth in the above paras. of this plaint, entitled to Rs. 10 p. m. from 16-1-1934 as fair & reasonable rent of the holding & not at the rate of Rs. 75 as they claim".

By the suit as framed the applts. did not ask for anything else, except the adjudication mentioned above which, in effect, was nothing more than an assessment of fair & reasonable rent.

[3] The learned Munsif who dealt with the four suits in the first instance came to the following findings. Firstly, he found that no such major damage was caused to the building or premises, as would require to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease. Secondly, he found that assuming that there was such damage, it was not open to the applts. to ask for either reduction or abatement of rent, or assessment of fair & equitable rent. The learned Munsif pointed out that admittedly the provisions of the T. P. Act applied, & under those provisions it was not open to the applts. to ask for either reduction of rent or assessment of fair & equitable rent. On these main findings, the learned Munsif decreed the three money suits in which rent had been claimed, & dismissed the title suit of the applts. Appeals were preferred to the learned Dist. J. who was not satisfied with the finding of the learned Munsif that no major damage was done. He thought that further evidence should be taken on the point of damage, & an attempt should be made to assess the amount of damage, if any. He did not definitely express himself on the question if a reduction of rent could be given in the circumstances, but left that question to be agitated in the Ct. below. He passed an order of remand for the purpose of taking fresh evidence on the questions mentioned above. Against this order of remand, applns. in revn. were filed to this Ct. which were disposed of by Ray J. in his order dated 9-5-1946. He set aside the order of remand, & recast one of the issues, namely, issue 5; in the following way :

"Are the pltfs. of the title suit entitled to get any abatement of rent originally contracted for, &, if so, at what rate" ?

It was made clear, however, that no opinion was expressed on the question if the applts. were in law entitled to any suspension or abatement of rent. It was also made clear that no fresh evidence was to be given, & the question of the right to any abatement of rent was to be considered on the evidence already given. The cases then went back to the first Ct. of appeal, & were dealt with by the Addl. Dist. J. who, by his judgment dated 31-1-1947, affirmed the findings of the learned Munsif that no major damage was caused & further, that the applts. were not entitled to any reduction or abatement of rent.

[4] Mr. S. N. Basu appearing for the applts. has contested both the aforesaid findings. The finding that no major damage which required to be repaired by the lessor, was caused is a finding of fact binding in second appeal. Mr. Basu has contended that the final Ct. of fact has dealt with the question of damage in a very summary way, without considering all the relevant evidence in the record, & has further misdirected himself as to the real issue between the parties. He has pointed out that both the Cts. below were influenced by the fact that the ice factory continued to run in spite of the damage, & from this an unwarranted inference was drawn that no major damage was caused to the building. Mr. Basu has contended that the real point was not whether the ice factory continued in spite of the damage, but whether there was such major damage to the building as had to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease, & if the failure to effect such repair had caused loss to the applts. Mr. Basu has further submitted that in the three suits for rent the applts. as defts. were entitled to claim by way of equitable set off of such compensation as they were entitled to claim for a breach of the covenant as to repairs by the lessor. He has contended that this was the real nature of the defence in the three suits for rent, & the Cts. below have missed this important aspect of the case, which has vitiated the findings arrived at by them. If one were to follow the logical process, one should first consider the question of fact if there was any such damage to the building as had to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease, then would come the further question what relief, if any, would the applts. be entitled to for the failure of the lessor to effect repairs. On the question of damage to the building learned counsel for the applts. has drawn our attention to the inspection notes of the Circle Officer of Industries, North Bihar Circle, dated 29-1-1934 (EX. A), & the local inquiry report of the Pleader Comr. in the light of the said inspection notes. The final Ct. of fact referred to the said inspection notes & said that though some damage was caused, the factory continued to run. He further expressed the view that the inspection notes of the Circle Officer had reference to the regulations laid down & the conditions to be satisfied before a factory is allowed to run under the Indian Factories Act. He then said that the extent of the damage had been exaggerated by the applts. I must say that there is no clear finding by the final Ct. of fact that no such damage had occurred which required to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease. The learned Munsif dealt with this matter at greater length, & held that some slight damage was done to the building, but no major damage, & the slight damage was repaired by labourers employed by the resps. The learned Munsif did not, however, specifically consider those parts of the inspection notes which said that a portion of the southern wall & certain brick pillars had fallen down & also some walls had gone out of the plumb line. The enquiry report of the pleader Comr. supported these findings of the Circle Officer. Therefore, the finding of fact arrived at by the learned Munsif is also open to the criticism that he failed to consider relevant & material evidence in the record as to the extent of the damage to the building.

[5] This brings me to the next question which is the most important in these appeals —as to what relief, if any, the applts. are entitled to, assuming that there was such damage to the building as had to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease. While dealing with this question, it would be convenient to deal with the title suit separately from the suits for rent. In an earlier part of this judgment I have quoted in extenso the relief which the applts. had claimed in the title suit. It seems clear to me that the title suit as framed was for an assessment of fair & equitable rent in the shape of a declaration that a fair & reasonable rent would be Rs. 10 p. m. from 16-1-1934. In my opinion, the applts. were not entitled to such a declaration even if there had been such damage to the building as had to be repaired by the lessor under the terms of the lease. Admittedly, the provisions of the T. P. Act, governed the lease, & there has been some argument before us if the lessee had any other right except that mentioned in cl. (f) of S. 108, T. P. Act. That clause says that if the lessor neglects to make within a reasonable time after notice, any repairs which he is bound to make to the property, the lessee may make the same himself, & deduct the expense of such repairs with interest from the rent, or otherwise recover it from the lessor. Admittedly the lessee did not make any repairs himself; nor did he spend any money on such repairs. Therefore, the question of deducting the expenses of such repairs from the rent or otherwise recovering it from the lessor does not arise. Learned counsel for the resps. has contended before us that the right given under cl. (f) of S. 108 was the only right which the lessee had. Learned counsel for the applts., on the contrary, has contended that other remedies open to the lessee, for example, claiming compensation for any loss suffered as a result of a breach of contract under S. 73, Contract Act, are still available to the lessee. In Zeebunnissa Begum v. Mrs. H. B. Danagher, 59 Mad. 942 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Mad. 564), Varadachariar J. (as he then was) put the matter thus at p. 955 of the report:

"Before passing on to the next argument, I may also point out that in respect of the covenant to repair, no question of specific performanee can arise, see Woodfall on Landlord & Tenant, p. 769. The remedy of the tenant in the event of a breach of the covenant can only be either by way of a deduction from the rent or by way of a claim for damages or reimbursement of money spent."

In my opinion, the lessee can claim damages against the lessor for a breach of his obligations. In Hewitt v. Rowlands (1924) 93 L.J.K.B. 729, the question of assessing damages in favour of a tenant for failure of the landlord to effect repairs, which under the agreement the landlord had undertaken to do, arose, & one of the questions was if the tenant's right to recover damages depended on his expending money for doing the repairs which the landlord ought to have done. It was pointed out that there was no difference in principle between the liability of a landlord in respect of his covenant to repair & that of a tenant on his covenant to repair, & it was not a condition precedent to the tenant's right to recover damages against his landlord for breach of covenant to repair, that the tenant should have actually expended money in doing the repairs which the landlord ought to have done. There is, therefore authority for the view contended for by Mr. Basu. But the question still is—is the title suit brought by the applts. a suit claiming damages for failure to effect repairs or is it a suit for assessment of fair & equitable rent ? It seems clear to me, on a perusal of the plaint, that the applts. were not claiming damages by way of compensation for any loss which they had suffered as a result of a breach of the landlord's covenant to repair. In the plaint itself it was clearly, stated that what the applts. wanted was the determination of fair & equitable rent. A subsequent petn. for amendment of the plaint which was filed on 24-2-1942, made the position still more clear. This petn. stated :

"That the pltfs. have filed the suit for fixing Rs. 10 p. m. as fair & reasonable rent of holding No. 497 of Ward No. 2 of Muzaffarpur Municipality belonging to the defts. on the grounds that the building collapsed & very badly cracked & damaged by the last earthquake of 15-1-1934, & since then no repairs were undertaken by the defts. up to date."

Surely, a claim of this nature is not a claim for damages as contemplated under S. 73, Contract Act. I am not looking at the matter from the view of any technical rules of pleading In a case for compensation for loss or damage the pltfs. ought to say what loss, pecuniary or otherwise, they have suffered. Merely saying that there was some damage to the building which had to be repaired by the landlord. but which did not in any way interfere with the work of the ice factory, & without stating what loss, pecuniary or otherwise, the pltfs. suffered cannot, in my opinion, be the foundation for a claim for damages or even for abatement of rent by way of damages. It is obvious that the Ct. could not make a contract for the parties & fix a fair & reasonable rent from 16 1-1934. As a matter of fact, rent at the stipulated rate of Rs. 75 p. m. had been paid after 1934, either amicably or had been realised by means of suits. Under the provisions of the T. P. Act, the applts, were not entitled to the relief which they asked for in their title suit & that suit was rightly dismissed by the Cts. below, even on the assumption that there was such damage to the building as required to be repaired by the landlord. In view of the argument raised by Mr. Basu, I have examined the evidence given on behalf of the applts. There is nothing in that evidence to show what loss, pecuniary or otherwise, the applts. had suffered by reason of the failure to effect repairs by the landlord. All that the evidence sought to prove was that some damage had taken place which was not repaired by the landlords. Nothing was stated as to what loss, pecuniary or otherwise, the applts. had suffered, & the only claim which they made was for a fixation of fair & equitable rent. Such a relief was not available to the applts.

[6] Turning now to the three suits for rent, the contention of Mr. Basu is that his clients are entitled to claim compensation or damage for a breach of the landlords' covenant as to repairs, by way of an equitable set off against the claim for rent. Here, again, the trouble is that that was not the nature of the defence put forward, & I do not think it is open to the applts. to make out a different case in second appeal. I took the trouble of quoting the written statement in extenso. What was really claimed was that there was a verbal agreement for reduction of rent; but when the verbal agreement was not accepted, the plea taken was that the Ct. should fix a proper rent. There was no suggestion that the applts. were entitled to claim compensation or damages for the loss which they had suffered & that such compensation or damages should be set off, against the claim for rent. As in the title suit, so also in the suits for rent, nothing was stated about the loss, pecuniary or otherwise, which the applts. had suffered. This difficulty was realized when the applns. in revn. were heard by this Ct. against the order of remand first passed by the Dist. J. It was apparently then contended that what the applts. asked for was abatement of rent. Mr. S. N. Basu has argued before us that what his clients want is abatement of rent by way of compensation or damages. He has relied on two decisions in support of his claim that such abatement is permissible under the law. The first decision is one of the Punjab Chief Ct. in Naidar Mal v. B. Borrooah & Co., 23 I. C. 358 : (A.I. R. (1) 1914 Lah. 186). The T. P. Act does not apply to the Punjab, & there was no discussion of the legal position in the decision referred to above. It was however, found in that case as follows :

"It is very clearly proved that as a result of this neglect serious damage occurred in the rains & at the time when the defts-resps. stopped paying rent, there were, besides the original four roofless rooms, other rooms which had fallen in or had become dangerous & otherwise useless."

Therefore, the case was really one of partial eviction or deprivation, where the lessor, by his failure to effect repairs, had failed to put the lessee in full possession of the property demised. In such a case the question of proportionate abatement of rent undoubtedly arose. The lessor is not entitled to rent unless & until he has fulfilled his obligation to put the lessee in possession of the land leased to him. If the lessor has put the lessee in possession of only a portion of the property leased, the lessee will be entitled to, in some cases, suspension of the whole rent & in some other cases to a reduction or abatement of rent. The decision in Naidar Mal's case, 23 I. C 358 : (A.I.R. (1) 1914 Lah. 186), therefore, proceeded on a principle different from the one which is sought to be applied in the cases before us. In the cases before us, there was no partial eviction or deprivation, as a result of the failure of the landlord to effect repairs. The applts. continued to be in possession of the whole property, & gave no evidence of any loss, pecuniary or otherwise. I fail to see how in such circumstances the applts. can have any abatement of rent. The other decision in Bennett v. Ireland, (1859) 28 L. J. Q. B. 48 : (113 R. R. 657) depended on its peculiar facts. That was a case in which there was an agreement that the deft. would pay the rent in the manner stipulated, damage by fire excepted. A fire destroyed part of the building. Lord Campbell C. J. observed as follows :

"There must be an abatement of rent in respect of such part of the premises as, by reason of the fire the tenant can no longer enjoy, & during the time that he is deprived of the use of this part."

Therefore, that was also a case in which there was partial deprivation, that is the tenant could not enjoy a part of the building which had been destroyed by fire. In none of the cases before us was it even alleged that there was partial deprivation or eviction & the tenant could not enjoy a part of the building because of the failure to effect repairs. If, therefore, we treat the defence in the three suits for rent as a claim for abatement of rent, as appears to have been done when the applns. in revn. were heard against the order of remand, my conclusion is that the applts. were not entitled to any abatement of rent originally contracted for. Issue 5 as recast must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative.

[7] The question was also raised before us if the applts. had to pay court-fees on a claim for damages by way of an equitable set off, & furthermore, how such damages should be assessed. The question of assessing damages in favour of a tenant who has spent nothing on repairs, is not free from difficulty, as would appear from the observations made in Hewitt v. Rowlands, (1924) 93 L. J. K. B. 729. Where a lessee's covenant to deliver up the premises in good repair is broken at the end of the term, the measure of damages on strict principle should be the amount by which the value of the reversion is diminished; but as a practical measure, the reasonable cost of putting the premises into the state of repair in which they ought to have been left has sometimes been taken to be the measure of damages. In the case of a breach during the term, the measure is generally the diminution in the value of the reversion. These are, however, questions which do not call for decision by us. It is sufficient to state that the defence which the applts. had put forward in the three suits for rent was really a claim for assessment of fair & equitable rent which the applts. were not entitled to claim under the provisions of the T. P. Act. If, however, that defence is taken to be a claim for abatement of rent, then also the applts. were not entitled to any abatement of rent in the absence of any evidence that they had been deprived of the use of a portion of the premises or had suffered loss, pecuniary or otherwise, by reason of the failure of the landlords to effect such repairs as they were under the terms of the lease bound to do.

[8] This result may be unfortunate for the applts. but they are themselves to blame for this result. They brought a title suit in which they made a claim to which they were not entitled under the law. In the suits for rent they put up defences which could not be established & again made a claim for assessment of fair rent which was not open to them to claim under the provisions of the T. P. Act. If they claimed compensation or damages for a breach of the landlord's covenant as to repairs, they should have stated what loss or damage they had suffered for which they claimed compensation. This they did not do at any earlier stage, & the question has been raised for the first time in these second appeals. Even when these cases came to this Ct. on applns. in revn. against the order of remand, the claim was treated to be one for abatement of rent only. If I had held that the applts. were entitled to abatement of rent by way of damages, I might feel inclined to remand these cases again in view of the rather unsatisfactory nature of the finding arrived at by the final Ct. of fact on the question of the extent of damage caused to the building by the earthquake of 1934. But, in my judgment, the applts. are not entitled to claim abatement of rent & no useful purpose will be served by another order of remand & unless the applts. are allowed to amend their pleadings & given an opportunity of adducing fresh evidence as to the loss which they had suffered there could not be a decree in these cases for compensation or damages. It would be, I think, unfair to the resps. to allow the applts. to amend their pleadings & give them an opportunity of adducing fresh evidence. The applns. in revn. against the order of remand were heard in the presence of the parties, & the order of this Ct. refusing an opportunity to give fresh evidence is binding on the applts.

[9] For the reasons given above, I would dismiss these appeals with costs.

Where the petnr. was prosecuted under S. 7 for contravention of an alleged order under S. 3 (f) & what was relied on by the prosecution was a letter addressed to the petnr. by an officer in the Supply Dept. directing him to supply rice to holders of ration cards but there was nothing on the record to indicate that the Central Govt. had under S. 4 delegated its powers under S. 3 (f):

Baldeva Sahay & H. K. Banerji — for Petnr. Standing counsel — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The petnr. has been sentenced to three months' R. I. & to pay a fine of Rs. 1000 under S. 7, Essential Supplies Act, 1946. The particular offence alleged to have been committed is the omission to sell rice to the holder of a ration card who was entitled to buy it. Section 7 penalises the contravention of an order made under S. 3 of the Act. Under S. 3 the Central Govt. is empowered to make orders for, amongst other things, requiring any person holding stock of an essential commodity to sell the whole or a specified part of the stock at such prices & to such persons or class of persons or in such circumstances, as may be specified in the order. The prosecution has not proved that the Central Govt. has made any order the contravention of which would be a breach of cl. (f) of S. 3 the purport of which I have quoted above. What they have brought on to the record is a letter addressed to the petnr's. firm by an officer in the Supply Dept. directing him to supply rice to the holders of ration-cards. That is not an order of the Central Govt. Under S. 4 of the Act, however, the Central Govt. is authorised to direct that the power which it has under S. 3 shall be exercised either by an officer or authority subordinate to the Central Govt. or by such Provincial Govt. or such officer or authority subordinate to a Provincial Govt. as may be specified in the direction. When the Central Govt. delegates this power to the Provincial Govt. it is to be done by a notified order, that is to say, by an order notified in the official Gazette. There is nothing on the record of this case to indicate that the Central Govt. has delegated its power either to an officer or to an authority subordinate to itself, or to the Provincial Govt. or to an officer or an authority subordinate to the Provincial Govt. The prosecution, therefore, have failed to prove that the letter on which they rely is an order the contravention of which constitutes an offence under S. 7 of the Act. This of course is really one of those numerous cases to which I have been continually inviting the attention of the Provincial Govt. illustrating the utter neglect with which important prosecutions are conducted. No attempt is made to bring on to the record material which is necessary for determining whether the accused has committed an offence or not.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 537 — Want of sanction for prosecution — Defect not curable under S. 537.

Sanction to prosecute constitutes a condition precedent to the institution of the prosecution; the giving of the sanction confers jurisdiction on the Ct. to try the case; and where there is no valid sanction there is a defect in the jurisdiction of the Ct. which can never be cured under S. 537. [Para 2]

Anno. Criminal P. C., S. 537, N. 7.

N. N. Ray — for Petnrs.

Order. — It is necessary to state the material facts giving rise to this rule. On 12-8-1948, at about noon one Karu Dusadh found six appcts. slaughtering a bullock in an open field at a distance of about ten rasis from his house. He informed the S. I. of Police, who after investigation submitted charge-sheet under S. 295A, I. P. C. After taking cognizance, the Subdivisional Mag. transferred the case to another first class Mag. who has convicted the appcts. not under S. 295-A but under S. 298, I. P. C.

[2] The main argument is that since the prcsecution has not been sanctioned by the local Govt., the conviction of the appcts. is illegal. In my opinion, this argument is well-founded & must prevail. The lower appellate Ct. has observed that there is no defect in cognizance since the appcts. have been ultimately convicted under S. 298, I. P. C. upon the same complaint. But it is not permissible to look at the ultimate result of the trial in order to examine whether the Mag. has taken legal cognizance of the case: see Ravanappa v. Reddi v. Emperor, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Mad. 253: (33 Cr. L. J. 361) & Narain Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (12) 1925 ALL. 129 : (26 Cr. L. J. 446). In my opinion, the proceedings in the present case are wholly illegal from the start for want of sanction of the Provincial Govt. for the prosecution of the appcts. In Gokulchand Dwarkadas v. The King, 1948-1 M. L. J. 243 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 P. C. 82 : 49 Cr. L. J. 261) the Judicial Committee observed that sanction to prosecute constitutes a condition precedent to the institution of the prosecution; the giving of the sanction confers jurisdiction on the Ct. to try the case; and where there is no valid sanction there is a defect in the jurisdiction of the Ct. which can never be cured under S. 537, Cr. P. C. Precisely the same opinion has been expressed by the F. C. in Basdeo Agarwalla v. The King, 1945 F. L. J. 45 : (A.I.R. (32) 1945 F. C. 16 : 46 Cr. L. J. 510).

[3] Upon these grounds, I would make this rule absolute & set aside the conviction & sentence imposed on all the appcts.

Criminal Revn. No. 1113 of 1948, D/- 7-2-1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488—Illegitimate child —Evidence of woman—Corroboration of.

Where the question at issue is whether a certain man is the father of a certain child, it is prima facie improper to accept without corroboration, the mere statement on oath of the mother who asserts the paternity. Her evidence in such a case cannot but be highly interested, and it would be unreasonable and improper for any Court to act merely on her own statement without some independent corroboration thereof. Such corroborative evidence may be circumstantial but it must be such as to corroborate the evidence of the woman that the child was born of the alleged father. The fact of improper association after the child was born would not be sufficient to corroborate her evidence. [Para 2]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 488 N. 25.

K. C. Sanyal & Lakshmi Narain Sinha — for Petnr.; R. S. Sinha — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This application is directed against an order of a Mag. made under S. 488, Cr P. C., directing Thakur Prasad to pay a sum of Rs. 10 per month to Ramnarain who is alleged to be his illegitimate son conceived through Mustt. Godavari. On behalf of the appct. learned Advocate submitted that the trying Mag. committed an error of law in accepting the evidence of Mustt. Godavari without it being sufficiently corroborated.

[2] In a case of this type it has been held that as a matter of prudence, if not of law, the Ct. should not accept the evidence of the woman unless it is corroborated in material particulars (vide for instance Vedantachari v. Marie, A.I.R. (13) 1926 Mad. 1130 : (27 Cr. L. J. 1095). In that case Wallace J. observed that where the question at issue was whether a certain man was the father of a certain child, it was prima facie improper to accept without corroboration, the mere statement on oath of the mother who asserted the paternity. Her evidence in such a case could not but be highly interested, & it would be unreasonable & improper for any Court to act merely on her own statement without some independent corroboration thereof. In the present case it is necessary, therefore, to examine whether there is sufficient corroboration of the evidence of Mustt. Godavari that Ramnarain was the child of Thakur Prasad. It is agreed that the child was born about the year 1941. A. W. 3 Musahroo Mandal stated that Thakur Prasad had kept Mustt. Godavari as his concubine for the last four or five years. The next witness A. W. 4 Kamleshri Jha stated that he found the woman in the house of Thakur Babu about two or three years back. A. W. 2 Muhadi Hussain, tamtam driver, deposed that he had taken the woman with Thakur Babu to cinema on several occasions. He admitted that he did not know what was the relationship between them. When cross-examined, he stated that he knew the woman for the last eight years. But he has not specifically deposed that he had seen the woman improperly associating with Thakur Prasad for the entire period. It is true that corroborative evidence may be circumstantial but it must be such as to corroborate the evidence of the woman that the child was born of Thakur Prasad. The fact of improper association after the child was born would not be sufficient to corroborate her evidence. There must be evidence to suggest that at or previous to the time when the child could have been begotten there were acts of familiarity between the parties. In Cole v. Manning, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 611 : (46 L. J. M. C. 175) it was held that evidence of acts of familiarity between the woman & defendant before a time at which the child could have been begotten would be corroborative evidence under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872. In Thomas v. Jones, (1920) 2 K. B. 399 Lord Reading observed that corroborative evidence was required in such cases in order to protect men against wicked or unfounded charges which might be so easily made if the evidence of the woman without corroborative testimony was sufficient. But it would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence was evidence which shews or tends to shew that the woman's story was true. In Prasad Gareri v. Mt. Kesari, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 444 : (42 Cr. L. J. 347) Dhavle J. held that the burden was upon the woman to establish the paternity of the child & to show that the person from whom she claimed maintenance for the child was the father of the child; that it was prima facie improper to accept without corroboration the mere statement on oath by the mother who asserted that the opposite party was father of the child.

[3] In the present case even assuming that A. Ws. 2, 3 & 4 have given true evidence, they do not corroborate to any appreciable extent the statement of Mustt. Godavari that Thakur Prasad was the father of the illegitimate child Ramnarain. It follows that the learned Mag. ought not to have passed an order of maintenance under S. 488, Cr. P. C.

[4] Upon these grounds I would make the rule absolute and set aside the order of the Mag. directing petnr. to pay for the maintenance of Ramnarain.

G. C. Mukherjee & K. D. De — for Applt; B. C. De, J. C. Sinha & A. K. Chatterji — for Resp.

Ray J. — This is a pltf's. appeal in a suit for a declaration of his raiyati right & for recovery of possession in respect of lands appertaining to khatas Nos. 50 & 210 in village khirgaon, police-station Hazaribagh, dist. Hazaribagh, & for confirmation of possession or, in the alternative, for recovery or possession of the lands appertaining to khata No. 51 of the same village.

[2] The facts, out of which cause of action for the suit arose, are that the disputed lands appertaining to khatas 50 & 51 were recorded as raiyati in the names of Narendra Nath Mukherjee, Lokendra Nath Mukherjee, Adhendra Nath Mukherjee, Dijendra Nath Mukherjee Harendranath Mukherjee & Parendra Nath Mukherjee, all sons of late Rai Bahadur Jadunath Mukherjee, & that all the survey plots except No. 860 of khata No. 210 were all along their raiyati lands. Late Jadunath Mukherjee had acquired these lands from khas mahal by settlement. The aforesaid recorded tenants mortgaged all the raiyati lands in the aforesaid three khatas of the village along with other properties with the deft. Chotanagpur Banking Assocn. Ltd., in the year 1914. As the mtge. debts could not be liquidated, the deft. Bank enforced the mtge. in Suit No. 48 of 1925. The mortgaged properties were sold to the deft.-Bank in execution of the mtge. decree. They got delivery of possession on 1 8-1936. The deft. apprehending futility of the auction sale which was held in contravention of the provisions of S. 41, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, persuaded the mtgor-judgment-debtors & their heirs to surrender the lands appertaining to khata No. 50 to the khas mahal (landlord) giving them to understand that the deft. would give them receipt of acquittance of all the debts outstanding against them. The petn. for surrender filed under the persuasion, however, was rejected by the khas mahal officer. Later, on 5-9 38 another petn. of surrender was filed by the aforesaid mtgors. & their representatives excepting Parendra Nath Mukherjee, the pltf.'s father. The latter filed an objection withdrawing from the petn. of surrender already filed. The objection, however, was overruled, in disregard of the fact that the pltf.'s father had by partition become owner of the entire lands in suit. Acting upon the petn. of surrender & considering that the original tenancy had come to an end, the lands were settled with the defts. & their names were mutated instead of the recorded tenants. The deft. thereupon dispossessed the pltf. from lands appertaining to khata No. 50 & raiyati portion of khata No. 210 & claimed title in himself in lands of khata No. 51 though the latter had never been sold at the execution sale. The deft. resisted the suit on the following grounds: that the lands of original khatas Nos. 50, 51 & 210 were sold on 8-2-36 in execution case No. 96 of 1934 of the Ct. of the Addl. Subordinate Judge at Hazaribagh in the aforesaid mtge. suit; that the entire mtge. land in village khirgaon formed a compact block lying within the boundaries: north—Kachcha public road, south—bungalow of Babu Monindra Nath Mukherjee, east—municipal Road, west—lands of Chhakori Mistry, Mohan Naya & Jitu Mali; that the lands of khata No. 51 including the big tank lie within the aforesaid boundary & form the central portion of the entire land sold; that the defts. got possession through Ct. of all the lands, house & tank included in original khatas Nos. 50, 51 & 210; that the plts. as alleged, is not in possession of khata No. 51 & that the pltf. is debarred from maintaining a suit challenging the validity of the sale in favour of the deft. Bank as neither he nor his predecessor-in-interest raised the objection in execution of the decree under S. 47, C. P. C.

[3] The learned trial Judge recorded the following findings: (1) that the lands in suit were not the raiyati lands of either Rai Bahadur Jadunath Mukherjee or his heirs, but that Rai Bahadur Jadunath Mukherjee & his heirs including the pltf. had all along permanent leasehold interest in them which were heritable & transferable & that in this view the sale in execution of the decree was binding against pltf. (2) that the mutation order of the Khas Mahal Officer in favour of the deft.-Bank & settlement of 8 plots of khata No. 50 with them are valid; (3) that the pltf.'s suit was not barred by the provisions of S. 47, C. P. C.; & (4) that the sale in favour of the deft. included the lands appertaining to khata No. 51.

[4] All the above findings have been attacked by Mr. G. C. Mukherji appearing for the applt. in this Ct. His contention, in this behalf, are in the main (1) that the lands appertaining to khata No. 51 of the cadastral survey have not been sold; (2) that the lands sold are raiyati holdings & their sale, in execution, in contravention of the statutory prohibition contained in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act is void & passed no title to the deft.-Bank; & (3) that the suit is not barred by the provisions of S. 47, C. P. C.

[5] In support of his first contention, Mr. Mukherji has taken us through the description of the property sold as set out in EX. F (certificate of sale in execution case No. 96 of 1934, dated 4-4-36) & EX. E (order sheet in the said execution case dated 22-12-34 to 12-9-36). The following is the description of the properties of judgment-debtors, 3 & 16 to 18. It is admitted by Mr. Mukherjee that the pltfs. represent judgment-debtor No. 3. I quote the description hereinbelow :

"I (A). One pucca tiled bungalow with orchard at Khirgaon, pargana Champa. thana & dist. Hazaribagh, thana No. 145, the boundaries of which are as follows : East Public Road. West—Jot land of the tenants Chhakouri & Mistri & others. North—Tank & the land appertaining thereto, i. e. lot No. 1 (B). South-House of Babu Mohindra Nath Mukherji, Khata No. 50, plot Nos. 856, 855, 854, 857, 858, 859, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 849, 850, 951, 852, 853, 847, 848 & khata No. 210, plot Nos. 831, 860 area 6.19 acres at an annual rental of Rs. 5-8-0 sold at auction for Rs. 3,100.

1(B). A tank with orchard & the land appertaining to it at Khirgaon, thana & dist. Hazaribagh, thana No. 145, the boundaries of which are as follows : East Public road, West—paddy land of the tenants. North-unmettled public road. South land appertaining to the aforesaid bungalow, i. e. lot No. 1 (A), permanent right 8.93 acres Govt. compound. Khata No. 50, plots Nos. 840, 841/1983 (?), 842, 843, 844. 845 846, 825 (?), 836, 948/1920, 839/1981, 824/2061 824/2062, 819, 820, 824, 832/1964, khata No. 10, plot Nos, 828, 829/1999, 830/1990, 830/1988, 832/1987, 833/1986, 835/1985 sold at auction for Rs. 3,000."

It appears from the aforesaid description that khata Nos. 50 & 210 have been mentioned therein but not khata No. 51 nor any of the survey plots appertaining to it, & this omission is in fact the bone of Mr. Mukherji's contention. In lot 1 (A) of the aforesaid description the total area of the survey plots mentioned there is given as 6.19 & that of lot No. 1 (B) is 8.93, the total being 15.12. In the khatian, area of khata No. 50 is 11.94 & that of khata No. 210 is 3.15 (?), the total being 15.12. It is evident that there is complete omission of khata No. 51 & its plots from the document. Beside the survey khata & plot numbers, each of the two lots 1 (A) & 1 (B) has also been described by reference to the nature & boundary of the lands. Exhibit E does not go further than EX. F in favour of applts. It is contended by Mr. B. C. De on behalf of the resp. that the boundaries of the lots include the lands appertaining to khata No. 51 & omission of the khata number or the plots is a mere clerical error and would not affect his title to the lands sold. He also invited our attention to EXS. C and D which are, respectively, application for execution and the sale proclamation in execution case No. 96 of 1934 in which the lands were sold to the deft.-Bank. Execution petn. gives the following description of the properties to be sold. It reads :

"1. One bungalow with a brick-built out-house with balcony & land appertaining the bungalow & the tank & the orchard aforesaid at Khirgaon, pargana Champa, thana & dist. Hazaribagh a half share of which, i. e. eight annas share has been awarded to judgment (?) No. 3 by partition, the boundaries of which are as follows :

East. — Public road.

West. — Paddy land of Chhakouri Mistri, Mohannasa & Jinu Mali.

North. — E. B. Public road.

South. — Bungalow of Babu Monindra Nath Mukherji, thana No. 145, Municipality holding No. 1, Ward No. 5, present Ward No. 9 Govt. Compound."

Then follows khata numbers & plot numbers. The lands thus described are divided into lots 1 (A) & 1 (B). 1 (A) is described as "One brick-built tiled bungalow with orchard at Khirgaon, pargana Champa; thana & dist. Hazaribagh, Khata (probably a mistake for thana) No. 145, the boundaries of which are as follows :

East — Public road.

West. — Jot land of the tenants Chhakouri Mistri & others.

North — Tank & the land appertaining thereto, i. e., lot No. 1 (B)."

South — House of Babu Mohindra Nath Mukherji.

Then follows the khata numbers & plot numbers. Lot No. 1 (B) similarly is specified as :

"Tank & orchard & the land appertaining thereto at Khirgaon, thana & dist. Hazaribagh, thana No. 145, the boundaries of which are as follows :

East—Public road.

West—Paddy land of the tenants.

North—High public road.

South—Land appertaining to the said bungalow, i. e. lot No. 1 (A)"."

It may be mentioned here that while describing the nature of the judgment-debtors' right in the lands aforesaid, it is stated to be "one of perpetual building lease at an annual rental of Rs. 34-9-0". Exactly the same manner of description has been followed in EX. D, the sale proclamation. Coming to the certificate of sale, the comprehensive description of the entire block of land, as mentioned in EXS. C & D, has been omitted in it, but its two sub-divisions by reference to lots 1 (A) & 1 (B) have simply been mentioned. In interpreting the sole certificate, for coming to the conclusion as to identity of properties sold, the sale certificate must be read along with the execution petn. & the sale proclamation. It is admitted that the lands appertaining to survey khata No. 51 are surrounded on all sides by the lands appertaining to khata Nos. 50 and 210 of the same survey. Mr. De pointed out to us, on reference to the survey map, that all the lands appertaining to khatas Nos. 50, 51 & 210 are included within the comprehensive description by boundaries set out in the execution petn as in the sale proclamation. The entire block of land included within this boundary is divided into two sub-blocks described as lots 1 (A) & 1 (B). The division being roughly by a line drawn from east to west. Lot 1 (A) described as bungalow & lands appertaining thereto constitute the southern portion, while the lands described by reference to tank & orchard & the lands appertaining thereto constitute the northern block. Placing the two blocks side by side & locating the lands with reference to the boundaries, as mentioned in the sale certificate, it is abundantly clear that the two together constitute the block within the general & comprehensive boundary surrounding the bungalow, the tank & all the lands around it appertaining to survey khata Nos. 50, 51 & 210. There is a very good reason for omission of any reference to khata No. 51, that is, that after the survey, the tenants, namely, the judgment-debtors of the mtge. suit approached the khas mahal authorities, & complained against erroneous record of the survey in which all their lands had been shown as kaimi raiyati lands & thus subjected to enhancement of rent. In this complaint, they contended before the khas mahal authorities that theirs was permanent building leasehold interest which was not only heritable & transferable but also carried a permanent rent (not liable to enhancement on any ground whatsoever). The khas mahal authorities acceded to this complaint of the tenants-judgment debtors, & excepting 8 plots in khata No. 50 included all the rest in a new khata bearing No. 229 & restored the permanent rent that had been fixed at the time of original settlement. This was done in accordance with the register maintained by the khas mahal of their tenanted lands. As a result, the survey entries were completely wiped out. There remained some trace of khata No. 50, but I find on close scrutiny that all the plots of khata No. 51 were included in the building lease lands. This happened in the year 1932 at the latest. The execution proceedings were started in 1934, before which the tenants inter se had a partition of these lands to which there is a reference in the execution petn. a portion of which has already been quoted. It is, therefore, apparent that the decree-holder described the lands to be sold by the boundaries & other kinds of description, such as, building, tank & the lands appertaining thereto. Mr. De has shown to us that the lands appertaining to survey khata No. 51 are nothing but tank & orchard & pind of the tank drains leading water into or out of the tank, a road consisting of ·05 & one or two tanr plots bearing a total area of .69. It appears that out of the total area of 2.63 of this khata 1.43 is the tank & the rest must be its pind & the lands just adjoining it. Description of lot No. 1(B) in the sale certificate, the execution petn. & the sale proclamation open with the words "A tank with orchard & the lands appertaining to it the boundaries of which are as follows". In the circumstances, it is quite clear that though there is no reference to the survey khata No. 51, the lands appertaining thereto have in fact been sold & are included within the description inserted in the relevant documents. I shall, therefore, hold that there is no substance in this contention.

[6] Contentions 2 & 3 may conveniently be dealt with together. It appears the disputed lands were recorded in the survey as raiyati & fair rents were settled in respect of them under S. 85 (2) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, but shortly after the final publication of the survey record of rights the tenants concerned, namely the judgment-debtors approached the khas mahal authorities with a complaint that the lands were wrongly recorded as raiyati. As a result there was an arrangement as between the khas mahal (landlord) & the tenants & excepting 8 survey plots appertaining to khata No. 50, all the rest were included under khewat (Ex. X-3) bearing No. 229 as permanent lease-hold lands. The order of the Deputy Collector was passed in case No. 352 of 1917/1918 on 20-3-1918. The effect of the order was that the plots shown in the aforesaid khewat had been by mistake recorded as raiyati & hata in the 1913 survey by the Settlement Dept. & that they were taken out from the khatas & separately shown in the khewat. Mr. Mukherji for the applts. wants to contend that this order of the khas Mahal Deputy Collector cannot override the record of rights. He also takes us to the oral evidence showing that in some of the plots paddy is grown. He has also shown to us that in the record of rights some lands have been shown as paddy lands. There seems to be no substance in this contention. He is bound by the arrangement arrived at between himself & the landlord on the basis of what both of them knew to be the character of the land. Record of rights is not conclusive evidence nor does it create any title. Suppose the tenants instituted a suit challenging the correctness of the entries & a settlement was arrived at between them & the khas mahal accepting the contention of the tenants that the lands were not raiyati, could it be open to the tenants to go back upon the settlement & urge that the record of rights should prevail? The answer to this question must be in the negative. The contention, therefore, that the lands are raiyati loses its force in view of the Khas Mahal Deputy Collector's order & preparation of the new khewat. There remain the 8 plots which have still been left in the raiyati khata No. 50. With regard to these Mr. De contends that major portion of those plots is covered by Ex. H which is a lease dated 15-5-1895 granted by the D. C., Hazaribagh, to Rai

Bahadur Jadunath Mukherjee, the predecessor-in-interest of the pltf. This document shows that the lands settled under it were given on permanent lease. The document opens with the words :

"Whereas the Comr. of Chotanagpur in his letter No. 403 I./R dated 20-2-1893, sanctioned the appln. of the lessee for the settlement in perpetuity in order to enable him to construct a tank of 10 plots of land as per details below. This patta is given to the lessee, his heirs, executors, assignees & other legal representatives subject to the . . . . ."

It is not disputed that lands granted on this document cannot be ordinary raiyati kaimi lands inalienable under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. To ascertain the identity of these lands, commission was issued to a civil Ct. Comr. who after proper measurement & relay on the spot came to the conclusion that 2.87—consisting of portion of 848/1980—.20, portion of 824/2061—1.23, portion of 819—.09, & portion of 824—1.35 aggregating 2.87,—appertained to the plots settled under H. That being so, it cannot be said that subsequent user of some of these lands for the purpose of growing paddy will at all detract from the permanent heritable & transferable character of the tenancy. Mr. Mukherji's contention, therefore, will not apply to the aforesaid 2.87 acres. Deducting this area from 4.61 the area of the 8 plots still outstanding in khata No. 50 of the survey, the remainder 1.74 will have to be assumed to be raiyati lands. The pltf. has only one-third share in this area, which comes to .58 of an acre. The contention of Mr. Mukherji, if it succeeds, will enable him to have declaration of title & recovery of possession in respect of this land.

[7] Mr. De, however, contends that the contention that any raiyati area was not liable to be sold relates to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree & should have been raised by the pltf. a judgment-debtor, as he is, in the execution proceedings under S. 47, C. P. C. In this view, he urges that the suit is not maintainable. Mr. Mukherji in this connection relies upon an F. B. decision of this Ct. in the case of Uchit Lal Missir v. Raghunandan Tewari, 15 P. L. T. 661 : (A I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 666 F. B.). The appeal in that case was against an order passed by an executing Ct. in execution of a mtge. decree for sale. The objection attacking saleability of the mtged. property had been raised under S. 47, C. P. C. The executing Ct. held the objection to be non-maintainable on the authority of a previous decision of this Ct. in Amrit Lal v. Jagat Chandra, 7 P. L. T. 468 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 202). Two learned Judges of this Ct. (Macpherson & Dhavle JJ.) doubted the correctness of this latter decision, in view of the imperative prohibition against sale of such properties codified in S. 27, Santal Parganas Settlement Regulation. The F. B. held that Amrti Lal Seal's case, 7 P.L.T. 468 : (A.I.R. (13) 1926 Pat. 202) had been wrongly decided. The main contention in that case was that a mtge. decree having been passed & the question of inalienability of the mtge. property not having been raised in the suit, it was beyond the competence of the executing Ct. to refuse to put the decree into execution. This contention was negatived, & it was held that notwithstanding the decree, it was still open to the judgment-debtor to raise the question under S. 47 at the execution stage. On this simple ground this case can be distinguished from the case in hand. This F. B. case at least decides that the question was one which could have been raised within the purview of S. 47, of the Code in the stage of execution. Mr. Mukherji's contention, on the contrary, is that as the decree for sale did not validly authorise the executing Ct. to sell the property, & as the sale offending, as it did, the imperative provision of the statute was a void one, it was quite optional for the judgment-debtor to raise the plea in course of execution or not. His submission is that the judgment-debtor could stand by the sale & delivery of possession & could come with a separate suit for a declaration that the sale was void & for recovery of possession. Before answering this contention, I should draw attention to the basis of the F.B. decision which is contained in the following observation from the judgment of Courtney-Terrell. C. J. at p. 675 of the report :

"I now turn to the nature of the entry in the record of rights with which we are concerned in this case. It must be definitely understood that the record of rights in the Santal Parganas has a status very different from that under the Bengal Tenancy Act. S. 25 of the Regulation provides that after a period of six months from the date of the publication of the record of rights of any village such record shall be conclusive proof of the rights & customs therein recorded."

The argument is that that was a case in which it was not open to any of the parties to dispute the status of the tenant in respect of the lands in suit. Once the status is conclusively settled & definitely known, the law in S. 27 of the Regulation is a prohibition directed to the Ct. & that any Ct. passing an order in disregard of the statutory prohibition must be taken to have acted beyond jurisdiction. Such considerations, however, do not arise in the present case. Here I may refer to a decision in the case of Bindeswari Charan v. Bageshwari Charan, 63 I. A. 53 at p. 59 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P.C. 46). There the question arose whether the question of validity of a grant prohibited by S. 12A, Encumbered Estates Act, was barred by res judicata. Agarwala J. (as he then was) with whom James J. concurred held as follows:

"Reverting to the question of the operation of the doctrine of res judicata on the grant of 1909, the point for determination is whether the decision in the 1917 suit can render valid a transaction which subs. (3) to S. 12A declares to be void . . . . Now the third sub-section of S. 12A, declares that an alienation or charge made without the previous sanction of the Comr. is void that is to say, it is void ab initio. The grant of 1909 was in my opinion still born, & the decision in the suit of 1917 could not impregnate it with life, I therefore hold that we are not bound to treat the grant of 1909 as valid merely by reason of the conclusion as to its validity arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge in the 1917 suit."

As against this their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows :

"Truly the third sub-section of S. 12A renders void any transaction to which it is applicable, but the question whether it applies to a particular transaction entitled the Ct. to consider the construction of the section, & the determination of its applicability rests with the Ct. The decision of the Ct. in the suit of 1917 determined that the section had never applied to the transaction of 1909, & it is difficult to follow the reasoning of the learned Judge which allowed him, not only to express a strong contrary view as to the applicability of the section, which he was entitled to do, if he so chose, but to try anew the issue as to its applicability—in face of the express prohibition in S. 11 of the Code."

Mr. De strenuously contends that after this decision of the P. C. the decision in the F. B. case cannot be considered to be good law. I reserve my opinion in relation to this contention, & I do not think it is at all necessary to go so far as that in the instant case. It is clear that, unlike in the case decided by the F. B. the settlement entry recording the disputed lands as raiyati kaimi was not conclusive & whether they are raiyati & whether the section prohibits their alienation at auction sale or otherwise was applicable to the facts of the present case were open for consideration either by the Ct. passing the mtge. decree or, at least, by the Ct. executing the said decree. In view of the fact that the question was open for the executing Ct. to decide & for the parties to raise & they did not do so, it should be held that the party is debarred from agitating it again in a suit. I will recall that in the execution petn. the properties sought to be sold were describad as lands held under perpetual building leases. The decree-holder, therefore, raised the question of fact while soliciting the assitance of the executing Ct. to put the property to sale for satisfaction of the decree. It was open to the judgment-debtors to refute this question of fact & to urge, as the pltf. urges now, that the lands or any part thereof not being permanent lease-hold land but only raiyati, were not liable to be sold in satisfaction of the decree. Under the circumstances it appears to me quite clear that S. 47 is a bar to the maintainability of the present suit. In support of this conclusion of mine I would rely upon a much later decision of this Ct. in the case of Bhagwat Narain v. Mahadeo Prasad, 23 P. L. T. 56 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 244) in which a D. B. held :

"The question as to whether the disputed property could be alienated in spite of the provision of S. 12A, Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, was essentially a question to be decided between the judgment-debtor & the decree-holder in the execution proceedings, & the judgment-debtor cannot raise the question in a separate suit even though the suit is brought not against the decree-holder but against the auction-purchaser, even though it may be assumed that the auction-purchaser is not a representative of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor. The suit is, therefore, not maintainable in view of S. 47, C. P. C."

In the result, the appeal fails & is dismissed with costs.

[8] Manohar Lall J.—I agree. The correctness of the decision in the F. B. case of Uchit Lal Missir v. Raghunandan Tewari, 15 P.L.T. 661 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 666 F.B.) does not arise for consideration in the present case which can be decided in accordance with that decision. In my opinion the present suit is barred under S. 47, C. P. C. so far as lands other than khata 51 lands are concerned.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 20 of 1946, D/- 20-4-1948, from decision of Shearer J., reported in A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 132.

Contract Act (1872), Ss. 23, 75—Marriage contract—Pltf. paying sum of money as tilak money to deft. in consideration of the deft. consenting to the marriage of pltf.'s minor daughter with deft.'s minor son — Pltf. breaking marriage on ground that deft.'s son was subject to epileptic fits & suing for recovery of amount paid — Pltf. held entitled to recover, even if the contract be held illegal per se & therefore void ab initio—Performance of tilak ceremony held no part of the performance of marriage. Anno. Contract Act, S. 23 N. 16; S. 75 N 1.

C. P. Sinha & Lala Atul Chand — for Applts.; Sarjoo Prasad & Avadesh Kumar Dutta —for Resps.

Das J. — This is an appeal under the Letters Patent by the pltf. from a decision of Shearer, J. reversing the decision of the Cts. below in a suit for recovery of money which the applt. had paid to resps. 1 & 2 in the following circumstances. The applt. had entered into an agreement with resps. 1 & 2 by which the latter had agreed that the former's daughter, who was then a minor, would be married to resp. 3, who was then the minor son of resp. 1. Resp. 2 was the adult son of resp. 1 & brother of resp. 3. The agreement was that the applt. would pay a sum of Rs. 1001 & would also give silver & brass utensils to the value of Rs. 152. The tilak ceremony was performed at Aurangabad, where the resps. resided, & the money was paid partly before & partly at that time.

Soon after the performance of the ceremony, resp. 3 had some sort of a fit, which led the applt. to make an enquiry with the result that it was found that the bridegroom was an epileptic subject. The applt. then broke off the marriage & demanded back the sum of Rs. 1152 which he had paid to resps. 1 & 2. The Cts. below held that the applt. was entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 909-6-9, excluding the amount which had been spent on the tilak ceremony. The final Ct. of fact modified the decree of the learned Munsif by directing that the decree would be against resps. 1 & 2 alone & not against resp. 3. Resps. 1 & 2 appealed to this Ct., & Shearer, J. allowed the appeal, holding that the agreement between the applt. & the major resps. was an agreement only, a mere nudum pactum, & not a contract, & further, holding that if the tilak was a conditional gift, then the applt. was not entitled to recovery of the money inasmuch as the marriage did not take place on account of his own default.

[2] The questions which have been urged before us were considered by a Bench of this Ct. in a very recent decision which has not yet been reported: Dharnidhar v. Kanhji Sahay, S. A. No. 1409 of 1946 : (A.I.R. (36) 1949 Pat. 250). In my opinion, that decision covers the present case & relieves us of the duty of a fresh examination of the case law on the subject. Two questions arose for decision in that case: firstly, whether an agreement to make a payment to a father in consideration of the marriage of his son or daughter is illegal & against public policy, & therefore, hit by S. 23, Contract Act, & secondly, whether the money paid under such an agreement can be recovered after the contract had been resiled from by the pltf. himself. Manohar Lall J. referred to the decisions in Bakshi Das v. Nadu Das, 1 C. L. J. 261; Kristnayya v. Lakshmi Narayana, 32 Mad. 185 : (3 I. C. 554); Ramsumaran Prasad v. Gobinda Das, 5 Pat. 646 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 582) & a large number of other decisions on the subject, & held that in the case before him it had not been proved that the contract was immoral or illegal. Ramaswami J. the other member of the Bench, was inclined to hold that the contract was opposed to public policy, & therefore, void. Both the Judges, however, answered the second question in the affirmative. Manohar Lall J. expressed himself as follows:

"Let me assume, however, that the contract was illegal per se & therefore ab initio void. Even on this supposition the deft. cannot retain the amount which he has received from the pltf. because the pltf. in suing to recover possession of his Rs. 2250 is not carrying out the illegal transaction but is seeking to put himself & the deft. as far as possible in the same position as they were before that transaction was determined upon, & it is the deft. who is relying upon the illegal contract & is seeking to make title to the money through & by means of it."

Reference was made to the decision in Pethermal Chetty v. Muniandiservai, 35 I. A. 98: (35 Cal. 551 P. C.) & other decisions. It was further observed that although a Ct. may not enforce an agreement to pay money to the parents or guardian of an intended bride or bridegroom on the ground that the agreement is opposed to public policy, yet a suit is maintainable for the recovery of the sum actually paid, pursuant to the agreement, if the contract is broken & the marriage does not take place. It was observed that the Ct. would read an implied condition in the contract that the money would be returned if the marriage does not take place. Ramaswami J. also considered the question & stated that when the marriage is not performed there is ample authority in support of the view that the money should be refunded. Learned counsel for the resps. had contended before us that the agreement was ab initio void, as it was immoral & against public policy. It is, I think, unnecessary in this appeal to decide the question whether a contract or agreement for payment of money to a father in consideration of the marriage of his son or daughter is immoral or against public policy, & therefore, hit by S. 23, Contract Act. Assuming that the agreement or contract was invalid, the question still remains whether the applt. is entitled to get back the money when the marriage has not been performed. That question has been authoritatively answered by a Bench of this Ct & it is not necessary to examine in detail the cases which have already been examined & referred to in that decision. Learned counsel for the resps. has sought to distinguish that decision on the ground that the money in that case was paid for purchasing ornaments for the bride, & therefore, the claim of the pltf. in that case could be treated as a suit for recovery of money had & received. It appears, however, from that decision that what was found was that the pltf. the father of the girl, had paid Rs. 2250 to the deft. in order that the latter might consent to the marriage of his son with the pltf.'s daughter. The decision was, therefore, based on an agreement to make a payment to the father of the bridegroom, so that he might consent to the marriage of his son with the pltf.'s daughter. On that basis it was decided that even if the contract was illegal per se, & therefore, ab initio void, the pltf. was still entitled to get back the money when the marriage was not performed. I think the same principle would apply in the present case. The payment was made by the applt. to the two major resps. in consideration of their consenting to the marriage of resp. 3 with the applt.'s daughter. The Cts. below have concurrently found that the applt. was justified in breaking off the marriage on the ground that resp. 3 was subject to epileptic fits. The present case is even stronger than the case in Dharanidhar v. Kanhji Sahay, S. A. No. 1409 of 1946 : (A. I R. (36) 1949 Pat. 250). In that case the pltf. had disclosed no grounds why the marriage was broken off. In the case before us it has been found by the Cts. below that the applt. was justified in breaking off the marriage. That being the position, the applt. is clearly entitled to the money which had been paid to the two major resps.

[3] Learned counsel for the resps. has also contended before us that there has been a part performance of the contract, & in view of such part performance the money cannot be returned. He has relied on Kearley v. Thomson, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 742 : (59 L. J. Q. B. 288). I am unable to appreciate this argument. The money was paid for the marriage & no marriage has been performed. It is beyond any dispute that the performance of the tilak ceremony is no part of the performance of a marriage. The claim of the applt. cannot, in my opinion, be resisted on the principle of part performance.

[4] For these reasons I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Ct. & restore that of the learned Addl. Subordinate Judge. The applt. will get a decree against resps. 1 & 2 for the amount found by the learned Addl. Subordinate Judge. The applt. will be entitled to his costs from resps. 1 & 2. There was no decree against resp. 3, & the applt. must pay the costs of resp. 3 in this Ct.

A. F. O. D. No. 292 of 1946, D/- 21-8-1950.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 8, R. 5 - Claim to pre-empt — Custom—Absence of its existence in written statement — Muhammadan Law—Pre-emption.

As a matter of custom, the right of pre-emption in accordance with Hanafi law exists between Hindus in Bihar. The claim in plaint to pre-empt, by necessary implication pleads the existence of such a custom, & the absence of a pleading of its non-existence in the written statement amounts to an admission of its existence. [Para 4]

Anno : C. P. C., O. 8, R. 5, N. 2.

(b) Muhammadan Law—Pre-emption — Talabs — Who can make.

The demand may be made by the pre-emptor himself or his agent. When the pre-emptor is a minor the demand made by his de facto guardian is valid. [Para 6]

(c) Muhammadan Law — Pre-emption—Talabs — Formalities — Specification of property.

Not much importance is attached to the form in which the talab-i-mowusibat is expressed. The important thing is that it must be made immediately on receipt of information of the sale & its meaning must be clear. But the talabi-ishtish-had must be performed on the property, or to the vendor, or the vendee, as the case may be, & it must be in the presence of witnesses. It is necessary also that the witnesses should be called on to bear witness to the performance of the talabs. There is no particular set form, but the property in respect of which the demand is being made should be specified. No such requirement is mentioned in respect of the talab-i-mowasibat. However in the talab-i-ishtish-had full details of the property need not be given. There would be a sufficient specification of the property, if the talab contains a description which makes the property identifiable. [Paras 10, 11]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 22 — Omission to file cross-objection or appeal.

Where the alternative relief claimed by the pltf. was based on a different cause of action from the other relief & was refused & no appeal or cross-objection had been filed by the pltf. the pltf. cannot raise the point in the appeal filed by the deft. [Para 18]

Reuben J. — This appeal by the defts. is directed against a decree for pre-emption granted by the Addl. Subordinate Judge at Arrah.

[2] It arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of two annas share in milkiat property in mauza Kurasan, bearing tauzi No. 14290, in pursuance of a deed of contract executed by the deft. first party in favour of the pltf. It was alleged in the plaint that, despite this contract the deft. first party, on 12-6-1943, sold this property to the defts'. second party. The pltf., as an alternative to the prayar for specific performance, claimed pre-emption as being a co-sharer proprietor in respect of eight annas share in tauzi No. 14290. The learned Subordinate Judge found that there was a contract to sell as alleged, & that the defts'. second party purchased the property with knowledge of the contract to sell but he refused specific performance on the ground that the pltf. is a minor & the contract was unenforceable for want of mutuality. Only the defts. have appealed.

[3] Two points were urged on behalf of the applts. : (1) that pre-emption between Hindus in Bihar applies as a matter of custom, & the pltf. must fail in this case, because he has not pleaded the custom of pre-emption and (2) that the claim to pre-emption must fail on the ground that the demands (talabs) necessary to establish the right to pre-emption have not been properly performed.

[4] It is now well established that, as a matter of custom, the right of pre-emption in accordance with Hanafi law exists between Hindus in Bihar, & it is hardly necessary to enumerate reported decisions in which the existence of such a custom has been recognised. So well recognised, apparently, is this custom that the pltf. in this case did not think it necessary expressly to plead its existence. The claim to pre-empt, however, by necessary implication, pleaded the existence of such a custom, & the absence of a pleading of its non-existence in the written statement amounts to an admission of its existence. It is clear from the record that the parties proceeded on the basis that such a custom exists, & no issue on the point was raised. It is too late to raise the point in appeal. A sufficient reply is contained in the observation with which the Judicial Committee dismissed a similar objection in Jadu Lal v. Janki Koer, 39 I. A. 101: (39 Cal. 915 P. C.) :

"In the case of Fakir Rawat v. Emambaksh, Beng. L. R. Sup. Vol. 35 : (1863 W. R. 143 F. B.) an F. B. of the H. C. of Bengal gave judicial recognition to the existence of the right of pre-emption among the Hindus of Bihar . . . . .

In their Lordships' judgment the decision in Fakir Rawat's case, (Beng. L. R. Sup. Vol. 35: 1863 W. R. 143 F. B.) is conclusive on the point raised on behalf of the defts. Their abstention from taking the objection in a definite & distinct form at the earliest stage of the case was, it may fairly be presumed, due to the explicit enunciation of the law in the ruling referred to."

[5] This brings me to the second point. It is well recognised that the right of pre-emption is a very feeble one, & that it will be defeated by any failure to comply with the strict requirements of the Muhammadan law relating to the performance of the demands (talabs). There are two such demands, talab-i mowasibat which must follow immediately the receipt of information of the sale which gives rise to the right to pre-empt, & talab-i-ishtish which the pre-emptor is required to perform with as little delay as possible in the presence of witnesses, either on the premises in dispute or in the presence of the vendor or of the vendee. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence of the pltf's witnesses regarding the performance of the two demands, & no sufficient reason has been shown to us why we should differ from him as regards the reliability of these witnesses & the weight to be attached to the evidence given by them. It is contended, however, that the demands as performed according to the evidence are defective on several grounds: (a) that they were performed by Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh, who is neither the legal guardian nor the agent of the minor pltf. ; (b) that knowledge of the sale of the property by the deft. first party to the defts'. second party was received by Shyam Sunder Lal, an agent of the pltf., on 12-6-1943 at about noon, but the first demand was performed much later by Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh on getting information of the sale from Shyam Sunder Lal, and (c) that the performance of both the demands was defective because no specification was given of the property in respect of which the demands were being made; in fact, it is not even clear that Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh knew that property had been sold by the deft. first party to the defts'. second party.

[6] There is no substance in the first two grounds. The pltf. is the son of Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh's brother, who is an Advocate practising at Benares. The family is joint, & Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh, who is the elder brother is the managing member. It is admitted also that he looks after the separate property of the minor pltf. which includes the eight annas share in tauzi No. 14290 in village Kurasan. In fact Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh is the de facto guardian of the minor in respect of this property. Shyam Sundar Lal is merely subordinate servant. It was not for him to decide whether or not his master would exercise his right of pre-emption. All that he could do, & the evidence is that he did, was to inform as soon as he reasonably could, Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh, who was acting as the guardian of the minor. The demand (talab) may be made either by the pre-emptor himself or by his agent. In the circumstances of this case, there can be no doubt that Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh had the authority to make the demand on behalf of the minor, & according to the evidence, he made the demands as soon as he got information of the sale from Shyam Sunder Lal. The demands therefore, are not invalidated on either of the two grounds put forward.

[7] With regard to the third ground, it is necessary, first of all, to see what the text books say about the essentials necessary for the proper performance of the demands.

[8] I cite below the relevant passages from Book XXXVIII, Chap. II, of Hamilton's Hedaya :

"Claims to Shaffa are of three kinds. — The first of these is termed Talb Mawasibat, or immediate claim, where the Shafee prefers his claim the moment he is apprised of the sale being concluded; and this it is necessary that he should do, insomuch that if he makes any delay his right is thereby invalidated; . . . . .

It is not material in what words the claim is preferred; it being sufficient that they imply a claim. Thus if a person say 'I have claimed my Shaffa', or 'I shall claim my Shaffa, or 'I do claim my Shaffa,' all these are good; for it is the meaning, & not the style or mode of expression, which is here considered.

* * * * *

The second mode of claim to Shaffa is termed the Talb Takreer wa-Ish-had, or claim by affirmation & taking to witness; and this also is requisite; because evidence is wanted in order to establish proof before the Magistrates; and it is probable that the claimant cannot have witnesses to the Talb Mawasibat, as that is expressed immediately on intimation being received of the sale. It is therefore necessary afterwards to make the Talb Ish had wa Takreer, which is done by the Shafee taking some person to witness either against the seller, if the ground sold be still in his possession, or against the purchaser, or upon the spot regarding which the dispute has arisen; and upon the Shafee thus taking some person to witness, his right of Shaffa is fully established & confirmed.

* * * * *

The manner of claim by affirmation & taking to witness is, the claimant saying, 'Such a person has bought such a house, of which I am the Shafee; I have already claimed my privilege of Shaffa, & now again claim it: be therefore witness thereof. '(It is reported from Aboo Yoosaf that it is requisite that the name of the thing sold, & its particular boundaries, be specified because a claim is not valid unless the thing demanded be precisely known.)

* * * * *

The third mode of claim to Shaffa is termed Talb Khasoomat, or claim by litigation.—which is performed by the Shafee petitioning the Kazee to command the purchaser to surrender up the ground to him; the method of doing which will hereafter be particularly explained.

* * * * *

When the Shafee goes to the Kazee & claims his right, alleging that 'such a person has purchased a house, in which he has the right to Shaffa,' the Kazee must first question the purchaser (the deft. in the cause) concerning the property on which the Shafee grounds his right of Shaffa; and if he acknowledge it, this is sufficient ground for the Kazee passing a decree; but if he deny it, the Kazee must then order the Shafee to bring witnesses to prove his property; for the possession, which is apparent, may be owing to other causes than property; and a thing which is thus doubtful cannot be admitted as a proof to the detriment of another. Kadooree alleges that the Kazee, before he applies to the deft. ought to ask the pltf. regarding the situation of the house & its boundaries; because if a man sue for the property of a house, it is requisite that he describes its situation & boundaries; and therefore he must do the same in claiming his right of Shaffa."

I have placed in italics the two passages which, in my opinion, are directly relevant to the present controversy.

[9] In Baillie's Digest (1865), Part I, we find a similar observation as regards talab-i-mowasibat.

"There is some difference as to the words in which the demand should be expressed; but the correct opinion is that it is lawful in any words that intelligibly express the demand."

As regards talab-i-ishtish-had, the learned author says:

"To give validity to the talab-ishtish-had, it is required that it be made in the presence of the purchaser, or seller, or on the premises which are the subject of sale. And the person claiming the right of pre-emption should say, in the presence of one or other of these, "Such a one has purchased this mansion (specifying its boundaries), & I have demanded the pre-emption, & now do demand it; bear ye witness to this."

[10] To the same effect are the following passages from Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Edn. 4 :

"A person who intends to advance a claim based on the right of pre-emption in respect of property which has been sold to another must immediately on receiving information of the sale, express in explicit terms his intention to claim the property. The intention must be formulated in the shape of a demand. No express formula is necessary so long as the assertion of the right, or what is called a demand is expressed in unequivocal language; this is called talab-i-mowasibat or immediate demand.

* * * * *

For the performance of the ceremony of Talab-i-ishtish-had the pre-emptor must take some witnesses with him to the vendor, if the property sold be still in his possession, or to the vendee or to the property which is the subject-matter of the claim. And there, in the presence of the witnesses, he must say to the following effect: "such a person bought such a property (sufficiently indicating the same) of which I am the shafi; I have already claimed my right of shufa & now again claim it, be therefore witness thereof." (The italics are mine.)

From the above extracts, it is clear that not much importance is attached to the form in which the talab-i-mowasibat is expressed. The important thing is that it must be made immediately on receipt of information of the sale & its meaning must be clear. The essence of this demand is that it must be immediate. According to Baillie, mowasibat means "jumping up." If a person is to act on the spur of the moment, he cannot be expected to express himself in a set form.

[11] Conditions are different when we come to the talab-i-ishtish-had. This is a formal claim, provided for, as we are told by the Hedaya, because evidence is wanted to prove the making of the demand when the matter goes to Ct. & it is possible that there may be no witnesses present at the time the talab-i mowasibat is performed. It is provided that the talab-i-ishtish-had must be performed on the property, or to the vendor, or the vendee, as the case may be, & that it must be in the presence of witnesses. It is necessary also that the witnesses should be called on to bear witness to the performance of the talabs: Medni Prashad v. Suresh Chandra, 21 Pat. 799 : (A.I.R. (30) 1943 Pat. 96). Here, again, we do not find any particular set form, but the authorities I have cited above require that the property in respect of which the demand is being made should be specified. No such requirement is mentioned in respect of the talab-i-mowasibat. The reason for this difference appears to me to lie in the different circumstances & the different purposes intended to be served by them. The talab-i-mowasibat follows immediately the receipt of the information of the sale. This circumstance is by itself sufficient to show that the talab is performed in respect of the property covered by the sale. This talab is meant to give expression at once to the decision of the pre-emptor to pre-empt. The second demand comes at a later stage & is for the purpose of providing evidence that the demand has been made. The witnesses must be in a position to say what property the talab related to. Unless some specification of the property is made, they will not know what the demand is for. It has been objected on behalf of the resps. that it would be absurd to expect the pre-emptor to give in detail particulars of the property which he intends to pre-empt, it being quite possible that the property consists of a hundred different plots of land. I do not think that it is contemplated that in the talab-i-ishtish-had full details of the property should be given. This is indicated by the form of description suggested by the different authorities. See, for instance, the passages cited from Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law and Baillie's Digest. I think there would be a sufficient specification of the property, if the talab contains a description which makes the property identifiable; for instance, if the pre emptor, giving a general description of the property, mentions that it has been sold by such & such person to such other person & states that he claims it by right of pre-emption & has already made his first demand. Of course, it will depend upon the circumstances of each case whether the description is sufficient for this purpose. See, for instance, the decision of Sinha J. (Ramaswami J. agreeing) in Gajadhar Singh v. Radha Prasad Singh, First Appeal No. 116 of 1947, D/- 8-4-1949, where his Lordship observed :

"It would appear that it is essential to the performance of the ceremonies connected with pre-emption that the pre-emptor while performing the ceremony of talab-i-ishtish-had should specify the property in respect of which he is proclaiming his right of pre-emption. Simply his saying that he was demanding pre-emption of whatever properties have been purchased by the deft. will not be enough compliance with the requirements of the law."

The description was found insufficient by his Lordship in the peculiar circumstances of the case with which he was dealing, the right of pre-emption being claimed only in respect of a portion of the property sold. In his Lordship's opinion, the form of description deposed to by the witnesses to the talab-i-ishtish-had was a vague formula evolved by the pltf. & his witnesses to meet the difficulties arising out of the case.

[12] Let us now look at the evidence in the light of the above remarks. The share of the deft. first party in tauzi No. 14290 in village Kurasan is eight annas. The subject-matter of the contract for sale between the pltf. & the deft. first party was two annas out of this eight annas. The sale by the deft. first party in favour of the defts. second party is two annas for a consideration stated in the sale deed to be Rs. 5,500.

[13] Shyam Sunder Lal (P. W. 3) deposes that he learnt about the proposed sale in favour of the defts'. second party when the deft. first party was going to Bhabua to execute the sale deed. He, thereupon, went with the consideration money & asked the deft. first party to complete the sale in favour of his master in accordance with the contract for sale. At the same time, he informed the defts'. second party about the contract. This happened at Bhabua. The defts. nevertheless, persisted & after filing protest petns. in the offices of the Sub-Registrar & the Sub-Divisional Officer at Bhabua, the witness informed Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh, who immediately made his first demand. It is not clear from the deposition of this witness, or from the plaint or from the two petns. filed by him that day, whether he knew that the sale in favour of the defts'. second party related to a two anna share & not to the entire share of the deft. first party. As such, the sale did not affect the contract for sale between the deft. first party & the pltf. Apparently, however, the witness & Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh regarded it as so interfering. It is not impossible, therefore, that the witness & also Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh were under the impression that the sale in favour of the defts. second party related to the entire eight annas interest of the deft. first party. I am prepared, however, to take it that they knew that the sale related to two annas only. This is not inconsistent with their feeling that it affected the contract for sale, because, being local people & aware of the circumstances of the deft. first party, they may have known that the intention of the deft. first party was to sell only two annas share & not more, so that the sale in favour of the defts. second party necessarily meant that she would be unwilling to complete the sale in favour of the pltf.

[14] Ram Saroop Singh (P. W. 5) & Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh (P. W. 9) are the other witnesses regarding the first demand. From their deposition, it appears that it was made immediately information of the sale being given to Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh by Shyam Sunder Lal. In these circumstances, there can be no doubt as to the property in respect of which the demand was made, & there would seem to be no defect in the first demand.

[15] The second demand is said to have been made at the spot on the next day. [After giving the evidence of the witnesses relating to this demand his Lordship proceeded.]

[16] If we accept this evidence at its face value, it proves that Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh & Shyam Sunder Lal went to Kurasan in the morning. They proceeded direct to the spot, Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh made the demand on the bakasht land west of the pokhar & then the two of them returned to their chowni. Apparently, till they came to the chowni they did not talk to anybody apart from citing the witnesses Hira & Bechan on the spot. These two men were chance witnesses. In the course of the demand, no description was given of the property, the utmost that happened being that Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh, pointing to the land, stated that Ramdeo Singh, the pltf. had a right of pre-emption over the property, & he (Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh) was making the second demand on his behalf. As has been stated, the property sold was a two annas share in the milkiat property. Mere pointing at the bakasht land would not be sufficient to indicate to the witnesses that the demand was being made in respect of this share. In fact, it would give them (the witnesses) practically no information as to what the demand was about. Much stress has been laid on the statement with which Bechan Singh began his deposition, namely, that "Sonabasi (deft. first party) sold her share to Lallan & Mangal" (defts'. second party). It is sufficient, it is stated, that the witnesses should know what property the demand was for; it is not necessary that the property should be actually described. Even if we accept this proposition, I do not think that this statement of the witness means that he knew what property the demand related to. The statement on which reliance is placed was made by the witness in 1946, three years after the second demand. The second demand took place the day after the sale by the deft. first party in favour of the defts'. second party. There is nothing to show that on the day of the demand the witness knew about the sale in question & had reason to connect that sale with the demand made by Chaudhury Mahadeo Singh at the spot.

[17] On the above grounds, I am satisfied that the second demand was defective inasmuch as the property in respect of which it was being made was not identifiably specified. Therefore, the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot stand.

[18] On behalf of the pltf.-resp. it has been urged that even if the decree for pre-emption be set aside, the pltf. should be given a decree for specific performance. It is pointed out that the Subordinate Judge has found in his favour both as regards the existence of the contract for sale & as regards notice to the defts'. second party. It is urged that the well-known case of Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin, 39 I. A. 1 : (39 Cal. 232 P. C.) on which reliance was placed by the learned Subordinate Judge, is distinguishable, because, whereas that case related to a Mahomedan minor, we are concerned with a contract entered into by the karta of a joint family, to which the minor, a Hindu, belongs, that karta being also the guardian of the minor as regards his separate property. The alternative relief for a decree for specific performance asked for by the pltf. was based on a different cause of action from the relief for pre-emption. It was refused by the learned Subordinate Judge, & no appeal or cross-objection has been filed in respect thereto. As held in Anath Nath v. Dwarka Nath, 20 P. L. T. 359 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C 86), it is not open to the pltf. to raise the point now. On the merits, also, I do not think that the pltf. would be entitled to succeed (vide Rambilas v. Lokenath, 27 Pat. 143 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 405).)

[19] In the result, I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge & dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Anno. Specific Relief Act, S. 54, N. 11.

B. C. De & S. K. Mazumdar — for Applt. ; G. C. Mukharji & R. K. Bagchi—for Resps.

Manohar Lall J. — This is an appeal by the pltf. who is aggrieved by the decision of the learned Special Subordinate Judge of Chaibassa, dated 27-2-1946, by which he has dismissed the pltf's. suit which was instituted for a permanent injunction restraining the deft. 1 from manufacturing bricks from the earth of the land described in Sch. A & also for recovery of Rs. 61-8-0 as damages against the deft. for removing the earth in the form of bricks.

[2] The facts found by the Cts. below are that the pltf. is a landlord & he let out survey plot No. 132 in village Galudih to deft. 1 as a raiyat. The deft. 1 dug out the earth from the surface of this holding & instead of allowing it to remain there, he manufactured bricks not for his own purposes but for commercial purposes ; thereby he made profit out of which the pltf. claimed Rs. 42-8-0 being royalty at the rate of Rs. 20-8-0 for one lakh of the bricks sold.

[3] Upon these findings, it is clear to us that in accordance with the provisions of S. 21, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, as amended by Act XXV [25] of 1947, the deft. had no right whatsoever to manufacture the bricks which were not required for the domestic or agricultural purposes of the raiyat & his family.

[4] Mr. G. C. Mukharji on behalf of the resps. contends that as the landlord had made no arrangement in this village to receive the earth so removed, the tenant is not obliged to keep the earth on the holding & that he can even throw it away. Assuming that this argument is correct, in the present case it has been found that the tenant did not throw away the earth but he sold it in the form of bricks to strangers. This certainly he is not entitled to do: see Purnendu Narayan Singh v. Narendra Nath, 23 P. L. T. 662 : (A.I.R. (30) 1943 Pat. 31); nor is the tenant entitled to sell even the loose stones lying on the surface: see Kusum Kamini v. Jagdish Chandra, 20 Pat. 96: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 13).

[5] The pltf. therefore, in our opinion, is entitled to the value of the earth which has been used in the bricks, & the finding of the trial Ct. that the damage suffered by the pltf. is Rs. 42-8-0 was not challenged in the first appeal to the appellate Ct.

[6] Mr. B. C. De on behalf of the applt. contends that there should also be an injunction against the deft. restraining him from selling bricks which he manufactures on the land. His submission is that this is a continuing wrong, & the deft. should be restrained from indulging in this wrong continuously for all times. We do not agree with this contention because the deft. has committed no wrong in digging the earth because the finding is that he dug the land for the purposes of improvement. If the deft. at any time is found to be misusing the land in that case a proper case for injunction besides damages may arise. How can we restrain the tenant from digging the earth & then for disposing of that earth when the pltf. has not asked the deft. to deliver that earth to him or when he has not made any arrangement for delivery of that earth? In any case we are not satisfied that this Ct. should exercise the power of restraining the deft. from digging the earth on the land if he digs it for the purposes of improving the holding.

[7] The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside & the pltf's. suit decreed for recovery of Rs. 42-8-0 which will carry interest at 6 per cent from the date of the decree of the trial Ct. Each party will bear his own costs in all the Cts. in the special circumstances of this case.

Civil Revn. No. 102 of 1949, D/- 26-4-1949.

Court-Fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Suit for title in guise of partition suit—Stranger alienees impleaded—Court-fee.

In a suit for partition of two houses, by the pltfs. the plaint alleged that they had 12 annas share in the property & the deft. had 4 annas share, that the deft. executed a sale deed in respect of his four annas share in favour of strangers; & that therefore the pltfs. desired partition & separation of their 12 annas share. Some of the alienees were strangers to the family of the pltfs. & the deft. & were not cosharers or co-owners against whom partition could be claimed :

Held that it could not be said that any incidental finding of fact was necessary in order to give the main relief which the pltfs. claimed so far as the stranger-alienees were concerned. Either the pltfs. were claiming no adjudication against the stranger-alienees or they were claiming an adjudication to displace their title. As there could be no relief of partition against the strangers, the only relief claimed against them was the displacement of their title based on the transfers made in their favour. That would undoubtedly be an independent declaration of title not necessarily connected with the relief of partition. If no relief was claimed against the strangers, then they should not have been made parties to the litigation. Hence so far as the stranger-defts. were concerned, the suit was in substance, a suit for a declaration of title, in the guise of a partition suit. In such circumstances ad valorem court-fee was payable. [Para 7]

Anno. Court-fees Act, S. 7 (iv) (c) N. 3, Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi), N. 1.

Sarjoo Prasad & Krishna Prakash Sinha — for Petnrs; Govt. Pleader, Shambhu Prasad Singh, Thakur A. D. Sinha, Balram K. Sinha & Rameshwar Prasad Sinha — for Opposite Party.

Das J. — This appln. in revn. raises the question of court-fees payable on the plaint—namely, if court-fees are payable under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court-fees Act, as in a simple suit for partition, or ad valorem court-fees as in a suit for title, where a declaration of title with a consequential relief is asked for.

[2] The petnrs. before us were the pltfs. in the Ct. below. The facts giving rise to the appln. are the following. The petnrs. brought the suit, which was in form a suit for partition only, in respect of two houses situate in the town of Siwan. The petnrs. alleged that their share of the two houses was to the extent of 12 annas & the share of deft. 1, who was the karta of the joint family of defts. 1 to 8, was to the extent of 4 annas only. In para. 8 of the plaint the petnrs. stated that

"deft. 1, with an ulterior motive, executed a fictitious sale-deed in favour of deft. 8, his wife, without receipt of any consideration, & later got a colourable sale-deed in favour of deft. 9 & a colourable zarpeshgi deed in favour of deft. 10 & another colourable sale-deed in favour of deft. 11—all without any consideration—executed either by deft. 8 or by deft. 1 or by both."

It was further averred that the aforesaid sale deeds & zarpeshgi deed executed by defts. 1 & 8 in favour of defts. 9 to 11 were without consideration & of the nature of sham transactions. It may be observed here that defts. 9 to 11 were strangers to both families & were not co-sharers or co-owners against whom partition could be claimed. In para. 9 the petnrs. stated that they did not want to keep the two houses joint & requested the defts. to partition the two houses. The defts. did not agree thereupon, the petnrs. brought the suit, & the main relief which the petnrs. claimed was put in the following form :

"A decree for partition & separation of pltf's. three-fourth share in the properties described below & separate possession over the same be passed in favour of the pltfs."

[3] The question that arose for consideration by the learned Subordinate Judge, in whose Ct. the suit was instituted by the aforesaid plaint, was the true nature of the suit : that is, whether the suit was a pure & simple suit for partition of the two houses as between co-owners, or a suit for a declaration of title as against strangers in the guise of a suit for partition. The learned Subordinate Judge held, on a consideration of the plaint, that so far as the strangers were concerned, the suit was really a suit for title, namely, a suit for a declaration of title & possession. In that view of the matter he directed the petnrs. to pay ad valorem court-fees. It is against this order of the learned Subordinate Judge that the present appln. in revn. is directed.

[4] Mr. Sarjoo Prasad appearing for the petnrs. has contended before us that the suit was really a suit for partition, pure & simple; because if one co-owner made certain alienations, those alienations were not binding on the petnrs. & the petnrs. could get the only relief which they had asked for, namely, partition, without any adjudication as to whether the transfers in favour of the strangers made by one of the co-owners were genuine or not. In the alternative he has contended that in order to get the relief of partition, a finding as to the transfers in favour of the strangers might be incidentally necessary, but such a finding cannot be called a relief by way of a declaration in its true sense. Learned counsel has taken us through a large number of decisions. In the F. B. decision of this Ct. of Ramkhelawan Sahu v. Surendra Sahi, 16 Pat. 766 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 22 F. B.) what is really meant by a "declaration" in its true sense has been explained, & it is pointed out that a mere finding which may be necessary in order to give relief to a party is not necessary a declaration in its true sense. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has drawn pointed attention to the observations made at the bottom of p. 783, pp. 784 & 785 of the report, particularly the following observations occurring at p. 784 of the report:

"The distinction between the remedy sought & the finding of fact necessary to justify the granting of that remedy may be simply tested by considering whether the pltf obtaining an order for possession but having been refused a formal 'declaration' in the decree could come to the appellate Ct. with a complaint that he had not received the whole of the remedy for which he had asked. . . . In every suit for possession the pltf. cannot succeed unless he proves the facts necessary to establish his title, but the real remedy which he seeks is a decree for delivery of possession."

Reference has also been made to the D. B. decision in Ramautar v. Ram Gobind, 20 Pat. 780 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 60), where the following principles were laid down : (1) So far as a suit purporting to be for partition is actually in the nature of a title suit, ad valorem court-fees are payable, whether the suit is regarded as governed by S. 7 (iv) (c), 7 (iii) or 7 (v), Court-fees Act, 1870; (2) caution must be observed, however, so as not to import into the plaint anything which it does not really contain either actually or by necessary implication ; in construing a plaint the Court must take it as it is not as it ought to have been; a relief not asked for cannot be imported so as to charge court-fee thereon ; (3) a distinction must be drawn between cases where it is necessary for the pltf. to get a document declared void and cancelled before he can get relief, and cases where the pltf. can obtain his relief without any such declaration and cancellation, upon a mere finding that the document does not affect him ; that is to say, the Court must distinguish between voidable documents wholly void documents. and between declarations in the true sense and declarations so called, which are merely the findings of fact necessary to give the pltf. relief.

[5] Applying the aforesaid principles, the contention of Mr. Sarjoo Prasad is that the suit which the petnrs. had brought was, in substance, a suit for partition only, and in order to give the relief of partition, which was nothing more than a change in the mode of enjoyment of the two houses, it was not necessary for the petnrs. to obtain any declaration as to the transfers alleged to have been made by one of the co-owners. It is pointed out that the same principles have been reiterated in the latest F. B. decision of this Court in Mt. Rupia v. Bhatu Mahton, 22 Pat. 783 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 17 F. B.). Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has also drawn our attention to a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi Debi, 34 Cal. 329 : (34 I. A. 87 P. C.), which was a suit by a reversioner on the death of a Hindu widow to recover immovable property of her husband, of which she was in possession for a widow's estate as his heir and of which she had granted a lease for term extending beyond her own life. It was there pointed out that the allegation made by the widow was voidable at the election of the reversionary heir who might affirm it or treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court there being nothing to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to his right of action.

[6] The principles laid down in the aforesaid decisions are not disputed by Mr. Lalnarain Sinha, Govt. Pleader, appearing on behalf of Govt. He contends, however, that those principles do not apply in the present case. Mr. Lalnarain Sinha contends that the suit which the petnrs. had brought might have been a suit for partition, pure and simple, if the stranger-alienees had not been made parties, and if the petnrs. had not asked for an adjudication to displace the title based on the transfers made in their favour.

[7] So far as the stranger-alienees are concerned, it is clear that the petnrs. do not accept them as co-owners or co-sharers against whom the relief of partition can be claimed. It cannot, therefore, be said that any incidental finding of fact is necessary in order to give the main relief which the petnrs. claim, so far as the stranger-alienees are concerned. Either the petnrs. are claiming no adjudication against the stranger-alienees or they are claiming an adjudication to displace their title. As there can be no relief of partition against the strangers, the only relief claimed against them is the displacement of their title based on the transfers made in their favour. That would undoubtedly be an independent declaration of title not necessarily connected with the relief of partition. If no relief is claimed against the strangers, then they should not have been made parties to the litigation. It seems to me that so far as the stranger-defts. are concerned, the suit is, in substance, a suit for a declaration of title, & the learned Subordinate Judge rightly held that the suit was a suit for title in the guise of a partition suit. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has placed great reliance on the F. B. decision of the Madras High Court in Ramaswami v. Rangachariar, I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 259 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 113 F. B.). That was a case in which the pltf. a Hindu minor, sued through his mother as next friend for partition of the properties of the joint family consisting of himself, his father and his three brothers and for possession of his one-fifth share therein ; besides his father and his three brothers, the pltf. joined as defts. several other persons (strangers to the family) either as alienees of family properties or as creditors of the family. The pltf., stated that his father's transactions were not binding on the family, but he did not in terms ask for the setting aside of the alienations of family properties, or for declarations that his father's other transactions were unenforceable against the estate. His prayers were for : (i) an account of the movable and immovable joint family properties, (ii) partition by metes and bounds of his one-fifth share, (iii) appointment of a receiver to manage the properties and collect the rents and income till the disposal of the suit, (iv) costs of the suit, and (v) such further and necessary reliefs as in the circumstances might be considered necessary and proper. It was held by the F. B. that in respect of the general relief for partition the provision which applied was Art. 17-B of Sch. II, Court-fees Act, as amended in Madras (corresponding to Art. 17 (vi), Court-fees Act as applied in Bihar). In respect of the alienations, it was held that the suit was one for possession and S. 7 (v), Court-fees Act applied, inasmuch as possession had passed to the alienees. In respect of certain decrees passed against the pltf. in suits in which he had been impleaded as a party, it was held that the fee prescribed by S. 7 (iv-A), Court-fees Act as amended in Madras was payable. In regard to the other transactions of the father impugned by the pltf., it was held by the majority of Judges, Abdur Rahman J. dissenting, that the pltf. could not be required to pay a separate court-fee as regards any of them, even though he had impleaded the several creditors or alienees, and even if the plaint had contained prayers for declarations or cancellations in respect of the said transactions. It was observed that the Court was bound as between the members of the family to decide which were the debts binding on the family before directing a division, whether the several persons interested in supporting the transactions were before the Court or not. It was observed that the fact that the pltf. impleaded them would not alter the position. Relying on the aforesaid decision, Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has contended that the petnrs. having alleged in the plaint that the co-owners were in possession in spite of the alienations, there could be no question of paying court-fees for setting aside the alienations because it was not necessary for the petnrs. to ask for, nor did they actually ask for, setting aside those alienations. It is further argued that the mere fact that the stranger alienees have been made parties would not alter the position, as was held in the case which their Lordships had before them in Ramaswami's case, (I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 259 : A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 113 F. B.). The distinction, however, between the case which their Lordships had before them and the case before us is this in the case which their Lordships had before them it was observed that whether the strangers were before the Court or not, the Court was bound as between the members of the family to decide which were the debts binding on the family before directing a division. Therefore, it was pointed out that under the provisions of O. 1, R. 10 (2), Civil P. C., the strangers could be added to the suit in order to enable the Court to adjudicate effectually and completely upon and settle all questions involved in the suit. In the case before us if the petnrs. had brought a simple suit for partition, it would have been unnecessary to determine the validity or otherwise of the transfers alleged to have been made by one of the co-owners, and the strangers could not have been added as parties under O. 1, R. 10 (2), Civil P. C. The petnrs., however, have not only added those strangers as parties, but have really claimed in the plaint that an adjudication should be made to the effect that the transfers made in favour of the strangers were transfers without consideration and of a sham character. I do not think that the principle laid down in the decision of Ramaswami's case, (I. L .R. (1940) Mad. 259 : A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 113 F. B.) will apply to the present case. The suit which the petnrs. had brought was really of a composite nature : so far as the co-owners were concerned, it was a suit for partition ; but so far as the strangers were concerned, the suit was really a suit for title in which it was claimed that the transfers made in favour of the strangers by some of the co-owners were without consideration, and, therefore, of a sham nature. That being the position, I do not think the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in his view that the suit was really a suit for title in the guise of a partition suit in respect of the two houses in question. The decisions on which Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has relied, in which a distinction was drawn between a finding of fact necessary to give relief to a party and a declaration in its true and proper sense, do not seem to me to be applicable to this case where as against strangers to the family, the only relief that can be and is claimed, is an adjudication displacing their title to the houses. At the risk of repetition, I must again observe that as against the strangers no partition could be claimed. What is termed a "finding of fact" is really the main relief of title claimed against the strangers. In that view of the matter, I am of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in his view that the suit was a suit for which ad valorem court-fees had to be paid.

[8] There is a small inaccuracy in the calculation made by the stamp reporter to which, I think, the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge must be drawn. The stamp reporter had made a calculation on the basis that the petnrs. claimed two-thirds interest in the two houses. As a matter of fact, the petnrs. were claiming three-fourths interest in the two houses.

[9] I must also make it clear that it is open to the petnrs. to amend the pleadings and strike out such parties as may be considered unnecessary in a suit for partition, pure and simple. If the petnrs. amend their pleadings and strike out unnecessary parties, the learned Subordinate Judge will have to consider the question of court-fees afresh.

[10] For the reasons given above, I do not think there are any grounds for interference, and the application must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee, two gold mohurs.

(a) Houses & Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease Rent & Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 18—Jurisdiction of Civil Ct.—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9.

In spite of the bar under S. 18, if the House Controller or the Comr. acts without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction as given to them under the Act, the civil Ct. has jurisdiction to determine whether or not an order passed by the House Controller or the Comr. is without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Act. If a Ct. or a tribunal with limited jurisdiction is given authority under law to decide a particular matter, but the decision of that particular matter depends upon certain preliminary findings of fact, that tribunal must have jurisdiction to decide those preliminary points of fact, & the civil Ct. will have no jurisdiction to go into the correctness or otherwise of the findings of the tribunal in regard to those preliminary questions of fact. When an appln. for eviction is made under the Act, the House Controller or the Comr., as the case might be, has jurisdiction to find out whether the parties stand in the relation of landlord & tenant : A. K. C. Sanyal; Gaurishankar Pd. & Baidyanath Pd. II—for Applt.; R. S. Chaterji & A. N. Chatterji — for Resp.

C. P. Sinha J.—This is a deft's. appeal which arises out of a suit filed by the pltf. for a declaration that the order of eviction by the Comr. of the Patna Division, dated 29-8-1947, passed under the Bihar Buildings Control Act, 1947, is ultra vires, null & void, without jurisdiction & not binding on the pltf.; the pltf has also prayed for the issue of a permanent injunction restraining the deft. from ousting the pltf. from any portion of holding No. 23, circle No. 16 ward No. 8, situate in mahalla Sabzibagh of Bankipur.

[2] The first Ct. dismissed the suit, but it has been decreed on appeal by Mr. K. K. Dutta, Addl. Subordinate Judge, 2nd Ct. Patna, by his judgment dated 23-2-1948.

[3] The pltf.'s case is that the entire holding No. 23 as well as holding No. 22, which is adjacent north of it, belonged to Messrs. T. C. Palit & S. C. Palit, that out of these two holdings, holding No. 22 was the tenancy of the deft. applt. & the northern portion of holding No. 23 was in the tenancy of one Lachhmi Mistry & the southern portion of holding No. 23, which is the portion in dispute, has been in the tenancy of the pltf.'s family since several generations & the pltf. holds a shop & also lives in it with his family. It is alleged by the pltf. that the deft. took a permanent settlement of holding No. 22 as well as the northern portion of holding No. 23 from the proprietors by a deed dated 6-8-1946, & thereafter the deft. applied to the House Controller, Patna for evicting the pltf. on the allegation that he had purchased both the holdings Nos. 22 & 23. The House Controller had rejected the appln. of the deft. but on appeal, the Comr. has ordered the eviction of the pltf. The pltf. alleges that he is a permanent tenant of the holding & that there is no relationship of landlord & tenant between the deft. & the pltf. & therefore, according to him, the Bihar Buildings Control Act, 1947, had no application & consequently, the order of the Comr. under that Act is without jurisdiction.

[4] The deft. denied that the pltf. had a permanent tenancy in the disputed katra & also alleged that by the aforesaid deed the deft. has acquired interest in the entire holding No. 23 including the katra in the possession of the pltf. except to the extent of 3 feet out of that katra which is in the pltf.'s occupation. The deft. pleaded further that the order passed by the Comr. was a valid order within his jurisdiction &, as such, the suit was barred under the provisions of the Act.

[5] The learned lower appellate Ct. has come to the following findings : that the civil Ct. in spite of the provisions contained in S. 18, cl. (3), Bihar Buildings Control Act, has the jurisdiction to go into the question whether the Comr.'s order has been passed against the provisions of this Act or in violation of the fundamental principles of judicial procedure & the civil Ct. has jurisdiction to consider whether the order of the Comr. under that Act is ultra vires upon any of those grounds. It has been found further that the pltf. has failed to prove that he had a permanent tenancy in the disputed katra. The Ct. below has also found that the disputed katra comprises the southern portion of municipal holding No. 23. The deft. had admitted that the proprietors, namely, the Palit brothers, had made a permanent settlement in favour of the deft. by virtue of the deed, Ex. A, dated 6-8-46. The Ct below, upon a comparison of the boundaries & upon the construction of the deed (Ex. A) has found that the permanent settlement with the deft. includes the whole of the disputed katra excepting an area of 5½ feet towards the south He has found further that there is no relationship of landlord & tenant between the deft. & the pltf. with respect to that part of the disputed katra, namely, the southern portion up to a length of 5½ feet, & upon that finding, he has held that the order of the Comr. evicting the pltf. is evidently without jurisdiction on that ground alone so far at least as that portion of the katra is concerned. According to the Ct below, the entire katra constitutes only one room & it is not possible to evict the pltf. from any particular portion of it without evicting him from the whole, & in that view of the matter, he has decreed the suit, holding that, as the deft had interest with respect to only a part of the katra & because the Palit brothers, to whom the rest of the katra belonged, did not join in the appln. for eviction, the appln. was not on behalf of the landlords of the entire katra &, therefore, there was no valid appln. under S. 11, cl. (3) of the Act &, consequently, the Comr. had no jurisdiction to pass any order of eviction on such an appln.

[6] It has been contended on behalf of the applt. that the civil Ct. has no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Comr. under the Bihar Buildings Control Act, 1947, on the findings arrived at by the Ct below. It is also contended that the katra is only a sort of a verandah which is enclosed by shutters & that there is no difficulty in evicting the pltf. from that portion of the katra of which the deft. had taken settlement & further that the deft. is the sole landlord so far as that portion of the katra is concerned & it is not a case of joint landlords.

[7] The Bihar Buildings Control Act, 1947, is a special Act which the Legislature has enacted to meet the emergency created by the scarcity of house accommodation & to prevent, as far as possible, the spiral rise in the rent of houses. The statute is self-contained & has created a special tribunal for deciding the rights & liabilities of the parties under that Act & has also provided for appeal against orders passed by the House Controller. This Act has barred the jurisdiction of the Civil Cts. under S. 18 of the Act. But it must be conceded, in spite of such a bar, that, if the House Controller or the Comr. acts without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction as given to them under the Act, the civil Ct. has jurisdiction to determine whether or not an order passed by the House Controller or the Comr. is without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Act. Where the liability is statutory, the party must adopt the remedy given to him by the statute. In the light of these observations, I would now address myself to the consideration of the question whether the Comr. in this case has acted without jurisdiction or in excess of the jurisdiction as given to him under the Act.

[8] Before I consider that question I would like to clear the ground of fact. Upon the finding of the Ct. below, the deft. has acquired a permanent right under his deed (Ex. A) to the extent of 64½ feet in holding No. 23 & that the remaining area to the extent of 5½ feet in that holding towards the south does not belong to him. The Palit brothers, the proprietors, therefore, have no interest in the said holding No. 23 except to the extent of 5½ feet. The katra as appears from its very nature, can be held by different persons in specified parts without disturbing the possession of the respective holders of the other parts.

[9] When an appln. for eviction is made under the Act, the House Controller or the Comr., as the case might be, has, to find out whether the parties stand in the relation of landlord & tenant. That would be the first question to decide before any action is taken under that Act. In the present case, it was not disputed before the House Controller or the Comr. that the pltf. was not the tenant of the deft. & in that view, the House Controller & the Comr. had had no necessity of coming to an express finding on that point. The parties before the House Controller proceeded on the footing that they answered the definition of "tenant" & "landlord" as given in that Act & that there existed a relationship of landlord & tenant between them. But supposing this question had been raised before them, was it open to those authorities to come to a finding on that point to enable them to apply the provisions of the Bihar Buildings Control Act? If the answer is in the affirmative, it must be held that the House Control authorities had jurisdiction to decide that question of fact. If that be so, can it be said that the tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction as given under the Act or that it had no jurisdiction to decide that matter. In my view, if a Ct. or a tribunal with limited jurisdiction is given authority under law to decide a particular matter, but the decision of that particular matter depends upon certain preliminary findings of fact, that tribunal must have jurisdiction to decide those preliminary points of fact & the civil Ct. will have no jurisdiction to go into the correctness or otherwise of the findings of the tribunal in regard to those preliminary questions of fact.

[10] I would now consider the cases which have been cited at the Bar on the question of the jurisdiction of civil Cts. to review or revise the decision of a tribunal of limited jurisdiction. In the case of Ishan Chandra v. Moomraj Khan,

A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1101 : (97 I. C. 770) the following observations of Ghose J., are very much apposite to the question before this Ct.

"There cannot be any question that a decree passed without jurisdiction is a nullity. But the expression 'jurisdiction' has not unoften been used with ambiguity, & the distinction between a judgment where jurisdiction is assumed by the Ct. where there is absolute want of it & where the Ct. in the exercise of its jurisdiction acted wrongly in disregard of the law has not always been borne in mind. This want of discrimination in the use of the term has resulted in a good deal of confusion. The distinction between a defect of jurisdiction & an error or irregularity in procedure is pointed out in Hawes on the Jurisdiction of Courts thus : 'In the former case, the whole proceeding is corum non judice & void, in the latter the proceeding cannot be impugned in a collateral action, even though it be erroneous upon its face, & even though it relates to a fact which in a former stage of the proceeding might have been essential to confer jurisdiction. It is examinable only on a direct proceeding as by an appeal or by a proceeding in the nature of an appeal, & where there is no remedy of that kind, it concludes for ever."

The aforesaid observations of Ghose, J. & the question (quotation?) from Hawes on the Jurisdiction of Courts, in my opinion, must conclude the matter. This case has been followed. in R. Krishnamurthy v. S. Parthasarathy, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Mad. 780 : (1949-1 M. L. J. 412). In this case a similar question had arisen for decision namely whether the Civil Ct. can entertain a suit to set aside an order passed under the Madras Buildings (Lease & Rent Control) Act (XV [15] of 1946). The question raised in that case was that under the Madras Act the decision of the tribunal was without jurisdiction because notice to quit had not been given before action was taken under that Act for the eviction of the tenant & it was contended that, in the absence of a notice to quit, the Rent Controller under the Madras Act had no jurisdiction to deal with the appln. for eviction of the tenant, & upon a review of several cases of different H. Ct. it was held in that case that "if the question which is alleged to create the want of jurisdiction is one which the Ct. is bound to decide, the matter is not one relating to jurisdiction; if there is any error in the decision, it can only be remedied by an appeal or other proceeding known to law."

In Mangtu Lal v. Secretary of State, 18 Pat. 854 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 161) a similar view was taken though the facts were different. The question in that case was as to whether a civil Ct. was entitled to entertain a suit to set aside the decision of the Revenue Ct. under S. 45, Bengal Cess Act (IX [9] of 1880) to the effect that cess was recoverable, & his Lordship Fazl Ali J. with whom Harries C. J. agreed, made the following observations :

"The question whether cess was recoverable in this case under S. 45 of the Act was one to be decided by the Revenue Ct. which issued the certificate & if that Ct. has decided, rightly or wrongly, that the cess was recoverable and the claim made for the recovery was not barred by limitation, a suit cannot be entertained in a civil Ct. to set aside that decision. A Civil Ct. can entertain a suit only if the order of the Revenue Ct. is without jurisdiction & not because the decision pronounced by the Ct. is not correct."

Mr. Chatterji, the learned counsel on behalf of the resp. had himself cited the case in Krishnamurthy v. S. Parthasarathy, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Mad. 780 : (1949-1 M. L. J. 412), on another point which I will consider later, but that case is against him on the question of jurisdiction, as I have already indicated. He also cited the case of Secretary of State v. Mask & Co., A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 105 : (I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 599) & relied upon a passage at p. 110 which reads as follows :

"It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Civil Cts. is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the Civil Cts. have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

In my judgment, this case does not differ in principle from the other cases cited above in this connection In the present Act with which we are concerned here the jurisdiction of the civil Ct. is excluded in the following terms which are to be found in S. 18 (3) of the Act :

"The decision of the Comr. & subject only to such decision, an order of the Controller shall be final, & shall not be liable to be questioned in any Ct. of law whether in a suit or other proceeding by way of appeal or revn."

I would, therefore, hold that the civil Ct. had no jurisdiction to override the decision of the Comr. under the Bihar Act of 1947. But the decision of the Comr. can be final only to the extent of the deft's portion of holding No. 23. On the finding of the Ct. below, the deft. had no interest in the 5½ feet of the holding to the south of it & therefore, it was beyond the subject-matter of the decision of the Comr. & as I have said above, this 5½ feet of holding No. 23 is severable from the rest & there is no difficulty in giving relief to the pltf. to the extent of that portion.

[10a] Mr. Chatterji on behalf of the resp. has contended that the jurisdiction of the House Controller & the Comr, was ousted from another point of veiw, namely, that the Palit brothers & the deft. being the joint lessors, no order of eviction could have been passed in law upon the appln. of only one of the joint lessors, namely, the deft. & has relied upon a number of authorities namely Baraboni Coal Concern Ltd. v. Gokulananda, 61 Cal. 313 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 P. C. 58) Satyesh Chandra v. Jillar Rahman, 27 C. L. J. 438 : (A.I,R. (6) 1919 Cal. 997), Jagdishwar Dayal Singh v. Dwarka Singh, 12 Pat. 626 : (A. I, R. (20) 1933 P. C. 122) and Gopal Ram v. Dhakeshwar Pershad, 35 Cal. 807 : (7 C. L. J. 483) & the definition of 'landlord' and 'tenant' as given in the Act. There are two answers to this contention. One is that the Palit brothers & the deft, were not the joint lessors inasmuch as by the settlement as embodied in Ex. A the Palit brothers had made a permanent settlement of holding No. 22, & the major part of holding No. 23 with the deft. & therefore, the deft. was the sole landlord of the pltf. so far as that portion was concerned. Therefore in terms those authorities have no application. The other answer is that if as I have held above the House Controller & the Comr. had jurisdiction to decide the question of eviction under the Act, their decision, either on law or on fact right or wrong was declared to be final under that Act & even if the decision was opposed to law, the Civil Ct. can have no jurisdiction to go into that decision in a collateral proceeding. If the party feels aggrieved he must find his remedy within the four corners of that Act, & if no second appeal was provided under that Act, he can have no other remedy which is barred under S. 18 (3) of the Act.

[11] Mr. Chatterji has also faintly argued that the provisions of S. 111, T. P. Act, have not been abrogated by the Bihar Buildings Control Act. He contends that the tenancy of the deft. has not been determined in this case in accordance with the provisions of the T. P. Act. The short answer to this contention is that S. 11, Bihar Buildings Control Act, says in S. 11 (1) that "Notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary & subject to the provisions of S. 12 where a tenant is in possession of a building he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom whether in execution of a decree or otherwise except . . . ."

upon certain specified conditions mentioned in that section. This Act is a self-contained Act. It has provided the conditions of ejectment of a tenant. It has made provision for deposit of rent & for obtaining receipt by the tenant on payment of rent, provided the forum & has also provided for appeal from the order of the House Controller. Mr. Chatterji has relied upon the case of Parthasarathy v. Krishnamoorthy, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Mad. 387 : (1948-2 M. L. J. 391) where the question was whether a notice to quit was necessary to give jurisdiction to the Rent Controller under the Madras Buildings Act to order eviction under S. 7 of that Act. Subba Rao J. held that the Rent Controller had no jurisdiction to order eviction under that section where there had been no previous or antecedent determination of the tenancy in accordance with the provisions of the T. P. Act. This decision was set aside in the Letters Patent appeal against that judgment & it was held that S. 111 (h), T. P. Act, had no place in the scheme of the procedure laid down in S. 7 & that an appln. for eviction can be made to the Rent Controller before the tenancy has been determined by notice to quit. The relevant extract of S. 7 of the Madras Act (The Madras Buildings (Lease & Rent Control) Act XV [15] of 1946 reads as follows:

"A tenant in possession of a building shall not be evicted therefrom . . . . before . . . . the termination of the tenancy except in accordance with the provisions of this section."

The Bihar Act (S. 11) is couched in somewhat similar terms. It has laid down the condition or conditions on which a tenant could be evicted from a building & I do not see any reason to differ from the decision of the Madras Ct. on this point & I hold that S. 111, T. P. Act, has no application to the proceeding for eviction under the Bihar Buildings Control Act. Mr. Chatterji had also a cited case reported in Balmukund v. Harinarain, 27 Pat. 273 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 31) but, in my judgment, it has got no relevancy so far as the present case is concerned. That was a case which has interpreted the word "Occupation" occurring in sub-s. (3) of S. 11, Bihar Buildings Control Act. No other points were raised before this Ct. by any of the parties.

[12] I would accordingly hold that the order of the Comr. so far as the deft's. portion of the holding No. 23 is concerned was a final order & that the Civil Ct. had no jurisdiction to go into that matter. The result is that the judgment of the Ct. below is set aside & the suit is dismissed in respect of the deft's. portion in holding No. 23 namely the whole of holding no. 23 excepting an area of $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet in length towards the southern portion of holding No. 23. The deft. will be entitled to his costs in proportion to his success throughout, that is, three-fourths of the costs.

[13] B. P. Sinha J.— I agree.

A. F. A. D. No. 594 of 1946, D/- 17-1-1951.

Sales Tax—Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (1859), S. 37 — Annulment of interest in portion of touzi — S. A. No. 829 of 1940, OVERRULED.

Section 37 was intended to protect the interest of the auction purchaser & not the interest of an encumbrancer or a tenure holder.

Where under the Estates Partition Act (V [5] of 1897) the original touzi is partitioned & different touzies are carved out & one of the newly formed touzies falls in arrears of revenue resulting in sale & purchase by the pltf. the pltf. is entitled to claim annulment of that mokarrari or mtge. interest which is confined within such newly carved touzi & it is not necessary for him to implead in the suit the proprietors or tenure-holders of the remaining touzies. It is, however, incumbent upon the pltf. to seek annulment of the entire mokarrari & mtge. interest within the newly formed touzi. He cannot claim annulment in respect of the mokarrari & mtge. interest extending over a portion of such touzi only. S. A. No. 829 of 1940, OVERRULED; A.I.R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 (F.B.) and 5 C. L. J. 264, Rel. on. [Paras 10, 11, 12]

Lalnarain Sinha & Lakshmi Saran Sinha — for Applts.; Mahabir Prasad, M. M. Prasad, R. N. Prasad, A. C. Mitra & Balram Kumar Sinha — for Resps.

Rai J. — This is an appeal by defts. 1 & 5 against the judgment & the decree passed by the third Addl. Subordinate Judge of Gaya reversing those of the Munsif of Jehanabad.

[2] The pltfs. filed the suit for a declaration that the Mokarrari & usufructuary mtge. interest relating to the said Mokarrari interest or any other encumbrance as alleged by the defts. against them who were the purchasers at a revenue sale be annulled. They further prayed for recovery of sir possession over eight annas share of tauzi No. 4060 by annulling & avoiding all encumbrances of all sorts over the same. They further claimed past & future mesne profits from the date of the suit till the recovery of possession as also the costs of the suit.

[3] The case of the pltfs. as set out in the plaint was that village Sarthua Ratanpore alias Birpore original tauzi No. 4060 was partitioned under the Estate Partition Act in the year 1919 by which ten separate tauzies were carved out of the parent tauzi. One of the newly carved out tauzies retained the original tauzi No. 4060. The newly formed tauzi No. 4060 fell in arrears of revenue which resulted in its sale and purchase by the pltfs. by an auction sale held in June, 1937. The purchase was made in the name of pltf. 1 as the Karta of the joint family of the pltfs. The revenue sale was confirmed on 18-8-1937. The auction purchaser after obtaining the sale certificate got delivery of possession on 23-12-1937. The case of the pltfs. further was that when they wanted to take sir possession of the tauzi they were resisted by the defts. from realizing rent from the raiyats to the extent of eight annas share on the ground that the latter were mokarraridars in respect of the said eight annas share since long before the date of the revenue sale. The defts. claimed their interest in the property as permanent mokarraridars as well as usufructuary mtgees. of the interest of some of the Mokarraridars. The pltfs. further alleged that by virtue of the revenue sale they acquired interest in the entire tauzi No. 4060 free from all encumbrances. They impleaded in the action persons interested in the said eight annas Mokarrari interest & their mtgees.

[4] Three sets of written statement were filed in the suit, one by deft. 1, another by deft. 6 & the third by deft. 7. In her written statement deft. 1 pleaded inter alia that the suit was bad for misjoinder & non-joinder of parties. According to her, unless all the proprietors of the old parent tauzi No. 4060 or their representatives in interest & the sixteen annas mokarraridars be impleaded in the action, the same was liable to fail. She further contended that defts. 2 to 4 & deft. 7 had no interest in the suit property & as such they should not have been impleaded as party defts. in the action. She further claimed that she had exclusively inherited six annas of the Mokarrari interest which belonged to her maternal grand mother. She further pleaded that the revenue sale was without jurisdiction. Another plea taken by her was that the Mokarrari interest as created in the original tauzi No. 4060 was spread over the entire ten tauzies formed by the collectorate partition & therefore, the pltfs. were not entitled to bring the present action for annulment of a portion of the Mokarrari interest. She, on these & other allegations, claimed that the suit was fit to be dismissed.

[5] Defendant 6 disclaimed all interest in the properties in dispute. According to him, deft. 7 in fact was the owner of two annas Mokarrari interest out of eight annas share in dispute.

[6] Defendant 7 on her part resisted the suit of the pltf. on all the grounds taken by deft. 1. She further contended that she was the owner of the two annas Mokarrari interest & that deft. 6 had nothing to do with it.

[7] The trial Ct. came to the conclusion that the Mokarrari interest had in fact been created long before the collectorate partition of original tauzi No. 4060 as was the case of the contesting defts. It further held that the present suit as framed was not maintainable as the pltfs. were not entitled to claim avoidance of a portion of the old Mokarrari interest. On these & other findings the trial Ct. dismissed the suit with costs.

[8] On appeal the lower appellate Ct. accepted the case of the defts. regarding the existence of the Mokarrari interest. It also accepted the case of the defts. that the Mokarrari interest as originally created had not been split up by the collectorate partition. On the question of maintainability of the suit, however, it came to a different conclusion than that arrived at by the trial Ct. Relying upon the F. B. decision of the Calcutta H. C. in the case of Khamankari Dasi v. Harsha Mukhi Dasi, 47 C. W. N. 582 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 F. B.) it held that the pltfs. were entitled to annul the Mokarrari interest that fell within the new tauzi No. 4060 & it was not necessary for them to implead in the action the proprietors of other tauzis; nor was it necessary for them to implead the mokarraridars who were interested in the Mokarrari interest of the tauzis other than the one in suit. On these findings, the suit of the pltfs. was decreed by the lower appellate Ct. with costs. Hence, the above mentioned second appeal.

[9] It may be mentioned at this stage that during the pendency of the second appeal, Sm. Radha Peary Kuer one of the original applts. died & in her place her minor son Dhurup Narain Singh has been substituted.

[10] Mr. Lalnarain Sinha learned counsel for the applts. has contended before us that S. 37, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859 (Act XI [11] of 1859) as quoted below does not authorise the pltfs. to claim annulment of a portion of the Mokarrari interest :

"The purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently-settled districts of Bengal, Bihar & Orissa, sold under this Act for the recovery of arrears due on account of the same shall acquire the estate free from all encumbrance which may have been imposed upon it after the time of settlement; & shall be entitled to avoid & annul all under-tenures & forthwith to eject all under-tenants, with the following exceptions :

First : Istimrari or mukarrari tenures which have been held at a fixed rent from the time of the permanent settlement.

Secondly : Tenures existing at the time of settlement which have not been held at a fixed rent :

Provided always that the rents of such tenures shall be liable to enhancement under any law for the time being in force for the enhaneement of the rent of such tenures.

Thirdly—Talukdari & other similar tenures created since the time of settlement & held immediately of the proprietors of estate & farms for terms of years so held, when such tenures & farms have been duly registered under the provisions of this Act.

Fourthly – Lease of lands whereon dwelling houses, manufactories, or other permanent buildings have been erected or whereon gardens, plantations, tanks, wells, canals, places of worship or burning or burying grounds have been made or wherein mines have been sunk.

And such a purchaser as is aforesaid shall be entitled to proceed in the manner prescribed by any law for the time being in force for the enhancement of the rent of any land coming within the fourth class of exceptions above made, if he can prove the same to have been held at what was originally an unfair rent, & if the same shall not have been held at a fixed rent, equal to the rent of good arable land for a term exceeding twelve years, but not otherwise:

Provided always that nothing in this section contained shall be construed to entitle any such purchaser as aforesaid to eject any raiyat, having a right of occupancy at a fixed rent or at a rent assessable according to fixed rules under the laws in force, or to enhance the rent of any such raiyat otherwise than in the manner prescribed by such laws, or otherwise than the former proprietor, irrespectively of all engagements made since the time of settlement, may have been entitled to do."

He has further contended that on the findings, of the Cts. below an impossible position will be created if the pltf.'s suit were to be decreed, because it will not be possible to split up the Mokarrari rent of the remaining unannulled share. He has further contended that we should prefer to follow the decision of a single Judge of this Ct. in an unreported case, namely, Mahbub Ali v. Radha Peary Kuer, S. A. No. 829 of 1940, D/- 25-11-1941, where the learned Judge had followed the decisions of the Calcutta H. C. reported in Sooharam Barma v. Doorga Charan, 5 C. L. J. 264 and Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory Co. Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34. He has contended that the F. B. decision of Khamankari v. Harsha Mukhi, 47 C. W. N. 582: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 F. B.) had not been correctly decided in so far as it overruled the decision reported in Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory Co. Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34. I am afraid I am not in agreement with the learned counsel for the applts. The learned Judges who decided the case of Khamankari, (47 C. W. N. 582: A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 F.B.) (Supra) had correctly held that S. 37 of Act XI [11] of 1859 was intended to protect the interest of the auction-purchaser & not the interest of an encumbrancer or a tenure-holder. I respectfully agree with the following observation made during the course of their judgment:

"It is no doubt true that when we speak of a tenure, we usually mean the tenure in its integrity; but where a tenure extends over more than one estate, that part of it which is under one of the estates may without undue straining of language, be called an under-tenure in that estate, if the context so requires. To insist that an under-tenure to be voidable under S. 37, must be wholly & exclusively within the defaulting estate would be parity of reasoning require that an encumbrance, if it is not to survive the revenue sale, must be wholly & exclusively upon the estate so that a mortgage extending over more than one estate would remain intact, even as to the portion within the estate. We cannot hold that such was the intention of the Legislature."

[11] In my view, the F. B. of the Calcutta H. C. has correctly declared that the case of Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory Co. Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34 had not been correctly decided. In that view of the matter, the principle of law as enunciated in the case of Mahbub Ali v. Radha Peary Kuer, S. A. No. 829 of 1940 must also be overruled. Thus, the pltfs. are entitled to claim annulment of that Mokarrari or mtge. interest which is confined within the newly carved out tauzi No. 4060 & it is not necessary for them to implead in the present suit the proprietors or tenure-holders of the remaining nine tauzis which were carved out by the Collectorate partition out of the original tauzi No. 4060.

[12] But there is a fatal defect in the frame of the present suit. As was held in the case of Khamankari, (47 C. W. N. 582: A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 F. B.) (Supra), it was incumbent upon the pltfs to seek annulment of the entire Mokarrari interest within the newly carved out tauzi No. 4060. They have on the contrary, claimed annulment in respect of the Mokarrari and mtge. interest extending over eight annas share of tauzi No. 4060 only. From para. 10 of the plaint it is clear that the tenure-holders interested in the remaining eight annas mokarrari interest of the newly formed tauzi No. 4060 have not even been impleaded as party-defts. to the action. From the trend of the statements in the plaint it appears that in the present action the pltfs. were concerned with seeking sir possession over the eight annas share of tauzi No. 4060 only. The annulment claimed in this action, therefore did not relate to the entire tenure within this tauzi & the suit on that ground was liable to fail as was contended by the learned counsel for the applts. At this stage it is necessary to mention that after the creation of the original mokarrari the mokarraridars created a darmokarrari in respect of the eight annas share of the mokarrari interest in favour of the proprietors of the original tauzi No. 4060. After this, the original mokarraridars were in sir possession of the eight annas share of the tauzi as mokarraridars & were entitled to get rent from the darmokarraridars in respect of the remaining share, the latter, being in sir possession of the darmokarrari interest extending over the eight annas share of the tauzi. The pltf.s' case as made out in the plaint is that the darmokarraridars did not resist the claim of the pltfs. to sir possession over the eight annas interest of the newly formed tauzi No. 4060 but, it were the defts. 1 to 7 alone who interfered with their possession.

[13] The Advocate-General who appeared for the pltfs.-resp. contended that it was unnecessary for his clients to have brought an action in respect of the sixteen annas mokarrari share of the newly formed tauzi No. 4060, as they were not resisted in their sir possession in respect of the eight annas share, but I do not think that his contention is sound. The khas possession of the pltfs. with respect to that eight annas share of the tauzi which was in direct possession of the darmokarraridars might not have been resisted, but that does not entitle the pltfs. not to claim annulment of the entire mokarrari interest within the newly formed tauzi No. 4060. The interest of the Mokarraridars was quite distinct from that of the darmokarraridars. The mokarraridars of the remaining eight annas share may not be in sir possession of that eight annas share, but they were certainly entitled to claim rent from the darmokarraridars. Under the provisions of S. 37 of the Act XI [11] of 1859 the pltfs. could claim annulment of the entire interest of the tenure-holder in the newly formed tauzi No. 4060 & not only a portion of that interest.

[14] The Advocate-General further contended that it was unnecessary for the pltfs.-auction purchasers to have filed any suit for annulling the tenure; they were justified in treating the interest of the tenure holders as void. But I am afraid I am not inclined to accept this submission of the learned counsel for the pltfs. resps. In the case of Turner Morrison & Co. Ltd. v. Monmohan Chaudhury, 58 I. A. 440: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 314) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have clearly laid down that S. 37 of Act XI [11] of 1859 makes it incumbent upon the auction purchaser to avoid & annul "under tenures" which term includes also "Tenures". Thus; if the present pltfs. thought it necessary to bring an action for avoiding & annulling the mokarrari interest, it was incumbent upon them to have sought avoidance & annulment of the entire mokarrari interest within the newly formed tauzi No. 4060 & impleaded as defts. the tenure-holders interested in the remaining eight annas share of the tauzi also. Having not done so, in my opinion, their suit is bound to fail.

[15] The result is that the appeal succeeds & the suit of the pltfs. is hereby dismissed. The applts. are entitled to their costs of all the Cts. against the pltfs.-resps.

[16] Ramaswami J.—In my opinion, the decision of the learned single Judge in S. A. No. 829 of 1940 must be overruled since the case of Sm. Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory Co. Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34 upon which it is based, is no longer good law in view of the subsequent F. B. case, Khamankari Dasi v. Harsha Mukhi Dasi, 47 C. W. N. 582 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal 345 F. B.).

[17] In Ashamoyee Basu v. Baranagore Jute Factory Co. Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34 there were five tauzis which jointly held the lands comprised therein & each tauzi had an undivided fractional share in all the lands. A tenure was held under all these five tauzis, & one of the tauzis, viz., tauzi No. 166 having been sold for arrears of revenue, the purchaser sought to annul the under tenure so far as it related to that estate & recover possession of a corresponding share of the land. The Ct. of appeal dismissed the pltf.s' suit on the ground that the proprietor of the other five tauzis were in the position of joint landlords with the pltfs. & S 37 would not allow annulment of a portion of an under-tenure. This view was affirmed in appeal by a Bench of the H. C. who relying upon two earlier decisions held that taking the words of s. 37 of Act XI [11] of 1859, as they stood, the auction-purchaser was entitled to eject all under-tenants who held their lands entirely within his estate, but was not entitled to eject an under-tenant who held an under tenure partly within his estate & partly within other estates.

[18] In Khemankari Dasi v. Harsha Mukhi Dasi, 47 C. W. N. 582 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 345 F. B.) the question at issue was as to whether the pltfs. could obtain a declaration that their Patni interest under tauzi No. 335 which was the estate sold, was not in any way affected by the Revenue sale & could not be annulled. The pltfs. alleged that as their patni was one indivisible tenure under three estates of which only one was sold it could not be annulled under S. 37 of the Revenue Sales Laws. The suit was contested by deft. 1, who urged that the Patni held by the pltfs. was separable & even if it did include the lands of the other two estates, there was nothing in law which stood in the way of the purchaser's annulling it, to the extent that it was under estate No. 335. The trial Judge decreed the suit & the decree was affirmed by the Dist. J. in appeal. It was argued in the H. C. that the Patni held by the pltfs. being one integral patni under three estates could not be annulled in part by deft. 1 who was the purchaser of one of the estates. In support of the pltfs. reliance was placed in Ashamoyee v. Baranagore Jute Factory Ltd., 70 C. L. J. 34. But the F. B. held that the decision was not correct; that it was unsound in principle & that it was not supported by the decisions upon which it purported to rely. The F. B., therefore, overruled that case holding that a purchaser of an entire estate sold for arrears of revenue due on account of same, can annul an under-tenure created under the said estate as well as other estates so far as it lies within the estate sold. At p. 598 the report states :

> "It is no doubt true that when we speak of a tenure, we usually mean the tenure in its integrity; but where a tenure extends over more than one estate, that part of it which is under one of the estates may, without undue straining of the language be called an under-tenure in that estate, if the context so requires. To insist that an under-tenure to be voidable under S. 37, must be wholly & exclusively within the defaulting estate would by parity of reasoning require that an encumbrance, if it is not to survive the revenue sale, must be wholly & exclusively upon the estate, so that a mtge extending over more than one estate would remain intact, even as to the portion within the estate. We cannot hold that such was the intention of the Legislature."

[19] The interpretation of S. 37 adopted in the F. B. case is consistent with the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in Forbes v. Meer Mahammad, 20 W. R. 44 : (12 Beng. L. R. 210 P. C.).

"The statutory title which the law gives to an auction purchaser is that for the protection of the revenue & in order to ensure its due payment by him & to avoid the necessity of repeated sales of the property, he is remitted to all those rights which the original settlor at the date of the perpetual settlement had; & may in consequence of that, sweep away or get rid of all the intermediate tenures & incumbrances created by proceeding Zamindars since that date."

If it was the intention of the Legislature that the estate might always remain adequate security for Govt. revenue, it is necessary that the purchaser should get the estate in a condition that he might be able to pay the Govt. Revenue assessed thereon & that no act done by the proprietor after the settlement, by which the estate became determined, or rendered incapable of yielding the revenue, should be allowed to affect him. As stated by Sir James Colvile in the case referred to, the auction purchaser is entitled to a presumption founded upon the principle that every bigha of land is bound to pay & contribute to the public revenue unless it could be brought within certain exceptions recognised in the Act itself.

[20] I am, therefore, of the opinion that the decision of Agarwala J. in S. A. No. 829 of 1940 should be overruled. But the pltfs. are not entitled to a decree in the present case since they have not claimed annulment in respect of the entire mokarrari interest within the newly carved out tauzi No. 4060. From para. 10 of the plaint it is apparent that the tenure holders interested in the remaining eight annas Mokarrari share in tauzi No. 4060 have not been impleaded. The present case, therefore, falls within the ambit of the decision reported in Soohram Barma v. Doorga Charan, 5 C. L. J. 264, which was distinguished & not overruled in the F. B. case. In Soohram Barma v. Doorga Charan Das, 5 C. L. J. 264, the pltf. was the holder of a taluka potta under the auction-purchaser of an estate with regard to a portion of the lands only which were comprised in the estate. He sued to evict an under-tenure holder who had a tenure in respect of the lands in suit & certain other lands within the same tauzi, but not included in the pltf.'s potta. It was held that the pltf. could not annul the under-tenure in part in this manner. The tenure could be set aside as to all the lands belonging to it, & this could be done either by the purchaser of the entire mahal or by some person to whom he had transferred, either the whole mahal or all those lands of the mahal which were included in the Taluka potta of the defts. Here the lands of an under-tenure were all within the tauzi that was sold, & the H. C held that the purchaser or any person claiming from him could not evict the defts. from a portion of the lands. The reason is that there will be hardship to the tenure holder who will be subjected to multiplicity of suits at the instance of different purchasers. Applying this principle to the present case it is manifest that the pltfs. were not entitled to the reliefs they have claimed.

[21] For these reasons I agree that the suit should be dismissed & the appeal should be allowed with costs throughout.

A. F. A. D. No. 2316 of 1946, D/- 14-2-1949.

(a) Municipalities—Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII [7] of 1922), S. 119—Finding as to additions or alterations in—Holding in leading to increase in value—Jurisdiction of civil Ct. to question.

The jurisdiction of the municipality to revalue or reassess any holding on the ground of an increase in the value by reason of additions or alterations must depend upon the correctness of the finding whether there has been any addition or alteration. The extent of the additions or alterations cannot be questioned in the civil Ct. but the fact whether there has been any addition or alteration must be liable to be reviewed by the civil Ct. : A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 153, Rel. on. [Para 7]

(b) Municipalities—Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII [7] of 1922), S. 116 — Ultra vires assessment — Objection under S. 116 does not bar civil suit.

When the assessment itself is ultra vires & the person aggrieved could have at once brought a civil suit, without filing any objection under S. 116, the fact that the person aggrieved had filed an objection which he need not have filed, cannot place him in a worse position & does not operate as a waiver of his right to come to civil Ct. [Para 8]

Girjanandan Prasad — for Applt. ; Jadunandan Prasad & T. K. Prasad—for Resp.

Manohar Lall J. — This is an appeal by the Patna Municipality who was the deft. in a suit instituted by the resp. on 11-4-1942 for a declaration that an additional assessment made on a certain holding in occupation of the pltf. was ultra vires of the municipality.

[2] The suit was decreed by the Cts. below on a finding that there had been no additions & alteration in the holding in question, & therefore, no increase in the valuation of the holding had been made to justify the additional assessment.

[3] The facts are these : The holding in question belongs to the pltf. who had let it out to the Regent Cinema along with some building contiguous thereto. In 1935-36, the tax payable for the holding was assessed at Rs. 41-13-6 per quarter, & this assessment continued up to 11-3-1939. On 8-3-1939, the pltf. received a notice from the Municipality in which they proposed to fix the municipal tax at Rs. 191-3-0 a quarter on the ground that the valuation had increased by reason of additions & alteration made thereto. The pltf. preferred an objection which was heard by the Appeal Committee consisting of three Comrs.

which rejected the objection ignoring the report of the vice-chairman that there had been no additions & alterations in the holding. After the objection was overruled, the order for enhancement was passed on 19-12-1939. This was the cause of action for the suit.

[4] The main defence of the applt. was that there had been an increase in the valuation of the holding on a count of additions & alterations, & secondly, that by reason of S. 119, Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) the civil Ct. has no jurisdiction to question the validity of the assessment.

[5] The Cts. below have concurrently come to the conclusion on the question of fact against the applt. as stated already. That finding is binding in second appeal.

[6] Mr. Girijanandan Prasad argued that the civil Ct. has no jurisdiction to question the validity of the assessment & that the only remedy of the pltf. was to appeal to the Assessment Committee which he did & as he failed there, his remedies are exhausted. On the other hand, it was argued by Mr. Jadunandan Prasad on behalf of the resp. that if the provisions of the Act are carefully considered, it will appear that the jurisdiction of the civil Ct. is barred only in that instance where the Act specifically declares that on the satisfaction of the Comrs. certain consequences ensue but where no such words are to be found then the action of Municipality can be challenged in the civil Ct. if the conditions giving the Municipality jurisdiction do not exist in fact. This distinction appears to be correct. (See Ss. 82 & 107 on the one hand & contrast with Ss. 145 & 148).

[7] The ambit of the jurisdiction of the civil Ct. was examined by Mukherjee J. in the leading case of the Chairman of Giridi Municipality v. Suresh Chandra, 35 Cal. 859 : (7 C. L. J. 631). The case law was examined by me at length sitting with Beevor J. in Comrs. of Darbhanga Municipality v. Jyotindra Nath, 23 Pat. 862 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 153), where I pointed out that the civil Ct. has jurisdiction to enquire whether a person is an occupier of a holding within the municipality, as the jurisdiction of a municipality to assess a person depends upon whether he is an occupier, & the comrs. cannot give themselves jurisdiction to assess a person who is not an occupier by a wrong decision of facts. I also observed that the remedy provided to an assessee under S. 116 of the Act is an alternative one, & the finality given in S. 117 (3) to a decision of the Committee is the finality between the assessee & the Comrs. In my opinion, the same principle must apply when considering S. 107 (d) & other sub-clauses in that section. Take for instance S. 107 (1) (b): if the municipality substitute for the name of the owner or occupier of any holding the name of any other person who has not succeeded by transfer or otherwise to the ownership or occupation of the holding, the aggrieved party has a right to get his title declared in the civil Ct. & then, the order of the municipality, if found to be wrong, would be altered. Same observations apply to sub-cl. (a). It seems to me, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the municipality to revalue or re-assess any holding on the ground of an increase in the value by reason of additions & alterations must depend upon the correctness of the finding whether there has been any addition or alteration. The extent of the additions & alterations cannot be questioned in the civil Ct. but the fact whether there has been any addition or alteration must be liable to be reviewed by the civil Ct.

[8] It was then argued on behalf of the applt. that as the pltf. did take recourse to file an objection under S. 116 of the Act & appealed to the Assessment Committee, he chose to waive his rights to come to the civil Ct. The short answer to this argument is that given by a D. B. of this Ct. in the case of Shiva Prasad v. Comr. of Darbhanga Municipality, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 81 : (196 I. C. 370), where it was observed :

"No doubt in this case the pltf. did file an objection under S. 116 of the Act, but having regard to the fact that the assessment itself was ultra vires need not have done so & could have at once brought a suit in the civil Ct. The pltf. cannot be in a worse position than if he had filed no objection at all under S. 116 of the Act."

The learned Judges thus distinguished the case of the Chairman of Arrah Municipality v. Ramkumar, 16 Pat. 662 : (A. I. R (25) 1938 Pat. 177); but that question does not arise for decision in the present case, & I prefer to express no opinion upon the correctness of that decision.

[9] The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[10] Mahabir Prasad J. — I agree.

A decision of the question under O. 22. R. 5 whether a certain person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff is not an issue arising in the suit itself but it is really a matter collateral to the suit and one that has to be decided before the suit itself can be proceeded with. The rule empowers the Court in a case where a dispute arises as to who is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff to appoint a legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit. A. N. Lal—for Applt.; K. N. Varma & S. Hoda—for Resps.

Ramaswami J.—It is advisable at the outset to set out the material facts which have led to the prosecution of this appeal. Janki Pandey and Foujdar Mahton had obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against which the judgment-debtor preferred appeal to the High Court. While the appeal was pending, Janki Pandey died and in his place plaintiff and defendant 1 were substituted. After the appeal was dismissed, final decree was prepared in favour of plaintiff and defendant 1. The plaintiff brought this present suit for a declaration that he was the daughters' son of deceased Janki and being his sole heir was entitled to the entire money due on the mortgage decree. The plaintiff also asked for a temporary injunction restraining defendant 1 from withdrawing his share of the amount due on the mortgage decree. The main ground of defence was that plaintiff was not the grandson of Janki, that the suit was in any case barred by res judicata. The learned Munsif held that plaintiff was the sole heir of the deceased Janki, but he dismissed the suit on the ground that the rule of res judicata applied. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the judgment of the Munsif holding that plaintiff was entitled to decree.

[2] The main question to be determined in this appeal is whether the claim of the plaintiff is barred by res judicata.

[3] It is manifest that a decision of the question under O. 22, R. 5 whether a certain person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff is not an issue arising in the suit itself but it is really a matter collateral to the suit and one that has to be decided before the suit itself can be proceeded with. The rule empowers the Court in a case where a dispute arises as to who is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff to appoint a legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit. But the appointment of such legal representative is not the determination of any issue which is properly raised in the suit itself, and cannot operate as res judicata. This opinion is supported by a catena of authorities. In Antu Rai v. Ram Kinkar Rai, 58 ALL. 794 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 ALL. 412) the Allahabad High Court held that a decision under O. 22. R. 5, Civil P. C., of a dispute as to which of several persons was the heir and legal representative of a deceased appellant was a decision in a summary proceeding for the purpose of continuance of the appeal and cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same persons regarding succession to the property of the deceased person, which property was not in suit in the earlier suit. The learned Judges dissented from Raj Bahadur v. Narayan Prasad, 48 ALL. 422 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 ALL. 439) and expressly followed an earlier decision of the same High Court, Parsotam Rao v. Janki Bai, 28 ALL. 109 : (1905 A. W. N. 206). Similarly in Samsarivsa Sarvathi v. Pathnmma, 20 I. C. 950 : (25 M. L. J. 279) the Madras High Court held that the question whether a person should be admitted as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff to continue a suit could not be regarded as one of the questions arising for decision in the suit itself, and that it was a matter to be decided at a preliminary stage before the suit itself can be proceeded with. In Bala Bai v. Ganesh, 27 Bom. 162 : (4 Bom. L. R. 980) the Bombay High Court expressed the same view. In Chiragh Din v. Dilawar Khan, 154 I. C. 985 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 465) the Lahore High Court held that a decision of a proceeding under O. 22, R. 5, did not bar the reagitating of the same question in a separate suit and the rule of res judicata did not apply in such a case. Zalim v. Tirlochan Pd. Singh, 166 I. C. 393 : (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Oudh 220 F. B.) a Full Bench of the Oudh Chief Court reached the same conclusion.

[4] Learned advocate for the appellant stressed the argument that the rule of res judicata as between co-plaintiffs will be applicable. But the argument is invalid. On principle the rule of res judicata will not apply unless there is a conflict of interest among the co-plaintiffs, and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the co-plaintiffs inter se. Further the adjudication inter se between the co-plaintiffs should have been necessary to give appropriate relief to the defendants (Cf. Wigram V. C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury, (1846) 15 L J. Ch. 441: (3 Hare 627).)

[5] In the last case (which deals with the cognate rule as to co-defendants) the Vice Chancellor states

"But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains."

[6] In Rukhmini v. Dhondo Mahadu, 36 Bom. 207 : (14 I. C. 466) it was pointed out that a finding to become res judicata as between co-plaintiffs must have been essential for the purpose of giving relief against the defendants. In that case the plaintiff D and his step-mother R brought a suit against C to recover possession of certain ornaments which formed part of the estate of M, the father of D and husband of R. It was held by the Court of first instance that R was entitled to the ornaments, because they were her stridhan, but the appellate Court held that she was entitled to them not because they were her stridhan, but because she was the absolute owner of the property. D then sued R for a declaration that he, as son and heir to M, was entitled to hold the decree. The defendant in reply contended inter alia that the suit was barred by res judicata. The learned Judges held that the bar of res judi-

cata did not apply, in asmuch as there was no final adjudication as between R and D, and in the first suit it was a matter of no consequence to the defendant therein for the purposes of the relief to be given against him whether R succeeded or whether D succeeded. The Court ought not to hold a point to be res judicata unless it is clear from the pleadings and the findings in the previous suit. The learned Judges referred to Attorney-General for Trinidad and Tobago v. Eriche, (1893) A. C. 518 : (63 L. J. P. C. 6) in which it was held that no Court ought to infer res judicata by mere arguments from a judgment in a previous suit.

[7] In Ashgar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossain Khan, 30 Cal. 556 : (30 I. A. 71 P. C.) the Judicial Committee had the same question before them. The right to the profit rental of a bazar had been decided in the plaintiff's favour in a suit between rival zamindars. In the subsequent litigation all the parties claimed under the former plaintiff, and the matter in litigation was the right to possession of a share in the bazar. The Judicial Committee held that the rule of res judicata was not applicable, and decided the case on the construction of the conveyances and sale certificate. Lord Lindley observed :

"Under these circumstances the plea of res judicata might well be a defence to a hostile claim by persons asserting a title under Ahmed Reza's former opponent against those who claim under him. But their Lordships are at a loss to understand its applicability in a dispute between persons all of whom claim under Ahmed Reza himself, as the plaintiffs and the defendants in this case do. The claim under the Statute of Limitations being negatived, the present dispute must turn on the construction of the conveyance under which the parties respectively claim."

[8] In Pratap Udainath v. Ganesh Narain, A. I. R. (8) 1921 Pat. 218 : (70 I. C. 232) Sir Dawson-Miller C. J. and Jwala Prasad J., in dealing with the question of res judicata as between co-plaintiffs observed as follows :

"There was no dispute between the plaintiffs in that suit as to the Maharaja's right to resume or the fact that the tenure had come to an end on the death of Lachmi Nath. The principle laid down in Cottingham v. Shrewsbury, (1846) 15 L. J. Ch. 411 : (3 Hare 627) can therefore have no application. There was no conflict of interest between the co-plaintiffs and the decision cannot, in my opinion, be held binding as res judicata on their successors, vide Ramachandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev, 11 Bom. 216."

[9] Upon this review of the authorities, it is manifest that if the bar of res judicata is to apply, the first requisite is that there should have been active controversy inter se between the parties arrayed on the same side. In the second place, the adjudication inter se between the co-plaintiffs should have been necessary to give the appropriate relief to the defendants.

[10] Applying these principles to the present case I hold that the suit is not barred by res judicata, and that the lower appellate Court rightly granted a decree to the plaintiff.

[11] I should accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

[12] Manohar Lall J. — I have also come to the same conclusion that in the circumstances of the present case the principle of res judicata has no application. As far as 1878, their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in Sheo Singh v. Dakho, 5 I. A. 87 at p. 115 : (1 ALL. 688 P. C.) :

"The Court, indeed, could not properly make a binding declaration as between the adoptive mother and the adopted son, both being plaintiffs. It is no doubt, on this account that the decree, whilst it declares the right of the widow to present possession as against the defendant, is framed in a form which avoids prejudice to the rights of the plaintiffs inter se."

In this case the suit was to establish a Jain widow's right of inheritance to her husband's estate, and to uphold her adoption of her daughter's son, as well as his right to succeed her after her death, by avoiding the pretensions of the defendant who claimed under some title. The underlying principle has been so often stated that it is unnecessary to do more than make references to the well-known decisions of the Privy Council where they have adopted the observations of Wigram V. C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury, (1846) 15 L. J. Ch. 441 : (3 Hare 627) the leading case on the subject :

"If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants, the Court will try and decide that case, and the co-defendants will be bound; but if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains."

This rule governs the cases of co-plaintiffs also because on principle there is no distinction whether the persons are arrayed as co-plaintiffs or as co-defendants. In either case the rule of res judicata will apply if it was essential to decide the matter between the co-plaintiffs in order to give relief against the defendants and the matter had in fact been decided. See Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath, 58 I. A. 158 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 114), Maung Sein Done v. Ma Pan Nyun, 59 I. A. 247 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 161), and Kedar Nath v. Ram Narain Lal, 62 I. A. 224 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 P. C. 139). In the case of Rukhmini v. Dhondo Mahadu, 36 Bom. 207 : (14 I. C. 466), an identical question came for decision, and it was held that a subsequent suit was maintainable by one of the co plaintiffs for a declaration that he, and not a co-plaintiff, was entitled to hold the decree. This is exactly the situation in the present case. For these reasons, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

In a suit for a declaration that the pltf. was the nearest reversionary heir of a person & that a mukarrari deed executed by the widow of that person was a collusive & fraudulent document & not binding on the pltf. the Ct. passed a decree that the pltf. was the nearest reversionary heir but held that the document was a genuine & valid document & was binding on the reversion. Some of the defts. who felt aggrieved by the decree appealed. The pltf. & the widow who were resps. filed cross-objections. The pltf.'s cross-objection was directed against the finding that the mukarrari deed was a document binding on the reversioner & the cross-objection of the widow was directed against the finding that the deed was a genuine & valid document :

B. C. De, Tarkeshwar Nath & A. K. Prasad — for Applts.; Sarjoo Prasad, D. N. Varma, M. Rahman, Gorakh Nath Singh, Chandra Sekhar Prasad & Kanhaiyaji — for Resps.

Narayan J. — This is a defts.' appeal, & it arises out of a suit for a declaration that the pltf. is the nearest reversionary heir of one Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & that a mukarrari deed executed by the widow of the said Bhagwati Prasad Singh is a collusive & fraudulent document, & not binding on the pltf. Bhagwati had a brother named Kailashpati who died in a state of jointness with him leaving a widow. Mt. Parbati Kuer, &, according to the pltf's. case, a daughter, Lachhmina Kuer, & a daughter's son, Mahabir Singh. After the death of Bhagwati Prasad Singh, Parbati Kuer, the widow of Kailashpati, applied for the registration of her name in the Land Registration Dept. with regard to one half share in the zamindari properties which had belonged to Bhagwati Prasad Singh & Kailashpati Singh; but her appln. was contested by Mt. Deomurat Kuer, the widow of Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & was ultimately rejected. The properties left by Bhagwati Prasad Singh had come into possession of the deft. 1, Mt. Deomurat Kuer, as his widow, & the pltf's. allegation is that Sant Prasad Singh, the son-in-law of Kailashpati Singh, & Mahabir Singh, Kailashpati Singh's daughter's son, began to manage the properties of the lady. Sant Prasad Singh & Mahabir Singh have been impleaded as defts. in this suit, & it is said that they in collusion & concert with one Babu Amirchand Lal, the husband of Deokumari Devi (deft. 4), & the father of Brijnandan Sahay (deft 5) got the mukarrari deed in question executed with regard to 240 bighas of land at a nominal jama of Re. 1 per bigha. The consideration mentioned in the document is Rs. 8000 which is the amount of nazrana; but it is alleged that this amount was never paid, & that the recitals in the document about the payment of consideration are all wrong.

[2] Sant Prasad Singh, Mahabir Singh, Deokumari Devi & Brijanandan Sahay contested the suit, & their contention was that the pltf. was not the reversionary heir of Bhagwati Prasad Singh, having never any connection with this family; that the deft. 3, Mahabir Singh, was Bhagwati Prasad Singh's daughter's son & hence his nearest reversionary heir; & that the mukarrari deed was a genuine & valid document executed for legal necessity & binding on the reversioner.

[3] The learned Subordinate Judge held that the pltf. was the nearest reversionary heir of Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & that Mahabir was not his daughter's son. But the mukarrari deed in question was held by the learned Subordinate Judge to be a genuine document binding on the reversion. The suit was accordingly decreed in part by the Ct. below.

[4] The applts. before this Ct. are Sant Prasad Singh & Mahabir Singh, the defts. 2 & 3 respectively, & the pltf. Charitar Singh & deft. 1, Mt. Deomurat Kuer, have filed cross-objections.

[5] The contention of the applts. is that the Ct. below was wrong in holding that the pltf. was the nearest reversionary heir of Bhagwati Prasad Singh & in overruling the plea of the defts. that Mahabir Singh was his daughter's son. The pltf.'s cross-objection is directed against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the mukarrari deed is a document binding on the reversioner & the cross-objection by defendant 1 is directed against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the pltf. is the nearest reversionary heir of Bhagwati Prasad Singh & also against his finding that the mukarrari deed is a genuine & valid document. This lady, Mt. Deomurat Kuer, has instituted a suit for a declaration that the mukarrari deed in question be declared null & void as this document was obtained from her after practising fraud upon her. This suit is still pending in the Ct. of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad.

[6] Mr. D. N. Varma for the resp. 3 in whose name the mukarrari document stands argued before us that under the law the cross-objection filed by the pltf. & the lady Mt. Deomurat Kuer could not be entertained by this Ct.

[7] The most vital point in this case is whether the pltf. resp. Charitar Singh is the nearest reversionary heir of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & for the determination of this point findings are required on two important questions of fact which are (1) whether the applt. 2 Mahabir Singh is the daughter's son of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & (2) whether the pltf. is an agnatic relation of late Bhagwati Prasad Singh & is related to him in the manner alleged. If the applt. 2 is held to be Bhagwati's daughter's son, he would exclude the plft. even if the pltf. is held to be the nearest surviving agnatic relation of Bhagwati. Both these questions have been very elaborately discussed in the judgment of the Ct. below & a very careful appraisement of the evidence has been made by the learned Subordinate Judge. But as a Ct. of first appeal, we were bound to examine the entire evidence & we have done that with meticulous care. The only lacuna which existed in the evidence has been filled up by the examination of the lady, Mt. Deomurat Kuer, as a Ct witness in this Ct. We considered it essential to examine the lady because the question raised was whether Mahabir Singh was her daughter's son or a daughter's son of Parbati & Kailashpati Singh, the brother of Bhagwati Prasad Singh. Unfortunately, the lady had not even filed a written statement in the suit, & neither party had cared to examine her as a witness in the Ct. below, though the pltf. was anxious to show that she had never any child & the contesting defts. were anxious to show that Mahabir was her daughter's son. The defts. probably thought that they stood fortified by the recitals in the mukarrari deed executed by the lady wherein she bad described Mahabir Singh as her nati (grandson) & also by the recitals in certain letters said to have been addressed by the lady to Mahabir. But at least deft. 4, Mt. Deokumari Devi, in whose name the mukarrari document stands & her husband Mr. Amirchand Lal who, it appears, is mainly responsible for the execution of this document, should have realized that in view of the allegations made by the pltf. they had to show that they had acted in good faith in their dealings with the lady. It is needless to say that a transferee from a Hindu widow has an exceptional & onerous position & he does not occupy the same position as any other transferee in whose favour certain presumptions will be raised under ordinary circumstances. This lady has already instituted a suit for a declaration that the mukarrari deed was brought into existence by practising fraud upon her, & she has made very serious allegations against Sant Prasad Singh & Mahabir Singh & against Amirchand Lal & his wife. The distinct case which she has made out is that she did not "receive a single farthing out of the nazarana money mentioned in the mukarrari patta" & that:

"Sant Prasad Singh & Mahabir Prasad Singh, in collusion & concert with the defts. (meaning the defts. Deokumari Devi, wife of Amirchand Lal, & Brijanandan Sahay, minor son of Amirchand Lal), deceived her, & fraudulently got the mukarrari deed executed by her for their own benefit in favour of their creature."

Because the suit instituted by the lady is still pending, we would avoid making any observation which might prejudice the parties in that litigation or which might embarrass the Subordinate Judge in the trial of that suit; but, in view of the submission of Mr. B. C. De for the applts. before us that the lady would not have called Mahabir as her nati in this mukarrari document if he would not have been her daughter's son, it is a perfectly relevant consideration in this case whether any value should be attached to that recital in the document or not. If we find that this recital is wrong, we should not hesitate to say that, & we are bound to take into consideration in what circumstances this document had come into existence. If the contesting defts. of this suit are determined to take advantage of the recitals in the mukarrari deed & the recitals in certain letters said to have been written by, or on behalf of the lady, it will be perfectly legitimate for the lady & the pltf. to show in this litigation that the mukarrari document was obtained after practising fraud upon the lady, & that the letters were not actually sent by, or under instructions from, her. Admittedly, the lady is a purdanashin lady, & to quote the language used by the Judicial Committee in a very recent decision Atmaram Maneklal v. Bai Hira, 75 I. A. 108:(A.I.R. (35) 1948 P. C. 111)

"the law has accorded to persons in the position of the lady a high degree of protection in their dealings with persons with whom they contract."

Their Lordships cited an earlier decision of the Board in Hem Chandra v. Suradhani Debya, 67 I. A. 309 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 134) in which it had been held that "a purdanashin woman of considerable business capacity was not bound by a mtge. agreement which was read but not explained to her before she signed it, because she did not understand that she was making herself personally bound to repay the borrowed money."

In this case the principle was laid down that, if the relation between the lady executant & the beneficiary is intimate, the onus on the beneficiary becomes heavier. The evidence in this case unmistakably goes to show that the lady was completely under the influence of Sant Prasad Singh, Mahabir Singh, Amirchand Lal & Amirchand Lal's wife when the document came to be executed, &, if she was completely under their influence at the time of the execution of the document, it was very easy for them to have such recitals made in the document as would be of distinct advantage to them (His Lordship discussed the evidence & concluded.)

[8] My conclusion, therefore, in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, is that it is well established that Bhagwati Singh & deft. 1 had no daughter, & that Mahabir is not their daughter's son.

[9] The next question is whether this pltf. is the next reversionary heir of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh. [After discussing the evidence his Lordship held that the pltf. was the nearest male agnatic relation of Bhagwati Prasad Singh & hence his reversionary heir. His Lordship then proceeded.]

[10-11] On the merits, therefore, the appeal of Sant Prasad Singh & Mahabir Prasad Singh is not fit to succeed ; but the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained, as he has merely granted a declaration to the pltf. that he is the nearest reversionary heir of the husband of deft. 1, & has refused to him the main relief. The relief sought is described as follows :

"On adjudication of the above fact, it may be held that the mukarrari deed dated 19-5-1941 is collusive, fraudulent, without consideration & legal necessities, that it is not genuine & that it is not binding upon the pltf., the next reversioner."

One of the pleas taken by the defts. was that, because of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, the pltf's. claim was not fit to succeed, & the learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, framed the following issue: "Is the suit barred by S. 42, Specific Relief Act?" The issue was, however, answered in the negative, & the learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that, even if the declaration sought by the pltf. with regard to the mukarrari document could not be granted to him, he was entitled to the declaration that he was the nearest male agnate & the reversionary heir of the husband of deft. 1. But, in my opinion, the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous, & he was wrong in not following the decision of the Judicial Committee in Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar, 43 I. A. 207 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 117). He has tried to distinguish the P. C. case, but I am not quite able to understand his reasoning in support of his view that the facts of the P. C. case are so much distinguishable from the facts of this present case, that the principle laid down by their Lordships cannot be applied in this case. What their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held in Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar, 43 I. A 207 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 117) has been explained & summarized by their Lordships themselves in a subsequent decision, Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh, 45 I. A. 21 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 196). Their Lordships say that the point of that case is this :

"There was a Hindu widow entitled to an estate, & a suit was brought by a person, presumptively entitled as heir after her death, to prevent waste. It was held that there was no waste at all, & the question arose whether, under those circumstances, it was proper to give the persons presumptively entitled a declaration of their title as presumptive, or, as sometimes called reversionary heirs, & it was held by this Board, that no such declaration ought to be made."

In this case also, there is a Hindu widow entitled to an estate, & a suit has been instituted by a person presumptively entitled as her heir after her death for a declaration that a mukarrari deed executed by her is fraudulent & without consideration & legal necessity & not binding on the reversion. In the P. C. case, it was held that there was no waste at all, & in this case it has been held that the mukarrari document is neither fraudulent nor without consideration & legal necessity, & that it is binding on the reversion & the pltf. as the reversionary heir. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that, no waste having been proved, the title of the pltf. as presumptive heir could not be declared. This case is certainly analogous to the case before their Lordships, inasmuch as the question in this case also arises as to whether, after the finding that the document was for consideration & legal necessity & binding on the reversion, it could be merely declared that the pltf. was the next reversionary heir of the husband of deft. 1. I feel no hesitation in holding that the principle of Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar, 43 I. A. 207 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 117) is applicable to this case & that no declaration to the effect that the pltf. was the next reversionary heir of the husband of deft. 1 could have been made in this case, if the pltf. had failed to show that the document was not for consideration & legal necessity & not binding on the reversion. In Saudagar Singh's case, 45 I. A. 21 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 196), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, & also made mention of the following illustration given in that section :

"The widow of a sonless Hindu alienates part of the property of which she is in possession as such. The person presumptively entitled to possess the property if he survive her may, in a suit against the alienee, obtain a declaration that the alienation was made without legal necessity & was therefore void beyond the widow's lifetime."

This illustration & the decision of the Judicial Committee in Janaki Ammal's case, (43 I. A. 207: A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 117) as explained by their Lordships in Saudagar Singh's case, (45 I A 21 : A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 196) appear to be a settler on the point, &, in my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge, after he had refused to set aside the alienation should not have granted a declaration only to this effect that the pltf. was the presumptive heir of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh, the husband of deft. 1. The applts., therefore, were right in submitting that, the mukarrari deed in question having been held to be a document binding on the reversion, the Ct. below had erred in granting a declaration to the pltf. that he was the nearest reversionary heir of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh.

[12] The pltf., as I have already stated, has filed a cross-objection in this case, & his cross-objection is directed against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the mukarrari document is binding on him. Mr. D. N. Varma on behalf of the defts. has strenuously argued before us that neither the cross-objection of the pltf. nor the cross-objection of the lady Mt. Deomurat Kuer is entertainable. So far as the cross-objection of the lady is concerned, it raises the following three points: (1) That the Ct. below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was the nearest agnatic relation of her husband & hence his reversionary heir. (2) That the Ct. below should have held that the mukarrari deed was not a valid document, & had been executed after practising fraud upon her. (3) That the Ct. below should have held that the mukarrari deed was not executed for the benefit of the estate, & should have rejected the evidence adduced by the defts. for proving that it was a document executed for legal necessity.

[13] The first contention fails in view of my finding that the pltf. is the nearest male agnate & the reversionary heir of the late Bhagwati Prasad Singh, & the second contention is beyond the scope of this suit. As already stated, a suit has been instituted by the lady for setting aside the mukarrari deed on the ground of fraud, & the issue that has to be decided in that suit cannot be decided by us in this present suit. The third point has been raised by the pltf. as well in his cross-objection, &, if the pltf's. cross objection is maintainable, the cross-objection of the lady also on this point can be entertained. The real question, therefore, is whether the cross-objection filed by the pltf. is maintainable. The contention of Mr. Varma, who appeared for resp. 3, Dulhin Deokumari Davi, wife of Amirchand Lal, in whose name the mukarrari document stands, was that neither the cross objection of the pltf. nor the cross-objection of the lady could be entertained, because the provisions of O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., do not enable the resp. as a matter of right, to urge cross-objection against a co-resp. Mr. Varma has relied on certain decisions of this Ct. & other High Courts, & he thinks that it is now a settled law that where cross-objections filed by a resp. are directed solely against a co-resp. whose case has nothing in common with that of the applt. they are not maintainable. The important decisions of this Ct. which have been relied on by Mr. Varma are those reported in Mt. Chanda Bibi v. Mohanram Sahu, 13 Pat. 200: (A I.R. (21) 1934 Pat. 134) & Deo Narain v. Ganesh Ram, A.I R. (23) 1936 Pat. 604: (135 I. C. 936). In the former case, Dhavle J. with whom Saunders J. agreed, held as follows:

"A cross-objection against the applt. stands on a different footing from an objection against a co-resp. the former comes from a party who is content with the decree of the lower Ct. provided his opponent does not appeal, while the resp. who wishes to urge an objection against a co-resp. is, as a general rule, merely availing himself of an appeal by another party relating to other matters to urge at a late stage what he could & should have urged by way of appeal earlier. There is little reason to drive the former to file an unnecessary appeal as there is to let the latter act beyond the period of limitation prescribed for appeals; & yet these would be the results if cross-objections were not permitted against the applt. or objections were permitted as a general rule between co-resps. I would, therefore, hold that the pltfs. resps. are not entitled, as a matter of right, to urge their so-called cross-objection against those resps. who were defts. 2 to 6 in suit No. 57 below. But objections of this kind, not coming under O. 41, R. 22, have been entertained under O. 41, R. 33, in cases of an exceptional kind."

It is to be noted that his Lordship was careful enough to point out that the pltfs.-resps. were not, as a matter of right, entitled to urge cross-objections against the resps. who were defts. 2 to 6. His Lordship further pointed out that an objection of this kind, even if it does not come under O. 41, R. 22 can be entertained under O. 41, R. 33. This case cannot be regarded as an authority for the proposition that in no case can a cross-objection filed by a resp. as directed solely against a co-resp. whose case has nothing in common with that of the applt. be entertained. In the other case (Deo Narain v. Ganesh Ram), (A I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 604: 165 I. C. 936) the cross-objection in question was found to be nothing more than an old appeal which had been dismissed as time-barred. The outstanding fact of this case was that an applt. who had filed an appeal beyond time, had attempted to take the same points which he had taken in his memorandum of appeal in a cross-objection. The last para of the judgment of Wort J. runs as follows:

"In my judgment, as I have already stated, the cross-objection in the present case is nothing more than the old appeal which was dismissed & therefore in my opinion does not lie. The cross-objection is therefore dismissed."

The fact which weighed very much with his Lordship, therefore, was that the cross-objection was nothing more than an old appeal which had been dismissed as-time-barred. On the other hand, there are certain other decisions which have definitely laid down, on a consideration of the provisions of R. 22 of O. 41 that it is open to a deft. resp. to file a cross-objection against a co-resp. & these decisions are Munisamy Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy, 38 Mad. 705: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 648 F. B) & Vankata Rao v. Satyanarayanamurthy, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 698: (I. L. R. (1944) Mad. 147 F. B.). Both are F. B. decisions, & the question raised before us has been elaborately discussed by Leach C. J. & Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J. in the latter case. I would quote the following passage from the judgment of Krishnaswami Ayyangar J.:

"Where there is a decree for a part only of a claim, it means that it is party in favour of the pltf. & partly in favour of the deft. & when the resp. is given liberty by the rule to support the decree it is to enable him to support that part of the decree which is really in his favour. In doing so, he is not attacking the decree in so far as it is in favour of the pltf. nor is he supporting it; for obviously he is not interested in supporting it at all. In fact, he is only attempting to prevent the pltf. from increasing the burden of the liability beyond the limit fixed by the decree appealed against. The word "decree" in this rule may be taken to mean decision as held in Sri Ranga Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar, 50 Mad. 866: (A.I.R. (14) 1927 Mad. 801) but that does not solve the difficulty. What is necessary to bear in mind is that the principle which is applicable to a simple case where a claim is wholly decreed or wholly dismissed, is equally applicable to a case where the claim is allowed in part & dismissed as regards the rest. In the latter class of cases, namely, where there is a decree for a part only of a larger claim, the decision is to be understood as comprising a decree in favour of the resp. to the extent to which the Ct. below had disallowed the claim of the applt. So understanding it, there is no difficulty whatever. It is by an omission to see clearly this double aspect when there is a decree for a part only of a claim, that errors are likely to occur."

[14] In the present case also, we find that the suit was decreed in part, & to quote the language of Krishnaswami Ayyangar J., we have in reality what may be described as a double or composite decree. In fact, there is something more in this case, & it is this that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the pltf. is an infructuous & an invalid decree, inasmuch as it was passed in contravention of the provisions of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. After the finding that the mukarrari document was a document binding on the reversion, the Ct. below could not grant a decree to the pltf. resp. that he was the nearest reversionary heir of the husband of deft. &, therefore, the pltf. was bound to urge by way of cross-objection in this case that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong, & that the decree which had been passed in his favour did not mean anything, unless it was declared that the mukarrari document was a document not binding on the reversion. It is therefore that the language of R. 22 of O. 41 & of R. 33 of O. 41 has been made very wide. Rule 22 says that any resp. though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Ct. below but take any cross objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection in the appellate Ct. within the time prescribed. This pltf.-resp. has the right to support the decree on the grounds decided against him by the Ct. below, which are that the mukarrari document is a document binding on the reversion, &, if he can support the decree on these grounds, he can certainly file a cross-objection embodying the grounds on which he wants to support the decree. This decree was insupportable without a declaration that the mukarrari document was not binding on the reversion, &, therefore, it was quite open to the pltf.-resp. to urge that the document had been executed without any legal necessity & did not confer any benefit upon the estate, & was consequently not binding on him as the reversioner. In fact, the facts of this present case are somewhat peculiar & quite dissimilar to the facts of the other cases which had to consider the meaning & the effect of R. 22 of O. 41 & for the simple reason that the decree passed in this suit, was unsustainable in absence of a declaration that the mukarrari document was not binding on the reversion, I think it was quite open to the pltf.-resp. to support this decree on the ground that the mukarrari document had not been executed for the benefit of the estate, & was consequently not binding on the reversion. I have already pointed out with reference to the relief portion of the plaint that it was the mukarrari document which was sought to be set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge misdirected himself when he granted a declaration to the pltf. that he was the nearest reversionary heir of Bhagwati Prasad Singh without granting the declaration that had been sought with regard to the mukarrari document. The pltf.-resp. is certainly entitled to show, that the decree is erroneous on this account, &, under the provisions of R. 22 of O. 41 he is entitled to ask this Ct. to rectify the error committed by the learned Ct. below & to pass a proper & legal decree. In this view, I am of the opinion that the cross-objection of the pltf. is maintainable. It is needless to point out that R. 33 of O. 41 has given even wider powers to the Ct. Under this rule, the Ct. has power to make a proper decree, & such power can be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties even though they may not have filed an appeal or objection. We cannot conceive of a better case in which we can act according to the provisions of R. 33 of O. 41. Here, on account of an erroneous view having been taken by the Ct. below an invalid or an infructuous decree has been passed, & we cannot refuse to hear the pltf.-resp. if he says that the decree passed by the Ct. below is erroneous, & that it should be corrected or amended in the manner urged by him. If the cross-objection filed by the pltf. resp. is entertainable, as, in my opinion, it is in so far as it seeks to have the mukarrari document set aside for want of necessity & benefit to the estate, then the cross-objection of the lady Mt. Deomurat Kuer as well, in so far as it relates to this point only, is entertainable. I was not able to understand the argument of Mr. Varma in this case that the lady's cross-objection is not maintainable, because she cannot derogate from her own grant. There is no bar to the lady showing that the document which she had executed was a fraudulent document, & that there was no necessity for it. The question whether it is a fraudulent document or not will be properly decided in the pending suit to which reference has already been made; but the question whether the document is for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate is a question which can be properly decided only in this present suit. I, therefore, hold that, so far as the question whether the document was executed for the benefit of the estate or for legal necessity & is binding on the reversion is concerned, the cross-objection of the pltf. as well as the cross-objection of Mt. Deomurat Kuer are maintainable.

[15] The only other point to be decided is whether the mukarrari document is a document which can bind the reversion. As already pointed out, the document in question is a perpetual mukarrari patta with regard to 152.76 acres of land equivalent to about 244 bighas, & it was executed on 19-5-1941, for a consideration of Rs. 8000. The total rent payable by the mukarraridar is Rs. 240 including cesses. By the execution of this document, two rehan bonds (Exs. D 3 & D-4) executed by deft. 1 herself in favour of defts. 4 & 5 on 22 12-1939, for a consideration of Rs. 3000 each were redeemed. There was further a redemption of a rehan bond executed by Jadunandan Singh, the father of Bhagwati Prasad Singh, of the value of Rs. 799. Exhibits D (3) & D (4) had been executed by the lady for satisfying another rehan bond executed by Jadunandan Singh & a rehan bond executed by Bhagwati Prasad Singh. Rupees four thousand was required for the redemption of the rehan bond executed by Jadunandan Singh in favour of Tirlok Singh & Aslok Singh, & Rs. 700 was required for the redemption of the rehan bond executed by Bhagwati Prasad Singh in favour of Ghagh Singh. Besides these two documents, the lady herself had executed a rehan bond in favour of Sant Mahto for a consideration of Rs. 400, & this rehan bond was also satisfied after the execution of Exs. D (3) & D (4), the consideration of Exs. D (3) & D (4) being Rs. 6000. Some petty amounts had been required for meeting the expenses of certain cases, & Rs. 644 had been taken for repairing a portion of the residential house. From a perusal of the mukarrari document, also it appears that about Rs. 700 was required for reconstructing a portion of the residential house, & Rs. 500 was required for satisfying petty loans which had been incurred for the treatment & the sradh expenses of Kailashpati Singh's wife & for repaying a loan of Rs. 100 which had been incurred for the treatment of Mahabir Singh & for performing the sataisa ceremony of his son The area mortgaged under the document Ex D (3) was 19.72 acres, & the area mortgaged under the document Ex. D (4) was 24.89 acres. The total is 44.61 acres corresponding to 72 bighas. Besides this, 12 bighas had been mortgaged by virtue of the document Ex. D (1) which had been executed by Jadunandan Singh in favour of Tirlok Singh & Aslok Singh on 20-10-1896. The areas mortgaged under the rehan bond of 1891 executed by Jadunandan Singh, under the rehan bond executed by Bhagwati Singh in favour of Ghagh Singh, & under the rehan bond executed by the lady herself in favour of Sant Singh were 50 bighas, 4 bighas 11 kathas, & 4 bighas, respectively. Thus, the total area which had been mortgaged under these documents was only 59 bighas. For satisfying these rehan documents & for payment of certain petty loans & also for certain necessary expenses the lady has executed a permanent mukarrari patta with regard to 244 bighas of lands at a rent which has been fixed for all time. If the intention was merely to redeem the rehan with regard to 50 bighas executed by Jadunandan in favour of Tirlok & Aslok, the rehan with regard to 4 bighas 11 kathas executed by Bhagwati Singh in favour of Ghagh Singh, & the rehan with regard to 12 bighas executed by Jadunandan Singh in favour of Tirlok Singh & Aslok Singh, it was not at all necessary to part with such a vast area of land belonging to the estate. Assuming that the lady had executed the documents dated 22-12-1939, for legal necessity, & required money for redeeming the rehan bond of 1896, & also required Rs. 500 for repayment of the petty loans incurred for treatment, sradh & sataisa expenses, & Rs. 685 for reconstructing a portion of the house, it was not at all necessary to transfer 244 bighas of land permanently. The learned Subordinate Judge was very much influenced by the consideration that by executing the mukarrari document, the lady made 160 bighas of barren & unculturable lands a source of permanent income to the estate. & redeemed rehans with regard to 84 bighas of lands, & thus added them to the corpus of the estate. It is impossible to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that 84 bighas of lands, that is the lands covered by documents Exs. D (3), D (4) & D (1), had been added to the corpus of the estate. These lands have rather been lost to the estate for ever, & even if the lady wanted to redeem the old rehans, she could have done that by executing other rehan decuments. I find no justification for a complete alienation of these 84 bighas of lands which can never come back to the estate now, if the mukarrari document is held to be a document binding on the reversion, & it is not at all a sound argument to urge that about 169 bighas of barren & unculturable lands have become a source of income to the estate because of the execution of the mukarrari deed. A widow or limited heir has no power to grant a permanent lease, or a lease for a long term, so as to bind the reversion, unless it is justified by legal necessity, or it is for the benefit of the estate, or made with the consent of the next reversioners, & the argument that a permanent lease was granted because some lands were lying barren & uncultivated can be of no avail. The Judicial Committe has laid down that, if there is no necessity, benefit or consent, a limited owner cannot create a new & fixed rent for all time, though such rent be adequate at the time of fixing it. In Shibessuree Debia v. Mothoora Nath, 13 M. I. A. 270 : (2 Sar. 528 P.C.), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down as follows :

> "To create a new & fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent, from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a sebait, & is not, therefore, presumable."

It is not necessary to say that the power of a limited owner to alienate a property in her possession is analogous to that of a shebait or mahanth to alienate debottar properties or to that of a manager of an infant heir as defined by the Judicial Committee in Hunoomanpersaud v. Mt. Babooee Munraj, 6 M. I. A. 393 : (1 Sar. 552 P. C.). In Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 26 I. A. 148 : (36 Cal. 1003 P. C.), their Lordships observed as follows :

"The second question is whether, this being so, the mohunt had power to grant a mokarrari pottah of the mouzah. It is well settled law that the power of the mohunt to alienate debottar property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity : Prosunno Kumari v. Golab Chand, 2 I. A. 145 : (14 Beng. L. R. 450 P. C.). In the case of Kanwar Doorganath v. Ram Chunder, 4 I. A. 52 : (2 Cal. 341 P. C.) a mokarrari Pottah of dewattar lands was supported on the ground that it was granted in consideration of money said to be required for the repair & completion of a temple, for which no other funds could be obtained. But the general rule is that laid down in the case of Shibessuree Debia v. Mothooranath, 13 M. I. A. 270 : (2 Sar. 528 P. C.), that apart from such necessity to create a new & fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty, in the mohunt. There is no allegation that there were any special circumstances of necessity in this case to justify the grant of the pottah of 1860."

[16] In this case also, it cannot be said that there were any special circumstances of necessity to justify a grant of 244 bighas of lands by the patta of 1941. It need hardly be said that the prices of lands have considerably gone up since the date of the execution of the patta, & the obvious result is that properties which could have been regarded very valuable even at the present time, that is, in the year 1949, were parted with permanently in the year 1941 for a consideration of Rs. 8000 only. It really shocks one's conscience to find that 244 bighas should have been transferred for a consideration of Rs. 8000 only & at an annual rent of Rs. 240. In Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi, 44 I. A. 147 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 33), their Lordships relied on the two decisions mentioned above, & observed as follows :

"Three authorities have been cited which established that it is a breach of duty on the part of a shebait, unless constrained thereto by unavoidable necessity, to grant a lease in perpetuity of debottar lands at a fixed rent, however, adequate that rent may be at the time of granting, by reason of the fact that by this means the debottar estate is deprived of the chance it would have, if the rent were variable, of depriving benefit from the enhancement in value in the future of the lands leased. These authorities are Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath, 13 M.I.A. 270 at p. 275 : (2 Sar. 528 P. C.), Seena Peena Reena Mayandi v. Chokkalingam, 31 I. A. 83 at p 88 : (27 Mad. 291 P. C.) & Abhiram v. Shyama Charan, 36 I. A. 148 at p. 165 : (36 Cal. 1003 P. C.).

No doubt these cases dealt with agricultural lands, but no reason can be suggested why the principles they establish should not apply to a building site situate in the street of a village, as is the site in the present case. It may appreciate in value just as the land may. Moreover, if for the reasons above mentioned the grant of a lease in perpetuity of debottar lands at a fixed rent requires to be justified by unavoidable necessity, it is difficult to see why an absolute alienation in perpetuity of the same kind of land in consideration of a premium should not equally require to be justified by the same kind of necessity, since it brings about quite as completely the same prejudicial results."

There can be no doubt that these lands have very much appreciated in value, & if the prices of the lands are fixed on the basis of selling rates prevailing at present, the conclusion is irresistible that the estate has suffered a very great loss by the execution of this document. Even the learned Subordinate Judge says that it is obvious from the statements of Mr. Amirchand Lal that he has made a good bargain out of this transaction. But learned Subordinate Judge thinks that he has no reasons to suspect that Mr. Amirchand Lal has made an unconscionable bargain. As already pointed out, it was a clear breach of duty on the part of a lady to grant a mukarrari patta at a fixed rent, & nobody can dispute that the lands have now so much appreciated in value that, if they are disposed of at present, they may fetch a very high price, & probably ten times more than Rs 8000, which is the consideration of this document. This was, therefore, an absolutely imprudent transaction entered into by the lady who, as I have already said, was completely under the influence of Sant Mahabir, Amirchand Lal & Amirchand Lal's wife. This is the glaring instance of a case in which a lady of a very respectable family has, under evil influences, parted with a very valuable property for a nominal consideration, & the way in which this particular lady has acted shows that the spirit of the Hindu law not to give undue liberty to a woman, whatever be her age or condition in life, should still be maintained.

[17] The cross-objection of the pltf., therefore, succeeds, & it is held that the permanent lease granted by the lady was not justified by legal necessity, & was not for the benefit of the estate. The mukarrari deed is not binding on the reversion & on the pltf. as the nearest reversionary heir of the husband of deft. 1. The cross objection of the lady succeeds only in part, that is, only in so far as it urges that the Ct. below should have held that the mukarrari deed was not executed for the benefit of the estate.

[18] The appeal is dismissed with costs to the pltf.-resp. The cross objection of the pltf.-resp. is allowed with costs to be realized from the applts. & the resps. other than Mt. Deomurat Kuer, & the decree of the Ct. below is varied to this extent that it is further declared that the mukarrari deed in question is not binding on the reversion & on the pltf. as the reversionary heir. The pltf.-resp. would get full costs of the Ct. below which would be realized from the defts. other than deft. 1. The cross-objection of the lady Mt. Deomurat Kuer is allowed in part, as indicated above; but she will not be entitled to any costs.

In a suit for permanent injunction the trial Ct. granted an ad interim injunction restraining the deft. from constructing a building. Eventually after hearing parties the Ct. dissolved the injunction on 1-3-1950. Against this order the pltf. filed an appeal on 7-3-1950 & the appellate Ct. also granted an ad interim injunction. In the meantime the deft. taking advantage of the order of the trial Ct. vacating the order of ad interim injunction & the delay in filing appeal hastened with the construction.

Held* that by the conduct of the deft. he was trying to defeat any appeal which might eventually be filed by the pltf. & the order which might be passed in his favour. Hence that part of the construction which was made by the deft. between 1-3-1950 & 7-3-1950 should be demolished. [Para 6]

B. C. De & S. K. Sarkar —for Petnr. ; S. K. Mazumdar — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This petn. in revn. has been filed by the pltf. against an order of the learned Munsif of Purulia dated 29-5-1950 in Title Suit No. 47 of 1950.

[2] The facts leading to this appln. may be briefly stated as follows :

[3] The pltf. instituted the suit in question for a permanent injunction against the principal defts. who are the opposite party here restraining them from causing obstruction to a certain latrine by making constructions so as to prevent the methar from servicing the latrine in question & also for removal of the construction. The pltf.'s case is that he purchased a house belonging to one Hamidunnisa on 10-8 1948. He has been making certain construction and has also constructed a latrine by the side of the privy in the house of Hamidunnisa. He alleges that the defts. have their residential house contiguous east of the pltf.'s land & building, that the latrine in the pltf.'s house used to be serviced through a galli from a very long time & that the defts. commenced constructing a gate & a door over the said galli near the trap-door of the pltf 's latrine & thereby the pltf. apprehended that the defts. by such a construction would stop the servicing of the pltf 's latrine through the galli. He, therefore, instituted the suit with the prayers aforesaid. The day when the suit was instituted, that is, on 4-2-1950 the pltf. also filed an appln for ad interim injunction restraining the defts. from constructing the building so as to block the passage in question & the learned Munsif, before whom the suit was filed, granted an ad interim injunction & issued notice upon the defts. opposite party to show cause against this order. Eventually after hearing the parties the learned Munsif on 1-3-1950, dissolved the injunction. Against this order the petnr. preferred an appeal to the learned Dist. J. of Manbhum-Singbhum on 7-3-1950. He could not prefer the appeal earlier because the Holi holidays intervened & the learned Dist. J., after hearing the parties, on 11-5-1950, allowed the appeal. The learned Dist. J, in doing so ordered that the ad interim order of injunction passed by the learned Munsif should be made absolute till the disposal of the suit. I should have stated that on the day the appeal was filed the appellate Ct. also had granted an ad interim injunction order. In the meantime it appears the defts opposite party taking advantage of the order of the learned Munsif vacating the order of ad interim injunction on 1-3-1950 & the delay, which was very natural, in filing the appeal on 7-3-1950, hastened on with the construction. The petnr. moved the learned Munsif for directing the opposite party to remove the construction which had been made during this period, that is, between the date of the vacating of the ad interim order by the learned Munsif on 1-3-1950 & the date of filing of the appeal & the ad interim injunction order by the appellate Ct. on 7-3-1950. The learned Munsif by his order dated 29-5-1950 refused to interfere & hence the present appln. The Munsif observed in his order that the construction by the defts. during the period was legally authorised because there was nothing to prevent the deft.-petnrs. from doing so.

[4] It is contended by Mr. B. C. De on behalf of the petnr. that by virtue of the appellate order of the learned Dist J. he was relegated to the same position as he occupied when the ad interim order was passed by the learned Munsif on 1-3-1950, & any construction made with indecent haste by the defts. opposite party during the period in question should have been ordered to be demolished because the conduct of the opposite party really amounted to over-reaching the Ct. knowing as they did not (that?) an appeal against the order of the learned Munsif would be filed by the petnr. without any unreasonable delay. In support of his contention he relies upon several English & Indian authorities. He refers to a decision in Daniel v. Ferguson, (1891) 2 Ch. D. 27 : (39 W. R. 599). In that case the deft. in an action to restrain from building so as to darken the pltf.'s lights, upon receiving notice of motion for injunction put on a number of extra men & by working night & day ran up his wall to a height of nearly 40 feet before receiving notice that an ex parte interim injunction had been granted. It was held that the deft. had endeavoured to anticipate the action of the Ct by hurrying on his building & that what he had erected ought, therefore, to be at once pulled down, without regard to the ultimate result of the action. In the present case, which stands on a stronger footing, ad interim order of injunction had already been passed by the learned Munsif but later he had vacated the order though immediately an appeal was preferred & a fresh ad interim order obtained by the petnr. & finally the learned Dist. J. in allowing his appeal restored & made absolute the ad interim order passed by the learned Munsif. The other case to which reference has been made is a decision in Von Joel v. Hornsey, (1895) 2 Ch. D. 774 : (65 L. J. Ch. 102). In that case the deft. was erecting a building near the pltf.'s house. The pltf. warned the deft. that if he proceeded in building the house he would sue to restrain him on account of obstruction to pltf.'s lights. The pltf. ultimately filed a suit but the deft. evaded service of writ for several days & in the mean time continued the building till substituted service had to be effected on him. It was held, following the decision in Daniel's case, (1891-2 Ch. D 27 : 39 W. R. 599), that the pltf. was entitled to an interlocutory mandatory injunction directing the deft. to pull down so much of the building as had been erected after the pltf. had warned the deft. that he intended to bring an action. The cases referred to above have been followed in the various H. Cts. in India, viz , Israil v. Shamser Rahman, 41 Cal. 436 : (A.I.R. (1) 1914 Cal. 362), Kandaswami Chetty v. Subramania Chetty, 41 Mad 208 : (A. I. R (5) 1918 Mad. 588) & Gopayya v. Ankayya, A. I. R (14) 1927 Mad. 210 : (99 I. C. 566). The decision in Israil v. Shamser Rahman, 41 Cal 436 : (A. I. R (1) 1914 Cal. 362) is by Mukherji & Beachcroft JJ. & although the facts in that case were different, their Lordships after a review of various authorities, observed as follows :

"In the case before us, therefore, prima facie, the defts. should not be allowed to proceed to complete the building which they have erected. But the case for the pltfs. is materially strengthened when we bear in mind the conduct of the defts. The Ct. of first instance found that there was good reason to hold that a substantial portion of the building had been erected after the defts. had become aware of the institution of this suit & of the appln. for temporary injunction. In case of this description, the Ct. would, if necessary, proceed not only to grant a temporary injunction restraining the further erection of the building but also to direct that the building already erected be taken down."

[5] Here it is not disputed that after the ad interim order had been vacated by the learned Munsif & the appeal came to be filed by the petnr. against that order the deft. opposite party continued the progress of the construction regardless of these circumstances & their conduct quite clearly shows that they were trying to defeat any appeal which may eventually be filed by the petnr. & any order which may happen to be passed in his favour. In these circumstances the learned Munsif completely misdirected himself in assuming that there was nothing wrong on the part of the defts. in proceeding with the construction and the order which has been passed by him is, therefore, materially illegal & irregular & has the effect of nullifying the order which was passed by the learned Dist. J. on appeal vacating the previous order of the Munsif.

[6] At one stage I was inclined to think that in spite of the irregularity of the order I should refuse to interfere. I was impressed with the argument on behalf of the opposite party that the pltf.'s house was not in occupation & that the privy in question for the obstruction of which this injunction was claimed was not in use by the pltf. In fact it was on this basis that the learned Munsif passed his order dated 1-3-1950. The appellate Ct. in setting aside the order did not specifically deal with the position. I find, however, from a subsequent order passed by the same learned Munsif that he practically assumes that even though the pltf.-petnr. is in occupation of the house & has been using the latrine, his suffering caused by the obstruction of the passage is self-invited. In view of this I am prepared to assume the correctness of the contention of Mr. De that probably the house & the latrine are being used by the pltf. For these reasons I think that the decision of the learned Munsif must be set aside & the appln. be allowed with costs to the petnr.; hearing-fee two gold muhars. I direct that that part of the construction which was made by the deft.-petnrs. within the two dates, that is, 1-3 1950 & 7-3 1950, should be demolished.

Reuben J. — This petn. for leave to appeal to the F. C., now the Supreme Ct. is directed against an order passed by me, sitting singly. in Civ. Revn. No. 891 of 1945. It must be rejected on the preliminary ground that such a petn. is not maintainable.

[2] I reproduce below the relevant provisions of the Civil P. C. & the Letters Patent of the Patna H. C. :

S. 109, C. P. C. — "Subject to such rules as may from time, be made by His Majesty in Council . . . . & to the provisions hereinafter contained an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council—

(a) from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a H. C..... ..

(b) from any decree or final order passed by a H. C. in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction ; &

(c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council."

S. 110, C. P. C. — "In each of the cases mentioned in Cls. (a) & (b) of S. 109, the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Ct. of the first instance must be ten thousand rupees or upwards, and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be the same sum or upwards, or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value, and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Ct. immediately below the Ct. passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law."

S. 111, C. P. C. — "Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 109, no appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council —

(a) from the decree or order of one Judge of a H. C. constituted by His Majesty by Letters Patent or of one Judge of a Division Ct....."

S. 112, C. P. C. — "(1) Nothing contained in this Code, shall be deemed —

(a) to bar the full & unqualified of His Majesty's pleasure in receiving or rejecting appeals to His Majesty in Council, or otherwise howsoever, or

(b) to interfere with any rules made by the Judicial Committee of the P. C., & for the time being in force, for the presentation of appeals to His Majesty in Council, or their conduct before the said Judicial Committee....."

Cl. 10, Letters Patent. — "And we do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to said the H. C. of Judicature at Patna from the judgment (not being a judgment passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction ....., & not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, & not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of S. 107, Govt. of India Act, or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the of the said H. C. or one Judge of any Division Ct. pursuant to S. 108, Govt of India Act, & that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore provided an Appeal shall lie to the said H. C. from a judgment of one Judge said H. C. or one Judge of any Division Ct. pursuant to S. 108, Govt. of India Act ..in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Ct. subject to the superintendence of the said H. C. where the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal; but that the right of appeal from other judgments of Judges of the said H. C. or of such Division Ct. shall be to us.....as hereinafter provided."

Cl. 31, Letters Patent. — "And we do further ordain that any person or persons may appeal to us,.....in any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction, from any final judgment, decree or order of the H. C. of Judicature at Patna made on appeal, & from any final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the said H. C. or of any Division Ct. from which an appeal does not lie to the said H. C. under the provisions contained in Cl. 10 of these presents; provided, in either case, that the sum or matter at issue is of the amount or value of not less than 10,000 rupees, or that such judgment, decree or order involves, directly or indirectly, some claim, demand or question to or respecting property amounting to or of the value of not less than 10,000 rupees ; or from any other final judgment, decree or order made either on appeal or otherwise as aforesaid, when the said H. C. declares that the case is a fit one for appeal to us,....."

Cl. 41 Letters Patent.—"And we do further ordain & declare that all the provisions of these Our Letters Patent are subject to the Legislative powers of the Governor General in Legislative Council ....."

[3] The right of appeal with special leave is reserved by S. 112 of the Code. Subject to this, it will be observed, S. 111 forbids an appeal from the decision of a single Judge. Mr. Das, appearing for the petnrs. contends that an appeal lies in the present case under the provision contained in the latter portion of Cl. 31, Letters Patent, which, according to him, is not governed by S. 111. It has been held that Cl. 39, Letters Patent of the Presidency H. Cs., which corresponds to Cl. 31 of our Letters Patent, is governed by S. 111, Hanmant Shriniwas v. Shriniwas Lakshmipati, A. I. R. (18) 1931 Bom. 503 : (134 I. C 1164), Satyanarayana Varaprasada Rao v. Venkata Bhashyakarla Rao, 46 Mad. 958 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Mad. 399) and Sadar Ali v. Dalimuddin, 56 Cal. 512 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 640 F.B.). Mr. Das seeks to distinguish these cases on the ground that the Letters of the Presidency Cts. were made Patent before the enactment of the Civil P. C. of 1908, whereas the Letters of this Ct. were made Patent after that date. He argues that Cl. 41 of our Letters Patent & the corresponding Cl. 44, Letters Patent of the Presidency Cts. make the Letters Patent subject, not to existing Indian legislation, but to Indian legislation enacted subsequent to the date of the Letters Patent. There is a decision of this Ct. against Mr. Das, reported in Parmeshwar Dayal v. Brindaban Chandra, 17 P. L. T. 173 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 106). This, however, was a case in which leave was asked for to appeal against a decision of a single Judge in second appeal, & the point which Mr. Das urges before us was not raised. Mr. Das points out that in such a case the provisions of Cl. 31 itself bar an appeal to His Majesty in Council, because Cl. 10, Letters Patent, provides for an appeal to the H. C. against a decision of a single Judge in second appeal, a line of reasoning which was folld. in Lutu Bapu v. Patiram Atmaram, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Nag. 96 : (I. L. R. (1948) Nag. 425). The only reported case in which the point raised by Mr. Das was considered is Administrator, Lahore Municipality v. Bakhshi Ram, I. L. R. (1942) 23 Lah. 592 : (A.I.R. (29) 1942 Lah. 169 F.B.) in which it was answered against Mr. Das but merely obiter, the decision being based on the same line of reasoning as was followed in the Nagpur case.

[4] The contention of Mr. Das is contrary to the settled practice of this Ct. which has always regarded Cl. 31, Letters Patent, as governed by S. 110 (111?) of the Code, so that the mere existence of circumstances satisfying the requirements of Cl. 31 as regards valuation will not be sufficient for an appeal to His Majesty to lie in a case in which the judgment sought to be appealed against is a judgment of affirmance. I do not think, however, that for the purposes of the present case it is necessary to enter into a discussion of the point raised by Mr. Das for, in my opinion, there is no conflict between S. 111 & Cl. 31.

[5] To understand Cl. 31, we have to read it with Cl. 10. This latter clause is concerned to provide for appeals against decisions of single Judges, exercising under S. 103, Govt. of India Act, 1915, the original or appellate jurisdiction vested in the Ct. The appeal, if any, from such decisions is to lie to the H. C. itself. In making the provision, the clause refers in terms to certain decisions of a final nature which a Judge sitting singly is likely to make, namely, decisions in exercise of revisional jnrisdiction, in exercise of the powers of superintendence under the Govt. of India Act & decisions in exercise of criminal jurisdiction. Excluding such decisions, it provides for an appeal against other decisions of a single sitting Judge, imposing in the case of decision in second appeal a condition regarding a certificate of fitness. Then, in the latter portion of the clause, there is a reservation of the right of appeal to His Majesty from "other judgments of Judges . . . as hereinafter provided." The reference is to Cl. 31. The use of the term "other judgment" considered in the light of the specific mention in the body of the clause of the different kinds of decisions which a single Judge might give, & the further use of the term "Judges" in contradistinction to the repeated use of the term "one Judge" in the body of the clause suggest that the provision in Cl. 31 is confined to decisions of more than one Judge.

[6] Coming to Cl. 31, we find that the first portion of it is concerned with proposed appeal against decisions in appeals or in the exercise of original jurisdiction, which proposed appeals satisfy certain conditions as regards valuation. The decisions, regarding appeals against which provision is here made, are spoken of in language which is at the first sight somewhat obscure, namely,

"any final judgment, decree or order of the H. C. of Judicature at Patna made on appeal, & any final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the said H. C., or of any Division Ct."

Under S. 108, Govt. of India Act, 1915, the original & appellate jurisdiction vested in a H. C. may be exercised "by one or more Judges, or by Division Cts. constituted by two or more Judges of the H. C." We have thus decisions of a Judge or of Judges or of a Division Ct. all of which are decisions of the H. C. itself. It seems to me, therefore, that the phrase "of the High Court of Judicature at Patna" governs both the classes of cases described in this portion of the clause, & so also does the phrase "by Judges of the said H. C or of any Division Ct." That is to say, this provision is for appeals against decisions of the H. C. in exercise of original or appellate jurisdiction, where the decision is of Judges of the H. C. or of any Division Ct. thereof. The latter portion of Cl. 31 relates to appeals against "any other final judgment, decree or order made either on appeal or otherwise as aforesaid," which do not satisfy the requirements of the first portion of Cl. 31 as regards valuation. The term "as aforesaid" relates back to the first portion of Cl. 31 & avoids a repetition of the description already given thereof the nature of the decisions to which the clause relates, namely, decisions in appeal or in exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the H. C. or of any Division Ct. thereof. The word "otherwise," in my opinion, does not include an order in exercise of revisional jurisdiction. In this view of the clause, it is clear that it does not cover the present case & therefore, an appeal is barred by S. 111.

[7] Our attention has been drawn to Lachmi Narain v. Balmakund, 6 Pat. L. J. 116 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Pat. 37) in which a certificate was granted for an appeal to His Majesty in Council against an order of the H. C. passed in the exercise of civil revn. That seems to have been an order of a D. B. coming within the provisions of cl. (c) of S. 109, Civil P. C., & therefore, was not governed by S. 111.

[8] On the above grounds, I would dismiss this petn. with costs. The hearing fee will be assessed at one gold mohar.

Hareshwar Prasad Sinha & Pitambar Jha — for Applt.; S. C. Mukherji & Nandlal Untwalia—for Resp.

Reuben J. — This appeal by the deft in a suit for ejectment arises in the following circumstances.

[2] The suit relating to a house in Nabinagar Bazar was instituted by the pltf. as a suit for the ejectment of a tenant on the termination of his tenancy by a notice to quit. The case of the pltf. as stated in the plaint, is that he had a room with a verandah in Nabinagar Bazar; the building collapsed in the earthquake of January 1934, & the deft. who wanted a house for establishing a shoe shop, agreed to reconstruct the building at an estimated cost of Rs. 200 & to remain in the building as a tenant at an annual rental of Rs. 40, the cost of the building to be set off against the rental payable for the first five years. The pltf. alleged that the deft. reconstructed the building in accordance with the agreement & the cost of the reconstruction was completely satisfied by setting off against it the rent up to 31-12-1939. Thereafter, the deft. agreed to pay a rent of Rs. 42 per annum but, in fact, made no payment whatever. In addition to the prayer for ejectment, the pltf. asked for arrears of rent up to the date of the expiry of the notice to quit & damages thereafter.

[3] The deft. in his written statement, denied the relationship of landlord & tenant & set up a title in himself. He pleaded that the property in question belonged to one Mathura Saran, a member of the same family as the pltf. that Mt. Champa Kuer, widow of Mathura Saran, sold the property to one Lachhmi Prasad Upadhyay by a registered sale deed dated 4-9-1931, in the farzi name of Hakim Missir, a servant of Lachhmi Prasad Upadhyay; & that this deft. purchased it from Lachhmi Prasad Upadhyay by a registered sale deed dated 1-3-1936. He denied the allegation in the plaint about the agreement to rebuilt the house & to hold it at a rent of Rs. 40, & also the allegation about the subsequent agreement to pay rent at Rs. 42.

[4] The parties went to trial on the following issues :

"1. Has the pltf. any cause of action or right to sue ?
2. Is the suit as framed maintainable ?
3. Is the Ct.-f. paid sufficient ?
4. Is the suit barred by the law of limitation ?
5. Is the pltf. entitled to claim rent & damages for the 'room & osara' and also recovery of possession of the same as mentioned in the plaint ?
6. Has the pltf. got any right & title to the land over which the room & osara stand ?
7. Did the deft. agree to set off Rs. 200 being the cost of rebuilding the room & osara after the earthquake against their rent ?
8. Is the kebala dated 1-3 36 propounded by the deft. valid, genuine & for consideration ?
9. To what relief, if any, is the pltf. entitled ?"

[5] In his judgment, however, the Munsif of Muzaffarpur considered only two issues, observing:

"He (the deft.) has taken several other pleas in the written statement; & several issues were originally framed. But the decision of the suit rests on the following two issues only. 1. Is there relationship of landlord & tenant between the parties ? If so, is the pltf. entitled to realise arrears of rent & damages ? 2. Was the notice to quit served on the deft duly ?

In the Munsif's order-sheet, there is nothing to show that the issues were amended by him before evidence was adduced by the parties, & the indications are that the issues as stated in his judgment were framed by him either at the time of writing the judgment or during the course of the trial.

[6] On the first issue, as framed by him, the Munsif found the evidence adduced by the pltf. insufficient to establish the relationship of landlord & tenant. Hence, he dismissed the suit without coming to any finding on the second issue.

[7] The pltf. appealed against this decision. This appeal (Title Appeal No. 118 of 1943) was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge, first Ct. Muzaffarpur, on 9-2-1944. He agreed with the Munsif that the evidence of the pltf. was insufficient to establish the relationship of landlord & tenant. In view of the decision in Ramdahin Lohar v. Ramdhani Mahto, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : (199 I. C. 91), however, he considered that the Munsif ought to have decided the issue regarding the pltf's. title to the property, & if he decided the point in favour of the pltf., should have directed the deft. to deliver possession of it to the pltf. He remanded the case to the Munsif for further trial & for a finding on the issue regarding the subsistence of valid title in the pltf. observing :

"A specific issue on the question of title was raised to that effect (vide issue No. 6 of the issues framed by the lower Ct. on 24-4-41). So in view of the ruling cited above Ramdahin Lohar's case, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : (199 I. C. 91) the pltf. is entitled to recover possession of the rent claimed land & room in suit if he is found to have a subsisting title to the same. Parties also adduced some evidence in proof of their respective title to the disputed room and site thereof. But the same do not seem to have been fully considered by the learned Munsif. Since the deft. is admittedly in possession of the land and room, it would not be sufficient to investigate and decide merely the question of title to the land and room but also the issue as to whether the pltf. was in possession of the land and room within 12 years before the date of the institution of this suit. In the circumstances the only course open before us is to remand the case to the Court below for a clear finding on the issue as to whether the pltf. has a subsisting title to the disputed land and the room thereupon. The parties may be given an opportunity to adduce further evidence on the said question at issue if any of them so desires."

The issue of limitation mentioned by the Subordinate Judge is not a new one, being issue No. 4 of the issues as originally framed.

[8] The deft. came up in appeal against this decision in Second Appeal No. 255 of 1944, which was disposed of by Beevor, J. on 29-8-1945. His Lordship set aside the order of remand because, in his opinion, the circumstances did not justify a remand for further evidence. He pointed out that, even if the pltf. had a right to succeed on his title, this would give him no right to adduce any evidence in addition to the evidence already adduced by him in the trial Court. It was sought before him to challenge the correctness of the view taken in the case of Ramdahin Lohar, (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : 199 I. C. 91) as to the possibility of giving the pltf. relief on title in a suit brought to eject a tenant. His Lordship refused to consider the point as it would only arise after the pltf. was found to have established a subsisting title.

[9] Under the direction of Beevor J. the appeal has now been reheard by the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Muzaffarpur, who has found that the pltf. has a subsisting title to the property and has decreed the suit for ejectment and has allowed damages at the rate of Rs. 40 per year from the period of the commencement of the deft.'s occupation of the property. Hence, the present appeal.

[10] Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha for the applt. has contended strenuously that the proposition of law enunciated in Ramdahin Lohar's case, (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : 199 I. C. 91) is incorrect. He relies on Govindakumar v. Mahini Mohan, 57 Cal. 349 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 42) which, he urges, was approved of in an F. B. decision of this Court reported in Narayan Jha v. Jogni Prasad, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 184 : (13 Pat.

329 S. B.) and on Chennaverasawmy v. Satyanarayana, 21 I. C. 560 (Mad.).

[11] Govindakumar Sur, (57 Cal. 349 : A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 42) was a case of an action in ejectment brought by the pltfs. after the expiry of a notice to quit served on the tenants defts. The question which arose before their Lordships was that of the valuation of the suit for the purposes of court-fee and of jurisdiction. Their Lordships held that the suit came within the provisions of S. 7, cl. xi, sub-cl (cc), Court-fees Act, and that the term "tenant" in this section includes in the case of such a suit an ex-tenant, whose tenancy has been terminated by a notice to quit. In the course of this decision, they dealt with an earlier decision of Cammiade J. reported in Gobinda Ram v. Dulupuda Dutta, 32 C. W. N. 1113 : (A. I. R (15) 1928 Cal. 753), in which it had been held that the ex-tenant in such a suit is not a tenant within the meaning of S. 7, cl. xi, sub-cl. (cc) and, therefore, the valuation for the purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction should be on the basis of the market-value of the property in suit. Their Lordships pointed out that, though the interpretation put by Cammiade J. on the term "tenant" was not correct, his decision was nevertheless correct on the facts of the case, because, in a previous rent suit brought by the pltf. and fought up to the H. C., the pltf. had been defeated on the issue as to the relationship of landlord and tenant. They, however, remarked that the "proper course would have been to dismiss the suit, when it was found that there had been no contract of tenancy between the parties and not to convert it to a suit of another nature—a declaratory and possessory suit—the cause of action in the two suits being different, giving rise to different issues."

This remark was in the nature of an obiter dictum.

[12] The case of Narayan Jha (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 184 : 13 Pat. 329 S. B.) was similarly one in which the question of valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction arose. It was disposed of by the Full Bench on the basis that, under S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, the objection could not be raised because it had not been raised at the earliest opportunity and because the lower appellate Court had not recorded that there was any prejudice by reason of the incorrectness of the valuation. In the course of this decision, the F. B. referred to the case of Govindakumar Sur (57 Cal. 349 : A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 42) and observed that, if the question of title is raised by the deft. and it is found as a fact that there was no contract of tenancy, the proper course would be to dismiss the suit and not to convert it into a declaratory and possessory suit "which is of another nature entirely." This observation was clearly a obiter dictum.

[13] The facts upon which the case of Chennaverasawmy, 21 I. C. 560 (Mad.) was decided, do not appear from the law report. The suit as framed was brought on the basis of a tenancy for the ejectment of the tenant. Both the Courts below found against the tenancy and it was contended that the applt. was nevertheless entitled to have his title to the land adjudicated on, and, if it were proved, to get a decree for the ejectment of the deft. as a trespasser. Ayling and Oldfield JJ. agreed with the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment for refusing to go into the question of title, but they did not state in their judgment what the reasons were. The case of Balmakund v. Dalu, 25 ALL. 498 : (1903 A. W. N. 112 F. B.), which was relied on by Agarwala J. (as he then was) in Ramdahin Lohar's case, (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat 379 : 199 I. C. 91) was cited before their Lordships on behalf of the applt. In distinguishing that case, their Lordships observed :

"It would be impossible in this case to enquire fully into the title to the property on the pleadings as they stand."

Evidently, it was a case in which the question of title had not been fully raised in the pleadings and, therefore, could not be investigated.

[14] The decision in Ramdahin Lohar's case, (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : 199 I. C. 91) is based upon a decision of an F. B. of the Allahabad High Court in Balmakund's case, (25 ALL. 498 : 1903 A. W. N. 112 F B.). There is another decision of an F. B. decision of the Allahabad H. C. reported in the case of Abdul Ghani v. Mt. Babni, 25 ALL. 256 : (1903 A. W. N. 18 F. B.). One or the other of these decisions has formed the basis of all the reported decisions of this Court to which our attention has been drawn. I will, therefore, deal with these two cases before coming to the cases of this High Court.

[15] In Abdul Ghani's case, (25 ALL. 256 : 1903 A. W. N. 18 F. B.), the pltf. sued to recover possession of a house which was in the possession of the deft. The pltf. alleged in his plaint that, about eight years previously, the deft. had hired the house from him at a monthly rent of one rupee, and that the deft. failed to pay rent for a period of ten months, and that the pltf. had given her notice to quit. The pltf. claimed possession of the house and damages but made no claim for arrears of rent. The defence set up was that the deft. and her sons had been in adverse possession of the house in question for a period of 17 years. The deft. denied that she had ever hired the house from the pltf. and alleged that she had purchased the land which formed the site of the house and had built the house thereon. On these pleadings, issues were joined, among others, whether the pltf. was the owner of the house in dispute and whether the deft had been in possession of the house for more than twelve years. The Court of first instance found that the pltf. had not succeeded in proving the tenancy alleged by him, but that the pltf. had all along been in proprietary possession of the house, and that the deft.'s possession was merely permissive. The Munsif accordingly decreed the pltf.'s claim. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision on the sole ground that, in as much as it had been established that the deft.'s possession of the house was permissive, and the pltf. had not come to the Court on the allegation that the deft.'s possession was permissive, he could not succeed in the suit. On a remand by the H. C. for the trial of the issues : (1) What was the nature of the occupation of the house in dispute by the deft ? and (2) Was the deft.'s possession adverse or permissive ? If adverse, for how long did the deft. hold such possession ?, the lower appellate Court found that the pltf. was the owner of the house, and that the deft. occupied the house as a friend with his permission, and, further, that the deft. had never before asserted a title to the house in dispute, and that her possession was permissive. The F. B. set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restored that of the Munsif, observing :

"It is now contended before us by the learned vakil for the resp. notwithstanding these findings, that inasmuch as the pltf. did not establish the case which he set up, namely, that there had previously been a subsisting tenancy, his suit must fail. We cannot accede to this contention. It is clear that the deft. was not taken by surprise. She clearly understood the case which she had to meet, namely, the case set up by the pltf. that he was the owner of the house .... We think that there was nothing in the claim & the issues which were raised which could possibly have taken the deft. by surprise, & now that the true facts have been ascertained by the Ct. the technical difficulty which has been relied upon cannot, we think, be allowed to defeat the pltfs.'s claim."

[16] In Balmakund's case, (25 ALL. 498 : 1903 A.W.N. 112 F. B) the pltf. came into Ct. alleging that he was the owner of a certain cattle shed, which he had built at his own expense; that the deft. had rented from him a portion of this shed; that after a while he had ceased to pay rent, & that, when the pltf. asked him to vacate the shed, he refused to do so. He alleged termination of the tenancy by the service of a notice to quit & asked for two reliefs: (1) that a decree be passed against the deft. for five months' arrears of rent for the shed, & (2) for ejectment of the deft. from the shed. The deft. traversed the allegations in the plaint. He pleaded that the pltf. was not the owner of the cattle shed, & that he (the deft.) had been in proprietary & adverse possession of it for several years. The Ct. of first instance framed only one issue, namely, whether the deft. had rented from the pltf. a part of the cattle shed in question. Notwithstanding this, evidence as to title was adduced on both sides, & the Munsif came to the conclusion that, although the pltf. had failed to prove the lease, there probably had been a lease of some sort, &, in any case, the cattle shed belonged to the pltf. & he was entitled to eject the deft. therefrom. The Ct. accordingly decreed the pltf.'s claim for ejectment but not for rent. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the pltf. could succeed only if he succeeded in proving the tenancy. Agreeing with the Munsif that the pltf. had failed to prove the lease, he dismissed the pltf.'s claim altogether. The pltf. came up in appeal to the H. C. & as the two Judges who heard the appeal were divided in opinion, the decree of the Subordinate Judge stood. Against this decree, the matter came up in Letters Patent appeal to the F. B. In proposing the order of the F. B. reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge & directing a trial by him on the evidence already upon record of the issue, who is the owner of the cattle shed, the subject matter of the suit & a return of his finding thereon to the H. C., Stanley C. J. observed :

"It is obvious from this that the question of title to the property was definitely raised. & it is clear from the evidence in the case that this question was determined after an examination of the evidence which was adduced on both sides upon this question .... The question of title was clearly raised in the pleadings, & the evidence on both sides was directed to it. The deft. could not be, & was not, taken by surprise in regard to it."

He dealt with the observation of Knox J. in the second appeal, in supporting the decision of the Subordinate Judge, that the pltf. having come to Ct. on a false case was not entitled to any relief, & pointed out that on the findings of the Munsif it did not at all follow that the pltf. had put forward a false case. In agreeing to the order proposed by his Lordship the Chief Justice, Banerji J. drew attention to an observation of Chamier J. in Haji Khan v. Baldeo Das, 1901 A. W. N. 188 : (24 ALL. 90) to the effect that, if a Ct. sees that the pltf. is entitled to the relief which he claims, although on grounds other than those put forward in his claim, the Ct. should grant such relief if the defts. were not thereby taken by surprise. He pointed out that, in the case before the F. B., the question of title was properly raised & arose for investigation.

[17] The case of Balmakund, (25 ALL. 498: 1903 A. W. N. 112 F. B.) was followed by Wort J. in Mohammad Yusuf v. Mohd. Waheed, A.I.R. (23) 1936 Pat. 147 : (161 I. C 585). In this case a claim for adverse possession was set up by the deft. & it was found by the Cts. of fact that the pltf. was in possession of the suit property within twelve years of the institution of the suit. His Lordship stressed the remarks in the judgment of Banerji J. to which I have refd. to above, &, referring to the facts of the case before him, remarked :

"They (the defts.) in fact claimed adverse title in contradiction to title by adverse possession & they invited the Cts. below to investigate it. Both Cts. have come to the conclusion that they have not established that title. Now it would be a matter of surprise to me if at this time of the day in India a pltf. who has established facts which would entitle him to the particular form of relief claimed, should be debarred from obtaining that relief merely because the allegations or some of them had not been established in their entirety."

In Ramdahin Lohar's case (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : 199 I. C. 91), Agarwala J. (as he then was) followed the decision in Balmakund's case (25

ALL. 498: 1903 A. W. N. 112 F.B.) pointing out that there was no suggestion that the deft. was taken by surprise, that in fact the deft. had produced a parwana on which he relied, & the question of title "was thoroughly investigated by the trial Ct. on evidence which the deft. placed before the Ct." To the same effect is the decision of Beevor J. in the case of Saral Sonar v. Sudama Singh, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 103 : (226 I. C. 137), where his Lordship folld. the decision in Abdul Ghani's case (25 ALL. 256 : 1903 A. W. N. 18 F. B.) and in that of Mohammad Yusuf, (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 147 : 161 I. C. 585).

[18] In support of his contention, Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Singh has referred also to Jhari Singh v. Pirthi Nath, 2 Pat. L. J. 69: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 50) and Mt. Walihan v. Jogeshwar, 7 C. L. J. 44 : (35 Cal. 189 P. C.). The former case is of a converse nature to the case before us. The pltf. sued for a declaration of his title to the land in dispute, & that he might be put into possession thereof by ousting the defts. & that he might be awarded mesne profits for use & occupation during the period they had been in wrongful possession. The suit was decreed by the Ct. of first instance. In appeal by the defts. the J. C. held that the pltf.'s case, so far as it was based on eviction & the right to claim khas possession, had not been established, but that there was a cause of action in reference to the pltf.'s title. He accordingly granted a declaration of the pltf.'s title & upheld the decree so far as it awarded mesne profits on the basis of rent payable to the pltf. on the foot of a tenancy existing between him & defts. 1 to 3. This decree for rent was set aside by the H. C. on the ground that a pltf. coming into Ct. with one case, & failing to prove it, should not be permitted to succeed upon another, & that directly in antagonism with his primary allegations. Their Lordships pointed out that it is not open to the Ct. to convert one cause of action into a different cause of action, a view also expressed in Mt. Walihan's case (7 C. L. J. 44 : 35 Cal. 189 P. C.). There is nothing in these two decisions inconsistent with the decisions in the F. B. cases of the Allahabad H. C. I have mentioned above how, in the case of Balmakund (25 ALL. 498: 1903 A W.N. 112 F.B.), Stanley C. J. dealt with the remark of Knox J. that the pltf. had come to Ct. with a false case & pointed out that this conclusion did not follow from the findings of the Munsif. As regards the cause of action, it has been pointed out by Banerji J. in the case of Balmakund (25 ALL 498: 1903 A. W. N. 112 F. B.), as also by Agarwala J. (as he then was) in the case of Ramdahin Lohar (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Pat. 379 : 199 I. C. 91), that a suit coming within the provisions of S. 7 (xi) (cc), Court-fees Act, is essentially a suit for ejectment on the allegation that the deft. is a trespasser, the tenancy having terminated, &, therefore, there is not really a different cause of action.

[19] Nor do I think that there is any conflict between the observations in the cases of Govindakumar Sur (57 Cal. 349 : A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 42) and Narayan Jha (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 184 : 13 Pat. 329 S. B.) & the decisions of the F. B of the Allahabad H. C. All that was observed in the two former cases was that ordinarily, a suit brought as a suit for ejecting an ex-tenant should not be converted into a suit for ejectment on a finding of title. There are several reasons for this. There is, to mention one reason, the question of c.-f. A suit of the former kind is usually an easy suit, for it involves only an investigation of the existence of the alleged tenancy & whether the relationship of landlord & tenant has terminated. If the relationship is established, it is not open to the deft. to raise the question of title &, if it is not established, the pltf. will ordinarily fail. This is one of the reasons why a lesser c.-f. is charged for a suit of this kind than is charged for a suit for ejectment on title. This is not merely a question of c.-f. but also affects jurisdiction. The higher valuation placed upon a suit of the latter kind means that, if the property is of value, the decision of such a suit will go to a Ct. of higher jurisdiction, presumably more competent to deal with the questions involved. There is another way in which the question of c.-f. is relevant. If it is laid down as a rule that a pltf. suing to eject an ex-tenant is entitled to succeed on title, if he fails to establish the relationship of landlord & tenant, it will be a temptation for litigations to avoid the payment of higher c.-f. & higher costs by falsely bringing suits for ejectment on title in the form of suits for the ejectment of an ex-tenant. It is in this connection that the remarks made by Knox J. & by the D. B. in the case of Jhari Singh (2 Pat. L. J. 69 : A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 50) become relevant.

[20] It appears to me that the relief which the F. B. of the Allahabad H. C. considered the Cts. could & shoud give, is an equitable relief entirely within the discretion of the Ct. within the provisions of O. 7, R. 7, Civil P. C. If the question of title has been raised in the trial of the suit & has been investigated, the parties knowing about it & adducing evidence on the point, & Ct. is in a position to give the pltf. the relief asked for on the basis of his title, there is no reason why the Ct. should drive the pltf. to file another suit in order to get this relief, provided that the pltf. has done nothing to disqualify him from receiving equitable relief, e.g., by coming to Ct. with a false story. In this view of the matter, the question of c.-f. is no bar to the grant of such relief. Nor will the question of pecuniary jurisdiction arise, unless an appellate Ct. is able to come to a finding within the meaning of S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, that there has been prejudice caused. It is in the light of these remarks that the case must be examined to see whether the pltf. before us can be given relief on title.

[21] Looked at in this light, it seems clear to me that he cannot. It is true that the question of title was put in issue & that these were the issues on which the parties went to trial. I am not at all sure, however, that it was on these issues that the parties actually adduced evidence. I say this not only from the fact that the Munsif considered only two issues, namely, the issues of the existence of the relationship of landlord & tenant & of the sufficiency of the notice to quit, but because the order-sheet & the judgment itself indicate that even at the time of the trial the Munsif was proceeding on the basis that these were the only two relevant issues. The question of title was far from simple, as is apparent from a perusal of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. Nevertheless, the Munsif, having concluded in one day the recording of the evidence, fixed the very next day for delivery of judgment & delivered his judgment on that day. Further, we find from his judgment that a petn. filed by the deft. for examining himself on commission, on the ground that he was ill & unable to come to Ct. was rejected by the Munsif because he considered it unnecessary to examine the deft. "when the evidence adduced by the pltf. falls short of establishing a case for him;" that is to say, the pltf. having failed to make out the relationship of landlord & tenant, the Munsif refused to let the deft. adduce all the evidence which he wished to adduce. That the Munsif did not take all the necessary evidence on the question of title would also appear from the action taken by the Subordinate Judge in appeal in dealing with the question of title. The first Subordinate Judge, before whom the matter came in appeal, considered the evidence recorded as insufficient, & remanded the case to the Munsif for a finding on title after giving the parties an opportunity to adduce fresh evidence thereon. This order, as I have mentioned, was set aside by Beevor J. The matter then came before the successor of the previous Subordinate Judge. He, too, found the evidence on the record inadequate by itself for coming to a decision on the point. He, therefore, held a local inspection. It is well established that the purpose of such a local inspection is to enable the Ct. to understand the evidence on the record & not to bring fresh evidence on the record. I am unable to say here that the local inspection has not also been used for the latter purpose. For instance, the Subordinate Judge mentions that in his sketch map he has incorporated the admissions of the parties as regards the possession of different persons. Incidentally, I may remark that it is difficult to follow the note of local inspection, as it makes references to certain marks on the Subordinate Judge's sketch plan which do not appear in that sketch map. In consequence. I have not been able to follow the reasoning in the Subordinate Judge's judgment, based upon his memo. of local inspection, by which he has arrived at his conclusion on the point of title.

[22] In his judgment, the Subordinate Judge characterises the evidence on the point of title as "very meagre." He then proceeds to deal with certain "admitted" facts. It is not quite clear what admissions were made, whether the admissions are contained in the record as prepared by the Munsif or were made before the Subordinate Judge. The case of the pltf. depended upon an award said to have been made by arbitrators in relation to the property of the family of which the pltf. & Mathura Saran were members. According to the pltf. the property, which forms the subject matter of the suit, was allotted to the pltf. by this award. The defence challenged the genuineness of this award, but it was held by the Subordinate Judge to be genuine. The insufficiency of the evidence on the point is clear from the ground given by the Subordinate Judge for finding this award to be genuine :

> "I find from a perusal of the contents of the award, which I shall discuss presently that the genuineness of the award cannot be questioned."

And, again,

> "The contents of the award show that great pains were taken by the arbitrators in giving the award & that the facts stated therein could not have come to light unless there were statements of the parties before them & the arbitrators perused the documents to which they have refd. in the award."

This award, be it noted, purports to have been given about three years after the reference to the arbitrators was made, & does not bear the signature of one of the three arbitrators. These points were glossed over, however, because pltf.'s witness 3 was not cross examined regarding them. It is on the basis of this award that the Subordinate Judge comes to the conclusion that the property in suit belongs to the pltf. & it is, also, on the basis of this award that he finds that the pltf. was in possession of the property at least till 1933 (vide p. 10 of the brief).

[23] In these circumstances, I find it difficult to hold that the question of title has been fairly tried between the parties & that the pltf. is entitled to ask the Ct. in its discretion to grant him relief on title.

[24] On the above grounds, I would allow this appeal, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge & dismiss the suit. The deft. will get his costs throughout.

[25] Shearer J. — I agree. I must say, however, that I find it difficult to conceive of a case where a pltf. seeking to recover possession of land from the deft. on the footing that the deft is his tenant & his tenancy has been determined, can be entitled to a decree on the footing that the deft. is not a tenant but a mere trespasser. If there is evidence to show the deft. is the latter & not the former, it must have been let in wrongly or by accident. In this particular case, however, there is no such evidence. Where the Ct. is unable to say, on the evidence, whether the deft. is a tenant or a licensee but is able to say definitely that if he is not the one, he is the other the position is quite different & there is no difficulty in passing a decree.

R.G.D. Appeal allowed.

A. F. O. D. No. 166 of 1946, D/- 27-2-1951.

(a) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42, Proviso — Suit for recovery of rent against A with declaration of title as against B who claimed adversely — Maintainability.

Where the pltf. brings a suit for recovery of arrears of way-leave rent against one set of defts. on the basis of agreement entered into with them & also prays for declaration of his right to receive the rent as against the other set of defts. who were adversely claiming the right under a sale-deed from the pltf. & who had actually realised the rent for many years from the first set of defts. the two parts of the plaint are intimately connected with each other & the declaration asked for in one part of the plaint is the basis of claim in the other part. In such a case the money decree is a relief consequential upon the declaration & is as much a decree against the second set of defts. who claimed adversely as it is against the first set directed to make the payment. Such a suit cannot be treated as merely for declaration against the second set & therefore is not barred by the Proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act. F. A. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 2 & O. 7, R. 7 — Failure to claim particular relief — Effect — Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42.

A pltf. is not bound to seek all the remedies open to him. If he omits to sue for any particular relief arising out of his cause of action, he will at most forfeit his right to sue afterwards in respect of that relief. Hence the fact that in a suit for declaration not hit by the provisions of S. 42, Specific Relief Act the pltf. omits to claim all the further reliefs which he might have asked for will not affect the maintainability of the suit. (c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Leased land — Dispossession, what constitutes.

Where the owner of property has given that property to a lessee & under the terms of the lease, is entitled merely to realise rent from the leaseholder & not to direct possession of the property leased, his dispossession can only occur by a stranger, who claims adverse to him, intercepting his receipt of rent from the leaseholder. Mere receipt of rent by stranger claiming adversely to the real owner is not sufficient by itself to constitute dispossession. The rent must also be received adversely. 8 W. R. 135, 2 I. (d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 120 — Suit for declaration & recovery of rent.

Where the suit is not a purely declaratory suit but is one for declaration of title with consequential relief of recovery of rent in which it is necessary for the Ct. to come to a finding as to title as a preliminary to the decree for rent, & the claim for recovery of rent is not barred by time, then the prayer for determination of title would equally be unaffected & would not be barred by time. (e) Deed — Construction — Sale — Mining lease — Subsequent sale by lessor of his interest under lease — Right to way-leave rent if passes to vendee — T. P. Act (1882), S. 8.

There is a distinction between a grant or a reservation of 'coal' & a grant or a reservation, as the case may be, of a 'mine'. The word 'coal' does not bear a definite meaning, & its meaning must be gathered from the document under construction. 34 L. J. (N. S.) 406; L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 166; (1876) 1 I. A. C. 701; (1876) 3 Ch. 826; (1907) 1 Ch. 256, Referred.

A granted a mining lease in favour of G in respect of the 'underground coal' lying below a plot of land X. G in his turn made a sub-lease of his interest in favour of P who also possessed the mining rights in another plot of land Y lying adjacent to it. By an agreement between A & P the latter agreed to pay way-leave rent to the former in respect of foreign coal carried to the surface throuh the underground passages in plot X. Subsequently, A executed a sale-deed in favour of R by which A sold the underground coal land of his plot X. The deed provided "whatever right & title I had by virtue of the patta in favour of G shall all from this day devolve on you". Under the mining lease the grantor A had in respect of the coal only the right to realise the royalty & other dues in accordance with the lease & in the event of expiry of the lease or its earlier surrender to enter into possession of the coal:

Held, on a construction of the sale-deed as a whole the right transferred to R was confined to the coal, regarded as so much mineral, lying below the surface of plot X. There was no intention to transfer the vendor's title in the cubical space within which the coal was comprised & therefore, A's right under the way-leave agreement to realise the way-leave rent did not pass to R. P. R. Das & R. S. Chatterji — for Applts; Mahabir Prasad, Lala Atul Chandra, Jyotirmay Ghosh & Bhabananda Mukherji — for Resps.

Reuben J. — The applts. whom I shall call the Roys, were defts. 4 to 13 in the suit out of which this appeal arises.

[2] The suit was brought by the pltf. resp. to recover arrears of way-leave rent for the year 1931 to 1942 from defts. 1 to 3 under the terms of an agreement dated 14-4-1925 & also for a declaration that the pltf. & not the Roys, is entitled to the way-leave rent under this agreement. The facts leading up to the suit are as follows. In the year 1908, Banwari Lal, the father of the pltf. granted a mining lease to one Debendra Nath Ghosh for a period of 999 years in respect of coal lying subjacent to a block mauza Dharmaband representing a share of fourteen annas in the mauza. In 1911, Ghosh in his turn made a sub lease of his interest excluding coal seams Nos. 17 & 18 to Mr. H. A. Pringle, whose widow is deft. 1. Pringle also possessed the mining rights in the coal lying under the block of Dharmaband mauza representing the two annas share of that mauza. For convenience of reference, I shall speak of his block as Block B & shall refer to the fourteen annas block as Block A. Defts. 2 & 3 have acquired an interest in both these properties from Pringle by subsequent assignments. The way-leave agreement, on which this suit is based, was entered into between Pringle & Banwari Lal, while Pringle was still interested in both these properties, & gave him the right to bring coal from his workings in Block B to the surface through Block A, using the existing passages & making such fresh passages as might be necessary. For this permission, he was liable under the agreement to pay Banwari Lal one anna per ton of foreign coal so carried. The Roys derive their interest in the property from a sale-deed dated 4-7-1931 executed in their favour by the pltf. According to the pltf. by this kebala, he transferred to the Roys merely his interest in the coal subjacent to Block A, thus entitling them to realise from Debendra Nath Ghosh the royalty due under the lease of 1908 &, in case of surrender, to enter into direct possession of the coal & work the coal either themselves or through fresh lessees. Difficulty arose soon after the sale-deed, however, because the Roys claimed that, under the sale-deed, the right to the way-leave also passed to them. The pltf., therefore, brought this suit having failed to recover any way-leave rent after the execution of the sale deed. The suit having been decreed, the present appeal has been filed.

[3] Three points have been pressed before us: (1) that the suit is barred under the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, 1877; (2) that the suit, so far as it is a suit for a declaration against the Roys, is barred by limitation, & (3) that, on a correct construction of the sale-deed, the right to way-leave passed to the Roys.

[4] Point No. 1.—It is the admitted case of the pltf that, since 1931, he has not realised any way-leave rent from defts 1 to 3—It appears from the record that way-leave rent due under the agreement of 1925 has been recovered by the Roys. This fact was asserted by the Roys in para. 8 of their written statement, which statement was supported by deft. 3 in para. 8 of its written statement, & the evidence of Shibram Mandal (D. W. 1) regarding the realisation has not been challenged, the only suggestion in cross-examination being that the realisation was not made before the execution of an indemnity bond, which indemnity bond was executed by the Roys in favour of defts. 2 & 3 on 18-5-1935. It is contended that, on these facts, it must be held that, even supposing that the right in question did not pass to the Roys & remained vested in the pltf., the pltf. was dispossessed by the interception of the way-leave rent & is, therefore, not entitled to sue for a mere declaration u/s 42, Specific Relief Act. It is pointed out that there were three different reliefs which, supposing the title to be in him, he was entitled to seek against the Roys, namely; (1) recovery of possession, (2) an injunction restraining them from interfering with his possession, & (3) compensation in the nature of mesne profits, whereas his sole prayer, as far as the Roys are concerned, is a prayer for a declaration of his title.

[5] It appears to me that the objection fails, first of all, on the ground that S. 42 has no application. Reading the plaint as a whole, I do not think it is right to split it in the manner indicated by this argument. I do not consider that it can be regarded as consisting of two parts, one directed against the Roys & asking for a declaration against them & the second directed against defts. 1 to 3 & asking for a money decree against them. The two parts of the plaint are intimately connected with each other & the declaration asked for in one part of the plaint is the basis of the claim in the other part. The money decree is a relief consequential upon the declaration & as I have recently explained in Phulkumari Devi v. Prahlad Prasad Arora, F. A. Nos. 211 of 1946 and 35 of 1948, D/- 24 1 1951, a money decree of this kind, where a party setting up an adverse claim to the suit property is impleaded, is as much a decree against that party as it is a decree against the person directed to make the payment. On this view, the suit is not a suit for a mere declaration & does not come within the provisions of S. 42. It is true that there are other reliefs which the pltf. might have asked for against the Roys & which he has omitted to ask for. There is no provision, however, requiring a pltf. to seek all the remedies open to him. If he omits to sue for any particular relief arising out of his cause of action, he will at most forfeit his right to sue afterwards in respect of that relief (O. II, R. 2, Civil P. C.).

[6] Secondly, I do not think that in the circumstances of the present case, it can be said that the pltf. has been dispossessed. It is well settled that, where the owner of property has given that property to a lessee &, under the terms of the lease is entitled merely to realise rent from the lease-holder & not to direct possession of the property leased, his dispossession can only occur by a stranger, who claims adverse to him, intercepting his receipt of rent from the lease-holder (Huronath Rai v. Indoo Bhoosun, 8 W. R. 135 ; Lalu Sahu v. Ghunaria Uraon, 2 I. C. 881 (Cal.) ; Omatul Mehdi v. Kulsum, 8 C. L. J. 245 : (35 Cal. 120); Satish Chunder v. Satya Churn, 14 C W. N. 576 : (5 I. C. 531) and Uday Kumar Das v. Katyani Debi, 49 Cal. 948 : (A. I. R (9) 1922 Cal. 87)). Stated in this manner the proposition appears simple, but it is fraught with difficulty & a further examination is necessary to explain what constitutes dispossession.

[7] The dictum in Huronath Rai's case, (8 W. R. 135), was obiter :

"It would be otherwise if the reversioner during the time were deprived of his rent, or if rent was received adversely to him by a stranger, as for instance, if a stranger obtained a decree against him on an intervention under u/s. 77 of Act X [10] of 1859."

With respect, I would suggest that, if his Lordship meant to say that receipt of rent by a stranger claiming adversely to the real owner is sufficient by itself to constitute dispossession, the proposition is incorrect. The position of no landowner would be safe, if he is to be regarded as dispossessed merely because his tenant, in collusion with a stranger, pays the rent to that stranger. Something more is surely necessary, & it seems to me that his Lordship implied that something by saying—"if rent was received adversely."

[8] In the case of Lalu Sahu, 2 I. C. 381 (Cal), the contest was between the defts. claiming under Ahila Koer, the widow of one Jadupat & the pltfs. claiming under the sons of Madhupat, brother of Jadupat. Jadupat predeceased Madhupat, who was in possession of the property in suit by the realization of rent therefor from the tenants at the time of his (Madhupat's) death in 1893. The question was whether Ahila Koer had dispossessed the sons of Madhupat. It was answered in the affirmative by Mookerjee J. on the ground that Ahila Koer successfully intervened in the rent suits instituted by the sons of Madhupat & defeated their attempt to realise the rent. She, thus, prevented them from exercising the only act of possession which they could exercise in respect of the property, namely, the realisation of rent.

[9] In Omatul Medhi's case, 8 C. L. J. 245 : (35 Cal. 120) Mookerjee J. stated the position in the terms which I reproduce below :

"In the case of Zamindaries where the proprietor can be in possession only by receipt of rent, he is in actual possession of his interest, if he is in receipt of rent. The zamindar's possession of the right to collect rent from the tenants in occupation is actual possession of a tangible property Sarbananda Basu v. Pran Sanker, 15 Cal. 527; Surb Narain v. Birj Mohan, 23 Cal 80. When a person has proprietary interest in land & as such is entitled to receive rent, he is in possession of his interest if he is in receipt of rent, while his tenant who is in actual occupation has possession which, in a sense, is the possession of the landlord or superior proprietor [See the observation of Lord Davey in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta, 29 Cal. 518 : (29 I. A. 104 P. C.). If, therefore, a proprietor finds that the rent receivable by him is intercepted by some other persons, he is dispossessed of his interest in the land. He loses possession, because the only mode of enjoyment by which that possession can be held, ceases to be available by the act of the trespasser." (The italics are mine.)]

The very last sentence of this citation repeats my analysis of the position in Lalu Sahu's case, (2 I. C. 381 (Cal.).)

[10] In Satish Chunder Bhuttacharya's case, 14 C. W. N. 576 : (5 I. C. 531) the question before their Lordships was the very one which I am considering here, namely, whether the proviso to S. 42 operated to bar the suit. Answering this in the negative, their Lordships stated their reason in the following words :

"Now, his position is that he is still in possession of the three plots in suit, & that he has not yet failed to recover rent from the tenants on the land. He may possibly be defeated in an attempt to recover rent, but, in the present circumstances, he has come into Ct. in order to dispel the cloud cast upon his title by the action of the deft."

According to his pleading, the pltf. had not yet been prevented by the deft. from realising his rent & therefore, the suit lay. All that had happened was that a cloud had been cast upon his title. Referring to the case of Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu, 15 Mad. 307, their Lordships remarked that, in a case of this kind, the pltf. was unable to seek any relief other than a declaration. They also refd. to the case of Loke Nath v. Keshab Ram, 13 Cal. 147, which I shall discuss later.

[11] Finally, in the case of Uday Kumar Das, 49 Cal. 948: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 87), Mookherji J. stated the general position substantially in the same way as I have stated it above, namely, that the lessor is in possession by receipt of rent from his lessee & so long as such rent is not intercepted by a trespasser, he cannot be said to have been dispossessed. It was not necessary for his Lordship to examine the question in detail, as the wrongful possession in that case was adverse against the lessee & not against the lessor, the rent due to the lessor having been realised by him throughout, although a portion of the holding was not in the possession of the lessee.

[12] Let us now proceed to consider the facts of the present case. It is true that since 1931 the pltf. has not realised the way-leave rent & that some realisations of this rent have been made by the Roys. The period of limitation for the realisation of the rent by the pltf. has not yet expired & the suit with which we are now concerned has been instituted for realising that very rent. If the right to realise that rent is vested in the pltf. the fact that the Roys have made certain realisations on account of that rent will not stand in the way of the pltfs. getting a decree for the rent & putting that decree into execution. Further, it appears from the record that even the payments that have been made by defts. 2 & 3 towards the way-leave rent have been made only after the execution of an indemnity bond by the Roys. Therefore, these defts. are not really denying the title of the pltf. & have provided against the possibility of the pltf. being found entitled & obtaining a decision to that effect. This also appears from para. 8 of the written statement of deft. 3 which states that the deft. is informed & believe it to be correct that by the deed of sale the pltf. parted with his right to realise the way-leave rent. In these circumstances, I do not think that it can be said that the Roys by their action have prevented the pltf. from realising the way-leave rent. Hence, there is no dispossession.

[13] Another answer to this contention is furnished by Lokenath Surma's case, 13 Cal. 147. The facts of that case are that the pltfs.' having obtained a decree for the possession of certain lands & having received formal possession thereof, brought a suit against 86 persons holding distinct & separate tenures in those lands on the allegation that there was a combination between the tenants as a result of which the defts.-tenants would not recognise them as the landlords & in various ways opposed acts of the pltfs. in the capacity of landlords &, in suits brought by the pltfs. for the recovery of rent, denied the title of the pltfs., hence, the pltfs. withdrew the suits for rent & brought the present suit asking for a declaration of their proprietary right & of the relationship of landlord & tenant between them & the defts. Unlike the present suit, that suit came within the mischief of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, as it was a purely declaratory suit. This is how their Lordships met the objection u/s. 42 :

"It is contended that the pltfs., being out of possession, should have sued to recover possession, & not merely have sued for a declaration of their title. We think that this was unnecessary. The pltfs. were not seeking for khas possession, but merely for possession by receipt of rent from the defts. Under these circumstances, even if the pltfs. had sued for & obtained a decree for possession of the property, that possession could only have been delivered by notifying the declaration of the pltfs'. title as prayed for. We think, therefore that the omission to sue for possession was immaterial, & that the suit was not liable to be dismissed on this ground."

Evidently, their Lordships consd. that the effect of a declaratory decree in the circumstances of the case would be the same as a decree for the recovery of rent. This is exactly the position here. What the pltf. has asked for is a declaration of his title & a decree for the recovery of the way-leave rent. The only way in which he can exercise his possession in respect of the property is by the recovery of the way-leave rent. The prayer for a decree for the recovery of way-leave rent is, therefore, in fact, a prayer for the recovery of possession. In the course of the argument, it was suggested that, if the suit be regarded as one for the recovery of possession, a higher amount of C.-F. than that paid on the plaint might be necessary on the value of the reversionary interest in the suit property. I do not think there is any substance in this suggestion. I have indicated above that this is really not a case of dispossession, but, even supposing it to be so, since, for the recovery of possession, it is sufficient that the pltf. should obtain the declaration asked for & also a decree for the way-leave rent claimed, the C.-F. paid by him on these two reliefs is sufficient.

[14] Point No. 2 :—It is argued that, so far as the Roys are concerned, the suit is a suit for a declaration, the period of limitation for which is six years from the moment when the right to sue accrued (Art. 120 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1903). The right accrued, it is contended, in the year 1931, whereas the suit was instituted in the year 1943. It is not clear from the record when, for the first time, the pltf. came to know of the adverse claim set up by the Roys. That point of time, however, is not important because the claim by itself would not give a start to the period of limitation. The question of instituting a suit for a declaration would hardly arise until there was an actual disturbance of the possession of the pltf. Conceivably, the actual realisation by the Roys of money on account of way-leave rent might give a start to limitation; but it is not clear that the pltf. came to know of the realisation of the way-leave rent at any time prior to the filing of the written statements in Ct. Apart from this, however, the objection is, in my opinion, sufficiently answered on the position which I have taken in dealing with the first point, namely, that this is not a purely declaratory suit. It is a suit for the recovery of rent. As a preliminary to the decree for rent, it was necessary for the Ct. to come to a finding as to title. It is not suggested that the recovery of the rent claimed was barred by time. Hence, the prayer for the determination of the title was equally unaffected.

[15] Point No. 3 :—The operative words in the sale deed (EX. 3) are :

"Today I sell you the underground coal comprised in the demarcated fourteen annas share of mauza Dharmabandh & c."

The contention on behalf of the applts. is that on a proper construction of the sale deed the Roys acquired not merely the mineral coal lying within the limits indicated in the schedule to the sale deed but the pltf's. entire rights in the "coal mine", an expression which includes, in addition to the actual mineral, the chamber containing that mineral & the vacuum created by the removal of the whole or part of that mineral; therefore, u/s. 8 of the T. P. Act, there also passed to the Roys the right to collect way-leave rent in respect of foreign coal passing through this chamber. It is further contended that even if the grant was intended to be confined to the mineral coal the grant necessarily included the containing chambers &, therefore, the Roys would nevertheless be entitled to the way-leave rent. Reliance was placed on certain English decisions which I analyse below.

[16] The connotation of the word "mine" is thus defined by MacSwinney in Edn. 5 of his book on the Law of Mines, Quarries, & Minerals :

"The word 'mine' does not necessarily mean a cubical layer of earth, during & so long only as it contains minerals. The word is generally wide enough, if not in its primary sense, at all events according to the meaning given to it by the authorities, to include the space which is created according as the minerals are being worked, & the vacuum which is left after they have been worked out. In other words, a person who has an interest in a mine has, as such, prima facie, an interest in the Chamber which contains the minerals; & his interest in that chamber is precisely the same when it is in its natural state & filled with minerals; or when its natural state is altered by workings, & it consists partly or wholly of empty space." [Vide also Art. 173 at p. 53].

[17] In Proud v. Bates, (1865) 34 L. J. (Ch.) 406: (13 L. T 61), Wood V. C. was concerned with the construction of a lease of certain lands which contained a reservation of the "mines & quarries" lying & being within the limits of the property leased :

"With free way leave & passage to, from & along the same, on foot or on horseback, with all manner of carriages."

The question that arose was the right of the lessee of the mines to use a driftway under the property for the purpose of working mines not lying under the property in question. The Vice-Chancellor held that the exception extended to "the whole containing chamber which has the minerals" & that this containing chamber was altogether out of the demise: the grantors, therefore, never demised at all or parted with any right of using this containing chamber & were at liberty to use it as they thought fit. There was a further point which arose in this case & it is necessary to refer to it for the proper understanding of the judgment of Lord Chelmsford in Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871) L. R. 2 H. L., Sc. 166. It related to a headway of a foot & a half for the use of horses & carriages which headway was not confined to the seam of coal but was cut in the rock above the coal to afford a sufficient height for horses to pass along the way. It was pointed out by the Vice-Chancellor that so far as the use of this headway was concerned it was not a case of a portion of a property being demised & the remainder being reserved or excepted; it was a grant of property with a regrant of certain rights in respect of that property. Stressing the fact that the exception of the mines would be sufficient by itself to give the grantors the right of working the mines & for that purpose to use the demised property, he held that the general provision for the right of winning, working & so fourth showed that the regrant was not intended to be restricted to that purpose alone & therefore, extended to the carriage of foreign coal.

[18] The question again arose before his Lordship as Lord Chancellor in Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871-1 L. R 2 H.L.S. C. 166) (ante) in relation to a grant of land by the Duke of Hamilton reserving to himself, his heirs & successors " all & sundry the coal & limestone" within the bounds of the land demised. His Lordship observed that he saw no reason to withdraw from his decision in the case of Proud v. Bates, (1865-34 L J. Ch. 406: 13 L. T. 61) that by the law of England, when you demise a property excepting a certain part of it, there is no demise of the part excepted & therefore, the minerals excepted remained with the lessor; on the other hand, if you reserve certain rights & interests parting with the property, the rights & interests reserved must enure by way of regrant from the person to whom you make the disposition. Holding the reservation in question to be a reservation of property, his Lordship came to the conclusion that the Duke of Hamilton was entitled to carry foreign minerals through the reserved property. Lord Westbury & Lord Colonsay concurred in this view on the same reasoning. Lord Chelmsford in coming to the opposite conclusion distgd. the case of Proud v. Bates, (1865—34 L. J. Ch. 406: 13 L. T. 61) on the ground that it proceeded upon special grounds. His analysis of that decision shows that he had in his mind the discussion about the headway of one & a half feet. That, as I have mentioned above, was a case of regrant but there was also the reservation of the mine which was held by the Vice-Chancellor to be an exception from the demise & in respect of which the grantor was held to have plenum dominium. The double aspect of that case was explained by the Lord Chancellor during the speech of Lord Chelmsford.

[19] Much stress has been laid before us on the decision in Duke of Hamiltom v. Graham, (1871 L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 166) because the reservation in that case was of "the coal & limestone" & it has been sought to rely on the decision as an authority for the proposition that a grant of coal is equivalent to a grant of a mine. In my opinion the contention is not borne out by the other cases which have been examined by us.

[20] In Ramsay v. Blair, (1876) 1 A. C. 701, three grants came under consideration made in 1825, 1927 & 1857 respectively, & the reservation in these documents were "the coal & coal-heughs", the whole coal, stone quarries, & all other metals & minerals" & "the coal"—it appears from the judgment of Lord Selborne that the expression "coal-heughs" was interpreted to mean coal pits. The dispute as in the two previous decisions was about the right of the grantor to carry foreign coal along passages under the demised property. With reference to the first & the third grants, the Lord Chancellor observed that there could be no doubt at all that the only reservation was of the coal under the surface, & the grantor would have no power whatever to carry under those lands any coal or minerals won or worked from other lands; under the grant of 1827, however,

"the whole of the land under the surface, all the coals & all the metals & minerals, were reserved to the grantor & it gave him a right of course as upon his own property to make any way for any coals or other minerals that he might have in any other part of his lands."

Lord Hatherly concurred in this view. According to him, by the grant in 1857,

"the right which has been reserved . . . is only a right to the coals under the lands which have been parted with; that is to say, a right to the portion of the coal situated under the surface demised to the resp. & nothing can be done beyond the purpose of working the coal under the resp.'s lands & no other coal."

The grant of 1927, however, being of "the whole coal, stone quarries, & all other metals & minerals within" the lands demised, "with power to search for, work, & carry away the same,"

was, in his opinion, so extensive as to amount to a reservation of a portion of the property demised. In spite of his success in relation to the grant of 1927, the grantor could get no relief as his failure in respect of the other two grants created barriers preventing access to the property reserved in the grant of 1827. Lord Selborne, who concurred in this decision proceeded on entirely different reasoning, namely that the reservation in the grants of 1825 & 1857 was as to coal whereas the level cross-cut sought to be used for the passage of foreign minerals passed chiefly through strata consisting of shale & sandstone. The reason given by him therefore, is not relevant to the present discussion.

[21] In Eardley v. Granville, (1876) 3 Ch. 826: (45 L. J. Ch. 669), Jessel M. R. was concerned with the peculiar rights of a copyholder in respect of minerals lying below his copyhold, namely that the estate of the copyholder is in the soil throughout except as regards trees, & minerals, the property in which remains in the lord; when the lord has removed minerals the space left belongs to the copyholder, & when the tree is cut down the copyholder has a right to the soil of the copyhold where the tree stood including the stratum of air left vacant by the removal of the tree. The decision, therefore, is not directly applicable, but it is relevant to reproduce an important distinction which the Master of the Rolls makes between a reservation of "mines" & a reservation of "minerals":

"I take it that the law is clearly settled, & I am surprised to hear it disputed. In the first place, the law is laid down, perhaps not as accurately as might be wished as regards the words used, by Lord Compbell in Bowser v. Maclean, (1860) 2 D. F. & J. 415 at. p. 420 : (30 L. J. Ch. 273) 'I am inclined to think that a mistake has been committed in not distinguishing between a copyhold tenement with minerals under it, & forehold land leased with a reservation of the minerals'—he should have said 'of the mines,' but he has used the words 'reservation of the minerals,' meaning an exception of the mines — 'or freehold land where the surface belongs to one owner & the subsoil, containing minerals, belongs to another, as separate tenements divided from each other vertically, instead of laterally.' That is quite intelligible; what he means is this—he does not say it, but he means it—If a freeholder grants lands excepting mines he severs his estate vertically, i. e., he grants out his estate in parallel horizontal layers, & the grantee only gets the parallel layer granted to him, & does not get any underlying mineral layer or stratum. That underlying stratum remains in the grantor. The freeholder retains the mineral stratum as part of his ownership; & whether or not he takes the minerals or subsoil out of the stratum, the stratum still belongs to him as part of the vertical section of the land. But he says in the case of a copyholder, that is not so, becauses the copyholder, though he has no property in the stratum in the sense of being entitled to take the minerals, has property & possession in this sense, that the moment the minerals are taken away the space is in his possession, & he only can interfere with it, the lord having no right to do so."

The importance of the distinction made by the Master of the Rolls is stressed by Warrington J. in Batten Pooll v. Kennedy, (1907) 1 Ch. 256 at p. 264 : (76 L. J. Ch. 162).

[22] It is also relevant to mention that the Master of the Rolls repelled the suggestion that the Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871-L. R. 2 H. L. S. C. 166) had somehow or other altered the law & observed :

"It exactly concurs, therefore, in the reasoning with the decision of Vice-Chancellor Wood in the case of Proud v. Bates, (1865-34 L. J. Ch 406 : 13 L. T. 61) & the decision of Lord Camphell in Bowser v. Maclean, (1860) 2 D. F. & J. 415, that where a free-holder grants lands excepting the miner, he intends, first of all, as a matter of construction, to except not merely minerals, but the portion of the subsoil containing the minerals; in other words, to retain a stratum of the property. And if he does that, of course the lessee or grantee has no title whatever to the portion of the stratum reserved. That is all that the case of Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871-L. R 2 H. L. S. C. 166) decided."

The italics are mine.

[23] The last case I shall consider is Batten Pooll v. Kennedy, (1907) 1 Ch. 256 : (76 L. J. Ch. 162) where Warrington J. had to consider the effect of a reservation "all mines and veins of coal." His Lordship followed the decision in the Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871 L. R 2 H L. S. C 166) pointing out that the terms used in that case were less favourable to the grantor than in the case before his Lordship. He cited with approval the opinion of the Master of the Rolls in Eardley v. Granville, (1876-3 Ch. 826 : 45 L. J. Ch. 669) as to the real point decided in Duke of Hamilton v. Graham, (1871-L. R. 2 H. L. S. C. 166) and, adverting to the speech of Lord Selborne in Ramsay v. Blair, (1876-1 A. C. 701), he expressed the view that the dictum of his Lordship was not

"strong enough to outweigh the carefully consid. judgment of the Master of the Rolls in the case of Eardley v. Granville, (1876-3 Ch. 826 : 45 L J. Ch. 669)."

His Lordship finally concluded that

"Inasmuch as 'mines' unquestionably include not merely the bed of coal, but the workings of the coal, & the cavity after the coal has been removed,"

the right in question was part of the mine &, therefore, was comprised in the reservation.

[24] I think that from the above analysis it is clear that there is a distinction between a grant or a reservation of "coal" & a grant or a reservation, as the case may be, of a "mine," a view which is borne out by Mac Swinney (Art. 43 at p. 15 & Art. 176 at p. 55 & the last para. of Art. 1159 at p. 531 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Edn. 2, Vol. 22, Hailsham Edn.) It is not possible to lay down as a general rule what connotation the word "coal" will bear, that is a matter to be decided with reference to the document in which the word has been used. It is sufficient that the discussion of these cases shows that the word "coal" does not bear a definite meaning, & its meaning must be gathered from the document under construction.

[25] It is agreed that under the lease of 1908 all that Ghosh got was the right to win & take the coal & for that purpose to sink pits, drive shafts & do such other work as might be necessary for winning & carrying away the coal. This view is expressed in Para. 2 of the plaint, which speaks of the lease as a lease of the coal & the coal mining rights in the fourteen annas plot of mauza Dharmabandh, the correctness of which pleading is not denied in the written statement. It also finds expression in the sub-lease (Ex. 5) executed by Ghosh in favour of Pringle & in the wayleave agreement (Ex. 2) executed between Pringle & the pltf. Under the lease Ghosh had no right to carry foreign coal to the surface through the mine in Dharmabandh. After the lease, the predecessor of the pltf. remained the owner of the surface subject to the right of Ghosh to use it for the purposes of the mining lease on the conditions set out in that lease. The ownership of the passages made for the working of the mine & in the vacuum created by the removal of the coal from the mine remained in the predecessor of the pltf. Hence, when Pringle by his sub-lease got the rights of Ghosh & wished to work by outstroke, he entered into the way-leave agreement with the predecessor of the pltf. This agreement, it is stressed, was executed by the pltf.'s predecessor as the owner of the reversion in this property. After this agreement, it is said, there were three rights vested in him; (1) the right to realise rent & royalty under the lease of 1908. (2) the right in reversion to re-enter on the demised property on the expiry of the period of the lease or on an earlier surrender by the lessee, & (3) the right to realise way-leave rent, this last right being appurtenant to his right to the reversion.

[26] There has been some discussion before us as to whether the way-leave rent is payable on account of the carriage of foreign materials only through the under-ground passages of the mine to the pit-mouth or whether it covers carriage over the surface of the property as well, the surface being vested in the pltf. Also, a suggestion has been made, although it is not supported by any evidence, that some of the passages along which the foreign coal is being brought pass through strata lying outside the coal-bearing strata &, therefore, outside the property transferred to the Roys. Neither of these two possibilities was mentioned before the Subordinate Judge, & the suit proceeded on the basis that the way-leave rent was for the carriage of foreign minerals through the coal mine. Hence, we may deal with the matter on this basis. The case of the applts. is that the pltf. sold to the Roys his right of reversion in the coal mine &, since the right to way-leave rent cannot exist in vacuo, the right to realise way-leave rent passed to the Roys. It is, therefore, necessary to consider what exactly the pltf. sold by this document.

[27] This brings me to the sale deed (EX. 3). It commences by mentioning the mining lease in favour of Ghosh, describing it as a settlement of "the under-ground coal," & recites that after this there remained to the grantor the right to the fixed minimum royalty & other dues arising out of the lease. It continues by referring to certain financial transactions between the parties & says:

"As there is no other means (to repay the same) I announced to sell the underground coal land (koila pathar bhumi) of the demarcated 14 annas share of mauza Dharmabandh mentioned in schedule Ka below & you agreed to purchase the same."

Much stress has been laid on this passage as indicating that the pltf. was selling not merely the right to the coal but also the land within which the coal was comprised, that is to say, the containing chamber. In the very next sentence, however, the kebala continues:

"Today I sell you the underground coal paihuria koila pazhar comprised in the demarcated 14 annas share of mouza Dharmabandh mentioned in schedule Ka below."

The kebala goes on:

"From today you shall become fully entitled to & enter into possession of the demarcated property in my right &c."

The words placed in italics by me are evidently used loosely, as the demarcated property on a strict interpretation would mean the entire 14 annas share of the mauza. The words, therefore, refer merely to the portion out of this 14 annas property which is being transferred by the sale deed, & what this is is the point which we are investigating. So, the words used do not help us to a solution. Equally unhelpful is the next passage to which our attention has been drawn:

"From this day I become fully divested of all my rights in the vended property & all the rights which I had therein shall devolve on you."

It has been emphasised that by these words the vendor was placing the Roys in his position as regards the disputed property. The transfer, however, is confined to "the vended property" & as these words do not define what the vended property is they do not help the applts. The next passage again confines itself to the coal & states:

"Be it stated that as long as the settlement in respect of the demarcated 14 annas underground coal (koila pathar) of the said mouza Dharmabandh ..... remains in force, you ... shall continue to realise hereafter .... all dues according to the terms of the said settlement from the said Debendra Nath Ghosh & his heirs & successors in-interest."

[28] The opening portion of this passage indicates that the vendor is thinking of the lease made in favour of Ghosh as a lease of the underground coal. The sale deed next recites:

"Whatever right & title I had by virtue of the aforesaid patta & kabuliat (that is the transaction with Ghosh) shall all from this day devolve on you."

This passage again seems to help the pltf. rather than the Roys. Under the mining lease the grantor had in respect of the coal only the right to realise the royalty & other dues in accordance with the lease & in the event of the expiry of the lease or its earlier surrender, to enter into possession of the coal. This was all that, according to this passage, the vendor was parting with. Much stress, however, has been laid on the right of reversion which is mentioned in the next following sentence:

"Should the said settlement be surrendered on any ground or the vended underground coal (bikrita nimnastha koila) comes to your khas possession you shall be competent to take khas possession thereof or settle the same with others as you like to which I or my heirs or successors-in-interests shall not be competent to make any plea or raise any objection."

This right of reversion, it is urged, was of the entire interest which the grantor had in the mine in addition to the right to realise royalty & other dues under the lease of 1908. Again, however, it is important to see to what exactly was the right of reversion which was being transferred. The right, as I have indicated by the italics, was confined to the coal; all that the Roys were given was the right to enter into possession of so much mineral & work it themselves or permit someone else to work it, there was no parting with the ownership of the containing chamber. There is a mistake in the official translation of the passage which follows the passage just cited & both parties are agreed that the correct translation is :

"You shall have no concern with the surface land &c. above the demarcated coal land (chihinta koila bhumi-ruparistha jaminadi) or with other underground minerals &c. excepting coal (pathuria koila pathar)."

Here again the vendor confines to the coal the right which he is transferring to the Roys. There is some doubt about the correct reading of this passage. I have reproduced it as it was read to us in Ct. The persons responsible for preparing a transliteration of the document, as directed by us at the hearing, have read "bikrita" instead of "chihnita", & the translation should be "the vended coal land" instead of the "demarcated coal land". This reading supports the contention of the applts. but taking this passage along with the other passages refd. to before us the proper conclusion would be that the expression "koila" & "koila bhumi" have been used loosely & it is only by reading the document as a whole that we can determine what exactly was the property sold. The next passage accords to the Roys certain facilities covered by the mining lease in the winning & removal of the coal. It runs :

"Should you for the purpose of running the coal business in the leasehold coal land (koila bhumi) require any surface land &c. of the said coal land (koila bhumi) I as well as my heirs & successors-in-interest shall always remain bound to give such land according to the terms of the Patta & kabuliat &c."

It is true the words used are "koila bhumi" but in this passage the vendor is not describing the property which is being transferred but merely the space within which the working of the coal is to take place. The vendor then mentions that he is making over to the vendees " the mining lease of 4-1-1903 executed by Gosh in respect of the vended property". I have mentioned above that the vendor regarded this lease as a grant of mining rights in respect of so much coal. His description of the mining lease as being in respect of "the vended property", therefore, seems to confine the transaction of sale to the coal. In the next relevant passage the vendor makes himself responsible for paying all the Govt. revenue "in respect of this vended zamindari property." If all that the pltf. was selling was the coal the term "zamindari property" is loosely used. The fact that the pltf. was retaining the liability to pay the Govt. revenue shows that he was not divesting himself of his ownership of the property. A similar looseness in the use of language appears in the next sentence:

"Should you suffer any loss on account of any neglect on my part to pay the Govt. revenue in respect of the vended land (bikrita bhumi) or the Zamindari appertaining thereto I shall be liable for the loss."

The next sentence is again relevant & supports the contention of the pltf.

"I shall inform Debendra Nath Ghosh, the tenant in respect of the vended property mentioned in the schedule about this matter & I shall write to pay all the dues, royalty &c. in respect of the said property to you."

It is significant that, while the vendor was particular to mention the lease in favour of Ghosh & to make over the kabuliat executed by Ghose & undertook to inform Ghosh that in the future he should pay the dues under the mining lease to the Roys, he made no mention of the way-leave agreement & did not make over the relevant document. Evidently, he contemplated that by the sale deed the Roys would get only the right to realise the dues under the mining lease of 1908 & not the dues under the way leave agreement. It has been urged that these facts are irrelevant & that, if the effect of the sale deed was to pass to the Roys the right to the way-leave rent, the failure of the vendor to mention this in the sale deed & to hand over the relevant documents would not affect the right of the Roys to realise the way-leave rent. The contention is correct, but I am dealing with these facts for the purpose of construing the deed. If the deed was clear in itself & had the effect of passing the title to the way-leave rent, the omission of the vendor to mention this fact & to hand over the way-leave agreement would be irrelevant. Here, however, the effect of the document is not clear & in ascertaining what it was that the vendor was really giving it is necessary to construe the document as a whole. This is my answer also to the contention that the passages which immediately follow the dispositive part of the sale deed are irrelevant, & that they represent merely the vendor's conception of the legal effect of the disposition made by him. This is the way in which I understand these passages. To me it appears that in these passages the vendor is trying to make it clear exactly what the property is which he is transferring. He was conscious that the words "the under-ground coal (Pathuria koila pathat)" in the dispositive portion were open to misconstruction, & the passages which follow are, in my opinion, intended to show what meaning the vendor placed on these words. There follows another passage in which, considering the sale deed as a whole, the words "vended land (bikrita bhumi)" seem to have been loosely used.

"Should Debendra Nath Ghosh the tenant of the vended land or his heir or successors in-interest surrender the vended land you shall have not to pay any rent in respect of the surface land held by him or the tenant."

This passage should be read in the light of the previous passages which seems to regard Ghosh as a settlee merely of the mining rights. Finally, we come to the schedule which is headed: "Boundaries of the vended property (bikrita sampatti)" words which do not help either party. The words that follow are:

"Boundaries of underground coal land (Koila Pathar Bhumi) comprised in the 14 annas demarcated share of mauza Dharmabandh &c."

These words do not help either party. The boundaries of the coal would necessarily coincide with the boundaries of the coal land, & the words" coal land" used in this passage do not indicate that the sale deed was a sale deed of the coal land. To sum up, on a consideration of the sale deed as a whole, I am satisfied that the right that was being transferred to the Roys under the sale deed was confined to the coal regarded as so much mineral, lying below the surface of the 14 anna block of mauza Dharmabandh. There was no intention to transfer to the Roys the pltf's title in the cubical space within which that coal was comprised & therefore, the right of the pltf. under the way-leave agreement to realise way-leave rent did not pass to the Roys.

[29] For the reasons given above, the appeal fails & I would accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 25-A (2) & 34—Joint Hindu family—Partition—Assessment under S. 34 read with S. 25A—Procedure.

An assessment under S. 34 read with S. 25A (2) of a defunct Hindu undivided family cannot be completed on one of the members of the family. Under S. 25A (2) it is the duty of the Income-tax Officer to make total assessment in the first place & then proceed to divide it pro rata between the family members according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to each member at a partition. Thereafter the Income-tax Officer ought to proceed to make assessment on the various members of the family in accordance with S. 23. Unless this is done the assessment is not complete. [Paras 5 & 6]

Order.—This reference is made by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal at the instance of the assessee u/s. 66 (1), Income tax Act.

[2] The assessee was the karta of a Hindu undivided family up to 25-10-1940. Up to the year 1939-40 assessment was made on the assessee as karta. It is not disputed that u/s. 25A, sub-s. (1), the Income-tax officer made an order that there was partition of the undivided family on 25-10-1940. It is also not disputed that the family had 8 annas share in the firm called Jittanram Nirmalram of Gaya. The Income-tax Officer while making the assessment for the period 11-11-1939 to 30-10-1940 apportioned the profits of the firm into four parts, 8 annas being allotted to the outside patnr. & the other 8 annas allotted to the assessee & other two members of the family, viz, Vishnu Prasad Bhadani & Bhagwandas Bhadani. An appeal was preferred to the Appellate Asst. Comr. & also to the Income-tax appellate Tribunal who by its order dated 29-4-1944 set aside the assessment & remanded the case for proper determination of the date of partition after having such further evidence as it may be adduced. The firm of Jittanram Nirmalram had also been assessed to excess profits tax. A petn. u/s. 20, Excess Profits Tax Act, was filed by the firm before the Comr. of Income-tax. On 15-9-1944 the Comr. made an order, the effect of which was to reduce the assessment of the excess profits tax & to make a consequent increase in the assessment of income-tax for the period in question. The Income-tax Officer issued notice u/s. 34 against the firm & against the patnrs. with respect to the alleged escape of the income-tax. The assessee filed return showing 1/6th share of income from the firm Jittanram Nirmalram but even so the Income tax Officer assessed him for 8 annas share of the entire profits as being representative of the Hindu undivided family which had then become defunct. The assessee preferred appeals to the Appellate Asst. Comr. & to the Income-tax appellate Tribunal, who overd. the objection that the assessment was not proper or valid.

[3] At the instance of the assessee the appellate Tribunal has propounded the following question for the determination of the H. C. :

"Whether an assessment u/s. 34, read with S. 25A (2) of a defunct Hindu undivided family could be completed on one of the members of the family & the whole of the tax demanded from him without completing the assessment of the other members & making any demand from them."

[4] In our opinion the second part of the question, viz. :

"Whether the whole of the tax could be demanded from the assessee without completing the assessment of the other members & making any demand from them."

does not arise out of the order of the appellate Tribunal & we do not propose, therefore, to answer this part of the question under reference. On behalf of the assessee Mr. Jain attempted to show that this second part of the question also was argued before the appellate Tribunal; but on reference to the appln. made before the Tribunal u/s. 66 (1) it does not appear that any such question was mooted before the Tribunal & the submission of Mr. Jain cannot be entertained.

[5] As regards the first part of the question it appears to us that upon the plain meaning of S. 25A of the Act the assessment is not complete unless each member of the joint family had been assessed for the share of the tax on the income according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to him. The material portion of S. 25A (2) states :

"Where such an order has been passed . . . the Income-tax Officer shall make an assessment of the total income received by or on behalf of the joint family as such, as if no partition had taken place, & each member or group of members shall, in addition to any income-tax for which he or it may be separately liable . . . be liable for a share of the tax on the income so assessed according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to him or it; & the Income tax Officer shall make assessments accordingly on the various members & groups of members in accordance with the provisions of S. 23."

In the present case it is manifest upon the undisputed facts that the assessment proceedings have not been completed according to the manner indicated in S. 25A of the Act. It was the duty of the Income-tax Officer to make total assessment in the first place & then proceed to divide it pro rata between the family members according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to each. Thereafter the Income-tax Officer ought to have proceeded to make assessment on the various members of the family in accordance with the provisions of S. 23 of the Act. Though the assessment proceeding in this case is not complete the irregularity, if any, cannot avail the assessee Lakshminarain Bhadani for it will now be open to the Income-tax Officer to make a separate assessment of the various family members for the share of the tax of the income according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to each & thereafter each of the family member including the assessee will be jointly & severally liable for the tax assessed on the total income.

[6] While, therefore, we consider that the first part of the question referred to us should be answered in the negative, it is manifest the assessee has substantially failed &, in our opinion, he must pay half the cost of the reference, which, in the circumstances of the case, we assess at Rs. 125.

K.S. Answer accordingly.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 — Profits or compensation for sterilisation of capital.

The assessee purchased a piece of land measuring about 13 bighas for the alleged business of setting up a market & making profit. The plot was requisitioned by the military authorities under the Defence of India Rules. There was an agreement between the assessee & the military authorities that a sum of Rs. 1100 p. m. will be paid to the assessee as compensation for the use of the land. For the year 1946-47 the assessee received a total sum of Rs. 13, 200 as compensation. After making statutory deductions the Income-tax Officer held that the net sum of Rs. 9699 received by the assessee from the military authorities was liable to be taxed:

Held that the amount of Rs. 9699 was not compensation made for sterilisation of capital asset. The amount of compensation received by the assessee was really a profit derived from the land & the assessee was liable to be taxed under the Act: A I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 662 (S. Ramaswami J. — This reference is made by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal u/s. 66 (1), Income-tax Act of 1922.

[2] The material facts are not controverted. The assessee carries on several business activities. He had purchased a piece of land measuring about 13 bighas for the alleged business of setting up a market & making profit. The plot was requisitioned by the military authorities under the Defence of India Rules. There was an agreement between the assessee & the military authorities that a sum of Rs. 1100 p. m. will be paid to the assessee as compensation for the use of the land. It should be added that the military authorities used the land as a Store-yard. For the year 1946-47 the assessee received a total sum of Rs. 13,200 as compensation. After making statutory deductions the Income-tax Officer held that the net sum of Rs. 9699 received by the assessee from the military authorities was liable to be taxed. The assessee preferred an appeal to the Appellate Asst. Comr. & argued that the amount was not liable to be taxed since it was merely compensation from the military authorities for preventing the assessee from making use of his capital asset. This argument was accepted by the Appellate Asst. Commr. An appeal was preferred by the Income tax Officer to the Appellate Tribunal who reversed the decision of the Appellate Asst. Comr. & held that the amount was in substance profit derived from the land & so liable to be taxed.

[3] At the instance of the assessee the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal refd. the following question for being determined by the H. C viz.:

"Whether in view of the facts & the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs. 9699 received by the assessee from the military authorities is taxable?"

[4] On behalf of the assessee Mr. S. K. Majumdar stressed the argument that upon the facts of this case it should be held that the amount of Rs. 9699 was compensation made for sterilisation of capital asset & was therefore not liable to be taxed. In support of his contention the learned counsel refd. to Glenboig Union Fireclay Co. Ltd. v. Comr. of Inland Revenue, (1928) 12 Tax. Cas. 427, in which the applt. Co. carried on business as manufacturers of fireclay goods & as merchants of raw fireclay, & was lessee of certain fireclay fields over part of which ran the lines of the Caledonian Rly. In 1908 the Rly. Co., to whom the lands belonged, though not the minerals beneath, instituted an action to restrain the applt. Co. from working the fireclay under the rly, contending that the fireclay was not a mineral & consequently formed part of the Rly. Co's property. While the action was pending the applt. Co. was interdicted from working under the Rly. In 1911 the House of Lords decided against the Rly. Co., which thereupon exercised its statutory powers to require part of the fireclay to be left unworked on payment of compensation. The amount of compensation was settled by arbitration & duly paid to the applt. Co. in 1913. The question debated before the House was as to whether the amount received for compensation in respect of the fireclay left unworked was profit earned in the course of the Co.'s trade.

Upon the facts of the case the House of Lords held that the amount received as compensation was not a profit earned in the course of the Co.'s trade but was a capital receipt, being a payment made for the sterilisation of a capital asset. In the present case the facts are manifestly different & it is not possible to hold that on account of requisition made by the military authorities "the capital asset" of the assessee has been "sterilised" to borrow the language used in the decision of the House of Lords. Reference was also made by Mr. Majumdar to Comr. of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Prayagkumari, 19 Pat. 186 : (A I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 662 S. B.) in which the assessee had in pursuance of a decree received a certain sum of money as damages, for wrongful detention of her movable property & a Special Bench of the Patna H. C. held that such receipt was not "income" within the meaning of the Income-tax Act, 1922, & was not therefore liable to assessment. In my opinion the principle of this case is not of much assistance to the assessee in the present case. Manohar Lall J. who pronounced the opinion of the Special Bench pointed out that there was a distinction between a case where damages, pure & simple, have been awarded & a case where there is receipt of damages or compensation in the course of business or trade carried on by a trader. Upon the facts of that case the learned Judge held that the receipt of the decretal amount for damages by the assessee for wrongful detention of her movable property was not income within the meaning of the Income tax Act & was therefore not liable to assessment. It is manifest that the facts are not in any way parallel to the facts of the present case. On the contrary it would seem that the amount of compensation received by the assessee is really a profit derived from the land & it was rightly held by the appellate Tribunal that the assessee was liable to be taxed under the Act.

[5] Upon these grounds I hold that in the circumstances of the case the sum of Rs. 9699 received by the assessee from the military authorities is taxable. The assessee must pay the cost of this reference to the Comr. of Income-tax. Hearing fee Rs. 250.

(c) T. P. Act (1882), S. 60 — Extinguishment of right of redemption by operation of law — Revenue sale due to default of mtgee. — Mtgee. taking settlement from landlord purchaser — Effect.

A executed a usufructuary mtge. (Sudhbharna bond) of his holding in favour of B who entered into possession under it. It was expressly agreed between the parties that B would pay the landlord's dues in respect of the holding out of the consideration left in his hands. B failed to pay the amount of rent decree with the result that the holding was sold in execution of the rent decree & was purchased by the landlord himself. B subsequently took settlement of the holding from the landlord. A sued B for redemption of the mtge. It was proved that B was guilty of fraud & collusion in making default in payment of rent decree & taking fresh settlement of the holding:

Held, that (i) B was clearly in the wrong in allowing the property to be sold in execution of the rent decree & by taking settlement from the landlord he could not take advantage of his own wrong & change the character of his possession & deprive A of his right of redemption. It was not open to B to contend that the pltf. had lost his right of redemption because the old tenancy had extinguished by the rent sale : A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 17 ; 21 P. L. T. 699; A. I. R. Jha C. J. — This appeal is by the defts. first party (hereafter to be referred to as 'the defts'). It arises out of a suit for redemption which has been decreed by the trial Ct. by its judgment dated 23-4-1947.

[2] The mtgees. are the defts. first party ; the transferees of the mtgees. of a portion of the disputed land are the defts. second party & the landlords are the defts. third party.

[3] Jang Bahadur Singh, who is the pltf. 1, & one Jawad Ali predecessor-in-interest of pltfs. 4 to 6, claim to be tenants of the defts. third party, in respect of a holding having an area of 20.55 acres, with an annual jama of Rs. 136 & odd, including cess, under a kabuliat dated 21-12-1922. The rent of this holding having fallen into arrears, a rent suit was instituted in 1936, being Rent Suit No. 1570 of 1936, for recovery of the arrears of rent for the years 1342 to 12 annas kist of 1343 Fasli, & a decree for rent was duly obtained ex parte on 4-1-1937 (Ex. 1) of which execution was taken out, being execution case No. 1080 of 1937. While the execution case was pending, Jang Bahadur & Jawad Ali jointly executed a Sudbharna bond (Ex. A) on 20-7-1937, for Rs. 800 in favour of Lalji Singh, father of defts. 1 to 3, &

Sukar Singh, deft. 9. The entire holding was given in usufructuary mtge. for paying off the dues under the decree as well as the arrears of rent which accrued due after the institution of the rent suit. The money raised under the mtge bond remained with the mtgees. who, however, did not pay the dues under the decree for which execution had been taken out & consequently the holding was sold on 20-8-1937, at a ct. sale, & the landlords themselves became the purchasers, & they obtained delivery of possession on 30-11-1937. The pltfs. later on came to know of the purchase of the holding by the landlords in execution of the decree for arrears of rent & thereupon they made an appln. to the Collector on 21-7-1939, u/s. 3, Cl. (1), Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands & Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938 (Bihar Act IX [9] of 1938) for the restoration of the holding to them.

[4] The case of the pltfs. was that the holding was in the possession of the landlords after the rent sale & therefore, they were entitled to the restoration of the holding. The case was resisted by the defts. as well as the landlords on the ground that the holding had been settled with Jago Singh (deft. 2) & Sukar Singh (deft. 9) under an unregistered hukumnama dated 5-12-1937, & it was alleged that the settlement was later on confirmed by two regd. kabuliats in their favour dated 10-11-1938. The Collector in charge rejected the appln. & accepted the case of the objectors that the appln. was not maintainable because, in his opinion, the settlement had been made with the defts. by the landlords before 19-4-1938 & so the pltfs. were not entitled to restoration under the Act. The Divisional Commr. as well as the Board of Revenue were moved in their revisional jurisdiction, but they did not interfere with the order of the Collector in charge on the ground that his order was final. The pltfs. have, therefore, brought the present suit for redemption of the sudhbharna bond dated 20-7-1937. Their case in short, is that the settlement is fraudulent & collusive & as such, the mtge. subsists & they are entitled to redeem it. Their further case is that the defts. having taken possession of the disputed land as mtgees. the character of their possession was not changed by reason of the settlement. The case of the defts. on the other hand, is that the mtge. bond remained inoperative & that there was no fraud in the rent sale, nor was the settlement collusive. They contend, therefore, that the pltfs. have no right to redeem.

[5] The trial Ct. has decreed the suit & held that the pltfs. are entitled to redeem the mtge. on payment of Rs. 800. The defts. have, therefore, preferred the present appeal.

[6] The questions for our consideration are (1) whether the sudhbharna bond dated 20-7-1937, was acted upon & (2) whether the pltfs.' right of redemption subsists.

[7] The mtge. bond in suit (Ex. A) was duly executed & regd. at Lakhisarai. (After discussing the evidence the judgment proceeds:) I am, therefore, of the opinion that the mtgors. handed over the registration receipt to Lalji duly endorsed in his favour & the mtgees. became entitled to take delivery of the mtge. bond from the registration office & come into possession. The defts. have led evidence to show that the mtge. bond remained in the registration office. I do not feel inclined to accept this story. Nor is it necessary to decide the question because the mtge. bond became an effective document after its due execution & registration. In support of my view I may refer to the case of Sultan Ahmad v. Maksad Hussain, 22 Pat. 306 : (A.I.R. (31) 1944 Pat. 3), where it has been held that

"to execute a document simply means to perform what is required to give validity to a writing, as by signing & sealing it. Delivery of the same is not an essential part of it, unless that is specifically agreed to between the parties to the deed."

It may be mentioned that the defts. admit the execution & registration of the sudhbharna bond in their presence & with their consent & it is not their case that there was any stipulation between the parties that unless the deed was delivered to the plfs. or the document withdrawn from the registration office, title would not pass; nor is there any indication in the mtge. bond itself to that effect. In my opinion, therefore, the mtgees. acquired a legal right to possession after the execution & registration of the mtge. bond in suit.

[8] The mtge. bond was for Rs. 800. The recital in the deed shows that the entire consideration money had been received by the pltfs. This recital is evidence, though not conclusive, against the pltfs. but the presumption arising from the recital is rebutted by the fact that D. W. 5 (deft. 1) admits that only Rs. 50 was paid to the pltfs. to meet the cost of the execution & registration. Jang Bahadur, pltf. 1 (P. W. 5), has stated in his evidence:

"We were not to get anything out of the consideration money. Out of the consideration money Lalji Singh had to satisfy the decree & rent for 4 annas kist of 1343 & also to meet the cost of the document."

Thus the entire consideration money having been left with the defts. they were in the position of a trustee, & a duty was cast upon them to pay the landlords' dues & save the property from sale. The argument of Mr. Lal Narain Sinha is that it is not open to the pltfs. to prove that a duty was cast upon the defts, by any oral evidence. His contention is that the rights & liabilities fixed under a document can be proved, u/s. 92, Evidence Act, only by the terms of the document & not otherwise ; but the argument has no force, because the document is silent on the point. Extrinsic evidence is, therefore, admissible, & the oral evidence, in my opinion, read in the light of the circumstances of the case, irresistibly leads to the conclusion that a duty was cast upon the defts. to pay off the dues of the landlords.

[9] The pltfs.' case is that soon after the registration of the bharna bond they put the defts. in possession of the disputed land as mtgees. The trial Ct. has accepted the pltfs.' evidence on the point, & I see no reason to take a different view. Jang Bahadur, pltf. 1, has stated that the bharnadars were put in possession of the disputed land after the execution of the bharna bond & they brought the land under cultivation four or five days after its execution. This evidence gets ample support from the circumstances of the case to which I shall refer hereafter. Thus on the evidence it is clear that the defts. took possession as mtgees. & it was their clear duty to save the property from the ct. sale which took place on 20-8-1937, in execution of the rent decree. Admittedly, the landlords became the auction-purchasers & the defts. took settlement from them & are in possession of the disputed land. In my opinion, the defts., by taking the settlement from the landlords, could not change the character of their possession as against the pltfs. The defts. were clearly in the wrong in allowing the property to be sold and, therefore, if the holding has come back into their hands, they cannot take advantage of their own wrong & deprive the pltfs. of their right of redemption. It is a well known legal maxim that convenience cannot accrue to a party from his own wrong (commodum ex injuria sua memo habere debt). The principle of this maxim was applied by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hunoomanpersaud v. Mt. Babooee Munraj, 6 M. I. A. 393 at p. 423:(18 W. R. 81 P. C. where their Lordships have said :

"But of course, if that danger arises or has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong, to support a charge in his own favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his wrong has helped to cause."

A Bench of the Madras H. C. has also pointed out that the principle underlying the maxim is almost of universal application & held that no one can be allowed to benefit by his own wrongful act (vide Vedanayagar Mudaliar v. Vedammal, 27 Mad. 591 at pp. 593-99). In my opinion, the pltfs. were wronged by the misconduct of the defts. The sale could have been averted if the defts. had simply deposited the decretal amount which was in their hands as trustees for the pltfs. The defts. cannot turn round now & say that the pltfs. have lost their right of redemption because the old tenancy had been extinguished by the rent-sale. The Ct., in equity, cannot lend its aid to such a defence. A Bench of the Calcutta H. C. held in Kamala Kanta v. Ananda Chandra, 71 I. C. 1030 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal 357) that

"the mtgees. cannot by suffering dispossession & having taken a new title from the landlord affect the right of the mtgors. in the property of which they were put into possession under the mtge."

The same principle was enunciated by a Bench of this Ct. in Tali Mahton v. Lekhraj Mahton, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 17 : (104 I. C. 644), where their Lordships have said that "the mtgee. being in possession had a certain duty towards the mtgor. & it was his clear duty to maintain his possession as against the landlord. He could not by suffering dispossession put an end to the tenancy & then proceed to take a settlement of the land from the landlord."

This case was folld. by a later Bench of this Ct. in Chandi Mander v. Sitabi Bhagat, 21 P. L. T. 699, where Harries C. J. enunciated the law thus:

"In short the finding is that the mtgee. resps. were the cause of the proceedings, & once they had been taken, they took a settlement again from the landlords of all the Bath lands. To claim these lands now as not being lands subject to the mtge. is to claim a benefit arising from their own default, & this the law does not permit them to do. A mtgee. cannot be heard to say that land is no longer subject to a mtge. as a result of his own default or of any act on his part."

It may be observed that in the case to which I have refd. the landlords had obtained possession by the abandonment of the holding & not by rent sale, & the mtgees. by suffering dispossession came back into possession by re-settlement. There is, in my opinion, no difference in principle between the case where a landlord obtains possession by abandonment & a case where he obtains possession by ct. sale. Once the land comes back into the possession of the mtgee., it is immaterial by what process of law the landlord obtained possession. Such a question becomes relevant only when the Ct. is called upon to consider the rights of the landlords & the tenants, & not when it has to consider the rights of the mtgors. against the mtgees. Therefore, the present case is governed by the principle enunciated by the Bench decisions of this Ct. to which I have refd. & the pltfs. are entitled to redeem.

[10] Mr. Lal Narain Sinha has contended that, assuming that the defts. were bound to pay the dues of the landlords & they made a default which resulted in the sale of the holding, the pltfs.' right of redemption was extinguished, & any later settlement taken by the defts. cannot revive the pltfs.' right of redemption. His contention is that, once the property has vested in the landlords, any subsequent settlement by them with the original mtgees. would not revive the mtgors.' right of redemption as tenants of the old holding. In support of his contention the learned counsel reld. upon two Bench decisions of this Ct. Gauri Shanker v. Sheotahal, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 434: (164 I. C. 213) and Fekua Mahto v. Lal Sahu, 18 Pat. 133 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382). General observations made in those two cases apparently lend support to the applts.' argument, but the observations must be read in the light of the facts of those cases. In my opinion, the cases reld. upon by Mr. Lal Narain Sinha are not applicable to the facts of the case before us. In Gauri Shanker Sahu's case A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 434 : (164 I. C 213), the landlord purchased the holding & took possession through Ct. & served a notice upon the mtgee. u/s. 167, B. T. Act, to annul the encumbrance. Thereupon, the mtgee. brought a suit to have his mtge. right declared & impleaded the mtgor also in the action. The mtgor. did not put in appearance & the suit ended in a compromise between the landlord & the mtgee. The mtgor. had an opportunity to preserve his equity of redemption, but he did not avail himself of it, although he was joined as party deft. in the action. It was on these facts that their Lordships held that, unless the rent sale could be set aside, the mtgor. or his assignee could not be heard to assert his right to redeem. I may observe that the law laid down in Gauri Shanker's case, (A.I.R. (23) 1936 Pat. 434 : 164 I. C. 213) if read apart from the facts, would offend the rule of equity that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong. In Fekua Mahto's case, (18 Pat. 133 : A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382), Harries C. J. folld. the Bench decision in Gauri Shanker's case, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 434 : (164 I. C. 213), & it was held that where property subject to a mtge. is sold in execution of a rent decree & at some later period purchased by the mtgee, whose failure to pay rent has resulted in the rent decree, such purchase by the mtgee. does not, in the absence of fraud, revive the equity of redemption which is extinguished by the sale. An examination of the facts in Fekua Mahto's case, (18 Pat. 133 : A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382) clearly shows that there was no duty cast upon the mtgees. to pay the rent in respect of the mortgaged property. Therefore, Fekua Mahto's case (18 Pat. 133 : A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382) was not at all a case where the principle whether a wrong-doer can take advantage of his own wrong was involved. The facts in Fekua Mahto's case, (18 Pat. 133 : A.I R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382) were these. In 1886, the ancestors of pltfs. 1 to 3 & defts. 8 to 10 mortgaged their tenure to one Musammats in village H. In 1892 the mtgors. sold their right to B, who paid up the money due on the mtge. & thus redeemed it. Later on B mortgaged the property to N. In 1898 the ancestors of pltfs. 1 to 3 & defts. 8 to 10 again mortgaged the same village to defts. 1 to 7, & by the terms of the mtge. the latter, who were given possession, were bound to pay rent in respect of the tenure mortgaged. After this mtge. litigation ensued between N (mtgee. of B) & defts. 1 to 7, & eventually N obtained a decree for possession, but he never executed the decree & never obtained possession of the tenure. Defts. 1 to 7 fell in arrears with their rent. In July, 1904, 8 annas share in this village was sold to R. S. in execution of a rent decree, which the owners of the village obtained, & later on, in the same year, the remaining 8 annas share in the village was sold to A. T. in execution of another rent decree obtained by other co-owners. Therefore, by the end of 1904, the whole of this village had been sold in execution of rent decrees to R. S. & A. T. These two persons entered into possession of the property & remained in such possession till 1919. On 22-5-1919, defts. 1 to 3 purchased 8 annas interest held by R. S. & on 10-8-1919, they purchased the other 8 annas interest held by A. T. By the end of 1919, therefore, defts. 1 to 3, who were the mtgees. under the mtge. executed in the year 1898, had become owners of the 16 annas in this village. In February, 1933, the original mtgors., namely, pltfs. 1 to 3 & defts. 8 to 10, sold their alleged mtgors'. right to pltfs 3 & 4. The pltfs. contended that they still held the equity of redemption in the mtge. & brought the suit claiming redemption. These facts clearly show that defts 1 to 3, who were the mtgees. of the ancestors of pltfs. 1 to 3 & defts. 8 to 10, were held by a decree of the Ct. to have no right in the mortgaged property in the litigation between defts. 1 to 7 & N. Therefore, they were under no obligation to pay the rent in respect of the tenure which ultimately came into their possession, because in the litigation that ensued between them & N, the latter succeeded in defeating the claim of defts 1 to 7, & so, in the eye of law, no duty was cast on them to pay the rent of the tenure in spite of their undertaking by the terms of the bond to pay the rent of the tenure mortgaged. The principle enunciated in Fekua Mahto's case, (18 Pat. 133 : A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382), therefore, must be read in the light of these facts. In my opinion, Harries C. J. cannot be said to have laid down a rule contrary to what he has said in the later case of Chandi Mander v. Sitabi Bhagat, 21 P. L. T. 699, where he has clearly held that a mtgee. who is bound by the terms of the mtge. to pay rent in respect of the land mortgaged to him cannot claim a benefit arising from his own default.

[11] The matter, however, does not rest only with the breach of a duty on the part of the defts. The evidence discloses not only a case of misconduct but also warrants an inference of collusion between them & the landlords' amlas. (After discussion of the evidence the judgment proceeds:) Therefore, on a careful consideration of all the facts & circumstances, I am clearly of the opinion that the defts. took the settlement in fulfilment of their design &, as such the pltfs. are entitled to treat the Ct. sale as a private sale & claim redemption, because the mtge. must be treated in the eye of law as still subsisting. If any authority be needed for this proposition, I would refer to Sidhee Nazir Ali v. Ojoodhyaram, 10 M.I.A. 540 : (5 W. R. 83 P. C.), Deonandan v. Janki Singh 44 I. A. 30 : (A.I.R. (3) 1916 P. C. 227), Gauri Shanker v. Sheotahal, A I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 434 : (164 I. C. 213); Fekua Mahto v. Lal Sahu, 18 Pat. 133 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382) & an unreported decision of this Ct. in Second Appeal No. 907 of 1948, Ramdas Singh v. Manki Singh, decided on 4-5-1949.

[12] Lastly, it was contended by Mr. Lal Narain Sinha that, even if fraud be held to have been proved, the pltfs. not having claimed reconveyance of the property ; the suit must fail, & reliance has been placed by him on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Deonandan v. Janki Singh, 44 I. A. 30 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 227). In my opinion, this argument is not well founded. The pltfs', suit is, in effect, to quote the language of the Judicial Committee, in Sidhee Nazir Ali v. Ojoodhyaram Khan, 10 M. I. A. 540 at p. 553 : (5 W. R 83 P. C.), "to confess & avoid that sale, by imposing a trust on the estate which passed under it." The decree or the sale under it is not, therefore, required in law to be set aside. The pltf.'s case is that the sale enures to their benefit, & the defts. at whose instance the sale took place, must be relegated to the position in which they were before the sale. The case clearly falls within the following dictum of Lort-Williams in Nawab Nazir Ally v. Ojoodhyaram Khan, 10 M.I.A. 540: (5 W. R. 83 P. C.) :

"As to this, it is sufficient to observe that on the allegations in the plaint that bar cannot be set up; for the title & possession of the defts. against whom the redemption is prayed by this suit, is expressly alleged to be founded on fraud. This period of limitation, therefore, may be laid out of the case; & we come then to what has appeared to their Lordships to be the real question in the case (the question to which we have above refd.), whether the pltf. can in point of law, insist, notwithstanding the auction sale for arrears of revenue, that as against him, that sale ought to be viewed as a private sale. The title to redeem in this suit as against the parties subsequent to Abbott is rested on that ground, & the case which the pltf. alleges by this plaint, & by the documentary proof appended to it, is one of fraud between Abbott & McArthur, to deprive him of his title to redeem the Zemindary, by means of a secret purchase of it between them for three lacs of rupees, including a fraudulent device of a sale by auction for arrears of revenue, such arrears to be designedly incurred."

[13] The pltfs. are, therefore, entitled to treat the rent sale as against the defts. as a private sale & claim redemption even without a prayer for the setting aside of the sale.

[14] The trial Ct. has decreed the suit for redemption on payment of Rs. 800 only ; but as the defts. have used their position as mtgees. in securing an advantage by which the rent of the holding had been reduced on payment of salami, they are, in my opinion, entitled to the money which they paid to the landlords by way of salami to secure that advantage. Therefore, the pltfs. must pay Rs. 1,325, paid as salami, within four months, & they would be entitled to redeem the mtge. on payment of this amount. With this modification, the judgment of the trial Ct. is affd. & the appeal dismissed ; but, under the circumstances of the case, the pltfs. will not be entitled to costs in this Court.

[15] Reuben J. — I agree.

[16] On the finding that the mtge. deed was duly executed & regd. & that the registration receipt was made over to the mtgees. with the intention of giving effect to the mtge. there can be no question of want of delivery.

(a) Const. Ind., Art. 226 — Powers under — Exercise of — Not obligatory in every case.

There is nothing in the language or purpose of Art. 226 which shows that the words are intended to be imperative in every case. The Constitution makers could never have intended that the H. C. should issue the writ even if the petnr. had an alternative legal remedy which was equally adequate. The remedy given by the Art. is an extraordinary one and can be invoked only in exceptional circumstances when there is no alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise or where though such alternate remedy is available, it is not equally appropriate, beneficial or convenient. (1922) 1 K B 72 and (1889) 2 Q B 632 Ref. (Paras 5, 6)

Per Sarjoo Prasad J.: There can be no doubt on the clear provisions of Art. 226 that the H. C. has power to issue writs not only for the enforcement of fundamental rights but also "for any other purpose". But the words "any other purpose" must mean "the enforcement of any legal right and the performance of any legal duty". Although the powers of H. C. to issue writs under the Constitution are very wide, it has been rightly held that the remedy provided by the Art. must remain an extraordinary remedy to be used where ordinary legal process cannot give adequate and prompt relief: A I R (37) 1950 Pat 387, Rel. on. (Para 32)

(b) Bihar and Orissa Ct. of Wards Act IX (9) of 1879, S. 7 — Reversionary interest — Meaning — Interpretation of statutes.

The primary rule of interpretation is that words are to be construed in their popular sense. The Bihar and Orissa Ct. of Wards Act is not a special statute confined to the case of Hindu proprietors and taking into account the object and scope of the enactment it is clear that the expression "reversionary interest" is not used in a technical sense, but must be construed in a popular and ordinary sense. (Para 11)

(c) Bihar and Orissa Ct. of Wards Act IX (9) of 1879, S. 7 — Applicability — Essential conditions — Absence of property of ward — Effect.

On a proper construction of S. 7 it is plain that only two precedent conditions are necessary in order to confer jurisdiction on Ct. of Wards to act. The first condition is that the proprietor of the estate should be disqualified u/s. 6 of the Act, and secondly the minor member of the family ought to have an immediate or reversionary interest in the property of such proprietor. Provided that these conditions exist, the jurisdiction of the Ct. of Wards is complete. The question whether the Ward had personal properties of his own at the time the Ct. of Wards made the assumption order is not material. (Paras 12, 13)

Per Sarjoo Prasad J.: In granting power to the Ct. to assume jurisdiction over person and property of the minor, the two objects have been conjoined without creating any obligation upon the Ct. to take charge of both or not at all. Therefore where the State takes charge of either the person or the property of the minor, who is a member of the family of the disqualified proprietor, the minor becomes a ward of the Ct. within the meaning of the Act. (Para 48)

(d) Bihar and Orissa Ct. of Wards Act IX (9) of 1879, S. 35 — Possession under — When taken.

Possession of ward's property is taken u/s. 35 as soon as the formal direction to take possession is made by the Ct. Taking of actual possession of the property is not necessary. The word "so" in the section refers to the particular method of taking charge and the phrase "Possession shall have been so taken" should be construed to mean "when possession shall have been taken by an order directing possession to be taken". A I R (21) 1934 P C 202, rel. on. (Paras 15, 16)

Per Sarjoo Prasad J.: Once the management of the property of the disqualified proprietor or the minor members of his family has vested in the Ct. of Wards, it is the Ct. of Wards which is legally in charge of such property although the property may be for the time being in actual physical possession of any other person. (Para 53)

(e) Bihar and Orissa Ct. of Wards Act IX (9) of 1879, S. 7 — Amendment of, in 1940 — Retrospectivity — Interpretation of statutes.

It is an established rule of construction that retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair the existing right or obligation unless the intention is expressed in unequivocal terms. Where the Ct. of Wards validly assumed in May 1940 jurisdiction over the person and property of a certain person who was duly constituted a ward of the Ct., the amendment of S. 7 by the amending Act of 1940 which came into force in June 1940 could not affect the rights and obligations already vested, nor could it alter the juridical status of the person as a ward of the Ct. Case law referred. (Paras 18, 19)

(f) Majority Act IX (9) of 1875, S. 3 — Discrimination in age — Validity — Const. Ind., Art. 14.

The discrimination made between two classes of persons by S. 3, Majority Act, does not violate Art. 14 of the Constitution. The equal protection clause does not prevent classification and does not prevent the drawing of lines. The clause only requires that the classification must be reasonable and not arbitrary. (Para 24)

The selection of the age limit for legal majority is artificial in any case. If the legislature has fixed a different age-limit in the case of wards whose estates the Ct. of Wards has taken charge, it cannot be said that classification adopted is 'prima facie' unreasonable. The onus is therefore on the party questioning the reasonableness to establish that the classification adopted by the legislature in S. 3 is arbitrary and unreasonable. (Paras 23, 24)

(g) Interpretation of Statutes — Constitutionality of Act — Presumption.

The Ct. ought to make every possible presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. The principle is specially important when the issue of constitutionality before the Ct. is one depending on some question of degree. (1919) 249 V S 152, relied. (Para 24)

RAMASWAMI, J.: In this case the petnr. Maharaja Gopeshwar Prasad Sahi has obtained a rule calling upon the Board of Revenue & other resps. to show cause why a writ in the nature of Mandamus should not be issued commanding them to withdraw from the management of the Hathwa Raj State. Cause was shown against the rule by the Advocate General on behalf of the Board of Revenue & other resps. to whom notice of rule was directed to be given.

(2) The petnr. is the son of Maharaja Bahadur Guru Mahadevasharam Prasad Sahi who was the last holder of the ancient impartible estate known as "Hathwa Raj". On 4-5-1940 the late Maharaja Bahadur had made an appln. u/s. 6 (e), Court of Wards Act, for being declared to be a disqualified proprietor. On 11-5-1940 the Ct. of Wards made a declaration that the Maharaja Bahadur was a disqualified proprietor within the meaning of the section & that it was expedient in the public interest that his estate should be managed by the Ct. of Wards. On the same date the Ct. of Wards notified u/s. 7 read with Ss. 28 & 35 of the said Act that it had determined to take the property of the late Maharaja Bahadur under its charge & directed that possession be taken of such property on its behalf. Acting under the powers conferred u/s. 7 of the Act the Ct. of Wards also notified that they took charge of the person & property of the two sons of the Maharaja Bahadur, viz., petnr. Gopeshwar Prasad Sahi & brother Brijeshwar Prasad Sahi who were admittedly minors on that date. It is alleged in the affidavit that on 11-5-1940 when the Ct. of Wards made the order the petnr. had no property of his own & in consequence the order of assumption was void in its inception & was inoperative. It is stated that on 6-3-1950 the petnr. completed the age of 18 years & attained majority. On 20-1-1951 Maharaja Bahadur Guru Mahadevashram Prasad Sahi died & the petnr. succeeded to the impartible estate & became the absolute owner thereof. On 30-1-1951 the petnr. requested the Ct. of Wards & the State of Bihar to make over to him charge of the estate & place him in direct control & management thereof. In spite of this demand the Ct. of Wards was illegally continuing to hold charge of the estate & the other resps. were intermeddling with the affairs of the estate. The petnr. alleged that the Ct. of Wards was under legal obligation to release the estate upon the death of the late Maharaja Bahadur. The petnr. therefore prayed to the H. C. for issue of a writ in the nature of Mandamus directing the resps. to withdraw from the control & management of the Hathwa Raj.

(3) In the counter-affidavit the resps. state that the Hathwa Raj was a joint family impartible estate which developed by survivorship on the late Maharaja Bahadur. Apart from the interest which he had in the ancestral estate the petnr. had personal properties described in para. 7 of the Counter-affidavit. Exercising the power conferred u/s. 7 of the Act the Ct. of Wards took charge of both the person & properties of the petnr. & his brother Rajeswar Prasad Sahi & appointed separate guardians from time to time. Since 4-2-1950 the Manager of Hathwa Raj was the guardian of the properties of the petnr. & previous to him Pandit Ram Bahadur Sharma & Mr. B. N. Dutta, Dewan, had been acting as guardian.

(4) In showing cause against the rule, the Advocate General objected at the outset that the H. C. ought not to issue the writ of Mandamus since the petnr. had an alternative remedy by way of suit. But Mr. P. R. Das maintained that Art. 226 of the Constitution is not confined to the issue of prerogative writ & the existence of an alternative legal remedy is not a relevant point to be taken into consideration. Art. 226 of the Constitution states:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in Art. 32, every H. C. shall have power, throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction, to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Govt., within those territories directions, orders or writs, including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus; prohibition, 'quo warranto' & certiorari, or any of them, for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by part III & for any other purpose.

2. The power conferred on a H. C. by Cl. (1) shall not be in derogation of the power conferred on the S. C. by Cl. (2) of Art. 32".

(5) Mr. P. R. Das urged that though the article has in terms only conferred a power it is manifest from the context & scope of the article that the power is coupled with a duty & the H. C. is bound to issue the writ when a case arises for the enforcement of a legal right. In support of his argument learned counsel refd. to 'Frederic Guilder Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford', (1880) 5 A C 214: (49 L J Q B 577), in which the question to be determined was the construction put upon S. 3, Church Discipline Act which enacted that in every case of a clergyman charged with an ecclesiastical offence "it shall be lawful" for the Bishop on the application of any party complaining thereof, or, if he shall think fit, of his own mere motion, to issue a commission under his hand & seal to certain persons for the purpose of making enquiry as to the grounds of such charge or report. It was held by the House of Lords that the section gave the bishop complete discretion to issue or decline to issue such commission. Having regard to the preexisting state of the law & the character of the Bishop's office, it was consd. that it was his duty, before issuing the commission, to determine on the expediency of instituting the prosecution, taking into his consideration the nature, credibility, or importance of the charge, & the status, solvency, & religious character of the complainant as well as the general interests of the Church. At p. 214 Lord Cairns states:

"The words 'it shall be lawful' are not equivocal. They are plain & unambiguous. They are words merely making that legal & possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. They confer a faculty or power & they do not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power. But there may be something in the nature of thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised which may couple the power with a duty, & make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed, to exercise that power when called upon to do so."

Lord Selborne's view was that a phrase such as "it shall be lawful" is not ambiguous & susceptible either of a discretionary or an obligatory sense but their meaning is the same whether there is, or is not a duty or obligation to use the power which they confer. They are potential & never in themselves significant of any obligation. The question whether a judge or public officer to whom a power is given by such words is bound to use it upon any particular occasion or in particular manner must be solved 'aliunde' & in general, it is to be solved from the context, from the particular provisions or from the general scope & object of the enactment conferring the power. Similarly Lord Penzance said that the words "it shall be lawful" are distinctly words of permission only & the true question is not whether they mean something different but whether having regard to all the circumstances — to the person enabled to the general object of the statute & to the persons for whose benefit the power may have been intended to be conferred they do or do not create a duty in the person on whom it is conferred to exercise it. It is not enough that the thing empowered to be done should be for the public benefit in order to make it imperative to exercise that power on all occasions falling within the statute. In the present case, the question is whether Art. 226 should be construed as conferring a discretionary power, or imposing a duty when its exercise is called for. In my opinion there is nothing in the language or purpose of Art. 226 which shows that the words were intended to be imperative in every case. The Constitution makers could never have intended that the H. C. should issue the writ even if the petnr. had a alternative legal remedy which was equally adequate. Otherwise the ordinary legal procedure will be abrogated, payment of proper C. F. will be avoided, the H. C. will be asked to decide complicated questions of right upon affidavits — a new & cheap flood-gate of litigation will be opened. The jurisdiction may be invoked in cases of so trifling or insignificant nature that no one having discretion in the matter would allow it to be litigated. In my opinion Art. 226 cannot be so construed as to make the exercise of the power conferred on the H. C. obligatory in every case. The remedy given by Art. 226 is an extraordinary one & can be invoked only in exceptional circumstances by those who have no alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise.

(6) Mr. P. R. Das nevertheless maintained that there was no alternative remedy, that no suit lay against the State for the tortious act committed by the act of the Manager of the Ct. of Wards. Even if such a suit was competent the determination of the question will take a considerable time, the suit will become infructuous & justice will be denied. It was contended that the Ct. cannot refuse to issue the writ unless the alternative remedy was equally appropriate, beneficial & convenient. Reference was made to 'Rex v. Poplar Borough Council No. 1', (1922) 1 K B 72' in which the Ct. granted a writ of Mandamus on the ground that the alternative remedy by distress was wholly inadequate & that Mandamus was the only effective means of securing the performance of the public duty. To a similar effect is the case of 'Reg v. Leicester Guardians', (1899) 2 Q B 632, when the Ct. decided that the duty imposed upon the guardians by S. 5, Vaccination Act, to appoint a vaccination officer may be enforced by a writ of Mandamus through the local Govt. Board on whose appln. the writ was issued had itself power under the statute to appoint a fit person to act as vaccination officer on the default of the guardinas. There is great force in the contention of Mr. P. R. Das; & if it is established that the resps. are in illegal possession of the Hathwa Raj, I should be prepared to hold that Mandamus is the proper form of procedure in this particular case & a writ may be issued to enforce the obligation imposed on the resps.

(7) The main debate therefore turns on the question whether the Ct. of Wards had jurisdiction to take charge of the person & property of the petnr. u/s. 7, Ct. of Wards Act, by the Assumption Order dated 11-5-1940.

(8) S. 7, Ct. of Wards Act states:

"Whenever the sole proprietor of an estate, or all the joint proprietors of an estate are disqualified as provided in the last preceding section, the Ct. shall have power to take charge of all the property to every such proprietor or joint-proprietor within its jurisdiction, & of the person of any such proprietor or joint-proprietor who is resident within its jurisdiction; & also of the person & property of any minor member of the family of any such proprietor or joint-proprietor who has an immediate or reversionary interest in the property of such proprietor or joint-proprietor."

(9) Mr. P. R. Das argued in the first place that the petnr. had no immediate or reversionary interest in the impartible estate before the death of the late Maharajah Bahadur, that the Ct. of Wards could not therefore legally take charge of the person & property of the petnr., that the latter was not constituted a ward of the Ct. Mr. P. R. Das reld. upon 'Surtaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari', (10 All 272), in which Sir Richard Couch held that an impartible estate was a joint family property in no sense & that the son's right at birth under the Mitakshara, was so connected with the right to share in & to obtain partition of the estate, that it does not exist independently of the latter right. But this doctrine was definitely negatived by Lord Dunedin when delivering the judgment of the Board in 'Baijnath Pd. Singh v. Tej Bali Singh' (48 I A 195). In that case it was decided that property, though impartible, may be the ancestral property of a joint family, & that in such cases the successor falls to be designated according to the ordinary rule of the Mitakshara. "The keynote of the whole position" (to adopt the phrase of Lord Dunedin) is not that property which is not joint property devolves by virtue of custom as though it had been joint — but that the general law regulates all beyond the custom, that the custom of impartibility does not touch the succession since the right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom. Hence the estate retains its character of joint family property, and devolves by the general law upon that person who, being in fact and in law joint in respect of the estate, is also the senior member in the senior line. In 'Shiba Prasad Singh v. Prayag Kumari', (59 I A 331 at p. 345), Sir Dinshaw Mulla emphatically states:

"The birth right of the senior member to take by survivorship still remains. Nor is this right a mere 'spes successionis' similar to that of a reversioner succeeding on the death of a Hindu widow to her husband's estate. It is right which is capable of being renounced & surrendered."

The same view has been affirmed by the Judicial Committee in 'Comr. of Income-tax v. Krishna Kishore', (68 I A 155), in which the question for determination was whether the income of the impartible estate, to which the assessee had succeeded by rule of primogeniture prevailing in his family governed by the Mitakshara, was chargeable in his hands in the status of "individual" the assessee being the head of the family consisting of himself and his son. The Judicial Committee answered the question in the negative holding that the estate is joint family property and that the assessee as individual cannot be charged in respect of it under section 9 of the Indian Income-tax Act. At p. 168, Sir John Rankin states:

"Though the co-ownership of the junior member may be 'in a sense' only, carrying no present right to joint possession, if the question be whether the Hindu undivided family or the present holder is owner of the estate the answer of the Hindu law is that it is joint family property. The assessee as an individual cannot therefore be charged in respect of it under S. 9 of the Act.

(10) In view of the principle established by these authorities I am of opinion that the petnr. had a reversionary if not an immediate interest in the impartible estate of Hathwa Raj within the meaning of S. 7 of the Ct. of Wards Act.

(11) Mr. P. R. Das maintained that the phrase "reversionary interest" in S. 7 should be construed in a technical sense, to mean the interest of the heirs of the last full owner to succeed on the death of a Hindu widow. Learned counsel referred to 'Pugh v. Ashutosh Sen', (56 I A 93), in which the question was whether the word "conversion" which occurs in Art. 48 of the Limitation Act ought to be construed in a technical sense. The Judicial Committee held that the word must be so construed in the context of the Act & it must be presumed that when the legislature has deliberately used a term which has a known legal significance in law, it has attached to that term that known legal significance. But the material facts of the present case are widely different. The primary rule is that words are to be construed in their popular sense & in the present case there is no reason suggested for limiting the natural & ordinary meaning of the word used. On the contrary, it is obvious that the Ct. of Wards Act is not a special statute confined to the case of Hindu proprietors. Taking into account the object & scope of the enactment I am satisfied that the expression "reversionary interest" is not used in a technical sense, but the expression must be construed in a popular & ordinary sense.

(12) Mr. P. R. Das next urged that in the lifetime of the late Maharaja Bahadur the petnr. had no personal properties of his own, that the Ct. of Wards had therefore no legal authority to take control of "the person & property of the petnr". In my opinion, this argument is not sound. For it is plain, on a proper construction of S. 7 of the Ct. of Wards Act, that only two precedent conditions are necessary in order to confer jurisdiction on Ct. of Wards to act. The first condition is that the proprietor of the estate should be disqualified u/s. 6 of the Act, & secondly the minor member of the family ought to have an immediate or reversionary interest in the property of such proprietor. Provided that these conditions exist, the jurisdiction of the Ct. of Wards is complete. In the present case there is no question that these conditions were present & it follows that by the assumption order dated 11-5-1940 the petnr. was duly constituted a ward of the Ct. within the meaning of S. 3, Ct. of Wards Act.

(13) In my opinion it is not material to enquire whether the petnr. had personal properties of his own at the time the Ct. of Wards made the assumption order. It is not relevant in determining the question of jurisdiction. But the question was elaborately argued on behalf of both parties & I shall, in deference to the argument of the learned counsel, proceed to consider whether the petnr. had personal properties of his own & whether the Ct. of Wards took charge of such personal properties.

(14) For the resps. it was contended that at the time when assumption order was made the petnr. had (1) ornaments & jewelleries presented to him in 1938 on the occasion of his mundan, (2) ornaments, jewelleries & gold coins kept in a locker of the Imperial Bank of India, (3) post office Defence Savings Certificates purchased in his name.

But the petnr. alleged that item No. 1 which constituted ornaments & jewelleries presented at the time of mundan belonged not to him but to the estate according to the custom. As regards the savings certificates Mr. P. R. Das pointed out that they were purchased between 11-11-1940 & 19-4-1941 out of the savings of the personal allowance paid to the petnr. Learned counsel contended that the purchases were made after the amending Act of 1939, viz., Bihar Act IV (4) of 1940 which came into force & so ought not to be taken into account. I do not propose at this stage to examine whether this contention is valid for, with respect to the third item — the ornaments & jewelleries kept in the locker of the Imperial Bank, I am satisfied upon the affidavits that the Ct. of Wards took charge. In the petnr's affidavit it is stated that there was a dispute as regards ownership for a period of six years from the time the Ct. of Wards assumed charge until by his award dated 11-6-1944 Mr. Y. S. Godbole, Memoer of the Board of Revenue, declared that the ornaments & jewelleries should belong to the petnr. but they may remain in charge of the mother who was then living with him. From Annexure X 3 it appears that Mr. Godbole agreed that the "jewellery may remain in charge of the mother & she would do well to keep it in a separate box with another box containing her own jewellery in the same locker."

Mr. P. R. Das then refd. to S. 35, Ct. of Wards Act, & contended that unless the Ct. of Wards had taken actual possession of the jewellery the Ct. cannot be said to be in charge of the property. S. 35 enacts:

"Whenever the Ct. has determined to take the person or property of a disqualified proprietor under its charge, whether in accordance with an order of the Civil Ct. or otherwise, the Ct. shall make an order declaring the fact & directing that possession be taken of such person & property or of such property on behalf of the Ct., & the Ct. shall be held to be in charge of such property from the time when possession shall have so taken."

(15) In my opinion the contention of the learned counsel is not sound. Possession is taken u/s. 35 as soon as the formal direction to take possession is made.

(16) I think that the word "so" in S. 35 refers to the particular method of taking charge & the phrase "possession shall have been so taken" should be construed to mean "when possession shall have been taken by an order directing possession to be taken". This view is supported by 'Lachminarain v. Ibrahim Hussain', (13 Pat 596), in which the applts. had obtained a money decree against the resp., whose property had been taken in charge in 1902 under the (Bengal) Ct. of Wards Act, 1879. They applied to execute the decree against property which the resp. had inherited upon his brother's death in 1919, but which was in the adverse possession of a claimant thereto. Upon the brother's death the Colr. issued a notfn. that the Ct. of Wards had taken the property into charge. Later, before the appln. to execute was made, the manager of the Ct. of Wards was ordered to take possession, but since the claimant still remained in possession the manager could not obtain actual possession. Upon these facts the Judicial Committee held that the Ct. of Wards had taken possession within the meaning of S. 35 of the Act so as to bring the property into charge, & that accordingly S. 60 A, precluded it from being taken in execution. At p. 606 the report states:

"The learned Subordinate Judge, in his judgment failed to appreciate the governing importance of the fact that throughout the property in question was in the adverse possession of the Mutawalli, & that from him actual possession could only be obtained by legal process, which had in fact been instituted & is not yet finally concluded. Their Lordships agree with the H. C. in their view that 'possession' under the Act must depend upon the nature of the interest in the property in question of the disqualified proprietor. It is, for instance, assumed by the Act that a reversionary interest is one of which possession can be taken."

(17) In the present case, upon the facts stated in the petnr's affidavit I am of opinion that the Ct. of Wards had taken charge not only of the person but of the property of the petnr. after the assumption order u/s. 7 was made.

(18) Mr. P. R. Das suggested in the next place that by the enactment of Bihar Act IV (4) of 1940 section 7 of the Ct. of Wards Act has been materially amended. Learned counsel pointed out that the amended section did not empower the Ct. of Wards to take charge of the person & property of the minor member of the family of the proprietor who had voluntarily applied to the Ct. to have his properties placed under the management of the Ct. Bihar Act IV (4) of 1940 came into force with effect from 28-6-1940 & it was contended that the order of assumption made by the Ct. of Wards ceased to have any legal effect from that date. In support of his contention learned counsel refd. to S. 28, Bihar General Clauses Act, & argued that there was a repeal & re-enactment within the meaning of this section. It is impossible in my opinion to accept the argument of the learned counsel. There is no question of any repeal or re-enactment. What actually happened was repeal of a part of S. 7 by the Amending Act of 1940. It is an established rule of construction that retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair the existing right or obligation unless the intention is expressed in unequivocal terms. The principle is recognised in leading authorities. In 'Moon v. Durden' (1848) 2 Ex 22, an action was brought upon a wager, commenced before the passing of the Gaming Act, 1845, which enacts that all contracts by way of wagering "shall be null & void", & that "no suit shall be brought or maintained" for recovering money alleged to be won upon a wager. This Act was passed while the action was pending, & the question was whether it operated to defeat the pltf's claim. The Ct. of Exchequer decided that it did not & the action brought could be continued. In another case 'Knight v. Lee', (1893) 1 Q B 41, the Divisional Ct. had to consider the Gaming Act, (1892) (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), which enacted that a promise to repay a person moneys paid by him on a wager void under the Gaming Act, 1845, should itself be void & provided by S. 1 that:

"No action shall be brought or maintained to recover any such sum of money."

In that case the pltf. before the passing of the Gaming Act, 1892, paid losses on the deft's behalf, but he did not issue his writ until after the Act was passed. It was held by Mathew & Bruce JJ. that the action was rightly brought & that the Act did not destroy the vested claims or bar the commencement of fresh actions to enforce them. In 'Henshall v. Porter', (1923) 2 K B 193, the question turned on S. 1, Gaming Act 1922 by which no action under S. 2, Gaming Act, 1835, to recover back money paid in respect of Gaming debts "shall be entertained in any Ct.". The pltf. after the Act of 1922 came into force, issued a writ in respect of causes of action which had arisen before Act came into force. It was held that the pltf's cause of action, vested in him before the Act of 1922 came into force, was not divested on the Act coming into force, & that he was entitled to recover.

(19) I consider that the Ct. of Wards validly assumed in May 1940 jurisdiction over the person & property of the petnr. who was duly constituted a ward of the Ct. & that the amending Act of 1940 could not affect the rights & obligations already vested, nor could it alter the juridical status of the petnr. as a ward of the Ct.

(20) If this view is correct, it is plain that under S. 8 read with the definition of a "ward" in S. 3, of the Act the Ct. of Wards is not bound to release the estate from its charge unless the petnr. attains twentyone years of age. The same result will be reached if S. 3, Majority Act, is applied to the case. S. 3 states:

"Age of majority of persons domiciled in British India. — Subject as aforesaid, every minor of whose person or property, or both, a guardian, other than a guardian for a suit within the meaning of Chap. XXXI, Civil P. C., has been or shall be appointed or declared by any Ct. of Justice before the minor has attained the age of eighteen years ,& every minor of whose property the superintendence has been or shall be assumed by any Ct. of Wards before the minor has attained that age, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act X (10) of 1865 or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of twenty-one years, & not before: Subject as aforesaid, every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years & not before."

(21) It is necessary to state that in an earlier portion of this judgment I have held that the Ct. of Wards had assumed charge & therefore superintendence not only of the interest of the petnr. in the impartible estate but also of his personal ornaments & jewelleries.

(22) Dr. Sultan Ahmad, who appeared at one stage in support of the rule, contended that the Ct. of Wards had assumed charge of the person & properties of the petnr. not because the petnr. was disqualified but merely because petnr. was the minor son of the late Maharaja Bahadur whom the Ct. of Wards had, on his own appln. disqualified. Learned counsel pointed out that after the death of the Maharaja Bahadur the position has signally changed & in the language adopted by the learned counsel

"the link of relationship has snapped & the Ct. of Wards had no legal justification to retain charge of Hathwa estate."

The argument is attractive but wholly untenable. As soon as the Ct. of Wards assumed charge of the person & property of the petnr. by the Assumption order of 1940, the petnr. was duly constituted a ward of the Ct. within the meaning of S. 3, Ct. of Wards Act. S. 8 of the Act (to which Dr. Sultan Ahmad refd.) expressly provides that

"whenever the circumstances of any ward become such that the Ct. could not take charge of him or of his property, if he were not under its charge already, the Ct. shall be bound to release from its charge such person & his property."

It should be noticed that S. 3 of the Act defines a minor to be "a person who has not completed the age of twenty-one years". It follows that u/s. 8 the Ct. of Wards is not bound to release the estate of the petnr. till he attains the age of twenty-one years.

(23) Lastly Mr. P. R. Das argued that S. 3, Indian Majority Act, was unconstitutional since it prescribed a dual age of majority, one for persons of whose property superintendence has been assumed by the Ct. of Wards or of whose person or property a guardian has been appointed by a Ct. of Justice, & the other for persons whose property is not under such superintendence or for whom no guardian has been appointed by civil Ct. Learned counsel maintained that the statute made discrimination between two classes of persons & it was in violation of the guarantee of equal protection of laws made by Art. 14 of the Constitution. In my opinion the argument is untenable. If the policy & object of the Ct. of Wards Act is examined it is apparent both from the nature of jurisdiction over disqualified proprietors & by nature of the power entrusted to the Ct. of Wards that the whole scheme of dealing with females, minors & persons of unsound mind as regards their estates was an essential part of the arrangement brought into force for collection of the land revenue & the Permanent Settlement of Bengal. From the beginning, the jurisdiction exercised by the Ct. of Wards was an exercise essentially of sovereign power — power to take over the estates of persons unable to manage their own estates in order that the estates may be properly managed & Govt. revenue may be rendered safe. Public interest & the interest of the revenue were clearly the object of the powers conferred by the Act (See the judgment of Rankin C. J. in 'Secretary of State v. Shreegobinda', (59 Cal 1289). In view of the scope & object of the enactment it is plain that the minority of the persons under the charge of the Ct. of Wards was deliberately extended to the age of twenty-one years so that the estates may be properly administered & the Govt. revenue adequately protected. The selection of the age limit for legal majority is artificial in any case. If the legislature has fixed a different age-limit in the case of wards whose estates the Ct. of Wards has taken charge, it cannot be said that the classification adopted is 'prima facie' unreasonable.

(24) In my opinion the discrimination in S. 3, Majority Act does not violate Art. 14 of the Constitution. The equal protection clause does not prevent classification & does not prevent the drawing of lines. The clause only requires that the classification must be reasonable & not arbitrary. In truth all legislation involves classification of some sort & what Art. 14 means is that any classification must be reasonably relevant to the purpose of good Govt. In this context, reference should be made to the important principle that the Ct. ought to make every possible presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. The principle is specially important when the issue of constitutionality before the Ct. is one depending on some question of degree.

"It must be presumed that a Legislature understands & correctly appreciates the needs of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience & that its discriminations are based upon adequate grounds" 'Middleton v. Texas Power and L. Company', (1919) 249 U S 152: (63 L Ed 527).

The onus is therefore on the petnr. to establish that the classification adopted by the legislature in S. 3, Majority Act, is arbitrary & unreasonable. No material has been furnished in the petnr's affidavit to support his allegation. No material has also been placed by learned counsel to substantiate his argument. To adopt the language of Holmes J.:

"It is the usual last resort of constitutional arguments to point out shortcomings of this sort. But the answer is that the law does all that is needed when it does all that it can, indicates a policy, applies it to all within the lines, & seeks to bring within the lines all similarly situated so far & so fast as it means allow." (Buck v. Bell', 274 U S 208).

(25) For these reasons I hold that the Ct. of Wards had jurisdiction to assume charge in May 1940 of the person & property of the petnr., that the notfn. to that effect was legal & valid, that the petnr. was duly constituted a ward of the Ct., that u/s. 8 of the Act the Ct. of Wards is not bound to release from its charge the estate of Hathwa Raj unless the petnr. attains 21 years of age.

(26) In my opinion the rule must be discharged & the appln. must be dismissed with costs to the resps. Hearing fee 10 gold mohars.

(27) Sarjoo Prasad, J.: This is an appln. on behalf of Maharaja Gopeshwar Prasad Sahi under Art. 226 of the Constitution. The petnr. herein prays for an appropriate direction, order or writ upon the opposite party, the State of Bihar & its agents, commanding them to forbear from retaining charge of the estate of the petnr. & to withdraw from the management thereof.

(28-29) The facts on which this petn. is based may be stated as follows: (After stating the facts & the contentions of the parties the judgment proceeds thus:)

(30) In so far as the facts are concerned, it would appear that the only difference between the parties is as to whether or not the minors including the petnr. had or had not on the date of the assumption order, namely, on 11-5-1940, any personal property of their own. The other facts do not appear to have been denied & are rather admitted by the parties. In regard to the claim of the petnr. that he had attained majority even his age is not disputed. In fact, on the face of the assumption order dated 11-5-1940 he would appear to be 18 years 2 months 5 days. There can be, therefore, no doubt that he has since then attained the age of 18 years. On behalf of the opposite party, however, it is claimed that this alone is not sufficient to enable him to obtain release of his estate because the Ct. of Wards can continue to hold charge of the estate until he attains the age of 21 years, a minor under the Ct. of Wards being a person who has not completed that age.

(31) The two main questions which, therefore arise in the case are (1) whether an appln. for a writ under Art. 226, Constitution Act, is maintainable, & (2) whether the petnr. still continues to be a ward of the Ct., &, as such, the retention of the charge of his estate by the Ct. of Wards is lawful. There are several subsidiary questions involved under these two main heads which will be discussed in their appropriate place.

(32) It has been already pointed out that the petnr. in this case claims the issue of a writ on the ground that he has an inviolable right to hold his property in his possession & to manage the same at his own sweet will & pleasure, & that the opposite party have no statutory right to take or retain charge of the same; on the contrary, that they have a legal obligation to release the estate in favour of the petnr. The allegation, therefore, is that the conduct of the opposite party is in violation of the fundamental right of the petnr. to hold & manage his property as contemplated by Art. 19 (f) of the Constitution. Under Art. 226 the H. C. has power

"throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Govt., within those territories directions, orders, or writs including writs in the nature of 'habeas corpus, mandamus', prohibition 'quo warranto' & 'certiorari', or any of them, for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III & for any other purpose."

Part III of the Constitution, it may be stated, deals with fundamental rights. There can be no doubt on the clear provisions of this Article that the H. C. has power to issue writs not only for the enforcement of fundamental rights but "for any other purpose". But the words 'any other purpose" must mean 'the enforcement of any legal right & the performance of any legal duty" Although the powers of this Ct. to issue writs under the Constitution are very wide, it has been rightly held that the remedy provided by Art. 226 must remain an extraordinary remedy to be used 'where ordinary legal process cannot give adequate and prompt relief'; vide Bagaram v. State of Bihar', (29 Pat 491). Mr. P. R. Das on behalf of the petnr. has refd. to a decision in 'The Mayor of Rochester v. The Queen', (1858) 120 E R 791, where Baron Martin observed:

"That Ct. has power, by the prerogative writ of mandamus, to amend all errors which tend to the oppression of the subject or other misgovernment, & ought to be used when the law has provided no specific remedy, & justice & Govt. require that there ought to be one for the execution of the common law or the provisions of a statute; Comyns's Digest, Mandamus (A)".

(33) He further stresses the fact that where the remedy would be inconvenient to the subject & injurious to the community, the only & most effective remedy is the remedy by issue of a writ to correct that injustice or injury to the subject. He also draws our attention to another passage in the judgment of Baron Martin where the learned Baron remarked:

"Instead of being astute to discover reasons for not applying this great constitutional remedy for error and misgovernment, we think it our duty to be vigilant to apply it in every case to which, by any reasonable construction, it can be made applicable."

Mr. Das has also reld. upon another well-known English precedent which is often cited at the Bar in support of such applications, namely the case of 'Frederic Guilder Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford', (1880) 5 A C 214). In this case the Lord Chancellor (Earl Cairns) made the following classical observation:

"The words 'it shall be lawful' are not equivocal. They are plain & unambiguous. They are words merely making that legal & possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. They confer a faculty or power, & they do not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power. But there may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, & make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed, to exercise that power when called upon to do so."

(34) The same noble Lord, however, proceeded to state:

"the words 'it shall be lawful' being accoding to the natural meaning permissive or enabling words only, it lies upon those as it seems to me, who contend that an obligation exists to exercise this power, to shew in the circumstances of the case something which, according the principles I have mentioned creates this obligation."

(35) Mr. Das contends on the authority of these dicta & on the observations of Lord Blackburn in the same case that where "the object of giving the power is to enable the donee to effectuate a right, then it is the duty of the donee of the power to exercise the power when those who have the right call upon him so to do."

He points out that in the present case his appln. is to effectuate a right, &, therefore, the power conferred upon the H. C. on the authority of Art. 226 must be exercised by this Ct. as a matter of duty, & there is no discretion left in the Ct. to refuse the prayer. I am afraid the language of the noble Lords is not capable of bearing that extreme interpretation & must be read in the light of the context. In fact, each of their Lordships who decided the case expressly pointed out that there must be something in the circumstances of each case so as to create an obligation on the part of the Ct. to issue a writ of the nature prayed for. I have already refd. to the dictum of Lord Cairns. Lord Penzance who was also a party to the decision & agreed with the Lord Chancellor said as follows:

"The words 'it shall be lawful' are distinctly words of permission only — they are enabling & empowering words. They confer a legislative right & power on the individual named to do a particular thing & the true question is not whether they mean something different, but whether, regard being had to the person so enabled to the subject-matter to the general objects of the statute, & to the person or class of persons for whose benefit the power may be intended to have been conferred — they do or do not, create a duty in the person on whom it is conferred, to exercise it."

(36) Again at another place the noble Lord summed up in these words:

"The conclusion, then at which I arrive is, that the Applt. has not established his case. The words 'it shall be lawful' are permissive & enabling only. It devolved upon him to shew that the Legislature intended the exercise of the power, thus conferred, to be a duty, in the performance of which the bishop was not intended to have any discretion, & he has, in my opinion, failed to shew it."

(37) Lord Selborne, another of the learned Judges, made similar observations:

"I agree with my noble & learned friends who have preceded me, that the meaning of such words is the same, whether there is or is not a duty or obligation to use the power which they confer. They are potential, & never (in themselves) significant of any obligation."

(38) These significant passages clearly show that it is always for the Ct. to find out whether in the circumstances of a particular case the failure to exercise the power would amount to a dereliction of duty; in other words, it would depend upon the facts & incidents of the case under consideration to couple the power with a duty upon the Ct. to issue the writ prayed for. If the Ct. is not satisfied on an examination of the facts & incidents of the case & the nature, object & conditions thereof that it calls for interference by a writ of mandamus or any writ of the like nature, the Ct. may refuse to exercise that power. It cannot be laid down as a hard & fast rule that in each case where the party claims the redress of any legal right, the Ct. must as a matter of duty issue a writ in his favour if he seeks to apply for it. It is important to bear in mind that on the facts of the case in 'Julius v. Bishop of Oxford' their Lordships refused to issue the mandamus prayed for.

(39) Another decision on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the petnr. is the decision of the Judicial Committee in 'Alcock, Ashdown & Co. v. Chief Revenue Authority, Bombay', (50 I A 227). In that case their Lordships relying upon the above decision in '(1880) 5 A C 214', held that it was the duty of the Chief Revenue-authority under section 51 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, to state a case & refer it to the H. C. when in the course of an assessment a serious question of law arises, & the H. C. has power u/s. 45, Specific Relief Act, 1877, to make an order requiring the Chief Revenue-authority to perform that duty. It was contended before the Privy Council that though u/s. 51 of the then Indian Income-tax Act, the Chief Revenue-authority "may, if he thinks fit, draw up a statement of the case & refer it to the H. C., he is bound to do so, even on the application of the person to be assessed if he is satisfied that the appln. is frivolous or that the reference is unnecessary, & that the authority has in the present case shown that he is satisfied that the appln. was frivolous & the reference was unnecessary". Their Lordships repelled the contention thus:

"If the assessee applies for a case the Authority must state it, unless he can say that it is frivolous or unnecessary. He is not to wait for the Ct. to order him to do it; it will be a misfeasance & a breach of the statutory duty if he does not do it. Put that case aside. The rule here is supported upon the earlier part of the section. No doubt that part does not say that he shall state a case, it only says that he may. And as the learned counsel for the resp. rightly urged, 'may' does not mean 'shall'. Neither are the words 'it shall be lawful' those of compulsion. Only the capacity or power is given to the Authority. But when a capacity or power is given to a public authority, there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it."

(40) And then their Lordships proceeded to quote the classical observations of Lord Cairns to which I have already made a reference. Here again, it is to be observed that what their Lordships point out is that there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it, & the facts of that case indicated that serious questions of law did arise, & therefore a reference was necessitated.

(41) Incidentally Mr. P. R. Das also drew our attention to the limitation provided in S. 45, Specific Relief Act. He contended that these limitations are not to be found in Art. 226 of the Constitution, & therefore the exercise of the power by the Ct. was unhampered & untrammelled by any of those limitations. The existence or non-existence of the limitation as mentioned in S. 45, Specific Relief Act, is immaterial. The exercise of the power to issue writs will have to be broad-based on well-established principles & the mere fact that the limitations provided in S. 45, Specific Relief Act, have not been incorporated in Art. 226 of the Constitution will not affect the legal position as to the circumstances within which a duty is cast upon the Ct. to exercise those powers. In fact, Mr. P. R. Das, as shown above, has himself relied very strongly upon English precedents which had nothing to do with S. 45, Specific Relief Act. I may as well state that the decision in '(1880) 5 A C 214 (supra)' appears to have been expressly consd. by at least one of the Judges who decided the F. B. case of this Ct. in 'Bagaram Tulupule's case (supra)', namely, Das, J. The learned Judge refd. to a recent decision of the English Cts. in King v. Marshland Smeeth', 1920-1 K B 155, & he quoted in extenso from the judgment of McCardie, J. where his Lordship pointed out that where a statute has conferred a power or discretion only, as distinct from a duty, then the prerogative writ of mandamus will not be issued by the Ct. as a matter of course.

(42) For these reasons it will be necessary to find out whether in the circumstances of the present case the petnr. has been able to establish that (1) he has no alternative remedy in order to obtain redress & effectuate his legal right, & even if he has, (2) whether that alternative remedy is equally convenient, beneficial & effectual for the enforcement of that right.

(43) On the first point Mr. Das urges that it is very doubtful whether the petnr. would be entitled to sue the State of Bihar for recovery of possession of his property, & even if he did institute such a suit, the protracted character of the litigation might be such as to give him no relief at all, because by that time the petnr. might complete the 21 years of his age. He submits, therefore, that the remedy by way of a suit if at all was neither convenient, nor beneficial nor effectual. He relies upon a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. IX, p. 744 paras. 269 & 270, where it has been observed that in case the alternative remedy is not equally convenient, beneficial & effective for the enforcement of a legal right, the issue of a writ is the only appropriate remedy, & its performance is to supply the lacuna in the administration of justice & to give speedy & prompt relief to the parties aggrieved by the conduct of public servants & officers. He also contends that the State of Bihar being in possession of the petnr's estate through its delegates & agents, the other opposite parties, namely the Board of Revenue & the subordinate officers, the petnr. may not be able to maintain a suit for recovery of possession against them. Reliance has been placed by him upon a decision in 'Secretary of State v. Shreegobinda', (59 Cal 1289). Rankin C. J. who delivered the judgment in that case opined that the jurisdiction exercised by the Ct. of Wards was in exercise of powers, 'essentially sovereign' to take over the estates of persons unable to manage their own estates in order that they may be properly managed & the Govt. revenue may be rendered safe. The learned Counsel also refers to S. 69 A, Ct. of Wards Act, as amended by the Act of 1940. This section enacts:

"No suit shall be instituted against the Crown in respect of anything done or purporting to be done under this Act, or in respect of any alleged neglect or omission to perform any duty devolving on the Provincial Govt. or the Ct., or any of the officers subordinate to it & acting under this Act. or in respect of the exercise of, or the failure to exercise, any power conferred by his Act on the Provincial Govt. or the Ct., or any officer subordinate to it & acting under this Act, except for the recovery of possession of property in charge of the Ct. on the ground that such property is not subject to a trust, or for making the Ct. chargeable with or accountable for the loss or misapplication of any property in its charge or the income thereof where the loss or misapplication has been occasioned by or through the wilful neglect or default of the Ct. or of any officer subordinate to the Ct."

(44) The exceptions to the section quoted above are very important. In my opinion, S. 69 A does not preclude the right of a suit altogether nor does it appar to me that the said decision in '59 Cal 1289 (supra)' is an authority for holding that there is a complete bar to the institution of suits against the opposite party for recovery of possession of the property of the petnr. taken over by the Ct. of Wards when the circumstances under which the Ct. of Wards took charge of the estate have ceased to exist & the Ct. under the statute could no longer function as a custodian of trustee in respect of such property within the meaning of the Act. S. 69 A itself provides that a suit for possession of such property will lie & makes an exception in regard to suits for recovery of possession of property in charge of the Ct. on the ground that such property is no longer subject to such a trust. Besides S. 69 A must be read subject to other provisions of the Act wherein the powers of the Ct. to hold charge of the estate of a ward & the circumstances under which it can continue to hold charge have been defined; for instance S. 8 of the Act says that whenever the circumstances of any ward become such that the Ct. could not take charge of him or of his property, if he were not under its charge already, the Ct. shall be bound to release from its charge such person & his property. Therefore subject to just exceptions mentioned in the Act, where the conditions in which the Ct. could take charge of the person & property of a ward, as provided by Ss. 6 & 7 of the Act have ceased to exist, the Ct. shall be bound to release from its charge such persons & properties. The Ct. of Wards would in that case become 'functus officio' with respect to such persons & property & a suit for recovery of possession under those conditions would lie just in the same manner as against any other trespasser. So long as those circumstances subsist, the Ct. of Wards is to continue in possession of the person & property of the ward. The property, as it were, is subject to a trust in the hands of the Ct. for the benefit of the ward. There is, therefore, not much substance in the argument that the petnr. has no alternative remedy.

(45) It is, however, doubtful whether such a remedy would equally be a convenient, beneficial & effective remedy. There is no gainsaying the fact that the decision of a regular title suit instituted in the ordinary civil Cts. is bound to be a prolonged affair, & the petnr. may even before the conclusion of the litigation complete the age of 21 years thereby necessitating the Ct. of Wards to deliver possession of the properties to him irrespective of the result of that litigation. Such a litigation might at all events prove infructuous. It is true that apart from this, the petnr. has not been able to point to any other factor so as to lead this Ct. to hold that the circumstances of this case are so compelling as to cast a duty upon the Ct. to issue a writ of mandamus the properties are in the hands of the Ct. of Wards & the state of Bihar & nothing has been brought to our notice to indicate that the estate is being mismanaged or squandered so as to cause irreparable & serious injury to the petnr. if the management of his property continues to be in the hands of the opposite party any longer. The properties have undoubtedly vested in the petnr. on the death of his father & he is now the sole owner of the Raj according to the rule of primogeniture which obtains there; & the fact that the properties are not in his possession must naturally be inconvenient to him. It does not, however necessarily follow that the management, if it continues to be in the hands of the Ct. of Wards, would not be beneficial to his interest. At any rate, there is no complaint on that score. On these grounds I find it difficult to agree with the contention of Mr. P. R. Das that it is an appropriate case where the prerogative writ of mandamus should be issued by the Ct. specially when I am not satisfied that the petnr. has a good case on merits.

(46) This leads me to an examination of the merits of the appln. namely, whether the possession of the Ct. of Wards after the death of the petnr's father when the estate had vested in the petnr., is illegal & in violation of the petnr's right to hold the property. The discussion of this problem turns upon the answer to the question whether the petnr. has attained the age of majority. Mr. P. R. Das for the petnr. relies upon

S. 3, Majority Act, 1875 (Act IX of 1875). S. 3 of the said Act provides that subject to the exceptions mentioned in the section, every other person shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years & not before. The exceptions specified refer to: (i) a minor of whose person or property, or both, a guardian has been appointed or declared by any Ct. of Justice (other than a guardian-ad-litem under Civil P. C.), & (ii) a minor of whose property the superintendence has been or shall be assumed by any Ct. of Wards before the minor has attained the age of 18 years. In these two classes of cases only, according to the section, the minor shall be deemed to have attained majority when he completes his age of 21 years & not before. For the petnr. it is argued that he does not come under any of these exceptions, & for the opposite party it is contended that he does come within the limitation in as much as the petnr. was a person during whose minority the superintendence of his property was assumed by the Ct. of Wards. That being so, he could not attain the age of majority before he completes his age of 21 years. This necessitates an examination of S. 7, Ct. of Wards Act, as it stood prior to the amendment of 1940. But before I do that I may here dispose of a short point which has been raised by Mr. Das.

(47) He contends that the above exceptions in S. 3, Majority Act, being discriminatory in character in regard to certain class of minors, must be held to be inconsistent with Art. 14 of the Constitution & therefore void. In this context he refers to a passage from Willis Constitutional Law cited with approval by Mukherjee, J. of the S. C. in 'Charanjit Lal v. Union of India', (AIR (38) 1951 SC 41 at p. 58). It is well-estaolished however, as that decision itself recognises, that the presumption is in favour of the constitutionality of a legislation & the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a transgression of constitutional principles. Cts. of law should 'prima facie' lean in favour of upholding the legislation on any reasonable and valid assumption & it is for the party impugning the enactment to make out an unanswerable case for showing that the selection or discrimination under the enactment was arbitrary & untenable. As was laid down by the S. C. of America in 'Radice v. New York', (264 US 294):

"The Legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm & it may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest." This quotation has been reld. upon by Mukherjea, J. himself in the above decision & is, in my opinion, sufficient justification for rejecting the aforesaid contention of Mr. P. R. Das.

(48) I shall now turn to S. 7, Ct. of Wards Act. For the petnr. it is contended that two essentials were necessary in order that the Ct. of Wards could assume charge of the minor's property when taking charge of the estate of the disqualified proprietor. The first is that the minor must have had "an immediate or reversionary interest in the property of such proprietor or joint proprietor" at the time when the Raj was taken charge of by the Ct. of Wards. The other essential is that the said minor must have had some property of his own at the time to enable the Ct. of Wards to take charge of both the person & property of the minor. For the petnr. it is contended that the words "person & property of any minor member of the family" should be read conjunctively & not distributively & if the minor had no property of his own, in that case the Ct. of Wards could not take charge of the person of the minor. It must be remembered that the section is an enabling section empowering the Ct. of Wards to take charge of both the person & property of any minor member of the family of the disqualified proprietor. But it does not compel the Ct. to take chage of both the person & property of such minor. It creates a power & not a disability. This position becomes clear from a perusal of the subsequent provisions of the Act. In fact, the word "and" occurs in the section with reference to the person & property of a sole proprietor or joint proprietor of any estate who is 'disqualified' within the meaning of the Act. But a perusal of S. 9 shows that it is in the discretion of the Ct. to take charge either of the person or property of the disqualified proprietor or both. Mr. P. R. Das & Sir Sultan Ahmed who followed him on behalf of the petnr. have both conceded that the word 'and' with reference to the disqualified proprietor in the section might mean 'or' but they contend that with reference to the minor it must be understood in its ordinary conjunctive sense & not in a disjunctive sense. They contend that the expression should receive its literal & grammatical meaning & not one which may be forced & even lead to anomalous consequences. In this connection reliance has been placed on a large number of cases both English & Indian including the F. B. decision in 'Sukhanandan v. Suraj Bali', (AIR (38) 1951 All 119). The principle underlying those decisions cannot be doubted, but the true meaning of an expression is to be gathered from the context in each case. I have already given my reasons for holding that, in granting power to the Ct. to assume jurisdiction over person & property of the minor, the two objects have been conjoined without creating any obligation upon the Ct. to take charge of both or not at all. Therefore where the State takes charge of either the person or the property of the minor, who is a member of the family of the disqualified proprietor, the minor becomes a ward of the Ct. within the meaning of the Act.

(49) Mr. P. R. Das may be, perhaps, right in contending that the Ct. of Wards must be in charge of the property of the minor before the exception in S. 3, Majority Act, can apply to the case of such a minor & that any other meaning cannot be attached to the definition of the term 'minor' under the Ct. of Wards Act, inasmuch as such a course would lead to inconsistency between the two legislations. The question, however, does not directly arise in the present case because, as I shall show hereafter, the Ct. of Wards has been shown, on the materials as they are, to have assumed charge both of the person & property of the petnr. as a minor member of the joint family of the 'disqualified proprietor' when it took over charge of the latter's estate.

(50) Another suggestion by Mr. Das is that the term 'property' as used with reference to the minor in S. 7 of the Act, must refer to immoveable property only. Mr. Das, however, had to concede that the word 'property' used with reference to the 'proprietor' or 'joint-proprietor' in the same section means & includes both moveable & immoveable property. The expression, therefore could not have been used in any different sense in the same section & there is nothing in the context to support this suggestion of Mr. Das.

(51) In the present case the opposite party have in para. 7 of the counter-affidavit mentioned three items of property which happened to be the property of the minor. An affidavit in reply has been filed on behalf of the petnr. denying the allegations aforesaid & certain letters of the Ct. of Wards, the Maharani Saheba, the mother of the petnr. & that of the late Maharaja Bahadur form annexures to this affidavit in reply. The genuineness of these annexures has not been questioned before us. On a perusal of annexures X & X-2 it is quite obvious that the first item of property, namely, ornaments, jewelleries etc. presented to the petnr. on the occasion of his 'mundan' ceremony locked in the Hathwa Raj Treasury were held to be estate property, & the petnr. also does not claim that they were his property at the time. In regard to the ornaments, jewelleries & gold coins said to belong to the petnr. & his younger brother kept in the locker of the Imperial Bank of India Patna, the argument is that these properties were actually not in possession of the Ct. of Wards. It also appears from the award dated 11-6-1946, vide annexure X-3 to the affidavit in reply, that the board agreed that certain jewelleries belonging to the minors should remain in charge of the petnr's mother, the late Maharani. So far as these properties are concerned, it is argued that the Ct. of Wards never took charge of them, because admittedly some of them were placed in charge of the late Maharani Saheba, & the others were admittedly in charge of the Imperial Bank of India, Patna, although they might have been held to belong to the petnr. & his brother. In this connection the petnr's learned counsel has reld. upon a decision of this Ct. in Lachmi Narain v. Mahomed Abrahim Hussain Khan', (4 Pat 172), where Ross, J. observed in course of his judgment that the order vesting the management of certain properties

"does not take effect until possession of the property is actually taken; &, until such possession is taken, the Ct. of Wards is not in charge of the property & the ward may be free to deal with it as he likes; but this is a matter on which I express no opinion."

(52) Obviously, therefore, Ross, J. did not purport to give any express opinion on the point, & the observation in the earlier part of the sentence appears to be a mere obiter. The case is, however, an authority for another important proposition, namely, that where the Ct. declares that it has determined to take the property of the disqualified proprietor under its charge, it empowers the Ct. to take charge of all such property including the 'after-acquired property'. His Lordship observes:

"the disqualification attaches to the person; & after a declaration u/s. 6 (e) of the Act, the proprietor is to be held disqualified to manage his own property. Any property, therefore, that comes to him by inheritance or otherwise, after he has once been declared a disqualified proprietor & the Ct of Wards has taken over his property u/s. 35 of the Act, must be property which he is disqualified from managing & the management whereof must automatically vest in the Ct. of Wards."

(53) In my opinion, once the management of the property of the disqualified proprietor or the minor members of his family has vested in the Ct. of Wards, it is the Ct. of Wards which is legally in charge of such property although the property may be for the time being in actual physical possession of any other person. Here the fact that under the terms of the award the property was in possession of the mother or that of the Imperial Bank of India, Patna, could not make any difference so far as the legal custody is concerned, & it is the Ct. of Wards which would be responsible for the legal custody of those properties so that in case of any misfeasance of the properties, the Ct. of Wards could be entitled to take appropriate steps. In fact, the award itself says that although the Maharani Saheba was to be in charge, she was directed to keep it in a separate box with another box containing her own jewelleries in the same locker.

(54) In regard to the third item of property, namely, the Defence Saving Certificates purchased for & in the name of the petnr. & his brother, these purchases appear to have been made in November, 1940, & in April, 1941. The contention, in the first place, is that apparently these were after the vesting order, &, therefore, could not be taken charge of by the Ct. of Wards. To that the answer is contained in the decision in '4 Pat 172 (supra)', refd. to above. It is next contended that in any event after the amending Act of 1940 had come into operation, the Ct .of Wards could not continue in possession of the minors' properties & should have handed over possession of the same to the natural guardian of the petnr. The contention is based on S. 7 (e) of the Amending Act which clearly shows that if the estate of a proprietor is taken charge of by the Ct. of Wards on the appln. of the proprietor himself seeking to be declared a disqualified proprietor, in that case the provision in regard to the taking charge of the person or property of a minor member of the family was not applicable. The original provision was S. 6 (e) of the old Act. This was replaced by S. 6 (d) of the amending Act, & it is quite true that S. 6 (d) is not mentioned in S. 7 (e) of the amending Act under which the Ct. had jurisdiction to take charge of the property & person of the minor member of the family of the proprietor whose estate is taken over by the Ct. of Wards In my opinion, however, the amending Act does not affect the position in regard to such estates as had been already taken charge of by the Ct. of Wards under the law as it then stood. The old Act has not been completely repealed. All that has happened is that some of its provisions have been amended by Act IV (4) of 1940 & the relevant sections partially altered. The amendment, therefore, will not affect transactions which had already taken place under the old Act & the charge of the person or property of the minor having once vested in the Ct. of Wards, it could not be divested except under the provisions of the Act. For the petnr. reliance has been placed on S. 24, General Clauses Act. But S. 24, in my opinion, has no application to the case. In fact, u/s. 2, Ct. of Wards Act, which was not affected by the amendment, it has been expressly provided that all persons & properties which at the commencement of this Act were under the charge of the Ct. of Wards as constituted by Bengal Act IV (4) of 1870, shall be deemed to be under the charge of the Ct. of Wards as constituted by the said Act. If the Ct of Wards could be deemed to continue in charge of person & properties of which it had taken charge under Act IV (4) of 1870 even after the amendment of 1940 there is no reason why it should not continue in charge of person & properties of which it took charge under the existing Act prior to the amendment of 1940. The contention, therefore, in my opinion, is without any substance.

(55) The net result of these discussions is that the petnr. had properties of which the Ct. of Wards could assume charge at the time when it issued its assumption order on 11-5-1940, & that being so, the Ct. of Wards would be deemed to have assumed charge of the person & property of the petnr. within the meaning of S. 7, Ct. of Wards Act.

(56) The question then is whether the petnr. had "an immediate or reversionary interest" in the property of the Maharaja of Hathwa who was the disqualified proprietor. Mr. P. R. Das urges that he had no 'immediate interest' in the property because the Hathwa Raj was the sole & exclusive property of the disqualified proprietor, the father of the petnr. He also says that the petnr.

could neither have any reversionary interest because the term 'reversioner' has been used in a known legal significance under the Hindu law, & it should be deemed to have been used by the Legislature in that very sense (vide 'L. P. E. Pugh v. Ashutosh Sen', 56 I A 93 at p. 101) . This proposition is well known but it must be remembered that the Ct. of Wards Act is not meant to apply only to the Hindus but to other communities as well. Therefore the term 'reversionary interest' as used in the Act must have a wider connotation: & then again the term 'reversionary interest' has been used at times in authoritative judicial pronouncements in connection with succession to an impartible estate. Nor can it be asserted that the petnr. had no immediate interest in the Hathwa Raj during the lifetime of his father. I may in this context refer to a decision on the Judicial Committee in 'Comr. of Income-tax v. Krishna Kishore', (68 I A 155), where their Lordships observed:

"Since the decision of the Board in 'Baijnath Prasad v. Tej Bali Singh', (48 I A 195), it has been settled law that property though impartible, may be the ancestral property of a joint family ,& that in such cases the successor falls to be designated according to the ordinary rule of the Mitakshara." & then they quoted with approval the concluding words of the judgment delivered on behalf of the Board by Lord Dunedin in 'Baijnath's case', (48 I A 195). I will refer just to a short excerpt to illustrate my meaning:

"The birth right of the senior member to take by survivorship still remains. Nor is this right a mere spes successionis similar to that of a reversioner succeeding on the death of a Hindu widow to her husband's estate. It is a right which is capable of being renounced & surrendered."

(57) Therefore, the petnr. had undoubtedly some kind of immediate interest in the property though he may not have been an actual co-owner much less a joint-proprietor of the estate along with his father, the late Maharaja Bahadur.

(58) The learned Advocate General contended, on the contrary, that the petnr. was a joint proprietor of the estate, & as such the Ct. of Wards had assumed charge of the estate of the joint proprietor. This contention was evidently encouraged by the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case refd. to above where their Lordships held that the property of an impartible estate in the hands of the then owner of the property was a joint family property. But their Lordships have made it absolutely clear that in such cases, the members of the family cannot be held to be the owners of the property. The income of an impartible estate is not the income of the undivided family, but the income of the present holder. The other members of the family could not restrain the rights of alienation of the present holder; nor could they claim any joint possession. They could not even necessarily claim a right of maintenance. Their Lordships observed:

"General considerations of theory have their proper place, but impartibility & primogeniture when introduced into the Mitakshara involve competition & compromise between different lines of theory; if the doctrine that 'there is no coparcenary' may be pushed too far in one direction, the doctrine that the junior members are in a sense co-owners may be pushed too far in another; the special incidents of joint family property which is impartible being overlaid in either case by rigid theory."

(59) Therefore, it is not possible to accept the contention of the learned Advocate General that the petnr. was in the position of a joint proprietor of the estate during the lifetime of his father. The other factual difficulty in adopting this argument, as pointed out by Mr. P. R. Das, is that at the time of assuming charge of the estate of the late Maharaja Bahadur, the Ct. of Wards never purported to take charge of the estate of a joint proprietor but of the estate of disqualified proprietor, namely, the then appct. Maharaja Bahadur Guru Mahadevashram Prasad Sahi, & even in their counter-affidavit, they did not claim that they had taken charge of the estate as belonging to joint proprietors. On the other hand, they conceded that the Hathwa Raj was an ancient joint family impartible estate which devolves by survivorship.

(60) The learned Advocate General has presented another ingenious & interesting argument. He contends that the word 'property' as used in S. 7, Ct. of Wards Act, means interest in property & the term 'property' with reference to the minor means & qualifies the interest which the minor has in the property of the disqualified proprietor. Viewed in this light, it is not necessary that the minor needs must have separate property of his own of which the Ct. of Wards must take charge, because in assuming charge of the property of the disqualified proprietor the Ct. must be held to be taking charge of the 'interest' or 'property' of the minor also in that property. There is apparently much substance in this contention but in view of the findings at which I have arrived, I will refrain from coming to any final decision on the point.

(61) It thus emerges that the petnr. had "an immediate or reversionary interest" in the property of the disqualified proprietor, & that he had also properties of his own, he being a member of the joint family of the late Maharaja Bahadur of Hathwa, when the Ct. of Wards took charge of the Hathwa Raj as also of the person & property of the petnr. That being so, the petnr. is a person who comes under the limitation provided in S. 3, Majority Act, viz. that he was a minor of whose property superintendence or charge had been assumed by the Ct. of Wards. In such a case he shall not be deemed to have attained his majority until he completes his age of 21 years as submitted on behalf of the opposite party. It cannot, therefore, be successfully argued that the opposite party are illegally in possession of the estate of the petnr.

(62) I cannot wind up my discussion of the topic without reference to another plausible though untenable contention of Sir Sultan Ahmad. He contended that the Ct. of Wards took charge of the property of the petnr. only because the petnr. happened to be a minor member of the family of the disqualified proprietor. This latter condition, according to him, was the 'sine-qua-non' of the Ct's power to take & retain charge of the property of the petnr.; that condition or circumstance having ceased to exist on the death of the petnr's father, the Ct. had to deliver charge of the property to the petnr. & release the same. Under S. 8 of the Act, he says, the Ct. could not take charge of the property at present on the basis that it had, & therefore the Ct. had no power now to retain hold over the property. In my opinion, the underlying fallacy to this argument is that the existence of the said condition was necessary only to enable the Ct. to take charge of the property of the 'minor' within the meaning of S. 8 of the Act. Once the Ct. has validly assumed charge of the minor's person & property, the minor becomes a ward of the Ct., & until he attains the requisite age under the Ct. of Wards Act to cease to be a minor, he continues to be such a ward. The contention therefore, cannot be upheld.

(63) For the reasons stated above, this appln. fails & must be dismissed with costs as directed by my learned brother.

Where in a suit for pre-emption a decree is passed against the vendor and the vendee and the vendee alone appeals against the decree without joining the vendor as party, the appeal does not become incompetent as the vendor is not a necessary party to the appeal. RAI J.: This is an appeal by the pltfs. against the judgment & the decree of the Fourth Additional Subordinate Judge, Gaya, reversing those of the Second Additional Munsif of the same place.

(2) The above appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. According to the case of the pltfs., deft. 2, Shyam Dutt Missir, executed a sale deed on 19-7-1945, in respect of one anna 12 dams share in khewat No. 4, tauzi No. 753 of village Pandit Bigha in favour of deft. 1. The sale deed was regd. on 23-7-1945. On hearing of the sale the pltfs. performed the necessary ceremonies entitling them to claim pre-emption. On these allegations they claimed to be put in possession of the vended share on payment of Rs. 1000 only.

(3) The suit was contested by the vendee, deft. 1, who pleaded that the pltfs. had not performed any ceremony entitling them to claim pre-emption.

(4) The trial Ct. decreed the suit. Deft. 1, the vendee, filed an appeal before the lower appellate Ct. In the appeal, however, she impleaded only the pltfs. as resps. She did not implead deft. 2 as a party to the appeal. At the time of the hearing of the appeal an objection was taken by the pltfs. that as deft. 1 had not impleaded deft. 2 as a party to the appeal, the whole appeal had become infructuous & it was bound to fail on that ground. The lower appellate Ct., however, came to the conclusion that the pltfs. had failed to prove that they had performed the necessary ceremonies entitling them to claim pre-emption. On the point of non-joinder of deft. 2 to the appeal, it held that it was not fatal. In this view of the matter, the appeal was allowed & the suit was dismissed.

(5) In this Ct., the learned counsel for the pltfs.-applts. has argued that there is no clear finding in the judgment of the lower appellate Ct. that the necessary ceremonies had not been performed. According to him, the learned Subordinate Judge had only held that the ceremonies were not performed at the proper time. In my opinion, the lower appellate Ct. has held that the pltf's case of performing of the ceremonies is not believable. It has further held that even if the ceremonies be taken to have been performed, they were not done in accordance with law. But the alternative finding does not take away the force of the finding that no ceremonies were performed. In my opinion, the contention of Mr. Misra is untenable. There is no justification for us to interfere with the finding of facts of the lower appellate Ct.

(6) Mr. Misra, however, laid great emphasis on the incompetency of the appeal in the Ct. below because of the non-joinder of deft. 2 to the memorandum of appeal. He contended that a decree had been passed by the trial Ct. against both the defts. That decree cannot be varied in appeal so as to adversely affect the interest of deft. 2. But I do not think that the contention of the learned counsel is well founded. A similar point arose in the case of 'Radha Mohan v. Kishungir', A I R (35) 1948 Pat 460. It was held there that under the provisions of O. XLI, R. 4, Civil P. C. the appellate Ct. was competent to set aside the decree of the trial Ct. also as against a deft. who was not a party to the appeal. O. XLI, R. 4, Civil P. C. runs as follows:

"Where there are more pltfs. or more defts. than one in a suit, & the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the pltfs. or to all the defts. any one of the pltfs. or of the defts. may appeal from the whole decree, & thereupon the appellate Ct. may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the pltfs. or defts., as the case may be."

(7) With all respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of 'Radha Mohan Singh' aforesaid, I fully agree with the view taken by them so far as the powers of a Ct. under O. XLI, R. 4, Civil P. C. are concerned. Mr. Misra relied upon the decision in the case of 'Suraj Prakash v. Sant Lal', (A I R (37) 1940 Pat 137). But the case has no application to the present case. In that case two separate decrees had been passed against two sets of defts., out of whom only one set of defts. had come up in appeal. The question that arose for consideration there was whether under the provisions of O. XLI, R. 33, Civil P. C. a Ct. was competent to give relief to that set of the defts. who had not filed an appeal against the decree passed against them. It was held there that a Ct. had no such power. In the present case, however, deft. 2, after sale of his share to deft. 1, had no interest left in it. He did not contest the suit. To me it appears that he was not even a necessary party to the appeal. I do not think that in the circumstances of this case there was any error in the decree passed by the lower appellate Ct.

(8) The learned counsel for the applts. further refd. to the case of 'Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah', (7 All 775). The judgment in that case was given by a F. B. of five learned Judges of the Allahabad H. C. Mr. Misra drew our attention to a passage in the judgment of Mahmood, J. In my opinion, the judgment of that learned Judge is against the contention of Mr. Misra. While considering the right of a person who seeks pre-emption, the learned Judge said as follows:

"But the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption involves no such anomalous inconsistencies of reasoning, because the right of pre-emption is not a right of 're-purchase' either from the 'vendor' or from the 'vendee', involving any new contract of sale; but it is simply a right of 'substitution', entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee in respect of all the rights & obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title. It is, in effect, as if in a sale deed the vendee's name were rubbed out & the pre-emptor's name inserted in its place."

(9) From the above passage also it is clear deft. 2 was not a necessary party to the appeal before the lower appellate Ct.

(10) The learned counsel for the applt. further reld. upon the case of 'Brij Narain v. B. H. K. Dhaon', (A I R (29) 1942 Oudh 366), but the facts of that case were quite different from the facts of this case. In that case the vendor had come up before the H. C. against the order of the Ct. below refusing to let him join as a party to a pre-emption suit. As appears from that judgment, there was a subsequent contract between the vendor & the vendee by which the latter had contracted to sell the property to the vendor for some consideration with a specified period. On the basis of that contract it was considered that the vendor had not lost all interest in the property which was the subject-matter of the pre-emption suit. It was in these circumstances that the vendor was ordered to be joined as a party to the suit for pre-emption. But in the present case no right remained in the vendor. I, therefore, do not think that the non-joinder of the vendor was in any way fatal to the maintainability of the appeal. The lower appellate Ct. was therefore, justified in reversing the decree of the trial Ct. & dismissing the suit of the pltfs.

(11) Mr. Misra further argued that the lower appellate Ct. does not clearly mention to have exercised its discretion under the provisions of O. XLI, R. 4, Civil P. C. But, in my opinion, that is immaterial. An objection was raised before it regarding the maintainability of the appeal in absence of deft. 2. It overd. that objection & revsd. the decree of the trial Ct. Even if it did not specifically refer to the provisions of O. XLI, R. 4, Civil P. C., it would be deemed to have exercised its power under that provision.

(12) The result is that the judgment & the decree of the lower appellate Ct. are affd. the appeal fails & is dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 9 of 1949, D/- 20-3-1951.

(a) Custom (General) — Right of Muhammadans to kill cows on festive occasions — Custom against slaughter of cows — Validity.

The right of the Muhammadans to slaughter kine, even in privacy, can be defeated if it is proved that there is a custom in the village prohibiting sacrifice of cows and bullocks on Bakrid day or on any other occasion, and by reason of such custom the Muhammadans have desisted from slaughtering cows in the village from time immemorial. The fact that such a custom has not been judicially recognized on any previous occasion is immaterial. And further if such a custom is proved the Ct. cannot refuse to enforce it on the ground of unreasonableness. (Para 7)

(b) Custom (General) — Onus — Exercise of right to kill cows on festive occasion by Muhammadans — Right objected to by Hindus on ground of custom — Onus of proof.

The Muhammadans found their right to kill cows on festive occasions on their ecclesiastical law. If the Hindus object to the exercise of such right by the Muhammadans on the ground of a local custom, the onus is on them to prove that the Muhammadans have lost their legal or ecclesiastical right under a valid custom, i.e., a custom which owes its origin to common consent and voluntary forbearance on the part of the Muhammadans of the village. And when proved such custom acquires an obligatory element or a binding force. (Para 8)

(c) Custom (General) — Customary right — Muhammadans agreeing not to kill cows — Reasonableness of.

Where out of deference to the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus and in order to respect their feelings the Muhammadans knowingly and willingly desist from exercising their right to slaughter kine, it is only to maintain good social relations and neighbourly feelings between the two communities; a custom thus arising cannot be said to be unreasonable. LAKSHMIKANTA JHA C. J.: This is an appeal by the defts. under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, from a decision of a Single Judge of this Ct. It arises out of a representative suit under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., for a declaration that the pltfs. & other Muhammadan inhabitants of village Trimohan in the district of Darbhanga are entitled, from time immemorial, to sacrifice & kill cows & bullocks on Bakrid & other occasions under purdah in an enclosed place without any interference or objection by the Hindus of the village & also for a perpetual injunction against the defts. restraining them from interfering with their right.

(2) It appears that the Muhammadans of village Trimohan attempted to slaughter cows on the Bakrid day in 1941, & on an interference by the Hindus of the village a case u/s. 107, Cr. P. C., was started & the Muhammadans were restrained from sacrificing cows in the village. The pltfs have accordingly instituted the present suit as the representatives of the Muhammadans of the village, impleading the Hindu inhabitants as defts., for the reliefs already stated.

(3) The defence of the Hindus, in short, is that there is a custom in the village prohibiting sacrifice of cows & bullocks on Bakrid day or on any other occasion, & by reason of such custom the Muhammadans have desisted from slaughtering cows in the village from time immemorial.

(4) The trial Ct. on a consideration of the entire oral & documentary evidence in the case held that the Hindus failed to prove the custom as alleged by them & declared that the pltfs. & other Muhammadans of the village have the right "to sacrifice & slaughter kine in the village with quiet & decency in enclosed premises exclusively in their possession on Bakrid & other occasions". The suit was accordingly decreed & the Hindus were permanently restrained from interfering with this right.

(5) On appeal by the defts., the learned subordinate Judge, before whom the case came up for hearing, set aside the decree of the trial Ct. & held that the defts. proved the custom alleged by them & that it was "ancient, uniform, undoubted & continuous". He found that "they (Muhammadans) refrained from doing so out of regard for the Hindus, who were in greater number, & who had very strong feelings on the point of cow sacrifices &, in course of time, this forbearance appears to have ripened into a custom directly & completely prohibiting cow sacrifice in the village....It cannot be said that this is a case of mere non-exercise of the right to sacrifice cow by the Muhammadans for a number of years."

(6) There was a second appeal by the pltfs. to this Ct. which came up for hearing before Shearer, J. He has held:

"Even if the learned subordinate Judge is correct in assuming that, until 1941, the Muhammadans of this village neither exercised nor attempted to exercise this right, it is difficult to understand on what principle they could, by their own action, have prevented themselves from ever exercising it in future. No local custom of this kind appears ever to have been judicially recognised &, if judicial recognition was sought, it might well, I imagine, be refused on the ground that it would be unreasonable that Muhammadans should have a right to kill cows elsewhere but should not have a right to do so within their own village, although it is in their own homes or the homes of their relations & neighbours that their religion contemplates such sacrifices will be performed."

In this view he has reversed the decision of the Ct. of appeal below & restored the decree of the trial Ct. with slight modification.

(7) I have given a most anxious consideration to the matter & I do not think the view taken by Shearer, J. can be supported. If a custom like the one pleaded by the Hindus in the present case be proved, the rights of the Muhammadans to slaughter kine, even in privacy, can be defeated even though the custom has not been judicially recognised on 'any previous occasion'. A similar custom was pleaded in 'Shahbaz Khan v. Umrao Puri', (30 All 181), 'Naubahar Singh v. Qadir Bux', (A I R (17) 1930 All 753); & 'Mahadeo Prasad v. Nabi Bukhsh', (25 I C 104), but the Hindus lost their case because they failed to prove the custom alleged by them. It was never suggested in any of these cases that such custom, even if proved, could not be enforced on the ground of unreasonableness.

(8) The legal right of the Muhammadans to kill their own cows in privacy, as alleged by the pltfs., cannot be disputed. It is a well known rule of jurisprudence that every man is entitled to so use his own property as not to injure the rights of another ('sic uteri tuo ut alienum non laedas'). He can, therefore, even cause destruction of his own property if by his act he does not cause injury, danger or annoyance to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity. The Muhammadans do not found their right to kill cows on festive occasions on any custom. According to them their ecclesiastical law enjoins "the sacrifice of a camel, a buffalo, a cow, a sheep, or any other quadruped, whose meat is lawful food to the Muslim". (vide 'Shahbaz Khan v. Umrao Puri', (30 All 181); 'Naubahar Singh v. Qadir Bux', (A I R (17) 1930 All 753)). But the Hindus object to the exercise of such right by the Muhammadans on the ground of a local custom. The onus is, therefore, on the defts. to prove that the pltfs. have lost their legal or ecclesiastical right under a valid custom, i.e., a custom which owes its origin to common consent & voluntary forbearance on the part of the Muhammadans of the village & was never disputed at law. It may be observed that among the Hindus a cow is regarded as the most sacred animal & an object of worship. It is quite likely that the Hindus & the Muhammadans of the village, who are close neighbours & whose houses are intermingled, entered into an agreement not to have sacrifice of cows in the village on festive or other occasions. Such agreement, though at first a matter of opinion, has now, as found by the learned subordinate Judge, become a valid custom & can no longer be treated as a matter of choice, & the custom has acquired an obligatory element or a binding force ('Prodoyote Kumar v. Rakhal Chandra', (14 C W N 487). But it is not necessary to speculate, because the learned subordinate Judge has found that the defts. have proved the custom as alleged by them, & this finding is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal. 'Mahadeo Prasad v. Nabi Bukhsh', 25 I C 104 at p. 107).

(9) The learned Subordinate Judge has, as already stated, found that the local custom alleged by the Hindus is "ancient, uniform, undoubted & continuous". Therefore, the next question that arises for consideration is whether a custom like this can be said to be unreasonable. In fact, reasonableness or unreasonableness of a custom depends on various factors. What may be consd. as unreasonable in one set of circumstances may be consd. quite reasonable in a different set of circumstances. In the present case the Hindu & Muhammadan inhabitants are close neighbours, their houses are intermingled, & if out of deference to the riligious susceptibilities of the Hindus & in order to respect their feelings the Muhammadans knowingly & willingly desisted from exercising their right to slaughter kine for which occasion arose every year, it was only to maintain good social relations & neighbourly feelings between the two communities & a custom thus arising cannot be said to be unreasonable. For, as observed by Mahmood, J. in 'Queen Empress v. Imam Ali', (10 All 150 F B), "the cow as the furnisher of milk & the mother of the bovine species rose from being an object of utility to the footing of sanctity". The protection of the bovine species so universally employed in this country for purposes of agriculture has also been recognized in the Constitution. Art. 48 of the Constitution, which is only directive, lays down that the "State shall.....take steps for preserving..... the breeds, & prohibiting the slaughter, of cows & calves & other milch & draught cattle."

This directive cannot be said to be unreasonable; & if this directive is not unreasonable, then, if the same object is fulfilled by mutual good will of the two communities & a custom has sprung up prohibiting slaughter of cows, such a custom, in my opinion, cannot equally be said to be unreasonable.

(10) I would accordingly allow the appeal & dismiss the suit with costs throughout: pleader's fee in the lower Cts. at 10 per cent.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23 R. 3, O. 32 R. 7 — Compromise by minor's guardian.

If it is intended that minors to an action be bound by a compromise, then the guardian or the next friend of the minor must apply for the leave of the Ct., to enter into the compromise and if the guardian refuses to do so a compromise cannot be forced on the minor concerned although in the opinion of the Ct., the terms of the proposed compromise may be beneficial to the minor. It is the guardian or the next friend alone who can decide for himself whether or not he should obtain the leave of the Ct., to enter into a compromise. If he chooses not to apply for leave, then no compromise could affect the interest of the minor and the minor is not bound by any compromise which may have been entered into between the parties to the action: Case law discussed. (Para 8)

C. P. SINHA, J: These misc. appeals arise out of a proceeding under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. which was initiated by the applts. in rent appeals Nos. 141, 142, 145, 146 & 147 of 1946 pending in the Ct. of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea. In the view which we take of these appeals, it is not at all necessary to mention the facts in detail: it is enough to say that the applts. in those rent appeals alleged that a compromise had been entered into between them & the resps. to those appeals. The applts. to those appeals got an order in their favour by the learned subordinate Judge under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. recording the compromise as alleged by them. The resps. in the rent appeals have filed these appeals against the said order of the learned Subordinate Judge.

(2) It appears that in the rent appeals there were six minor resps., namely, five sons of resps. 1 Abhay Kumar Singh & they were under the guardianship of their father, & a minor son of Jaikumar Singh who was under the guardianship of his father. The Ct. below has found "that the compromise is proved & is lawful & as such must be enforced".

(3) These appeals must be decided in favour of the applts. on a very short point. Abhaykumar Singh & Jaikumar Singh are brothers, & it is alleged by the resps. that the rent appeals were compromised on certain terms; & that according to the compromise Abhaykumar Singh, one of the applts. & a resp. in those rent appeals, had agreed to the terms of the compromise. In this case, there was no appln. by the guardian, either written or oral, for the leave of the Ct. to enter into the compromise on behalf of the two sets of minors aforesaid; neither is there any order giving leave to the guardians of the minors to enter into compromise, nor is there any indication on the record to show that, while holding that the compromise should be recorded, the Ct. had consd. the interest of the minors in making its order under O. 23, R. 3 of the Code. It appears, therefore, that there is a clear violation of the provisions of O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C., which runs as follows:

"1. No next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian.

2. Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Ct. so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."

It has to be remembered that the provisions contained in this rule, as they stood in the earlier Act of 1882, did not contain the words "expressly recorded in the proceedings" in Sub-R. (1) & the words "so recorded" in Sub-R. (2). These words were added in the present rule to give effect to the practice established under the old section. From the provision contained in the aforementioned rule, it is quite clear that the leave of the Ct. must be asked for by the next friend or guardian & the leave must be given by the Ct. before recording the compromise & it is also well settled now, upon authorities, that, while giving that leave to the guardian or the next friend, the Ct. must consider whether the proposed terms were for the benefit of the minor concerned. In the present case, the guardians had never applied for leave of the Ct. for entering into any compromise on behalf of the minor resps., rather they have been repudiating all through the factum of a compromise.

(4) The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the resps. has cited a number of authorities, which I will presently consider, but none of these authorities supports his contention that a compromise could be recorded by the Ct. without the guardian or the next friend having asked for the leave of the Ct. & without the leave having been granted. The case of 'Rajeswararao v. Satyanarayana', (A I R (33) 1946 Mad 377), has been cited to show that before the conclusion of the terms of the compromise & before the compromise is made a decree of the Ct., a guardian-'ad-litem' can obtain the leave of the Ct. It is not the case here that the leave of the Ct. was asked for & granted at any stage &, therefore, this case gives no support to the resps. It is rather against them as their Lordships say that a guardian-'ad-litem' must obtain the consent of the Ct., before the compromise is concluded. The case of 'Dharnidhar v Phulkumari', (24 Pat 529), is also to the effect that leave of the Ct. can be granted after the terms of the compromise have been finalised & it is not necessary under O. 32, R. 7 (1) for the guardian-'ad-litem' to obtain leave of the Ct. to negotiate the terms of the compromise. The case of 'Rameshwar Pershad v. Ram Bahadur Singh', (34 Cal 70), is a decision of the P. C. This case is absolutely of no assistance, because, it does not consider the provisions of O. 32, R. 7 of the equivalent provisions thereof in the previous Civil P. C. From the statement of the argument in the report, however, it appears that in that case also leave had been asked for and sanction of the Ct. had been given to the guardian concerned and the question which we have to decide in this case did not fall for consideration in the case before the P. C. Reference has been made to the case of 'Badri Singh v. Chhotu Singh', AIR (25) 1938 Pat 202. That case also is no authority for the proposition that a Ct. can record a compromise without the guardian or the next friend of the minor having obtained leave of the Ct. In that case their Lordships held that a certain compromise was for the benefit of the minor concerned. What happened in that case was that a certain suit was decreed in terms of the compromise. Later, on an appln. for review of the order the Ct. set aside that order on the ground that the minors had not been benefited by that compromise & also that there was no express order by the Ct. recording the compromise that it was for the benefit of the minors, & the suit was restored to its original number. On appeal against the decree in the suit, their Lordships were assured that the compromise in the Ct. below was beneficial to the minors concerned, &, in that view of the matter, their Lordships accepted the terms of the original compromise & incidentally observed that "if the attention of the Ct. is directed specifically to the fact that there is a minor involved & the compromise is brought to its notice.....it must be assumed that the Ct. has complied with the requirements of the law."

No authorities were refd. to in support of this general proposition & I doubt very much its correctness. In this case, however, it is not necessary to decide that point. In the case of 'Umar v. Mahabir Lal', (18 Pat 708), it was held that a decree passed on an award made on a reference, which was in contravention of O. 32, R. 7 of the Code, was not void but voidable at the instance of the minor, &, therefore, could not be impeached in an execution proceeding arising out of that decree. This case also does not throw any light upon the question that we have to consider in this case. The case of Sakinabai v. Shirinibai', (47 IA 88), was a case where a compromise was arrived at while the appeal was pending before the P. C. & that case is not at all relevant to the decision of the question in this case.

(5) It has been further urged by the learned counsel on behalf of the resps. that no particular formula is required by the Ct. in granting leave & the case of 'Ramnarain Singh v. Atal Behari Singh', (AIR (26) 1939 Pat 387), & the case of 'Ishan Chandra v. Nilratan', (2 Pat 538), have been reld. upon for this proposition. The learned counsel, however, forgets that the present case is not one where there has been substantial compliance with the provisions of O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C. but it is a case where those provisions have been entirely ignored.

(6) The learned counsel appearing for the applts. has contended that a compromise cannot be forced upon the guardian or the next friend of a minor & that it is for the guardian & guardian alone to consider whether he should or should not apply for leave of the Ct. to enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of the minor; & that if he does not choose to enter into compromise & ask for leave of the Ct. to enter into a compromise on behalf of the minor, the minor cannot be forced to accept the compromise & if any such compromise is made a decree of the Ct. it is not binding upon the minor. He has placed before the Ct. several cases, & it is necessary to refer only to some of those cases which throw light on the point under consideration. In the case of 'Ranga Rao v. Rajagopala Raju', (22 Mad 378), the facts were that the guardian-ad-litem' of the minors had agreed to a compromise in a suit & had also signed the petn. embodying the terms arrived at, but later on the guardian changed his mind & declined to present that petn. of compromise & opposed a decree being passed in terms thereof. One of the parties to the compromise wanted to enforce the terms of the compromise & an issue was raised in the suit, whether such a compromise had in fact been effected, & if so, whether it was binding on the minor defts. to the suit, & the Dist. J. held that the said compromise was valid & binding on the minors & he decreed the suit in terms of the compromise. The matter went up in appeal & their Lordships made the following observations:

"Assuming that the applts' guardian did as urged for the resps. agree to compromise the suit on the terms alleged, was it competent to the Ct. in the circumstances of the case to enforce the compromise as against the applts? Now, leave to enter into such compromise was never asked for on behalf of the applts., & their guardian-'ad-litem' has all along been objecting to the Ct. passing a decree according to the compromise. In the face of such opposition on the part of the person representing the applts. in the litigation the Ct. had clearly no power to enforce the compromise, even though it appeared to the Ct. that the terms of the compromise were beneficial to the applts." This case is on all fours with the facts of the present case &, with very great respect to their Lordships, I entirely endorse the observations made above. In the case of 'Gulab Dei v. Vaish Motor Co.', (47 All 782), their Lordships, accepting the view of the Madras H. C. in 'Ranga Rao v. Rajagopala Raju', (22 Mad 378), have observed:

"The mere fact that the decree has been passed in terms of the compromise does not necessarily justify an inference that the Ct. granted leave, or that it was satisfied that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor. Any compromise without the leave of the Ct. is a nullity. As, before any leave has been granted, the guardian herself does not want the compromise, it is impossible to force the compromise on the minor."

(7) That the guardian or the next friend of the minor is the sole judge as to whether or not he should enter into any agreement on behalf of the minor, has been reiterated by their Lordships of the Calcutta H. C. in 'Hemangini Dasi v. Bhagwati Sundari Dasi', (AIR (10) 1923 Cal 685). Their Lordships have held:

"It is settled law that although the Ct. can & must approve of a compromise on behalf of infants, it cannot & will not force one upon them against the opinion of their next friend or guardian 'ad litem' in the action."

& further

"No doubt if the Ct. found that a guardian or next friend was acting improperly & against the infant's interests in refusing to assent to an arrangement which appeared clearly beneficial to them, steps might be taken to remove him & substitute some other person."

In the case of 'Hanuman Rai v. Jagdis Rai', AIR (3) 1916 Pat 223, a Bench of this Ct. has held that it is open to a guardian to withdraw the appln. for leave to enter into an agreement at any time before the leave of the Ct. was granted.

(8) On a review of the authorities mentioned above, it is clear that if it is intended that minors to an action be bound by a compromise, then the guardian or the next friend of the minor must apply for the leave of the Ct. to enter into the compromise & if the guardian refuses to do so a compromise cannot be forced on the minor concerned although, in the opinion of the Ct. the terms of the proposed compromise may be beneficial to the minor. It is the guardian or the next friend alone who can decide for himself whether or not he should obtain the leave of the Ct. to enter into a compromise. If he chooses not to apply for leave, then no compromise could affect the interest of the minor & the minor is not bound by any compromise which may have been entered into between the parties to the action.

(9) It was contended by Mr. Sanyal, the learned counsel for the resps. that Abhaykumar Singh being the karta of the joint family, of which the minors are members, & it having been found by the Ct. below that he had entered into the compromise, the compromise should be held binding upon the minors as well. That the family of the applts. is joint, is not admitted by Mr. G. C. Mukherji, learned counsel for the applts. Even if the family was joint & Abhaykumar Singh was the karta of the family, the resps. cannot get any advantage out of it. In the first place, the minors & under the guardianship of their respective fathers & as such the provisions of O. 32, R. 7 will apply & the powers of the karta of a joint Hindu family must be subject to the provisions of that rule, that is to say, the leave of the Ct. must be asked for by the guardian to enter into compromise & after the leave is granted by the Ct., the guardian can enter into compromise. In the second place, one of the minors is under the guardianship of his father Jaikumar Singh & the case of the resps. being that Abhaykumar Singh had entered into the compromise on behalf of the family, the acceptance of the compromise by Abhaykumar Singh alone will not bind the other minor. It has been held by the P. C. in the case of 'Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row', (36 Mad 295), that if the father was guardian-'ad-litem' of his minor son, then he could not, without the leave of the Ct. do any act in his capacity of father or managing member of the family, which he was debarred from doing as guardian-'ad-litem'. Their Lordships observed that to hold otherwise would be to defeat the object of the enactments. Their Lordships were considering S. 462, Civil P. C., which was replaced by O. 32, R. 7 of the present Code.

(10) Lastly, it was contended that if the compromise is not binding on the minors, the compromise is binding on the major applts. The difficulty in accepting this argument is that the interest of the minors & the major applts. are joint & not separate, &, therefore, the compromise cannot be given effect to.

(11) In the result, the appeals are allowed with costs. There will be one set of hearing fee as all these appeals were heard together.

L. P. A. No. 26 of 1949, D/- 13-4-1951, from the decision of Shearer, J. D/- 19-10-1949.

(a) Hindu Law — Debt — Father's debt — Pious obligation of son to pay.

It is the primary duty of every Hindu to pay his own aebt. If for any reason he fails to pay it, the 'putra', or son, as the son of his father, is under a pious duty to discharge it. And this duty is not affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdens the estate, is alive or dead. A I R (11) 1924 P C 50, Rel. on.

(Para 8)

(b) Hindu Law — Debt — Father's debt — Pious obligation of son to discharge how far qualified.

The son's obligation to discharge his father's debt is not unqualified. A son is not under any obligation to pay, 'inter alia', a debt of his father that is not 'vyavaharika', that is, a debt for a cause repugnant to good morals. Thus, the son is absolved from his obligation to discharge his father's debt if it is found to be, at its inctption, tainted with immorality or illegality. A I R (30) 1943 P C 142; 6 M I A 393 P C and 14 Beng L R 187 P C, Ref.

(Paras 9, 10, 11)

(c) Hindu Law — Debt — Father's debt — Pious obligation of son to discharge — Nature of debt when it originated to be seen — Joint family property sold in execution for decree for costs awarded against father — Sons challenging sale being in discharge of avyavaharika debt.

The obligation of the son to discharge his father's debt depends upon the nature or character of the debt when it originated. An examination of the circumstances before or after the liability is incurred is irrelevant to ascertain the nature or character of the debt. If there is something illegal or immoral in the act of the father when the liability is incurred, the son is not bound to discharge it. If, however, the father incurs a debt (voluntary or involuntary) to make good a loss caused by his wrongful act, such a debt cannot be said to be illegal or immoral, and the son cannot claim exemption merely because the act in consequence of which the obligation to make compensation arose was an illegal or immoral act, or both illegal and immoral. 128 P R 1879 and 16 Mad 99, Rel. on.

(Para 12)

In a suit for possession filed against A, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara School, A in his defence produced a hukumnama bearing the thumb impression of the pltf. in the suit. The defence was disbelieved and the suit was decreed against A with costs. The pltf. took out execution for costs and land belonging to the joint family consisting of A and his sons was sold in execution. Subsequently in a suit brought by the sons, the sons challenged the sale on the ground that they were under no pious obligation to pay up the decree for costs awarded against their father A because he was guilty of a fraudulent act in that he produced a forged hukumnama in support of the settlement of the land in favour of himself. The decree for costs, according to them was of the nature of avyavaharika debt.

Held that the origin of the liability created by costs, awarded by Ct. in its discretion, could not be said to be tainted with any illegality or immorality, that even if A was guilty of a fraudulent act in filing a hukumnama which was not genuine, his conduct before the date of the decree could not be taken into consideration, that the decree for costs, was not avyavaharika and therefore, the sons of A were under a pious obligation to discharge the judgment-debt and the sale could not be assailed by them. A I R (30) 1943 P C 142, Rel on. A I R (26) 1939 Mad 528; A I R (36) 1949 Pat 515, Dist. 20 M L J 89, Not foll. A I R (15) 1928 Oudh 10, held overruled by A I R (30) 1943 P C 142.

(Para 15)

(d) Hindu Law — Debt — Father's debt — Pious obligation of son to pay — Distinction between Civil and Criminal liability of father in incurring debt.

For determination of the liability of the son, a distinction has been made between a civil and a criminal liability of the father in incurring a debt. If the father is liable to criminal prosecution for a debt incurred by him, the son is not under any pious obligation to discharge such debt. If, however, the liability of the father originates in the breach of civil duty, the son cannot claim freedom from the obligation to discharge such debt of the father. 39 Cal 862; A I R (21) 1934 P C 238, Rel. on. (Para 13)

LAKSHMIKANTA JHA, C. J.: This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a judgment of Shearer, J. upholding the concurrent decisions of the courts below & dismissing the suit.

(2) The facts relevant to the point for decision may be shortly stated as follows: One Raghunandan Singh, father of the pltfs. along with one Awadh Singh, claimed raiyati interest in 19.5 acres of bakasht land situated in an estate belonging to Mt. Chandrakali Kuar, deft. 1. A dispute arose between the parties over the possession of this land & a proceeding under S. 144, Cr. P. C., was started, which terminated in favour of Raghunandan & Awadh. Consequently, Chandrakali Kuar, along with her granddaughter in whose favour she had executed a deed of gift, instituted a suit (Title Suit No. 113 of 1941) for possession of the disputed land against Raghunandan & Awadh. Raghunandan contested the suit & his defence was that Chandrakali had settled the land in dispute with him & Awadh under a 'sada patta'. In support of his case he produced a hukumnama, which admittedly bore the thumb impression of Chandrakali, & several rent receipts. The defence was disbelieved & the suit was decreed on 13-5-1941, with costs. Raghunandan & Awadh preferred an appeal which was also dismissed on 30-4-1942. Thereupon they preferred a second appeal to this Ct. During the pendency of the second appeal Raghunandan died, & on his death the pltfs., along with their brother Baliram (since deceased), were substituted. This second appeal was also dismissed with costs on 3-12-1943.

(3) During the pendency of the appeal in the first appellate Ct. Chandrakali took out execution for costs of the trial Ct. against Raghunandan & Awadh in Execution Case No. 998 of 1941, & 5.10 acres of land belonging to the joint family consisting of the pltfs. & Raghunandan was sold on 20-1-1942, at Ct. sale & purchased by Chandrakali for Rs. 215/- & she later on took delivery of possession of the land on 9-11-1944.

(4) The present suit was instituted by the pltfs. on the 7-4-1945, challenging the sale on the ground that they were under no pious obligation to pay up the decree for costs awarded against their father, Raghunandan, because he was guilty of a fraudulent act in that he produced a forged hukumnama bearing the thumb impression of Mt. Chandrakali in support of the settlement of the land in favour of himself & Awadh. The decree for costs, according to them was of the nature of avyavaharika debt, &, therefore, they claimed immunity & sought recovery of possession of 12 annas interest in the suit land which was claimed by them as joint ancestral property. The defence of Chandrakali Kuar was that the pltfs. Kirit Singh was himself a party to the fraud along with his father Raghunandan, that the decree for costs awarded against the pltfs. was not at all of the nature of avyavaharika debt & that the sale held in execution of the decree for costs was binding on them.

(5) The trial Ct. held that the decree for costs was not an avyaharika debt & that the pltfs. were under pious obligation to pay the same. The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal, the learned subordinate Judge upheld the decision of the trial Ct. On second appeal, Shearer, J. also took the same view & dismissed the appeal.

(6) The question for determination is whether the pltfs. who are governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu law, can impeach the sale on the ground that having regard to the nature of the judgment-debt, they were under no liability to pay it & the doctrine of pious obligation could have no application. The contention of Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh, for the applts., is that the judgment-debt created under the decree of the Ct. is avyavaharika because Raghunandan used a forged document in support of his case.

(7) On a review of the Hindu law texts, to which I shall presently refer, & the judicial pronouncements, I think the applts' contention must fail. According to Smritis, if a Hindu dies indebted, he goes to hell. For Katyayana ordains:

उद्धारादिकमादाय स्वामिने न ददाति यः ।
स तस्य दासो भृत्यः स्त्री पशुर्वा जायते गृहे ॥

"He who having taken a debt or the like does not pay it back to the creditor (or owner) is born in the (latter's) house as a slave or a servant (for wages), a wife, or a beast." (Katyayana-smriti by P. V. Kane, V. 591, p. 239).

If, however, a Hindu father fails to pay his own debt for any reason, a duty is cast upon his son to discharge it. For Brihaspati ordains:

अभावे च पितुः सुतैः ।

"In the absence of the debtor, his sons should pay the debt". (Brihaspati 11.47: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', p. 203).

ऋणं पितृकृतं देयं पश्चादात्मीयमेव च ।

"The son shall pay off his father's debts before paying his own debts". ('Brihaspati' 11.48: Dr. Ganganath's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', p. 206).

Similarly, Narada enjoins:

अतः पुत्रेण ... ... ऋणात् पिता मोचनीयः ।

"The son should try his best to absolve his father from debt". (Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', p. 203).

पितर्युपरते पुत्रा ऋणं दद्युयथांशतः ।

"On the death of the father, the sons divided or undivided — shall pay his debt in proportion to their shares." ('Narada' 4.2: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', p. 205).

इच्छन्ति पितरः पुत्रान्स्वार्थहेतोर्यत स्ततः ।
उत्तमर्णाधमर्णेभ्यो मामयं मोचयिष्यति ॥

"Fathers wish to have sons on their own account, thinking in their minds, 'He will release me from all obligations towards superior & inferior beings'." (i.e. from the debt which he owes to his ancestors & from creditors). ('Naradiya Dharma Sastra', by Dr. J. Jolly, p. 15, V. 5).

Yajnavalkya also lays down the rule thus:

पितरि प्रोषिते प्रेते व्यसनाभिप्लुतेऽपि वा ।
पुत्रपौत्रैर्ऋणं देयं निन्हवे साक्षिभाविताम् ॥

"When the father has gone abroad, is dead or is immersed in difficulties, his debt should be paid by the sons & grandsons, when established by witnesses in case of a dispute." ('Yajnavalkya', 2.50: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', p. 203).

Likewise Katyayana says:

विद्यमानेऽपि रोगार्ते स्वदेशात् प्रोषिते तथा ।
विंशात्संवत्सराद् देयामृणं पितृकृतं सुतैः ॥

"Even when the father is alive, — if he is stricken by disease, or has gone away from the country, — his sons shall pay his debt after twenty years." (Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 204).

व्याधितान्मत्तवृद्धानां तथा दीर्घप्रवासिनाम् ।
ऋणमेवंविधं पुत्रान् जीवतामपि दापयेत् ॥

"If the father is stricken by disease, or insane, or too old, or has been away from the country for a long time, the sons should be made to repay his debt." (Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 205).

सान्निध्येऽपि पितुः पुत्रैर्ऋणं देयं विभावितम् ।
जात्यन्धपतितोन्मत्तक्षयाश्वित्रादि रोगिणः ॥

"Even when the father is at home, — if he happens to be blind from birth, or an outcast or insane, or suffering from consumption, laucoderma & such other foul diseases, — his debt, when proved, should be paid by his son." (Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 205).

(8) From the texts quoted above, it appears that it is the primary duty of every Hindu to pay his own debt. If for any reason he fails to pay it, the 'putra', or son, as the son of his father, is under a pious duty to discharge it. According to some smritis, however, the son's liability arises on the death of his father, whereas, according to others, it arises even in his lifetime. There was divergence of judicial opinion on this point. In 'Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh', (44 I A 126 at p. 131) the Privy Council held that the pious obligation of the son does not arise till the death of his father. But the controversy was set at rest by a later pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in 'Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad', (51 I A 129). Their Lordships held

"there is no rule that this result (i.e. liability to pay antecedent debt) is affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdens the estate, is alive or dead."

(9) The son's obligation to discharge his father's debt, however, is not unqualified. There are certain kinds of debt which, according to the Smritis, he is not bound to pay, as would appear from the following texts:

प्रतिभाव्यं वृथादानमाक्षिकं सौरिकं च यत् ।
दण्डशुल्कावशषंच न पुत्रो दातुमर्हति ॥

"The son shall not be liable to pay the father's debt, on account of surety-money, or a futile gift or gambling debts, or debts due to liquor, or the balance of fines & taxes." ('Manu' 8.159: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 207).

सुराकामद्यूतकृतं दण्डशुल्कावशिष्टकम् ।
वृथादानं तथैवेह पुत्रो दद्यान्न पैतृकम् ॥

"The son may not pay the paternal debt which was contracted for the purposes of spirituous liquor, lust or gambling, or which is due as the balance of an unpaid fine or toll as also a gift without any consideration." ('Yajnavalkya', Gharpure's 'Mitakshara', p. 73, V. 47).

पित्रा दृष्टमृणं यत्तु क्रमायातं पितामहात् ।
निर्दोषं नोद्धृतं पुत्रैर्देयं पौत्रैस्तु तद्भृगुः ॥

"That debt which descended hereditarily from the grandfather, which was ascertained by the father (i.e. the son of the grandfather) as due, which is free from taint & which was not repaid by the sons (of the grandfather) should be paid by the grandsons." (This is the view of the Bhrigu). (Katyayana in Smritichandrika, p. 297).*

प्रतिभाव्यवणिक्शुल्कमद्यद्यूतदण्डा न पुत्रानध्यावहेयुः ।

"The sons shall not be made to pay surety-money, trade-duties, debts due to gambling or drinking or fines." ('Gautama' 12.41: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 207).

सौरिकं वृथादानं कामक्रोधप्रतिश्रुतम् ।
प्रातिभाव्यं दण्डशुल्कशेषं पुत्रान्न दापयेत् ॥

"Debts due to liquor, gambling, futile gifts, gifts promised in lust or anger, surety-money, balance of fines & taxes, — these debts of the father the son shall not be made to pay". ('Brihaspati' 11.51: Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 207).

दण्डो वा दण्डशेषा वा शुल्कं तच्छेष एव वा ।
न दातव्यं तु पुत्रेण यच्च न व्यावहारिकम् ॥

"Fine or balance of fine, tax or balance of tax, or what is not proper, — such debts of the father, the son shall not pay." (Dr. Ganganath Jha's 'Hindu Law in its Sources', Vol. I, p. 208).

(10) A summary of the texts quoted above shows that a son is not under any obligation to pay the following debts of his father: (1) debts due for spirituous liquor; (2) debts due for lust; (3) debts due for gambling; (4) unpaid fines; (5) unpaid tolls; (6) futile gifts, or gifts without any consideration or promised in lust or anger; (7) suretyship debts; & (8) debts that are not vyavaharika.

(11) There is a divergence of opinion among the Nibandhakars regarding the interpretation of the phrase "na vyavaharikam" which finds place in the text of Ushanas (this text is also attributed to Vyas in Vivada Chintamani & other nibandhas. Vachaspati Misra in his Vivada Cintamani interprets it as "Vyavahara Bahishkritam" (व्यवहार बहिष्कृतम्). Mitra Misra in his Virmitrodaya says that it means "surapanadinimittam" (सुरापानादि निमित्तम), that is, incurred for the purpose of liquor & the like. Nilkantha, though he quotes the verse of Ushanas in his Vyavahara Mayukha, does not attempt to explain the expression, but Mandlik translates it as "not proper". Colebrooke, however, translates the expression as "debt for a cause repugnant to good morals". The sharp difference of opinion among the Nibandhakars as to the precise import of the term led to a divergence of judicial opinion in its English rendering in cases in which the decision depended upon the interpretation of the text. The Privy Council in 'Hemraj v. Khem Chand', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142 at p. 146), on a review of the cases bearing on the point, accepted Colebrooke's translation of the expression as correct, being the nearest approach to the spirit of the text, & set at rest the controversy as to its precise meaning. In this connection it is relevant to quote the observation of their Lordships, which runs thus:

"Having regard to the principles underlying the rule of 'pious obligation', which forms the foundation for the son's liability, their Lordships think that the translation of the term Avyavaharika as given by Colebrooke makes the nearest approach to the true conception of the term as used in the Smrithi text, & may well be taken to represent its correct meaning."

It is, however, clear from the texts & also authorities that the son is absolved from his obligation to discharge his father's debt if it is found to be, at its inception, tainted with immorality or illegality. Lord Knight Bruce in 'Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Mt. Babooee Munraj Koonweree', (6 M I A 393 at p. 421), said:

"Unless the debt was of such a nature that it was not the duty of the son to pay it, the discharge of it, even though it affected ancestral estate, would still be an act of pious duty in the son. By the Hindoo Law, the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt, has respect to the nature of the debt, & not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creation of the debt."

In 'Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall', 1 I A 321: (14 Beng L R 187 P C), the Privy Council quoting this passage observed:

"That is an authority to shew that ancestral property which descends to a father under the Mitakshara law is not exempted from liability to pay his debts because a son is born to him. It would be a pious duty on the part of the son to pay his father's debts, & it being the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts, the ancestral property, in which the son as the son of his father acquires an interest by birth, is liable to the father's debts."

(12) The obligation of the son to discharge his father's debt depends upon the nature or character of the debt when it originated — an examination of the circumstances before or after the liability is incurred is irrelevant to ascertain the nature or character of the debt. If there is something illegal or immoral in the act of the father when the liability is incurred, the son is not bound to discharge it. If, however, the father incurs a debt (voluntary or involuntary) to make good a loss caused by his wrongful act, such a debt cannot be said to be illegal or immoral, & the son cannot claim exemption merely because the act in consequence of which the obligation to make compensation arose was an illegal or immoral act, or both illegal & immoral. Suppose, for instance, a father steals a property, but later on repents, & being unable to restore the stolen property makes good the loss by incurring a debt. Such a debt cannot be said to be immoral or illegal in its origin because the purpose of the debt is highly moral. A son cannot be absolved from liability to pay such debt simply because the father was guilty of an immoral act when he committed the theft. In support of this view I may refer to the case of 'Kartar Singh v. Harji Mal', (128 P R 1879 at p. 374), & 'Natassayyan v. Ponnusami', (16 Mad 99). In 'Kartar Singh's case', one B. S. stole and converted to his own use certain property belonging to H. M. who sued & obtained a decree for the value of the property. In execution of the decree some ancestral property belonging to B. S. was attached for the purpose of being sold in satisfaction of the decree. N. S., a son of B. S., brought a suit through his guardian to set aside the attachment on the ground that the ancestral property was not liable to his father's debt, such debt having been contracted for an immoral purpose. It was held that the property was liable to be attached & sold in satisfaction of the pltf's decree. Plowden, J., in the course of his judgment, observed:

"Granting that the son may go behind the decree, it is impossible to hold that the debt created by the decree is a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, merely because the act from which the obligation to make compensation arose was an illegal or immoral act, or both illegal & immoral.....The most analogous case would be that of a father who had voluntarily contracted to compensate the person whom he had by a criminal offence deprived of property. A debt created by such a contract could not without an utter perversion of language be styled a debt contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose; on the contrary, it would be a debt contracted for a highly moral as well as lawful purpose, & the case of a debtor enforcing an obligation to pay an ascertained sum by way of such compensation stands upon at least as sound a basis, though the obligation be unwillingly contracted under lawful compulsion."

In 'Natasayyan v. Ponnusami', (16 Mad 99), a decree was obtained against a Hindu for money dishonestly retained by him from the pltf's family to which he was accountable in respect of it. The J. D. having died, the D. H. sought to attach in execution property of the family which had passed into the hands of his son by survivorship. The sons objected that such property was not liable to attachment & the D. H. was referred to a regular suit. Thereupon he brought a suit against the sons. It was held that the sons were not entitled to go behind the decree except for the purpose of showing that the judgment debt was immoral or illegal in its origin. In that case the learned Judges observed:

"Upon any intelligible principles of morality a debt due by the father by reason of his having retained for himself money which he was bound to pay to another would be a debt of the most sacred obligation, & for the non-discharge of which punishment in a future state might be expected to be inflicted, if in any. The son is not bound to do anything to relieve his father from the consequences of his own vicious indulgences, but he is surely bound to do that which his father himself would do were it possible, viz., to restore to those lawfully entitled money he has unlawfully retained."

This passage has been quoted with approval in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142), to which I shall refer hereafter in detail.

(13) For determination of the liability of the son, courts in India have drawn a distinction between a civil & a criminal liability of the father in incurring a debt. If the father is liable to criminal prosecution for a debt incurred by him, the son is not under any pious obligation to discharge such debt. If, however, the liability of the father originates in the breach of civil duty, the son cannot claim freedom from the obligation to discharge such debt of the father. Mookerjee J. in 'Chhakauri Mahton v. Ganga Prosad', (39 Cal 862 at pp. 871-72) observed:

"The cases of 'Mahabir Prasad v. Basdeo Singh', (6 All 234); 'Pareman Dass v. Bhattu Mahton', (24 Cal 672); & 'Mc Dowell & Co., Ltd. v. Ragava Chetty', (27 Mad 71), seem to negative the liability of the son under such circumstances, while the cases of 'Natasayyan v. Ponnuswami', (16 Mad 99); 'Venkappayya v. Krishna Chariya', (31 Mad 161); & 'Gurunatham v. Raghavalu Chetty', (31 Mad 472), apparently support the liability of the son. These cases, however, may possibly be reconciled if we recognise the distinction between a criminal offence & a breach of civil duty. In the first three cases, the father was guilty of criminal misappropriation as regards sums of money for which he was accountable; while in the second set of three cases, the father merely failed to account for the money received by him, & his failure to do so constituted nothing more than a breach of civil duty. The distinction is real though refined, & was recognised in 'Medai Tirumalaiyappa Moodeliar v. Veerabudra', (19 M L J 759), where it was ruled that if a debt was incurred by an agent, his son was liable to pay the debt & the liability of the son was not affected by the circumstance that the father subsequently misappropriated the sum or made himself criminally liable. The case last mentioned consequently supports the view that, where the taking of the money itself is not a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge the son from his liability to satisfy the debt; but the position is different if the money has been taken by the father & misappropriated under circumstances which render the taking itself a criminal offence."

The rule formulated by Mokherjee, J. was recognised by the Judicial Committee in 'Toshanpal Singh v. Dist. J. of Agra', (61 I A 350 : 56 All 548). In that case a father had incurred liability to a school committee, of which he was secretary, the total liability amounting to nearly Rs. 43,000/-. The P. C. found on the evidence that the father had misappropriated part of this sum amounting to about Rs. 30,000/- for which he could have been prosecuted for criminal breach of trust, & accordingly the sons were absolved from the liability for that amount, but with regard to the balance for which the father did not incur any criminal liability for prosecution, the sons were made liable. In 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142), again their Lordships observed:

"It has now been definitely established by the decision of this Board in '61 I A 350', that a son is not liable to pay a debt created by his father which would render the father liable to criminal prosecution."

(14) On a review of the relevant decisions bearing on the point, the general principle on which a son's obligation to discharge his father's debt is to be determined has been laid down by the Judicial Committee in 'Hemraj v. Khem Chand', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142). The facts of that case were as follows: Hemraj & Danpal, with others, formed a joint family. Hemraj, on behalf of himself & another, filed a suit for partition of joint family property against Danpal & the other members of his branch of the family. The subject matter of the partition included a promissory note executed in favour of Danpal by certain of the family debtors. The partition suit was referred to arbitration & a decrree in terms of the award was passed. The promissory note was allotted to Hemraj under the award. It was provided under the award that Danpal should produce the award in Court within seven days of the decree. Danpal did not file this document within the specified time but he filed instead, without giving notice to Hemraj, another document, executed by the same debtors on a different date. Hemraj filed his application for execution & later on Danpal filed the promissory note which had been allotted to Hemraj, but by that time the claim under the handnote had become time-barred. Hemraj therefore, filed a suit against Danpal, claiming from him the amount due under the promissory note on the ground that Danpal was indebted to him under the award & was, therefore, liable for the debt due under the handnote which he (Danpal) allowed to be barred by limitation, impleading the executants of the note also as defts. It was admitted in the suit that the other document which had been filed by Danpal instead of the document in question was a forgery. It also appeared that Danpal allowed the promissory note to become barred by acting fraudulently towards Hemraj. The suit was dismissed against the executants of the note as time barred but it was decreed against Danpal. From the decree passed against Danpal an appal was preferred by him, & during the pendency of the appeal he died. Hemraj took out execution of the decree against the sons of Danpal, & they objected to the execution being taken out against them on the ground that the debt was created by the misconduct and stupidity of Danpal; therefore, there was no liability on them to pay the debt & the ancestral property in their hands was not liable to be attached & sold. On these facts the question that arose for decision before the Judicial Committee was whether the sons were under a pious obligation to discharge the judgment-debt, notwithstanding the fact that their father filed a forged document & failed to carry out his duty under the award. Their Lordships held that the sons were liabie, & the principle for fixing the liability of the son was enunciated thus:

"That the doctrine has reference to the nature or character of the debt which creates the liability can hardly be disputed.....It also appears to be clear on principle, & on authority, that examination of the nature or character of the debt should be made with reference to the time when it originated, in other words, when the liability was first incurred by the father. If, on such examination, it is found that at its inception the debt was not tarnished or tainted with immorality or illegality, then it must be held that it would be binding on the son....The rule is not rigid but has to be applied with reference to the circumstances of each case."

Quoting with approval the passage from the judgment of the learned Judges of the Madras H. C. in 'Natassayyan v. Ponnusami', (16 Mad 99 at p. 104), which I have already quoted, their Lordships further observed:

"The subsequent dishonest conduct of Danpal, which led to the suit & the decree, so much relied upon by the Cts. in India & made the basis of their decision cannot in their Lordships' view affect the nature of the father's debt which at its inception was a just & true debt. As no such immorality or illegality in the nature of the original debt as would absolve them from the obligation to discharge it has been shown by the resps., the debt sought to be realised is not an Avyavaharika debt & the applts. are therefore entitled to proceed against the ancestral property in their hands in execution of the decree for payment of that debt."

(15) Bearing in mind the dicta of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, we have to examine the nature or character of the debt in the case before us at the time when the liability was first incurred by Raghunandan. The obligation, it may be observed, was unwillingly incurred by him under a lawful compulsion. S. 35, Civil P. C. gives a discretion to the Ct. to award costs & the Ct. has power to determine by whom or out of what property & to what extent such costs are to be paid. If by virtue of such power the Ct. awarded costs to the resps. in the exercise of its discretion, the origin of the liability so created cannot be said to be tainted with any illegality or immorality. Even if Raghunandan was guilty of a fraudulent act in filing a hukumnama which was not genuine, his conduct before the date of the decree cannot be taken into consideration. The decree for costs, in my view, cannot be said to be Avyavaharika. The pltfs., therefore, as sons of Raghunandan, are under a pious obligation to discharge the judgment-debt & the sale cannot be assailed by them.

(16) A similar point arose in 'Prayag Sahu v. Kasi Sahu', (11 C L J 599). The point for consideration in that case was whether the sons were liable for the costs awarded against their father by an order of the Ct. It was contended that the sons were not liable because the debt came within the meaning of "Danda" or fine in the text of Yajnavalkya quoted in the Mitakshara. Chatterji, J. held that the decree for costs could not come within the meaning of the word "Dand" because Hindu Cts. of justice did not allow costs to successful litigants but imposed upon the party who took a false plea a fine payable to the King, equal to the claim. He also held that the debt could not be characterised as Avyavaharika. The sons were accordingly held liable for the amount of costs decreed against their father. This decision seems to be in consonance with the decision of the Judicial Committee in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142).

(17) In 'Lakshminarasimhamurti v. Venkata Jogisomayyajulu', (A I R (26) 1939 Mad 928); Ramiengar v. Secretary of State', (4 I C 105); 'Mohammad Ali v. Jhao Lal', (A I R (15) 1928 Oudh 10), & 'Darbeshwari v. Raghunath'. (28 Pat 165), it was held that a decree for costs is an avyavaharika debt & the son is not liable to pay such debt. Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh strongly relied upon these cases in support of his contention. In my opinion, after the decision of the judicial committee in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142), a decree for costs cannot be said to be avyavaharika, for the liability is created by an order of the Court in the exercise of its discretion. The origin of the debt, therefore, cannot be said to be tainted with illegality or immorality. The cases relied upon by Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh are, moreover, clearly distinguishable & the decisions in those cases must be read with reference to the facts arising therein & cannot be taken to be of general application. In 'Lakshminarasimhamurti v. Venkata Jogisomayyajulu', (A I R (26) 1939 Mad 928), the decree for costs was made against the father personally, although he was not a party to the suit. Therefore, this case has no application even if it be assumed that it was correctly decided. In 'Ramiengar v. The Secretary of State', (4 I C 105), the father had brought a suit in 'forma pauperis' as next friend of his minor son to establish his adoption & recover possession of property. The alleged adoption was found to be false & the suit was dismissed & the father was directed to pay costs. The point that arose for consideration was whether the son was liable for the costs awarded against the father who was guilty of an immoral act in bringing a suit which he must have known to be false. It was held that the son was not bound to pay the costs, & the costs were treated as fine within the meaning of Hindu law texts. For the reasons given by Chatterji, J. in 'Prayag Sahu's case', (11 C L J 599), the decision cannot be supported. Moreover, the decision in this case is against the dicta of the judicial committee in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142). In 'Mohammad Ali v. Jhao Lal', (A I R (15) 1928 Oudh 10), it was held that the son is not liable to pay costs in suits brought & defended by the father on false & dishonest grounds. But this decision clearly stands overruled after the decision of the P. C. in 'Hemraj's case', A I R (30) 1943 P C 142).

(18) Mr. Sambhu Prasad Singh strongly relied upon the decision of this Ct. in 'Darbeshwari v. Raghunath', (28 Pat 165). In my opinion this case, though it apparently lends support to his contention, is clearly distinguishable. There are certain observations in this case which are contrary to the dicta of the P. C. in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142). I would have been inclined to refer the present case to a larger Bench if I were satisfied that the proposition of law laid down in that case could be taken to be of general application. In that case the facts were as follows: One Tejan Tewari succeeded to the property of one Bisundayal Tewari as his next reversioner. Tejan sold the property inherited by him to one Darbeshwari who obtained possession thereof. Several years after, one Sarjug Prasad obtained a fraudulent & collusive sale deed from Ramphal Dubey who claimed to be the daughter's son of Bisundayal. Sarjug having failed to obtain possession brought a title suit against Tejan's vendee for recovery of possession of the lands alleged to have been purchased by him. The Munsif decreed the suit, but on appeal the Dist. J. set aside the decree. This Ct. dismissed the second appeal & awarded costs to the vendee who was deft. 1. In execution of the decree, the entire joint family property was sold by the executing Ct. & purchased by the deft. 1 himself. The sale was ultimately confirmed & deft. 1 was granted dakhaldehani. Thereupon Sarjug's son brought a suit alleging that the decree for costs was an immoral debt & his share in the joint family property was not liable to be sold. The suit was contested on the ground that the pltf. was under a pious obligation to pay the decree for costs made against his father & the entire joint family property was liable for the payment thereof. On these rival contentions the subordinate Judge held that Sarjug had opposed the previous suit on a deliberately false claim, that the decree for costs was an avyavaharika debt & that the pltf's share in the joint family property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree. There was an appeal to this Ct., & it was held that before instituting the previous suit Sarjug knew that Bisundayal had no daughter, that Ramphal was not the latter's grandson, & that he had no valid title to the property conveyed by the kebala. On these facts it was held that

"the costs incurred by Sarjug in the present case in prosecuting the previous suit was Avyavaharika debt for which the son is not liable & his share cannot be sold for payment of the decretal amount."

In the case before us, there is no finding that the hukumnama produced by Raghunandan was a forged & fabricated document. On the other hand, the finding is that pltf. 1 himself was conducting the previous litigation & after the death of Raghunandan the pltfs. were substituted in his place in this Ct. The learned subordinate Judge has also found that pltf. 1 had been instrumental in taking the thumb impression of deft. 1 on a blank paper. It has been further found that the pltfs' father had tried to acquire the land on behalf of the joint family & the attempt had been made by him to the knowledge of the pltfs. In fact, the second appeal which had been filed in the previous case by Raghunandan was, after his death, prosecuted by his sons, including the present pltfs., after getting themselves substituted in his place. In the circumstances, even on the findings of fact, it cannot be said that the pltfs. were under no pious obligation to pay the judgment-debt.

(19) Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh also relied upon 'Govindprasad Tewari v. Raghunathprasad', (A I R (26) 1939 Bom 289). The question as to the liability of the son for payment of costs did not arise in this case. Therefore it is not necessary to consider whether certain dicta laid down in that case hold good after the P. C. decision in 'Hemraj's case', (A I R (30) 1943 P C 142).

(20) In my opinion, the decision of the Cts. below is correct & Shearer, J. has rightly dismissed the suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

(21) CHATTERJI, J.: I agree and there is nothing which I can usefully add.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 — Revival of execution appln. — Order for dismissal for default — When operates as final disposal of execution case — Test.

The crucial test for determining whether an order for dismissal of the execution case for default amounts to a final order terminating the execution proceedings is whether there was anything to be done by the D. H. on the date the execution case was dismissed for default. If nothing had to be done by the D H. his execution case cannot be dismissed for default. [Para 10]

Where, the executing Ct. accepted the report of the Receiver to the effect that he would be making payments to the D H. and that the latter should not execute the decree against the estate which was in his charge and dismissed the execution case for default :

Held* that the order dismissing the execution case for default was a routine order only indicating that the case should not be shown as pending for administrative purposes of returns. It only meant that the record be sent to the Record Room to be recalled when necessary and the subsequent execution appln. must be treated as one merely for the continuation of the original proceeding. [Para 9]

R. S. Chatterji — for Applt.; G. C. Mukherji, Lala Atul Chandra, S. N. Ray & P. K. Bose — for. Resps.

C. P. Sinha J. — These are appeals by the D. H. Misc. Appeal No. 116 arises out of an objection u/s. 47, Civil P. C. filed by the J. Ds. the objection being that the execution was barred by limitation. Appeal No. 123 of 1948 has been filed against an order u/s. 13, Bihar Money-lenders Act. I would deal first with Misc. Appeal No. 116. The facts giving rise to this appeal can be briefly put as follows :

[2] The applt. obtained a money decree on 4-10-1934. for a large sum of money. The present execution case was filed on 12-3-1946, & in the execution petn. in the column which is headed as "payment or adjustment made if any", it was mentioned that the D. H. was paid a sum of Rs. 2,500 in instalments by the former Receiver of the estate of the J. Ds. once by a cheque dated 23-2-1945 for Rs. 5,000.

[3] There was a previous execution, No. 570 of 1934, & an appln. was made by the D. H. for permission to attach the properties of the J.Ds. in the hands of the Receiver who had been appointed in Execution Case No. 118 of 1933 & other execution cases. The order numbered 104, dated 19-2-1935 in Execution Case No. 118 of 1933 & other cases mentions the following :

"Receiver's reports dated 10-2-1935 & 11-2-1935 on the applns. of Babu Bhudev Chandra Rai (the present D. H. applt. and Maharajo Shris Chandra Nandi for permission to make the Receiver a party in execution of decree obtained by them against the J. Ds. proprietors put up and considered. As the pleader for Babu Bhudev Chandra Rai has agreed to the Receiver's proposal for enlisting his name in the Sch. of creditors of the estate in the hands of the Receiver, let the name of Bhudev Chandra Rai be entered in the list of creditors in the Receiver's file as prayed for by the Receiver. . . . . ."

It appears that after the above order was passed Execution Case No. 570 of 1934 was dismissed for default on 22-2-1935. On 9-4-1937, the applt. filed an appln. in the Ct. of the Subordinate Judge to the effect that the applt. had consented to become a scheduled creditor on the report of the Receiver as he thought that there was a chance of his being repaid the amount of the decree gradually & that he was made a scheduled creditor on 19-2-1935, &, although more than two years had elapsed, the applt. had been paid a sum of Rs. 200 only. The applt. therefore, prayed for permission to execute his decree after making the Receiver a party to his execution. The receiver admitted having paid only a sum of Rs. 200 but opposed the prayer for filing the execution case on the ground that. in case the execution was taken out by the applt., the estate would suffer, & the Receiver promised to make further payments. The Ct., upon the report of the Receiver, ordered the Receiver to pay to the applt. a sum of Rs. 1,000 within a month. It is to be noted that the Ct. which had appointed the Receiver of the J..Ds.' estate in Execution Case No. 118 of 1933 & the Ct. in which the applt. had filed his appln. for execution of his decree was the same Ct., namely, the Subordinate Judge's Ct. at Dhanbad.

[4] The applt. again filed an appln. (Ex. B-2) on 25-3-1938, complaining of inadequate payment by the Receiver to the applt. His grievance was that he had been paid only Rs. 1200 up to the date of the making of the appln. The applt. prayed, therefore, for permission of the Ct. to execute his decree. It appears that the Ct. asked for a report from the Receiver & in the report dated 10-5-1938 the Receiver promised that he would make regular payments to the applt., &, after having considered the petn. of the applt. & the report of the Receiver, the Ct. on 16-5-1938, ordered the Receiver to make reasonable payments. From 16-5-1938, it appears the Receiver went on making payments to the applt.

[5] From the statement of expenditure from 3-6-1935 to July 1940 (Ex. A) filed by the Receiver in the Ct. of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, it appears that the applt. was paid Rs. 200 in 1936-37, Rs. 1200 in 1937-38, Rs. 250 in 1938-39 & Rs. 600 in 1939-40, the total amount being Rs. 2250. There is another statement of receipts & disbursements during the month of February 1942 (Ex. A-1), & from an extract from that statement the following may be quoted :

'Ct. of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad.
Filed on 7-4-1942.

Date	Particulars	Voucher No.	Amount	Total	Remarks
19th Febru ary.	By amount paid to Babu Bhudev Chandra Rai in part payment of his decretal amount in execution case No. 570 of 34.	178	300	300

Sd. B. K. Mitra,
Receiver Shibcharan Trigunait & nephew Estate."

There are similar statements of receipts & disbursements during the months of April 1942, November 1942 & February 1945 (vide Exs. A-2, A-3 & A-4). By Ex. A 2 a sum of Rs. 200 was paid, by Ex. A 3 a sum of Rs. 100 was paid & by Ex. A 4 a sum of Rs. 5000 was paid by the Receiver to the D.-H. applt. & in each of these statements it is mentioned in part payment of his decretal amount in execution case No. 570 of 1935.

[6] It appears from Ex. 1, order No. 830, dated 21-1-1944 (sic) in Execution Case No. 118 of 1933 & other cases that another appln. was filed by the D.-H. applt. for permission to proceed against the Receiver in execution of his decree, which permission was ultimately granted, & it was folld. by the prsent execution. On 23-2-1945, a petn. was filed by the D.-H. in execution case No. 570 of 1934 (Ex. B) to the effect that on the date of the appln. Rs. 5,000 was paid by the J.-Ds. & that if further payment of Rs. 7,000 was made within two months from that date, the entire decree would be deemed to be fully satisfied, if not, the D.-H. would be entitled to execute the decree for the entire balance of the amount of the decree. It was prayed that this appln. be put on record of the Receiver's file.

[7] From Ex. D, letter by Shibcharan Trigunait & others (J. Ds.) to the Ct. of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, dated 14-6-1945 the following may be quoted :

"... We have no objection to your kindly discharging the present Receiver ... We have the honour to state further that we guarantee to make payments to :

(1) * * *
(2) Babu Bhudev Chandra Rai, Rs. 7,000.
(3) * * *
(4) * * *"

From Ex. C, a letter by the Receiver to the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, dated 18-6-1945, it appears that the Receiver also made a report that all the creditors of the estate of the J.-Ds. were paid except the present applt. who had a decree against one of the proprietors & that, according to the Receiver his due was Rs. 7,000 only & the Receiver has given in his letter a list of creditors outstanding in which he has mentioned Babu Bhudev Chandra Rai, the present applt. to be entitled to Rs. 7,000 which according to him, was the balance outstanding.

[8] The facts mentioned above are all admitted. The contentions of Mr. Chatterji, for the applt., are, firstly, that the present execution case is nothing but a continuation of the former execution case, namely, Execution Case No. 570 of 1934 & further that the payment made by the Receiver to the D.-H. applt. should be treated as payment made under the provisions of S. 20, Limitation Act, that is to say, the Receiver should be taken to be an agent of the J.-Ds. within the meaning of that section. He has raised other points also, but, in my opinion, they are not necessary to be considered if any of these two contentions is found to be well founded. Mr. G. C. Mukharji, on the other hand, argues that the former execution case having been dismissed, the present execution cannot be treated as continuation of the previous one & that the Receiver, who was appointed in some other execution case, could not be said to be an agent of the J.-Ds. when he made payments to the D.-H. applt. under the orders of the Ct. appointing him a Receiver.

[9] In my judgment the contention of the applt. that the present execution should be taken as a continuation of the previous execution is well founded. From the facts mentioned above, it is clear that, after the Ct., which was executing the decree, had accepted the report of the Receiver to the effect that he would be making payments to the present D. H. as well & that the applt. should not execute the decree against the estate which was in charge of the Receiver the order dismissing the execution case for default, on 22-2-1935, was a routine order only indicating that the case should not be shown as pending for administrative purposes of returns. It only meant that the record be sent to the Record Room to be recalled when necessary. In view of the previous order of the Ct. directing the Receiver to make payments to the D. H. there was nothing further to be done by the D. H. in furtherance of his execution & no step had to be taken, & if no other step had to be taken by the D. H. it cannot be said that he defaulted in carrying out certain orders of the Ct. or in taking some step in furtherance of his execution. The D. H. had nothing to do & therefore, there could be no default, & the order dated 22-2-35 dismissing the execution case No. 570 of 1934 for default is not happily worded. In my view what the Ct. meant was that the execution case should not be shown as pending as at that time nothing more had to be done. The D. H. & the Ct. executing the decree were to await the result of the offer of payment made by the Receiver. That the execution case, though dismissed for default, did in fact continue & was understood to be pending by the Ct. the Receiver & the D. H. is apparent from the fact that even on dates subsequent to the date of dismissal for default of the execution case on 22-2-1935, this very execution case is mentioned in subsequent documents & orders. It appears from Exs. A-1, A-2 & A-3, the statements of receipts & disbursements by the Receiver, that the amount paid by the Receiver to the present D. H. applt. was being credited in the same execution case namely Execution Case 570 of 1934 & this brings us to 6-11-1942 (vide Ex. A- 3) & on 23-2-1945, the payment of Rs. 5,00 made by the J. Ds. was certified & recorded in this very execution case which appears from the following order (order No. 854 dated 23-2-45 in Execution Case No. 118 of 1933 & other cases) :

"The D. H. of Execution Case No. 570 of 1934, files a petn certifying payment of Rs. 5,000 file the petn. with record "

In my view Execution Case No. 572 of 1934, in spite of the order of dismissal for default, must be held to be pending & if that be so, the present execution case, which was taken out on 12-3-1946, cannot be said to be barred by time.

[10] Mr. Mukharji relies upon the order of the Ct. dismissing that execution case for default on 22-2-1935. In view of certain decisions to which I am going to refer shortly, there is no merit in the objection of Mr. Mukherji. In Mohammad Amirul v. Mt. Wazir Bibi, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 454: (48 I. C. 786) a decree was attached by the executing Ct. at the instance of the D. H. On the date fixed for orders the Ct. passed the order dismissing the execution case for default & after the execution case was dismissed for default, the J. D. sold the attached decree to one A. It was held by their Lordships that until the attached decree had been realised by the D. H. there was nothing further to be done by the D. H. in the execution case, so that the executing Ct. had no jurisdiction to dismiss the case for default. It was further held that, notwithstanding the order for dismissal of the execution case, the attachment of the decree continued to subsist & that, in that view of the matter, A the purchaser, had acquired no title to the decree by his purchase against the attaching D. H. & that A had no right to execute the decree. In my view, although the facts are not the same, the case was similar to the case in hand. The crucial test is whether there was anything to be done by the D. H. on the date the execution case was dismissed for default. If nothing had to be done by the D. H. his execution case cannot be dismissed for default.

[11] There is another case in which a similar view has been taken in the Calcutta H. C. Sm. Sarada Sundari v. Jabbar Ali, 43 C. W. N. 429 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal. 331). The Ct. had directed the property to be sold by the Nazir on a certain date & on that date the Nazir made a note that the D. H. was absent & on that basis the Ct. passed the order. "The D. H. takes no steps. Dismissed for default". It was held that there was no default on the part of the D. H. & the order, though in form an order of dismissal for default, was an order which should be taken in substance to be an order for removing the case from the pending file of cases & further that a subsequent appln. for execution was not barred by limitation but was a continuation of the previous appln. in C Ajodhya v. C. Srinath, 26 C. W. N. 338: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 472) there was also a similar case where the execution case was dismissed for default, but the Ct. held on facts that there was in fact no default on the part of the D. Hs. & it was further held that the order recorded in that form must be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Ct. I would, therefore, hold that the present appln. for execution is a continuation of the previous execution, namely, Execution Case No. 570 of 1934 & the order of dismissal for default of that execution case must be held on the facts of this case to mean that the record of the execution case was merely consigned to the record room for the convenience of the Ct.

[12] In the view which I have taken it is not necessary to consider & decide any other point which has been raised by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the applt. or the resps.

[13] The Ct. below has dismissed the execution case on the ground that the execution was barred by limitation upon its finding that the payments were not certified & recorded within three years of the present execution. It is now settled beyond all doubt that there is no period prescribed by the Limitation Act within which the D. H. has to certify payments, & this point has been conceded by Mr. Mukherji. I would accordingly hold that the execution was not barred by limitation & that it should proceed in accordance with law. The order of the Ct. below is set aside & the appeal is allowed with costs.

[14] The other appeal is in respect of the valuation of the properties & was not argued at the time of hearing. It is, therefore, dismissed, but, in the circumstances, without costs.

Jaleshwar Prasad for G. P. Sahi — for Applt.; Canak Kishore Shambhu Nath, Syed Akbar Hussain & Bhabanand Mukherji — for Resps.

Lakshmikanta Jha C. J. — This appeal by deft. 1 arises out of a suit for partition. The pltfs. who are the grandsons of one Nath Sahay Singh, allege that they own 7 dams & odd share in tauzi No. 2542 in village Kendua, which has been included in Register D in the share, recorded in the names of (1) deft. 1, (2) defts 2 to 5(a), & (3) defts. 21 to 23(a) & 31 to 34, & their prayer is that a separate takhta of their share be allotted to them after partition. They have also claimed Rs. 449/12 as compensation for the period antecedent to the suit & future mesne profits till possession is delivered to them of their takhta in case they are found to be out of possession.

[2] The trial Ct. has decreed the claim in favour of the pltfs. against deft. 1 & defts. 2 to 5(a) with costs, but dismissed it against other defts. A preliminary decree for partition has accordingly been made.

[3] The pltf's. grandfather, Nath Sahay, owned 7 dams 3 kauris 12 bauris & odd share in tauzi No. 2542 in mauza Kendua & he was in possession of his share as co-sharer malik till he gave his share in ijara on 5-1-1904, to two persons, Lal Mohammad & Mullick Turab Ali. This ijara was redeemed in 1920. One Mahendra was also a co-sharer malik of this tauzi & his interest was 7 dams & odd. eqal to the share of Nath Sahay, & one Janki Prasad Singh also held 5 dams & odd share in this tauzi as a co-sharer malik. Thus the total interest of Nath Sahay, Mahendra & Janki was 1 anna & odd in this tauzi. There were other co-sharer landlords also, but we are not concerned with them in this suit. On 3-9-1906, the 1 anna & odd share, representing the total interest of these three persons, was sold for arrears of cess & auction purchased by one Jugeshwar Dayal, Mukhtar, at a certificate sale, & he got his name mutated in register D in respect of the share purchased by him. According to the trial Ct. he did not get possession over this property. & this finding has not been challenged before us. Subsequently, Jugeshwar sold 6 dams & odd share, which he described as the interest of Mahendra, & the entire 5 dams & odd share of Janki (total 11 dams & odd), to Gokaran Prasad Singh, who is deft. 1 in the present action. He also sold the remainder, describing it as the entire 7 dams & odd share of Nath Sahay & the remaining 1 dam & odd share of Mahendra, to one Ramsaran Singh, ancestor of defts. 2 to 5 (a). But Mahendra. notwithstanding the certificate sale, sold his entire 7 dams & odd interest to one Masoom Ali in 1909, who in his turn, sold this share to one Waris Ali, ancestor of defts. 31 to 34, & in 1913 Waris Ali sold one-fourth of the interest purchased by him from Masoom Ali to one Manzur Ali, predecessor-in-interest of defts. 21 to 23(a).

[4] On 30-8-1918, Waris Ali & Manzur Ali brought Title Suit No. 290 of 1918 in the Ct. of the Munsif, 3rd Ct. Gaya, for a declaration that the sale held in execution of the certificate is illegal & void & also for recovery of possession if they were held by the Ct to be out of possession. This suit was dismissed by the trial Ct. but the judgment of the trial Ct. was revsd. by the appellate Ct. & it was held that the certificate sale was illegal, void & inoperative. The judgment of the appellate Ct. was also upheld by the H. C. in S. A. No. 215 of 1920 (Ex. A1-(1)). Now the successors-in-interest of Waris Ali & Masoom Ali are in possession of 7 dams & odd share in accordance with the above-mentioned transfers.

[5] In 1928 the pltfs. brought Title Suit No. 97 of 1928 in the Ct. of the Munsif, 3rd Ct. Gaya, impleading, among others, the heirs of Ramsaran Singh as defts. 1 to 4, who are represented by defts. 2 to 5(a), Gokaran Singh as deft. 5 who is deft. 1, the heirs of Manzur Ali as defts. 20 to 22, who are represented by defts. 21 to 23 (a) & the heirs of Waris Ali as defts. 31 to 34, who are represented by defts. 31 to 34. This suit of the pltfs. was for a declaration of their title & recovery of possession with mesne profits in respect of Nath Sahay's 7 dams & odd share. It may be stated that the pltfs. claimed 6 dams & odd share from Gokaran (deft. 1), 16 kauris & odd share from the heirs of Ramsaran, & the remaining 2 kauris & odd interest from the heirs of Waris Ali & Manzur Ali. The trial Ct. decreed the suit for possession with mesne profits against Gokaran in respect of 6 dams & odd share, but in respect of the remaining share the pltfs'. title only was declared. There were two appeals one by the present pltfs. & other by Gokaran. Gokaran's appeal was dismissed, but the pltfs'. appeal was allowed & they got a decree for joint possession with mesne profits for the entire 7 dams & odd share of Nath Sahay. The pltfs. have accordingly instituted the present suit by impleading all the co-sharer maliks of the tauzi & have sought partition & allotment of separate takhta of 7 dams & odd share belonging to Nath Sahay. They have also claimed, as already stated mesne profits on the ground that since the year 1343 Fasli defts. 1 to 5 (a) in collusion with defts. 21 to 23 (a) & 31 to 34 realized the pltfs. share of the produce rent from the tenants but did not give them their hakmi share of the produce rent in spite of repeated demand, & also prevented the pltfs. from cultivating their proportionate share of the bakasht land.

[6] Several sets of written statement have been filed, but the suit was contested only by defts. 1, 21 to 23 (a) & 31 to 34. As the appeal is only by deft. 1, we are not concerned with the defence of other defts. The defence of deft. 1 is, inter alia, that he is in possession as a cosharer malik of 3 annas & odd share in the tauzi in his own right & that he is not in possession of any share belonging to the pltfs. Accordingly, his case is that the pltfs. are not entitled to any takhta being carved out from the share which stands recorded in Register D in his name, nor to any compensation or mesne profits from him. The trial Ct. has, as already stated, held that the pltfs. are entitled to 6 dams & odd from out of the 3 annas & odd share in the possession of deft. 1 which stands recorded in his name in register D in excess of his legitimate share. It has accordingly ordered recovery of possession of this 6 dams & odd share from deft. 1, with mesne profits. There is also a decree against defts. 2 to 5 (a) in respect of 16 kauris & odd share, with mesne profits, but the trial Ct. has dismissed the pltfs' claim in respect of the remaining shares against defts. 21 to 23 (a) & 31 to 34. There is no appeal by defts. 2 to 5 (a). Therefore, the decree in respect of 16 kauris has become final. There was, however, a cross-objection in respect of 2 kauris & odd claimed from defts. 21 to 23 (a) & 31 to 34, but the cross objection has not been pressed. The present appeal is only by deft. 1, & is directed against the decree for recovery of 6 dams & odd share from out of the 3 annas interest in the tauzi which stands recorded in Register D in his name.

[7] The following points emerge for our consideration:

(1) Whether the pltfs are entitled to claim 6 dams & odd share from deft. 1?

(2) Whether the pltfs. are entitled to claim any compensation or mesne profits from deft. 1.

(3) Whether the pltf's. claim is barred by limitation?

[8] All the three points for decision in this appeal are inter-connected & may, therefore, be conveniently taken up together. It may be recalled that Nath Sahay's 7 dams & odd share in the tauzi was in the possession of the ijardars as usufructuary mtgees from 1904 to 1920. The certificate sale took place on 3-9-1906, while the usufructuary mtgees. of Nath Sahay were in possession. The certificate sale, however, was held to be illegal, void & inoperative in Title Suit No. 290 of 1918. Later on the pltfs. brought Title Suit No. 97 of 1928 for possession & mesne profits against the present defts. or those who represented their interest. This suit was also decreed, & the writ of delivery of possession (Ex. 3) & the order-sheet (Ex. 4) show that the pltfs. recovered possession over 7 dams & odd share now claimed by the pltfs. in the present suit. The subject-matter of dispute in the two suits is identically the same, & the plea of the applts. is also identically the same. In spite of the plea of the applts. it was held in the previous suit that the pltfs. were entitled to 6 dams & odd share which stands recorded in the name of the applt. & the pltfs. were given a decree for mesne profits against Gokaran Prasad Singh in respect of this share. P. W. 1 has stated in his evidence that delivery of possession was given to the pltfs. in his presence. D. W. 1 has, however, stated that delivery of possession was not taken by the pltfs. but he had to admit that the pltfs. realized mesne profits but not from him. He has further admitted that there was a proceeding against him under S. 107, Cr. P. C. regarding the disputed shares at the instance of the pltfs. & he gave an undertaking not to disturb the pltfs. in their possession. Therefore, in my opinion, on the evidence in the case, there is no manner of doubt that the pltfs. recovered joint possession in January 1934. The trial Ct. has held that the evidence of P. W. 1 that mesne profits were realized from the applt. & Kabir Mian is not worthy of credence. In my opinion, in view of Gokaran's own admission that mesne profits were realised by the pltfs. (but not from him) there is no reason why the evidence of P. W. 1 on this point also should not be accepted. The pltfs. have proved by documentary evidence (Exs. 3 & 4) that they got joint possession in January, 1934. Therefore, it is not necessary to decide whether the pltfs. or their mtgees. were dispossessed prior to 1928 when the Title Suit No. 97 of 1928 was instituted, or whether dispossession of the mtgees. can, in the eye of law operate as dispossession of the mtgors. As this suit was instituted on 8-9-1934, within twelve years of the suit, the question of limitation, in my opinion, does not arise.

[9] The next question for consideration is whether the applt. can resist the pltfs. suit for possession. It appears that 3 annas 7 dams & odd share has been recorded in register D in the name of the applt. under serial No. 99. Admittedly, the applt. purchased from Jugeshwar 6 dams & odd share of Mahendra, & Ramsaran purchased 7 dams & odd share of Nath Sahay & 1 dam & odd share of Mahendra from him. It was held by the appellate Ct. as well as by the H. C., in Title Suit No. 290 of 1918 that the certificate sale was illegal & inoperative. Therefore, the purchasers from Jugeshwar acquired no title & they were in possession of the properties purchased by them as trespassers. It was held in Title Suit No. 97 of 1928 that 6 dams & odd share now claimed by the pltfs. in the present suit from the applt. was in his possession & the pltfs. were held entitled to recover possession from him. The trial Ct. has held that the 6 dams & odd share claimed by the pltfs. from the applt. is in his possession & is included in 3 annas & old share recorded in his name in Register D. I see no reason to differ from its view. Moreover, it is not open to the applt. to resist the claim of the pltfs. for recovery of possession because the matter is res judicata. Identically the same point was raised in Title Suit No. 97 of 1928 before the learned Munsif, & he gave his decision in favour of the pltfs. In my opinion, the learned Munsif who decided the former suit was competent to decide the present suit in so far as it relates to the particular relief as to the title of the plts. Though the present suit has been valued at Rs. 11,000 for the purpose of jurisdiction & partition (being the value of the entire 16 annas of the tauzi under partition in 1944) the relief as to the declaration of title & recovery of possession as against the applt. must be deemed to have the same value in 1944 as it had for the purpose of jurisdiction before the learned Munsif in 1928 in Title Suit No 97 of 1928. A higher value has been put, due partly to the rise in the price of the property & partly because the entire 16 annas share has been valued for the purpose of partition. But the matter directly & substantially in issue in both the suits is identically the same. Therefore, in my opinion, the judgment of the appellate Ct., which finally heard & decided the matter, in the former suit (Title Suit No. 97 of 1928) operates as res judicata in the present suit. Mitter J. in Gopi Nath v. Bhugwat Pershad, 10 Cal. 697 has observed that the words "in a Ct. of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" must refer to the jurisdiction of the Ct. at the time when the first suit was brought, that is to say, if the Ct. which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit if then brought, the decision of such Ct. would be conclusive, although on a subsequent date, by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause the said Ct. ceased to be the proper Ct., so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property. The principle enunciated in Gopi Nath Chobey's case (10 Cal. 697) has been folld. in the case of Sarupa v. Khem Lal, 10 Lah. 528: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Lah. 929), Lalmohan v. Ramlakshmi, 59 Cal. 636: A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 271) & Debendra Kumar v. Pramada Kanta, 37 C. W. N. 810: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 879). It has been held in the case of Drupad Chandra v. Bindumoyi Dasi, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1053: (97 I. C. 209) that if a particular relief claimed in the subsequent suit was adjudicated in the previous suit, the previous Ct. having jurisdiction to try, that relief would be barred in the subsequent suit. The same view has been reiterated in the case of Priyanath v. Kalicharan, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 162: (136 I. C. 604), & it has been held that where a decision has been given by a competent Ct. in a previous suit, regarding part of the claim in the subsequent suit, & where both the suits are between the same parties & the causes of action relating to part of the claim are the same, that much part of the claim should be excluded from the subsequent suit, being barred by the principle of res judicata.

[10] So far as the pltfs. claim for compensation is concerned, I am clearly of the opinion that Art. 120, Limitation Act, governs the present case & that there is no bar of limitation & they are entitled to the relief: see Midnapur Zamindary Co., Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy, 29 C. W. N. 270: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 93); Yerukola v. Yerukola, 45 Mad. 648: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Mad. 150 F. B.) & Mahomedally Tyebally v. Safiabai, 45 C. W. N. 226 at p. 231: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 215). It may be stated that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this point was not seriously challenged.

[11] The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

[12] Reuben J.—I agree.

[13] The appeal should fail on the merits & also, I think on the ground of res judicata. I would base the latter conclusion on general principles rather than on S. 11, Civil P. C. Section 11 enacts that no Ct. shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly & substantially in issue has been directly & substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Ct. competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, & has been heard & finally decided by such Ct. The test prescribed by this section is that the Ct. which decided the earlier suit must have been competent to try the subsequent suit. In reliance on certain observations of Lord Davey in Gokul Mandar v. Pudanund Singh, 29 I. A. 196: (29 Cal. 707 P. C.), S. 13 (now S. 11), Civil P. C. was construed strictly by a D. B. of the Calcutta H. C. in Shibo Raut v. Baban Raut, 35 Cal. 353: (7 C. L. J. 470), where a portion of the property forming the subject of the later suit had been the subject of an earlier suit between the same parties in which earlier suit the title to the property had been adjudicated between them. The question whether the earlier decision was binding as regards the subject-matter of the earlier suit was answered in the negative by their Lordships, who distd. a previous decision of the same Ct. reported in Bhugwanbutti v. A. H. Forbes, 28 Cal. 78: (5 C. W. N. 483), decided on the basis that the pltf. cannot be allowed to evade the provision of S. 13 (now S. 11), Civil P. C. by joining in one suit several causes of action. The same view of S. 11 as in the case of Shibo Raut, (35 Cal. 353: 7 C. L. J. 470) was taken by a D. B. of the Lahore

H. C. in Fazal Hussain v. Jivan Shah, 14 Lah. 369 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Lah. 551), again in reliance on the observations of Lord Davey. A situation on a par with that in the case of Shibo Raut, (35 Cal. 353 : 7 C. L. J. 470) arose in Drupad Chandra v. Bindumoyi Dasi, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1053 : (97 I. C. 209). Apparently the attention of their Lordships was not drawn to the earlier decision & they gave a contrary answer to the question, observing without giving any express reasons :

"We think that as to the properties which measure one & half bighas of land of schedule Kha the decision in the previous suit operated as res judicata & the pltf. cannot succeed so far as this portion of the land is concerned."

This decision was folld. in Priyanath v. Kalicharan, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 162 : (136 I. C. 604). That was a case where different causes of action were combined in the subsequent suit as in the case of Bhugwanbutti v. Chowdhrani, 28 Cal. 78 : (5 C. W. N. 483), & the decision in the case of Shibo Raut, (35 Cal. 353 : 7 C. L J. 470) was distd. by their Lordships.

[14] I do not think that, in the present case, it is necessary to rely upon S. 11, Civil P. C. for the purposes of res judicata. That section prescribes certain conditions in which the matter directly & substantially in issue in an earlier suit & heard & finally decided therein may not be tried in a subsequent suit. There is nothing in that section which takes away from the final decree in the earlier suit its finality as between the parties & has the effect of setting it aside. The decree in that suit remains binding between the parties so far as the subject-matter of that particular suit is concerned, although the issues on which that result was arrived at may for the purposes of the later suit, be open to trial. In other words, the cause of action has passed into a decree & cannot be reagitated. Unless this was so, there would be no end to litigation & matters decided in suits before Munsifs would be reopened by inclusion in suits of higher valuation. The rule of res judicata which forbids the re-opening of matters once decided as in embodiment of the well-known maxims "Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa & "Interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium," & the memorable words of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Sheoparasan Singh v Ramnandan Prasad, 43 Cal. 694 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 78) set out the manner in which the question ought to be approached :

". . . in view of the arguments addressed to them their Lordships desire to emphasise that the rule of res judicata while founded on ancient precedent, is dictated by a wisdom which is for all time.

'It has been well said', declared Lord Coke, 'interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium, otherwise great oppression might be done under colour & pretence of law.' (6 Coke 9).

Though the rule of the Code may be traced to an English source, it embodies a doctrine in no way opposed to the spirit of the law as expounded by the Hindu commentators. Vijnanesvara & Nitakantha include the plea of a former judgment among those allowed by law, each iting for this purpose the text of Katayayana, who describes the plea thus : "If a person though defeated at law sues again he should be answered, you were defeated formerly. This called the plea of former judgment. [See The Mitakshara (Vyavahara) Bk. II, Ch. i, edited by J. R. Gharpure, p. 14, & The Mayuka, Ch. i., S. 1, p. 11 of Mandlik's Edn.]

And so the application of the rule by the Cts. in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form, but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law."

Lord Darling consd. it worth while to repeat these words in Kalipada De v. Dwijapada Das, 57 I. A. 24 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 22). I may also refer to Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao, 45 Mad. 320 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 80) in which case Lord Buckmaster observed that :

"The principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application & is not limited by the specific words of the Code in this respect."

The observation of Lord Davey in Gokul Mandar's case (29 I. A. 196 : 29 Cal. 707 P. C.) must be understood in the light of the facts of that case. There, it was argued before the Judicial Committee in reliance on S. 13 (now S. 11), Civil P. C. that a Settlement Officer being empowered to decide questions of status in the course of settlement proceedings under the Bengal Tenancy Act, his decision in such a proceeding was a bar to a civil suit. It was in answer to this argument that his Lordship observed that :

"It is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction."

As is clear from the subsequent decisions of the Judicial Committee to which I have refd., the dictum of his Lordship cannot be taken to mean that S. 13 (now S. 11) had the effect of abrogating the general principles of res judicata. As other decisions of the Judicial Committee supporting my conclusion, I may mention G. H. Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal, 48 Cal. 499 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. C. 11) & Ram Kirpal v. Mt. Rup Kuari, 11 I. A. 37 : (6 ALL. 269 P. C.).

[15] The conclusion to which I have come is also supported by the learned & illuminating discourse of Tek Chand J., on the doctrine of res judicata in Mt. Lachhmi v. Mt. Bhulli, 8 Lah. 384 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 289 F. B.). His Lordship cites a relevant passage from an ancient Hindu law-giver Harita which I reproduce below :

"The pltf. should be non-suited if the deft. avers : 'In this very affair, there was litigation between him & myself previously,' & it is found that the pltf. had lost his case."

In my opinion, this passage applies to the present case. His Lordship having indicated that the doctrine is of universal application & is to be found in various systems of jurisprudence, relates that in some of the ancient systems the operation of the rule was confined to cases in which the pltf. puts forward his claim to "the same subject-matter with regard to which his request had already been determined by a competent Ct. & had passed into judgment" this is what is described as the plea of "estoppel by judgment" or "estoppel by record." This rule of estoppel, he points out, was first enacted in British India by S. 16,

Bengal Ragulation III [3] of 1793 & again in S. 2, Civil P. C. of 1859. In other systems of law, & notably in England, his Lordship continues, the doctrine has developed & expanded, & the bar is applied in a subsequent action not only to cases where claim is laid to the same property but also to the same matter (or issue) as was directly & substantially in dispute in the former litigation; in other words, it is the identity of the issue & not the identity of the subject-matter which attracts the operation of the rule. This is what is described as "estoppel by verdict." According to his Lordship, this extension of the principle was given effect to by S. 13 of the Code of 1877, which was substantially on the same lines as S. 11 of the present Code. I do not think that the effect of the extension of the principle was to do away with "estoppel by record" & it is this estoppel which I would apply in the present case.

[16] That there was no intention to abrogate "estoppel by record" would also appear from S. 13 of the Code relating to foreign judgments. The section provides that a foreign judgment shall be conclusive as to "any matter thereby directly adjudicated upon" between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, subject to certain conditions, one of which is that the adjudication must be by a Ct. of competent jurisdiction. If the decision of a foreign Ct. of competent jurisdiction is given this effect in India, it is not possible that the Code intended to give a lesser effect to the decision of a competent civil Ct. of this country. I may also mention O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. which shows the anxiety of the legislature to avoid repeated litigation of the same matter between the same parties.

[17] For the reasons which I have set out, I consider that estoppel by record still exists &, with respect, I would suggest that the decision in the case of Shibo Raut (35 Cal. 353 : 7 C. L. J. 470) was to this extent incorrect.

[18] Finally, I should like to draw attention to a mistake in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. Having, on a consideration of the evidence, come to the conclusion that the claim against defts. 2 to 5 (a) is proved, (p. 51, lines 41-45 of the paper book), he goes on in the same para. to say that the claim is not proved against them (p. 61, lines 58-61). The latter statement is a mistake due to inadvertence & the decree has been rightly passed against these defts.

Chhedi Manjhi & others—Applts. v. Mahipal Bahadur Singh & others—Resps.

A. F. A. D. No. 1972 of 1947, D/- 5-4-1951.

T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 108 (p) and (h), 51 — Construction of permanent structures for non-agricultural purposes by tenant — Right of landlord to removal during lease—Doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence—Applicability.

Where a tenant erects a permanent structure on the land for non-agricultural purposes, & during the continuance of the lease, the lessor objects to their erection & there is no waiver or acquiescence on the part of the lessor, then S. 108 (p) must operate & the landlord is entitled to ask for removal of the permanent structures. 27 Mad. 211, Rel. on; A. I. R. (22) 1935 All. 1040, Disting. [Para 7]

The prohibition in cl. (p), however, may not apply when according to the contract of the parties, the land is let for the erection of a dwelling house or shop thereon. [Para 7]

When a tenant raises the plea of equitable estoppel, it is incumbent upon him to show that the conduct of the owner, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering, or in active interventions, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that he had, by plain implication, contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessee originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation. 21 All. 496 (P. C.), Foll. [Para 5]

Where due to doubtful character of the structure, it was difficult for the landlord to take prompt action for the removal of the structures, the mere erection by the tenant of permanent structure upon the land let to him in the knowledge of & without interference by the lessor will not suffice to raise the equitable right against the latter: 21 All. 496 (P. Narayan J. — This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. The property in suit is 2 Kathas of bitori land situate in bitori Alamganj, tauzi No. 8/R of the Purnea Collectorate, & the pltf's case was that the defts. 1 & 2 who are the legal heirs of the original bitori tenant Dhannulal had the right to use the land for residential purposes, but that they could erect only thatched houses thereon & could not erect any pucca or permanent structure. The defts. 4 to 9 were impleaded because they claimed to be the purchasers of a portion of the bitori holding, & the allegation was that they had recently started constructing a pucca brick structure on the land & that the construction had been raised up to a height of 2 to 3 feet by the time the suit was instituted. The prayer was that the defts. be ejected from the land & that they be directed to remove the pucca structures raised by them within a period fixed by the Ct.

[2] The defts. 4 to 9 contested the suit, & the principal defences raised by them were, (1) that the land in question was part of their ancestral holding, (2) that they had acquired a customary right to erect pucca buildings & structures on such holding, & (3) that they had acquired permanent right in the land & their title had become perfect by their open & adverse possession for a period of more than twelve years.

[3] The Ct. of first instance rejected the claim for ejectment, but held that the defts. had no right to raise pucca structures on the land & directed that the materials be removed by the defts. within a month from the date of the decree. That Ct. also directed that a permanent injunction be issued on the defts. preventing them from raising any pucca structure on the land in future. This decision was affd. on appeal by the Dist. J. of Purnea. Both Cts. repelled the contention of the defts. that they had acquired any permanent right in the land & that there was a custom by which they could acquire such a right.

[4] The defts. have, therefore, come up in second appeal, & on 28-11-1949 a Bench of this Ct. passed an order of remand calling upon the lower appellate Ct. to submit its findings on the following points:

"1. When the structures complained of were made?

2. What was the progress in the structures made before the landlord questioned the right of the defts. to make them?

3. Did the landlord stand by so as to create an equitable right in favour of the tenant-defts. to resist the landlord's claim for the demolition of the structures?

4. In view of the fact that the landlord's claim for ejectment has been dismissed, would it be just & equitable to call upon the defts. to remove the structures complained of?"

[5] The findings having been submitted, the appeal has now been heard finally. Mr. Harinandan Singh, the learned counsel for the defts.-appellants did not challenge the findings of the Cts. below that the defts. had acquired no permanent right or right by custom, but he strenuously urged that the landlords had waived their rights to eject these defts. as they had stood by & allowed the construction to be raised. The learned Counsel has thus invoked in this case the equitable doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence. The learned Addl. Dist. J. has, however, submitted a clear finding to the effect that there is no material "on the record to show that the landlord had knowledge, direct or indirect, about the raising of the structures by the tenant-defts.", & he has come to the conclusion that the landlord did not "stand by so as to create an equitable right in favour of the tenant-deft. to resist the landlord's claim for the demolition of the structures." The learned Addl. Dist. J. has also refd. to S. 108 (p), T. P. Act, which lays down that the lessee must not, without the lessor's consent, erect on the property any permanent structure except for agricultural purposes. In my opinion, the finding of the learned Addl. Dist. J. that the doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence cannot be invoked in this case is quite correct & cannot be questioned before us. The distinct case which the pltf. had made out was that before 10-11-1942 he had no information or knowledge about the wrongful constructions of the pucca building by the defts. This suit was instituted on 9-12-1942, & if the pltf. had no information about the constructions before 10-11-1942, then certainly there is no merit in the contention that the pltf. stood by & allowed the pucca constructions to be made. It is true that the learned Addl. Dist. J. has found that the constructions complained of were made in 1939, & we have therefore to assume that the present suit was instituted about three years after the constructions had been made. But still the question does arise as to when the pltf. came to know of the constructions, & the further question arises as to whether the facts & circumstances can lead to an inference of equitable estoppel against the pltf. It appears that the pltf.'s estate had been seized by the Colr. of Purnea u/s. 99 of the Cess Act, & the pltf. asserts that, consequently, he had no collecting agent for this village, with the result that the deft. 1 took advantage of the situation & clandestinely raised the constructions complained of. As was observed by the Judicial Committee in Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, 21 ALL. 496, when a tenant raises the plea of equitable estoppel, it is

"incumbent upon him to show that the conduct of the owner, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering, or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that he had, by plain implication, contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessee originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation."

[6] During the course of his argument, Mr. Singh has even submitted that the structures which the defts. had raised cannot strictly be regarded as permanent structures. This contention cannot be entertained by us, because in the Cts. below it was assumed & taken as a common ground that the buildings which had been raised were of a pucca & a permanent character. But, if the defts. could be in doubt as to the permanent or the impermanent character of the structures, then certainly the lessor or the owner of the property must have some time to ascertain whether the structures are of a permanent nature or not. Moreover, if the estate was in the hands of the Colr., then certainly it was difficult for the pltf. to take prompt action against the defts. & to demand promptly that the materials & the structures be removed. The lessor could object only after he had made sure that the structures were out of proportion to his & his lessee's intention & for this he must have some time, & as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Beni Ram's case, 21 ALL. 496, in circumstances similar to those of the present case, the mere erection by the tenant of permanent structures upon the land let to him in the knowledge of & without interference by the lessor will not suffice to raise the equitable right against the latter. Their Lordships say that the rule established in India is that of S. 108, T. P. Act, which provides that

"the lessee may remove at any time during the continuance of the lease all things which he has attached to the earth; provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it."

I would also quote the following passage from the judgment of Nasim Ali J. in Chandi Charan v. Ashutosh Lahiri, 40 C. W. N. 52 :

"The equitable doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence also cannot be invoked by the defts. in the present case. The lessee made no mistake about his rights. He knew full well that the lease was not a lease in perpetuity. He did not raise the structures on the faith of any mistaken belief. From the act & conduct of the lessee, the lessor could not & did not know that the lessee had made any mistake as to the nature of his right & that he was raising the structures under a mistaken belief that the demise was permanent . . . The question of the lessor encouraging the lessee to spend money by raising costly structures, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his right, cannot possibly arise in view of the facts & circumstances of the present case."

[7] It is no more the contention of the defts. that they had acquired any permanent right in the land &, as such, they could not construct any permanent structure on the land. Cl. (p), S. 108, T. P. Act, lays down that the lessee cannot without the lessor's consent erect on the property any permanent structure except for agricultural purposes, & cl. (h), S. 108, after amendment is in the following terms :

"the lessee may, even after the determination of the lease remove, at any time whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards all things which he has attached to the earth : provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it " :

As was pointed out by the Madras H. C. in Ismai Kani Rowthan v. Nazarali Sahib, 27 Mad. 211 the rules laid down by the T. P. Act substantially reproduce the law as it stood before, & the lessor has an option either to take the building or to pay compensation for it, or if he is unwilling to pay the compensation to allow the tenant to remove the building. And there is no reason why, during the continuance of the lease, if the landlord objects to the erection of permanent structures, those permanent structures should not be removed. If there is no waiver or acquiescence & if the equitable doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence cannot be invoked, then cl. (p) of S. 108 must operate & the lessee cannot be allowed to construct permanent structures except for agricultural purposes. The prohibition in this clause may not apply when, according to the contract of the parties, the land is let for the erection of a dwelling house or shop thereon, but that is not the case here. The defts. now resist the pltf.'s claim only by asserting that the pltf. has stood by & allowed the constructions to go on. This plea on the findings & in the circumstances of the case cannot succeed.

[8] The learned counsel for the applts. reld. on a decision of the Allahabad H. C. reported in Ahmad Nazar Beg v. Brij Nandan, A. I. R. (22) 1935 ALL. 1040, & particularly on the following observation made by their Lordships :

"We do not agree that this section would apply because this section applies to lessees in general, & if the plot has become a tenancy for building purposes the section in question will not apply to it. We note that the definition of land in Act 3 of 1926, S. 3 (2) states that : Land does not include land for the time being occupied by dwelling houses or manufactories appurtenant thereto."

The full facts of this case do not appear from the report, but it does appear that in that case there was a finding that plot No. 5 which was the subject-matter of the suit was appurtenant to the dwelling house which stood on it & that this plot, although originally agricultural, had become a plot which was held for building purposes. There are, therefore, obviously some important distinguishing factors, & the clear provisions of law as contained in Cls. (h) & (p) of S. 108 seem to conclude the question raised in this present litigation. If there is no waiver or acquiescence, the defts. cannot be permitted to keep the permanent structures on the land.

[9] I am, therefore, of the opinion that the appeal is without any merit, & I would dismiss it with costs.

L. P. A. No. 22 of 1949, D/- 4-4-1951, from decision of Shearer J., D/- 26-9-1949.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 145 & O. 21, R. 89 — Pltf. depositing amount in Ct. in order to save property from being sold in execution—Pltf. not liable to pay under decree—Suit for recovery of deposit— Deposit whether voluntary—Decree if can be executed against surety of pltf. under S. 145.

In execution of a money decree against a company attachment was taken out against the goods belonging, not to the company but to the pltfs. In the claim case preferred by the pltfs. they had to furnish security as ordered by the Ct. The claim of the pltfs. was disallowed. The surety's property was sold & in order to save the property, the pltfs. deposited a certain amount in Ct. under O. 21, R. 89. In a suit brought by the plffs. to recover the amount so deposited, it was found that the pltfs. were not liable to pay under the decree but it was held that the payment made by the pltfs. under O. 21, R. 89 being voluntary, the suit for recovery of the amount deposited could not lie. In appeal :

Chatterji J. — This is an appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, by the pltfs. in a suit which was originally instituted under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C.

[2] Deft. 1, Volkart Brothers, a firm carrying on business in motor parts & accessories in Calcutta, obtained, in February 1940, a decree for Rs. 585-3-0 in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta against Ojha Das & Co., a firm carrying on business in motor accessories at Patna, of which the deft. 2, Sripat Ojha, is the proprietor. The decree was transferred for execution to the First Munsif's Court at Patna, & in execution Volkart Brothers took out attachment, on 14-1-1941, against certain motor accessories & other moveables said to belong to their J. Ds., Ojha Das & Co. On 16-1-1941, the pltfs., Ojha Brothers, a firm also carrying on business in motor accessories at Patna, of which the proprietors are the two younger brothers of deft. 2, Sripat Ojha, preferred a claim under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., asserting that the goods sought to be attached belonged to them & not to the J. Ds., Ojha Das & Co. They prayed for stay of the execution proceeding whereupon they were ordered to furnish security. In obedience to this Order, they filed, on 20-3-1941, a registered security bond executed by one Raghubir Tewari. The claim was eventually dismissed on 5-9-1941. The execution then proceeded.

[3] On 20-1-1942 the pltfs. brought the present suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. for a declaration that the properties sought to be attached belonged to them & not to the J. Ds. Ojha Das & Co.

[4] In August, 1942 the attached goods were sold & out of the sale proceeds, Rs. 70-10-0 was paid to deft. 1 Volkart Brothers, by way of rateable distribution. The surety, Raghubir Tewari, made three payments, two of Rs. 60 each & the other of Rs. 50 to Volkart Brothers & these payments were duly certified in Court. As he did not make any further payment, the property given by him in security was proceeded against and sold in June 1943. To set aside that sale, the pltfs. made an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. on depositing Rs. 357-8-6. Thereupon the sale was set aside. Volkart Brothers also realised from the pltfs. a sum of Rs. 85 as the costs of the claim case.

[5] On 14-12-1943 the pltfs. by leave of the Court, amended the plaint by adding a further prayer for recovery of the said sums of money, that is, (1) Rs. 70-10-0, (2) Rs. 60, (3) Rs. 60, (4) Rs. 50, (5) Rs. 357-8-6 & (6) Rs. 85.

[6] The suit was contested by deft. 1, Volkart Brothers, & their defence in substance was that the firms Ojha Das & Co. & Ojha Brothers were one & the same concern, belonging to the three brothers, & that the attached goods really belonged to the J. Ds., Ojha Das and Co.

[7] The learned Additional Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, held that the attached properties belonged to the J. Ds. Ojha Das & Co. & not to the pltfs. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, the learned Additional Dist. J. held that the attached goods, belonged to the pltfs., Ojha Brothers, & not to Ojha Das & Co. & were, therefore, not liable to attachment or sale in execution of the decree obtained by Volkart Brothers against Ojha Das & Co. He accordingly allowed the appeal & decreed the suit in these terms :

"Declaration sought for in the suit is allowed. Pltf. shall be further entitled to refund of the money actually realised from him by the D-H. (deft. 1) in Execution Case No. 1587/40".

[8] On second appeal, Shearer J. held (1) that the claim for recovery of Rs. 70-10-0 was barred by limitation, (2) that the three payments, two of Rs. 60 each & the other of Rs. 50 being made by the surety Raghubir Tewari, the pltfs. were not entitled to recover those sums, (3) that the payment of Rs. 357-8-6 made by the pltfs. under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. was voluntary & no suit could lie for recovery of that amount & (4) that the sum of Rs. 85 which the pltfs. had to pay as costs, was also not recoverable. He accordingly allowed the appeal & dismissed the suit.

[9] Before coming to the points raised on behalf of the appellants, it is necessary to dispose of the objection taken by Mr. R. S. Chatterji on behalf of the resps. that the Court of appeal below did not come to any definite finding that the attached goods belonged to the pltfs. This objection is without any force. The Court definitely found "In the above circumstances we cannot but hold that those moveables of Ojha Brothers were not liable to attachment & sale in that execution case". Shearer, J. proceeded on the footing that the Court of appeal below was satisfied that "Messrs Ojha Das & Co. & Messrs Ojha Brothers, were two separate & distinct firms & that the property which had been attached by Messrs. Volkart Brothers in execution of their decree belonged to the latter & not to the former firm". He appears to have accepted this as a finding of fact binding in second appeal.

[10] Mr. G. P. Das on behalf of the appellants does not press the appeal with regard to the three items, two of Rs. 60 each & the other of Rs. 50, which were paid by the surety Raghubir Tewari, He presses the appeal with regard to the other three items, (1) Rs. 70-10, (2) Rs. 357-8-6 & (3) Rs. 85.

[11] With regard to the item of Rs. 357-8-6, Mr. Das's contention is that the pltfs. had to pay the amount under compulsion of legal process &, therefore, the payment could on no account be said to be voluntary. He relies on the decisions of the Privy Council in Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishun Singh, 8 I. A. 93 and Kanhya Lal v. National Bank of India Ltd. (40 I. A. 56). In the first case, the pltf. who had paid to the deft. a sum of money to prevent the sale of a certain mouza which had been attached & put up for sale in execution of a decree obtained by the deft. against a third person, sued to recover back the money. It was contended that the payment was voluntary. This contention was rejected by their Lordships in the following words :

"But the objections taken to the action were that the payment was voluntary, & that the remedy, if any, was in the execution proceedings. Their Lordships think that there is no pretence for saying that the payment was voluntary. It was made to prevent the sale which would otherwise inevitably have taken place of the mouza which the resps. had purchased, & was made therefore under compulsion of law; that is under force of these execution proceedings."

In the second case 40 I. A. 56, the deft. Bank obtained a decree against a certain limited company &, in execution of that decree, attached & took possession of certain mills of which the pltf. claimed to be the sole proprietor. The pltf. paid the decretal amount under protest & subsequently instituted a suit to recover back that amount. It was held that the money was paid under 'coercion' within the meaning of S. 72, Contract Act, & was, therefore, recoverable. The following passage from their Lordships' judgment is instructive :

"A wrongful interference with the pltf's. lawful enjoyment of his own property is alleged. The pltf. was clearly entitled to rid himself of that unlawful interference by any lawful means without thereby affecting his right to hold the defts. liable for that which they have thus caused him to do. It is true that paying under protest the sum demanded was not the only course open to him. He might have taken legal proceedings, by which, sooner or later, he might have rid himself of the interference. But to do so would have involved his submitting to the wrong for all the period necessary for those proceedings to be effective & that might have been a serious aggravation of the wrong. To this he was in no way bound to submit. He was free to choose a course which did not involve any such prolongation of the trespass. Accordingly he paid under protest the sum demanded, & under English law he was unquestionably entitled to demand a repayment of that sum because it was an involuntary payment produced by coercion, namely, the wrongful interference of the defts. with his full & free enjoyment of his own property. By English law it is not open to the wrongdoer to prescribe by which of two lawful alternatives the injured man puts a stop to the wrong under which he is suffering. His choice of any one alternative does not make it as between him & the wrongdoer a voluntary act or estop him from claiming that it was done under coercion."

Though the money was paid "under protest", their Lordships do not appear to have attached any importance to that fact. In their view, the payment was made under the force of the execution proceedings & must, therefore, be regarded as being made under compulsion.

[12] Here, in execution of the decree against Ojha Das & Company, attachment was taken out against the goods belonging, not to them, but to the pltfs. In the claim case preferred by the pltfs., they had to furnish security, as ordered by the Court. The surety's property was sold, & in order to save the property, the pltfs. had to pay the sum of Rs. 357-8-6. The pltfs. were not liable under the decree, & the payment made by them to save the property cannot but be regarded as being made under the force of the execution proceedings.

[13] Shearer J. in his judgment referred to the aforesaid Privy Council decisions, but apparently he felt bound by the decision of this Court in Raghu Ram v. Deokali Pande, 7 Pat. 30. In that case it was held that where a property has been sold in execution of a money decree & a payment is made under O. 21, R. 89, Civ. P. C., the person making such payment must accept the validity of the sale & cannot, therefore, maintain a suit for refund of the money deposited by him. Kulwant Sahay J. who delivered the judgment, to which James J. agreed, observed :

"A payment under R. 89 must be an unconditional payment with the object of the money being paid to the D.-H. Once a payment is made under O. 21, R. 89 it is clear that the person making the payment cannot be heard to say that the sale was not a valid sale & that the money deposited should not be paid to the D.-H. The J.-D. or the person interested is under no compulsion to make the deposit under O. 21, R. 89. Such a deposit is a voluntary deposit & the person making the deposit cannot in my opinion maintain a suit for a refund of the money deposited by him."

The reason why the deposit was held to be a voluntary deposit will appear more clearly from the following passage :

"If the property sought to be sold does not really belong to the J.-D., then the sale of the property in execution of a money decree will not affect the rightful owner of the property & he can ignore the sale & resist the auction-purchaser in his attempt to take possession of the property after the sale. A person who is the owner of the property is not affected by a sale of the right, title & interest of the J.-D. to whom the property does not belong."

In other words, if a person, who is the true owner of the property & is, therefore, not affected by the sale, makes payment under O. 21, R. 89, he does so as a mere volunteer.

[14] In this Patna case there is no reference to the aforesaid Privy Council decisions. But Kulwant Sahay J. followed the decision in Narayan v. Amgauda, 45 Bom. 1094 in which those Privy Council decisions were considered. In that Bombay case, the deft. who had obtained a decree against a third person, got certain property sold and purchased it himself, and the pltf., who claimed to be the owner in possession of the property, got the sale set aside under O. 21, R. 89 by paying into Court the decretal amount & five per cent. of the purchase-money, & on the amount being paid to the D.-H., the pltf. sued to recover it back. It was held that under O. 21, R. 89 the amount must be taken to have been deposited for payment to the D.-H. voluntarily & unconditionally & therefore, no suit could lie to recover it back. Macleod C. J. who delivered the leading judgment observed :

"If the true owner allows the attachment to continue, & the property to be sold as belonging to the J.-D.. he can treat the sale as a nullity & resislt the auction-purchaser. There is no necessity for him to get rid of the sale of what in his opinion does not exist. The attachment of the property itself is a different matter, that may seriously inconvenience him, but if he is the true owner the sale of a non-existent interest in it does not affect him. If he pays in money to get that sale set aside it can only be treated as a voluntary payment."

The said two Privy Council decisions were distinguished on the ground that "a payment made under protest to get rid of an attachment or to prevent a sale in execution stands on a different footing & that the ratio decidendi of these cases cannot be applied to a payment made under R. 89 in support of an application to set aside a sale of the right, title & interest of a third party held in execution of the decree."

But, it is to be observed, in the first of those Privy Council cases, there was no question of payment 'under protest.'

[15] In a later case, Shankerrao Keshavrao v. Vadhilal Mulchand 57 Bom. 601, the Bombay High Court took the same view, though not without some hesitation. In that case, the plffs. sued to recover back the amount which they had paid under O. 21, R. 89 to set aside a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree under which the pltff's property was not liable. The mortgaged decree was satisfied by the sale of that portion only of the mortgaged property which belonged to the pltffs. The mortgagee as well as the mortgagor were made defts. in the suit. It was held that the pltffs. were entitled to a declaration that the land belonging to them was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree, but they were not entitled to recover the amount claimed from the mortgagee, because the amount must be taken to have been deposited for payment to him voluntarily & unconditionally. Patkar, J. who delivered the leading judgment, after referring to the said two Privy Council decisions, stated:

"If the owner, in order to save the property from sale pays the amount to the D. H. he can recover back the money so paid under S. 72, Contract Act, on the ground that the payment was involuntary or obtained by coercion.

In the present case, the pltfs. paid the money after the sale under O. 21, R. 89, to set aside the sale on payment to the D. H. of the amount of the decree & five per cent of the sale price to the auction-purchaser. If the matter were res integra it might have been possible to hold that the pltfs. are entitled to recover back the amount under S. 72, Contract Act. The action of the pltfs. would not be a voluntary payment of the debts of the other defts. 2 to 6 who were liable, but it was a payment made to save their property & get it back from the mortgagee D. H. who had wrongly allowed it to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree."

His Lordship then quoted the passage, cited above, from 40 I. A. 56 & proceeded as follows:

"The sale of survey No. 159 was a wrongful interference with the pltfs' enjoyment of their own property & the pltfs. were entitled to rid themselves of the unlawful interference by any lawful means without thereby affecting their right to hold deft. 1 liable for what he had caused them to do. After the sale the only lawful means by which the pltfs. could get rid of the unlawful interference of deft. 1 was by payment under O. 21, R. 89, & it was not competent to deft. 1 to prescribe some other way to put a stop to the wrong to which they were subjected."

In conclusion, however, his Lordship followed the decision in the earlier case in 45 Bom. 1094 which was also followed by this Court in 7 Pat. 30. Barlee J. who agreed with him, but delivered a separate judgment, stated, with preference to the Privy Council decision in 40 I. A. 56.

"Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that he was entitled to succeed inasmuch as he had paid under legal coercion & was entitled to rid himself of the unlawful interference of the Bank by any lawful means. Thus a payment, into Court made to remove a trespass can be recovered by suit:

His Lordship then proceeded as follows:

"But according to the view adopted by a Bench of this Court in Narayan v. Amgauda, 45 Bom. 1094 a payment made under O. 21, R. 89, to have a sale set aside is not a payment to remove a trespass. . . . . Kanyaya Lal's case 40 I. A 56 was cited but distinguished & the main ground of distinction was that what had been sold was not the property which A claimed but the right, title & interest of S in it. There had been no actual trespass & on the assumption that the property belonged to A & not to the J. D. S, there was no threat of trespass, their Lordships considered against the property of A for A by paying the debt of S was protecting not his own property which was not in danger, but the non-existent right, title & interest of S in the property.

[16] Thus, according to the said Patna & Bombay decisions if the payment under O. 21, R. 89 is made by a third person who claims to be the real owner of the property sold, the payment is voluntary, because he is thereby protecting not his own property which is not in danger, but the non-existent right, title & interest of the J. D. in that property.

[17] In the present case, the property given in security by Raghubir Tewari was sold & the pltffs made the payment under O. 21, R. 89 to save that property from sale. It cannot be said that they made the payment to protect any non-existent right, title & interest. It was in obedience to the order of the Court that the pltffs. had to furnish security which was actually given by Raghubir Tewari. According to the finding of the lower appellate Court, the goods which were attached by Volkart Brothers belonged, not to their J. Ds. but to the pltffs. The pltffs. had to pay the money under the force of execution proceedings. The principle laid down in the said Patna & Bombay decisions, therefore, has no application here. In my opinion, the payment made by the pltffs. can on no account be said to be voluntary.

[18] Mr. R. S. Chatterji further relies on the Full Bench decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Arunachalum Chettiar, (58 Mad. 972) in which the real question for decision was whether a deposit under O. 21, R. 89 could be accepted subject to any condition or protest. It was held that no condition could be attached to such deposit. The facts of that case are quite distinguishable from those of the present.

[19] Mr. Chatterji next contends that Raghubir having stood surety, the decree could be validly executed against him under S. 145, Civil P. C. & therefore, the pltffs, cannot recover the money paid under O. 21, R. 89 which went to satisfy the decree. But Raghubir stood surety, not for the J. Ds., but for the pltffs., as ordered by the Court in the claim case, and he undertook the responsibility (sic) for payment of the decree in case the claim was rejected. The claim, no doubt, was disallowed by order dated 5-9-1941, but that order was subject to the result of the present suit which was in the meantime brought under O. 21, R. 63. Raghubir's property was sold long after the institution of this suit. As pointed out by the Privy Council in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra, 35 I. A. 22, a suit under O. 21, S. 63 (S. 283 of the old Code) is substantially a suit to set aside the summary decision in the claim case. On the finding of the lower appellate Court, there could be no valid attachment of the pltff's goods & consequently Raghubir as surety could not be held liable for payment of the decree.

[20] In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the further question raised by Mr. Chatterji, namely, whether there was a good consideration for Raghubir standing as surety.

[21] Next, as regards the item of Rs. 70-10, Mr. G. P. Das contends that the suit is governed, not by Art. 29, but by Art. 49, Limitation Act. Art. 29 refers to a suit "For compensation for wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process" for which the period of limitation is one year from the" date of the seizure". Mr. Chatterji relies on the decision in Madras Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Shalimar Works Ltd., 42 Cal. 85 in which the pltff. company sued the deft. company for wrongful arrest of a ship belonging to the former. The suit as framed was based on malice or its equivalent, but at the hearing, the plaintiff company proceeded on the footing of the suit being one for mere trespass. It was held that in the absence of proof of malice or its equivalent, a suit for simple trespass would not lie for the arrest of a ship. On the question of limitation raised, it was held that assuming that an action would lie in the absence of proof of malice or its equivalent, the action would be for wrongful seizure under legal process & would be barred by Art. 29, Limitation Act. But the present suit is not for compensation for wrongful seizure of the pltffs' goods, but for recovery of the money which was realised by the D. Hs. by sale of those goods. Mr. G. P. Das contends that the suit will be governed by Art. 49 which refers to suits

"For other specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same."

The period of limitation for such suit is three years from

"When the property is wrongfully taken or injured or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful."

Mr. Das relies on the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh of Baluchar v. Achala Bala Devi, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 106 in which it was held that a suit for value of crops wrongfully attached, cut & removed by the deft. would be governed by Art. 48 or Art. 49, & not by Art. 29 or Art. 36, Limitation Act. Upon the facts of the present case, I think the proper article applicable will be Art. 49. The cause of action for the suit arose when the attached goods were sold & the proceeds were paid to the D. Hs. The attached goods were sold & Rs. 70-10 out of the proceeds was paid to the D. H. in August 1942, & the suit, so far as it related to the recovery of money, must be deemed to have been instituted on 14-12-1943 when the plaint was amended. The suit was, therefore, well within three years. Consequently the claim for recovery of Rs. 70-10 cannot be said to be barred by limitation.

[22] As regards the last item of Rs. 85, the objection taken by Mr. Chatterji is that this amount having been allowed as costs in the claim case, the pltffs. are not entitled to recover it. He relies on the decisions in Shama Purshad v. Hurro Purshad 10 M. I. A. 203 and Dwarka Nath v. Mohendra Nath 16 C. L. J. 437. It was held in these cases that money realised under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back in a new suit or action, while such decree or judgment under which it was recovered remains in force, as the original decree or judgment, must be taken to be subsisting & valid until it has been reversed or superseded by ulterior proceeding. As already pointed out, a suit under O. 21, R. 63 is substantially a suit to set aside the summary decision in the claim case. Here, the order in the claim case was in effect set aside by the Court of appeal below. Consequently, the said decisions do not stand in the pltff s way of obtaining a refund of Rs. 85. The order in the claim case having in effect been set aside, the D. Hs. are not entitled to retain this sum which they realized on the strength of that order.

[23] It is further contended by Mr. Chatterji that in any case the remedy of the pltffs. with regard to this Rs. 85 is not by a separate suit, but by an application under S. 144, Civ. P. C. But S. 144 by its terms has no application to the present case. Here, the claim for refund of the sum of Rs. 85 is made in the very suit under O. 21, R. 63. If by the decree passed in this suit the order in the claim case is set aside, there is no reason why in this very suit the pltffs. will not be entitled to a refund of the amount.

[24] In the result I would allow the appeal in part, set aside the decision of Shearer J, & decree the suit for recovery of three sums of (1) Rs. 70.10, (2) Rs. 357-8-6 & (3) Rs. 85. The pltffs. will also be entitled to a declaration, as sought for. Both parties will be entitled to their respective costs throughout in proportion to their success, the pltffs. Costs to be recovered from deft. 1.

Parmeshwar Dayal—Appellant v. The Barh Local Board—Respondent.

L. P. A. No. 19 of 1949, D/- 13-4-1951, from decision of Shearer J., D/- 23-9-1949.

(a) Bihar & Orissa Local Self-Govt. Act (III [3] of 1885), Ss. 101, 138, 146 & R. 100 —Right of local Board to sue for damages in respect trespass Committee on a property in its possession.

The Local Board is not the agent of the District Board for all purposes. Where land is transferred by the District Board to a Local Board & is in possession of the latter & if any body trespasses on the land or causes damage to any property in possession of the Local Board, it will have right to sue to remove the trespass or to recover damages. The title to the land may vest in the District Board, but as the right to possession vests in the Local Board, it can maintain a suit to recover damages for a trespass. The omission to make any provision for litigation by or against a Local Board in R. 89 made under S. 138 (s) does not & cannot take away any right of suit which belongs to the Local Board under the General law. Sections 101, 138, 146 & R. 100 do not affect the right of the Local Board under the general law to sue for damages in respect of trespass committed on the property in its possession. [Paras 6, 7, 8, 11]

(b) Bihar & Orissa Local Self-Govt. Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 29—Right of Local Board to sue through its Chairman—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 29, R. 1.

The Local Board is a body of individuals which can act collectively. The members cannot do anything except as representing the Board. Though a Local Board is not treated by the Act as a corporate body, there can be no doubt that it is a quasi corporation. Hence The Local Board can sue through its Chairman & all the members of the Board need not be made pltfs. [Para 12]

Anno: C. P. C. O. 29 R. 1 N. 2, 6.

(c) Bihar & Orissa Local Self-Govt. Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 29—Scope of.

Section 29 does not confer a right of suit on the District Board but merely enables the Board to sue & be sued in its corporate name. [Para 10]

B. P. Samiyar—for Appellant ; Ramanand Sinha—for Respondent.

Chatterji J.— This is an appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, by the deft. in a suit brought by the Local Board of Barh through its Chairman for declaration of title & recovery of damages in respect of six palm trees said to have been cut & removed by the deft. from pltf's plot No. 313 in village Talipur, Police Station Barh.

[2] Undisputedly plot No. 313 is a road. According to the pltf. the trees in question stood on this plot on the road side. The deft. on the other hand, claimed that the trees stood on his plot, No. 212, which adjoins the road.

[3] Both the Courts below held that trees stood on the pltf's plot No. 313 & were wrongfully cut & removed by the deft. They also overruled the defence that the suit was not maintainable. Accordingly they concurrently decreed the suit with some modification in the amount of damages claimed. On second appeal, Shearer J. upheld their decisions.

[4] The first point raised on behalf of the appellant is that the road on which the trees stood vests in the District Board & not in the Local Board & therefore, the Local Board has no right to sue.

[5] Section 101, Bihar & Orissa Local Self-Govt. Act, 1885, (which will be referred to hereinafter as the Act) provides,

"The Local Govt. or, subject to its control, a District Board, may direct that, within the area subject to the authority of a Local Board, any matter placed under the control & administration of the District Board under this Act shall be wholly or partly transferred to the control & administration of the Local Board, with adequate funds for the purposes of such control & administration.

A Local Board, as the agent of, & subject to the control of, the District board, shall, so far as the funds at its disposal permit, make due provision for all matters transferred to its control & administration under this section.

It shall be the duty of the District Board to enforce the responsibility imposed on a Local Board by this section."

[6] It is not disputed that the road bearing plot No. 313 was transferred by the District Board to the Barn Local Board & is in possession of the latter for a long time. But it is contended, relying on the second paragraph of S. 101, that the Local Board is merely the agent of the District Board. What this para. really means is that in regard to making due provisions within the limits of the funds at its disposal, the Local Board will be acting as the agent of the District Board. It by no means follows that if anybody trespasses on the land or causes damage to any property in possession of the Local Board, it will have no right to sue to remove the trespass or to recover damages. The title to the road in question may vest in the District Board, but the right to possession vests in the Local Board. It is a well recognised principle that a person in possession of land, having no more than a possessory title, can maintain a suit to recover damages for a trespass.

[7] Reliance was also placed on S. 138. Cl. (s) of the Act & rule 89 of the rules made by the Local Govt. under S. 138. This section confers power on the Local Govt. to make rules for any District Board or Local Board or Union Committee for the various purposes enumerated in Cls. (a) to (t) of the section. Cl. (s) refers to "affording guidance to District Boards when suits or other proceedings are threatended or have been instituted by or against them in Civil Courts".

It is under this Cl. (s) that R. 89 was made. Rule 89 which appears under the heading "Litigation" provides :

"In all cases where a District Board desires to sue or is sued or threatened with a suit in the civil Court the Board shall communicate with the Superintendent & Remembrancer of legal affairs, & shall be guided by the existing rules for the conduct of Civil Suits by Govt."

It is said that neither in S. 138 of the Act nor in the rules made under that section there is any such provision relating to litigation by or against a Local Board &, therefore, it must follow that the Local Board has no right to sue or to be sued. But S. 146 of the Act itself shows that a suit may be brought against a Local Board. It provides : "No suit shall be brought against any District Board, Local Board or Union Committee . . . ." Apparently, the Local Board being subordinate to the District Board, it was not thought necessary to insert in S. 138 any clause, similar to cl. (s) for "affording guidance" to Local Boards. Consequently there is no rule, similar to R. 89 concerning a Local Board. The omission to make any similar provision for litigation by or against a Local Board, does not & cannot take away any right of suit which belongs to the Local Board under the general law.

[8] It is also said that S. 146 of the Act contemplates that a suit may be brought against a Local Board, but the Act nowhere provides that the Local Board may sue. S. 146 provides for a notice of suit similar to that provided in S. 80, Civil P.C. Right of suit existing under the general law need not be provided or affirmed by a statute. Right of suit under the general law must always be presumed to exist unless it is taken away or restricted by any statute. It is, therefore, a fallacy to contend that as there is no provision in the Act or in the rules for a suit by the Local Board, it has no right to sue.

[9] Our attention is drawn to S. 29 of the Act :

"Every District Board shall be a body corporate by the name of the District Board of the district by reference to which it is known & shall have perpetual succession & a common seal, with power to acquire & hold property both movable & immovable & subject to any rules made under this Act, to transfer any such property held by it, & to do all other things necessary for the purpose of the Act, & may sue & be sued in its corporate name."

[10] It is said that this is a specific provision conferring on the District Board the right to sue. This is not the true meaning of the section. The section is intended to enable the District Board to sue & be sued in its corporate name. The right to sue is one thing and the right to sue a corporate name is quite another.

[11] Reliance is further placed on R. 100 of the rules made by the Local Govt. which provides :

"Subject to the limit imposed by the District Board, a Local Board, as the agent of the District Board may, in regard to matters, which may have transferred to its control & administration, enter into any contract or agreement in respect of a sum, or involving the value, not exceeding Rs. 5000/-

It is said that this rule also clearly shows that the Local Board is the agent of the District Board. But it does not carry us any further than S. 101 of the Act itself. In so far as power to contract is concerned, the Local Board is, of course, to act as the agent of the District Board. That the Local Board is not an agent of the District Board for all purposes is quite clear from the fact that under S. 139 of the Act the Local Board, as much as the District Board, is authorised to make by-laws which shall have the force of law. S. 141 empowers the local Board to start prosecution for breach of any by-law made by it Neither S. 101 of the Act nor the aforesaid R. 100 affects in any way the right of the Local Board under the general law to sue for damages in respect of trespass committed on the property in its possession.

[12] The next point argued is that the Local Board is not a corporation &, therefore, it could not sue through its Chairman, but all the members constituting the Board should have sued. It is said that S. 29 of the Act makes the District Board a corporate body, but there is no such provision relating to the Local Board. It cannot be disputed that the Local Board is a body of individuals which can act collectively. It cannot possibly be suggested that the members can do any thing except as representing the Board. Though a Local Board is not treated by the Act as a corporate body, there can be no doubt that it is a quasi-corporation. A quasi-corporation is well recognised in law. That a suit can be brought against a Local Board is expressly provided in S. 146 of the Act. If, therefore, a suit may be brought against the Local Board, there is no reason why, when the suit is by the Local Board, all its members, & not the Board, must sue.

[13] The contentions raised on behalf of the appellant fail & the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Art. 11, 17 (iii) (iv) — Appeal to High Court against award under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act.

In a reference under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, the Additional Dist. Judge accepted as correct the amount awarded by the Collector & rejected the claim of one of the claimants to the compensation. The latter filed an appeal under S. 54, Land Acquisition Act. He merely raised the question of the title.

Held that (1) Sch. II, Art. 11 was not applicable to the appeal as the award given by the Additional Dist. J. was to be deemed to be a decree under S. 26 (2), Land Acquisition Act. [Para 2]

(2) Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) or (iv) also did not apply as the proceeding in which the award was obtained could not be described as a suit. Provisions of S. 26 (2), Land Acquisition Act, did not make the proceeding a suit. [Para 3]

(3) As there was no particular provision that applied the residuary provision Sch. I, Art. 1 applied. [Para 4]

(4) The value of the appeal was the entire amount of compensation awarded as the appellant was trying to set aside the award according to which he was entitled to nothing. [Para 5]

Order.—This is a reference under S. 5, Court-fees Act, & relates to an appeal against an award of the Additional Dist. J. at Purulia in a reference under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The compensation awarded by the Collector is Rs. 11, 619-3-0. The reference related to (1) the correctness of the compensation assessed & (2) a dispute between three sets of persons as to which of them is entitled to the compensation. The Additional Dist. J. has accepted as correct the amount awarded & has rejected the claim of the appellants to the compensation. The appeal has been filed under S. 54, Land Acquisition Act. The appellants merely raise the question of title &, treating the appeal as a miscellaneous appeal, have paid court-fee under Art. 11 of Sch. II, Court-fees Act. On behalf of the State, it is contended that an ad valorem court-fee on the total amount of the compensation awarded is payable under Art. 1 of Sch. I, Court-fees Act.

[2] Article 11 of Sch. II, Court-fees Act, relates to "Memo. of appeal when the appeal is not from a decree or an order having the force of a decree, etc." Under S. 26, sub-s. (2), Land Acquisition Act, every award under Part. III of the Act, under which part the award in the present case has been made, shall be deemed to be a decree. In view of this provision, I do not think that this Article is applicable.

[3] It is contended for the appellants that, if Art. 11 of Sch. II does not apply the proper provision is either Cl. (iii) or Cl. (iv) of Art. 17 of Sch. II :

"Plaint or memo. of appeal in each of the following suits.

* * *

iii. to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed;

iv. to set aside an award."

The weakness in this contention is that the proceeding in which the award was obtained cannot be described as a suit. The word "suit" is a technical term with a well-understood legal significance. Section 26, Land Acquisition Act, provides that the award made in the proceeding instituted under S. 18 shall be deemed to be a decree, but this does not make the proceeding a suit.

[4] Section 4, Court-fees Act, prescribes that no document of any of the kinds specified in the first or second schedule to the Act as chargeable with fees shall be filed in or received by any High Court in any case coming before such Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the Courts subject to its superintendence or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of reference or revision unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document. As there is in the schedule no particular provision that applies to the present case, we have to fall back on the residuary Article, Art. No. 1 of Sch. I, which prescribes an ad valorem court-fee. Some doubt as to the applicability of this Article to appeals in the High Court has been caused by the last few words which occur in Col 1; "presented to any civil or revenue Court except those mentioned in section". This, however, is only due to unskilful drafting (vide Krishna Mohan Sinha v. Raghunandan Pande, 4 Pat. 336), & it is generally accepted that the Article applies to High Courts, although High Courts are among the Courts mentioned in S. 3. I would suggest that the word "those" occurring at the end of the entry in Col. 1 refers not to Courts but to the documents mentioned in S. 3.

[5] As regards the manner in which the valuation of the appeal will be computed for the purposes of applying Art. 1 of Sch. I, a special provision is contained in S. 8, Court-fees Act. This section, has been held to apply not only to appeals in which the correctness of the amount of compensation awarded is challenged but also to appeals which concern questions of title, the section being applied on the basis that the appellant claims a certain amount of compensation as representing the value of his interest in the acquired property & he is given nothing or a smaller amount by the decision which he is challenging: Muhammad Suleman v. Ghamandi Lal, A. I. R. (18) 1931 Lah. 343, & Anandalal Chakravarty v. Karnani Industrial Bank, Ltd., 59 Cal. 528. The section, however, occurs in Chap. III, Court-fees Act, which relates to "Fees in other Courts & in public offices", in consequence of which Mullick, J. observed in Krishna Mohan Sinha's case, that the section does not apply to the appeals filed in the High Court. The section has been applied to appeals in the High Court as long ago Kasturi Chetti v. Deputy Collector, Bellary, (21 Mad. 269) & Trinayani Dasi v. Krishna Lal, (39 Cal. 906) & it was so applied by Rankin, C. J. in Anandalal Chakravarti's case, observing that the heading of the chapter in which the section occurs should not be allowed to cut down the plain meaning of the section. It is unnecessary, to consider the applicability of the section in the present case for it is plain that the result would be the same if the value of the appeal is computed according to the natural meaning of the term. According to the claim of the appellants, they are entitled to the entire amount of compensation awarded. According to the decision, which they challenge & are trying to get set aside, they are entitled to nothing. Hence, the value of the appeal is the entire amount of the compensation awarded.

[6] For the reasons which I have given, I consider the appellants are liable to pay ad valorem court-fee under Art. 1 of Sch. I on Rs. 11, 619-3-0. The reference is answered accordingly.

D.H. Answer accordingly.

L. P. A. No. 11 of 1949, D/-20-3-1951, from judgment of Shearer J., D/-27-7-1949.

Bihar & Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914), S. 45—Irregularity in service of notice—Suit to set aside sale—Maintainability.

The words "notice has not been served" in S. 45 cannot be understood to mean "notice has not been duly served or served according to law." There is some distinction between "irregular service" & "non-service."

Where, therefore, the certificate-debtor not being found, the service peon instead of serving the notice on any adult male member of his family as required by rules, hung the notice at his house, the service, though not in conformity with the prescribed rules, cannot be said to be no service at all; consequently a suit to set aside sale under S. 45 will not be maintainable. [Paras 9, 11]

B. C. De & J. C. Sanyal—for Appellant; Prem Lall—for Respondents.

Chatterji J. — This is an appeal by the pltf. under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, from the judgment of Shearer J. who, reversing the concurrent decisions of the Courts below, dismissed the pltf.'s suit.

[2] The suit was for setting aside a certificate sale & for confirmation of possession or, in the alternative, recovery of possession of the suit land. The suit was brought on the allegation that there was fraudulent suppression of notice under S. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act (IV [4] of 1914) & also of other processes under the Act.

[3] The defence, in substance, was that the notice & processes were duly served & that the suit was barred under S. 46, Public Demands Recovery Act.

[4] Both the Courts below held that there was no fraud & therefore, the suit could not lie under S. 46 of which the relevant portion is as follows:

"Provided that a suit may be brought in a civil Court in respect of any such question upon the ground of fraud."

The Courts, however, held that the notice required by S. 7 was not served & therefore, the suit was maintainable under S. 45 of the Act. The material portion of S. 45 runs as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, a sale of immovable property in execution of a certificate shall not be held to be void on the ground that the notice required by S. 7 has not been served; but a suit may be brought in a civil Court to recover possession of such property or to set aside such sale on the ground that such notice has not been served:

Provided that no such suit shall be entertained:

(a) if instituted more than one year from the date on which possession of the property was delivered to the purchaser."

Both the Courts below found that the suit was brought within one year from the date on which possession was delivered to the auction purchaser. They, therefore, concurrently decreed the suit.

[5] On second appeal, Shearer J. was of opinion that S. 45 of the Act could not apply unless it was found that the notice under S. 7 was not served at all. He considered that the finding of the lower appellate Court was not that the notice under S. 7 was not served at all, but that there was an irregularity in the service of the notice. In this view, he held that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale.

[6] Mr. B. C. De on behalf of the appellant contends that Shearer J. was entirely wrong in assuming that the lower appellate Court merely found that there was an irregularity in the service of notice. Mr. De relies on the following passage in the judgment of the lower appellate Court:

"That being so, there was no service of the notice on the pltf. under S. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act."

This apparently means that there was no service at all. But this finding must be read with the actual discussion on the point. The discussion begins with these words:

"I would, therefore, confine myself to the consideration whether the notice under S. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act, was duly served on the pltf. appellant according to law."

The Court then proceeds:

"I take up the first point about service of the notice. Ex. B is the notice under S. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act. The service report of the peon shows that he could not meet Darshan Raut the pltf. & on enquiry he learnt that he had gone to Sitamarhi fair. Hence he hung up the notice at his house facing east.

I have now to see as to how far such a service can be deemed to be valid in law. R. 4, Sch. II which has a legal force says that where the certificate-debtor cannot be found, & has no agent empowered to accept service of the notice on his behalf, service may be made on any adult member of the family of the certificate-debtor who is residing with him. The contesting deft. 2 who figured as D. W. 5 in this suit admits in his deposition that Darshan Raut got four sons, out of whom the eldest is aged 28 years & the second son is aged 26 years. The service report of the peon does not show that he made any attempt to find out any adult member of the family for handing over the notice. There is also no whisper in the evidence adduced before the learned Munsif that any attempt was made by the serving peon to find out any adult member of the pltf.'s family."

Next follows the passage relied upon by Mr. De which has been already quoted. Reading this whole discussion, it is apparent that the appellate Court proceeded on the assumption that the notice was served in the manner stated in the peon's report, but held that such service could not be deemed to be valid in law. In other words, there was an irregularity in the service of the notice, & in the opinion of the appellate Court, irregular service amounted to non-service.

[7] Mr. De's contention is that if the notice was not served, as required by law, there was no service at all. S. 7 of the Act provides:

"Where a certificate has been filed in the office of a certificate officer under S. 4 or S. 6, he shall cause it to be served upon the certificate-debtor, in the prescribed manner, a notice in the prescribed form & a copy of the certificate."

The rules which were made by the Board under S. 48 of the Act for service of notice are to be found in Sch, II. R. 3 in this schedule provides:

"Where it is practicable, service shall be made on the certificate-debtor in person unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient."

R. 4 then provides:

"Where the certificate debtor cannot be found, & has no agent empowered to accept service of the notice on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the certificate-debtor who is residing with him."

R. 5 provides for acknowledgment of service to be taken by the serving officer from the person to whom the notice is tendered. R. 6 next provides:

"Where the certificate debtor or his agent, or such other person aforesaid, refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due & reasonable diligence, cannot find the debtor, certificate & there is no agent empowered to accept service of the notice on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall—

(a) affix a copy of the notice on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the certificate debtor ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain; or

(b) if there be land affected by the notice, affix a copy of the notice on some conspicuous place in the office of the Certificate Officer & also on some conspicuous part of the land, & shall then return the original to the Certificate officer by whom it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, & the name & address of the person (if any) by whom the house or land was identified & in whose presence the copy was affixed."

Thus, Rr. 3, 4, & 6 prescribe, in order of precedence, three modes of service, of which the second (R. 4) is to be adopted, failing the first (R. 3), & the third (R. 6) to be adopted, failing the first & second.

[8] In the present case, according to the peon's report, service was effected under R. 6. The lower appellate Court held that the service was not valid in law, because the peon did not make any attempt to serve the notice on the adult male members under R. 4, & consequently, such service must be treated as if there was no service at all. But if the notice was actually served under R. 6, can it be said that there was no service at all? Take a case where the certificate-debtor has an agent empowered to accept service of the notice on his behalf (R. 3), but the peon without going to the agent serves the notice on an adult son of the debtor at his house (R. 4). Can it be reasonably said that this was no service at all? In my opinion, certainly not. All that may be said is that the service was irregular. Is there any difference in principle between such hypothetical case & the present?

[9] To hold that a notice which has been actually served, though not in strict conformity with the prescribed rules, cannot be said to have been served at all will be a contradiction in terms. To understand the true import of the words "notice has not been served" in S. 45, it will be pertinent to compare the wording of S. 9 (1) of the same Act which also refers to notice under S. 7. The relevant portion of S. 9 (1) is as follows:

"The certificate debtor may, within thirty days from the service of the notice required by S. 7, or, where the notice has not been duly served, then within thirty days from the execution of any process for enforcing the certificate, present to the certificate officer. . . . . a petition. . . . . denying his liability, in whole or in part."

It will be noticed that here the word "duly" is used before "served." If service, not valid in law, is no service at all, the word "duly" would seem meaningless. Such interpretation is not justified in law. The use of the word "duly" obviously suggests that in framing this Act, the Legislature drew a clear distinction between "served" & "duly served." Where, therefore, the word "served" only is used, we cannot add "duly" before it. Consequently, the words "notice has not been served" in S. 45 cannot be understood to mean "notice has not been duly served or served according to law." There is some distinction between "irregular service" & "non-service," which cannot be ignored. Where the Legislature use the words "not duly served," it is a case of "irregular service" & where they use the words "not served," it is a case of "non-service."

[10] Mr. De draws our attention to S. 29 (1) of the Act of which the relevant portion is as follows:

"Where immovable property has been sold. . . . . the certificate debtor.....may.....apply.....to set aside the sale on the ground that notice was not served under S. 7 or on the ground of a material irregularity in the certificate proceeding or in publishing or conducting the sale."

It is argued that "the ground that notice was not served under S. 7" is not qualified by any words connoting irregularity in the service, though the words "material irregularity" are used in the subsequent portion of the section, suggest that the word "served" must be understood to mean "served according to law." In other words, "served" must be read as "duly served." But such construction, if accepted, would, in effect, completely destroy the distinction drawn in the Act itself between "served" & "duly served."

[11] I am of opinion that if the notice was actually served, as stated in the peon's service report, the sale cannot be set aside under S. 45.

[12] The trial Court, however, appears to have held, upon a consideration of the evidence, that the peon did not actually go to the spot & his service report was not true. If this finding be correct, certainly there was no service at all. The appellate Court, without deciding the point, seems to have assumed that the péon's service report was correct. Apparently, the appellate Court did not consider it necessary to go into the question because, in its opinion, service, if effected in the manner stated in the peon's report, was not valid in law & consequently it amounted to non-service. But from what I have said above, this view cannot be sustained.

[13] In my opinion, the case should have been sent back to the lower appellate Court for a finding as to whether the notice under S. 7 was actually served, as reported by the peon, particularly when the trial Court's finding on the point was to the contrary.

[14] I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decision of Shearer J. as well as of the lower appellate Court & remand the case to the latter Court for disposal according to law in the light of the observations made above. In the circumstances, there will be no order for costs.

[15] It is to be observed that the trial Court decreed the suit in these terms: "That the suit is decreed on contest against deft. 2 & ex parte against the other defts." It was not made clear whether the pltf. was entitled to confirmation of possession, or, recovery of possession, as prayed for by him in the alternative. In case the lower appellate Court eventually confirms the trial Court's decree, the actual reliefs to which the pltf. is entitled shall be clearly stated.

Case referred to :—

('50) S. C. Appeal No. 3 of 1949, D/- 4-4-1950 (Pat.). [Pr. 7]

Order. — This is an application by the pltf. for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 109, Civil P. C. from a judgment & decree of an appellate bench of this Court modifying the decree of the trial Court.

[2] The suit was for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage for a sum of Rs. 7,500. There was also a claim for mesne profits, the claim for the period antecedent to the institution of the suit being tentatively valued at a sum of Rs. 250.

[3] The pltf.'s case is that he made a deposit of the mortgage money under S. 83, T. P. Act, & although a written notice of the deposit was duly served on the mortgagees, they did not give up possession &, therefore, their possession of the mortgaged property, after the service of notice, was wrongful.

[4] The trial Court decreed the suit with mesne profits, holding that the deposit was sufficient & the possession of the mortgagees from the date of the service of notice under S. 83 was wrongful, & ordered mesne profits to be ascertained by the appointment of a Commissioner. The mortgagees came up in appeal to this Court & a division bench reversed the decree of the trial Court with regard to mesne profits & allowed a lump sum of Rs. 1000 in lieu thereof.

[5] The judgment of this Court being one of reversal, only two conditions under S. 110, para. 1, have got to be fulfilled, namely, (1) the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is Rs. 10,000 or upwards, & (2) the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is the same sum or upwards. It is contended by Mr. Misra that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was Rs. 7,500, the amount secured under the mortgage, & a further sum of Rs. 250 tentatively claimed as mesne profits; therefore, the first condition of S. 110, para. 1, Civil P. C. has not been fulfilled. As Rs. 250 was claimed only tentatively as mesne profits, this Court, by its order dated 25-9-1950, directed the learned Subordinate Judge to hold an enquiry for the ascertainment of the actual mesne profits & give a rough estimate thereof for the purpose of valuing the suit & the appeal to the Supreme Court. The learned Subordinate Judge, after enquiry, has held that, as there was a scramble for possession in 1351 Fasli, the land in suit was not cultivated in that year &, therefore, the question of assessment of mesne profits for that year could not arise. But he held that Rs. 6,000 per year may be taken as a fair estimate of mesne profits per year for the years 1352 & 1353 Fasli.

[6] It is conceded that 1351 & 1352 Fasli would be the period antecedent to the institution of the suit. Therefore, Rs. 6,000, as found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be the amount of mesne profits payable for the year 1352 Fasli, if added to the mortgage money, namely, Rs. 7,500 will make the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance upwards of Rs. 10,000 and thus the first condition of the first para. of S. 110 is fulfilled. Mr. Misra further argued that, although the first condition of S. 110, para. 1, is fulfilled, the second condition is not satisfied because the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is only Rs. 6,000, the amount which has been ascertained to be the mesne profits for the year 1352 Fasli. We think there is no substance in this argument. In determining the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal, we have to take into account mesne profits not only for the period antecedent to the suit but also for subsequent period up to the date of the decree of the High Court. This, will, in any case, include the mesne profits for 1352 & 1353 Fasli, even leaving out 1351. According to the report of the learned Subordinate Judge, the mesne profits for 1352 & 1353 Fasli may be taken to be Rs. 6,000 per year. For these two years only the amount will be Rs. 12,000. Therefore, the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is more than Rs. 10,000. Thus both the conditions which are required by para. 1 of S. 110 have been fulfilled.

[7] Mr. Misra has lastly urged that the case is governed by the provisions of Art. 133 (1), & therefore, the amount or value of the subject-matter of dispute in the Court of first instance as well as on appeal ought to be not less than Rs. 20,000. An examination of the provisions of Arts. 133 & 135 shows that there is no substance in this contention. The decree sought to be appealed from was passed on 31-8 1949, & the application for leave to appeal was filed on 30-11 1949, when the provisions of Ss. 109 & 110, Civil P. C. were in force. As soon as the judgment was pronounced & the decree made, the petitioner, as an aggrieved party, had a right to prefer a direct appeal to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of Ss. 109 & 110, Civil P. C. But after the passing of the Indian Independence Act & before the commencement of the Constitution, the jurisdiction of the Federal Court was enlarged & the appellate jurisdiction of the Privy Council in Civil Cases was transferred to the Federal Court by the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act (Act I of 1948), which came into force on the first day of February 1948. Under this Act, therefore, appeals in all civil cases from which a direct appeal could have been carried to His Majesty in Council either with or without special leave could lie to the Federal Court under the provisions of Civil P. C. 1908. The present application was filed for leave to appeal to the Federal Court. Now under the Constitution, jurisdiction & powers which were exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution have vested in the Supreme Court under Art. 135 & it is by virtue of this Article that the jurisdiction in respect of the present case now vests in the Supreme Court. And if jurisdiction & powers are exercisable by the Supreme Court under Art. 135, the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C. have to be fulfilled as to the value or amount & not the requirements of Art. 133 of the Constitution. This latter Article cannot apply where the right to appeal accrued before the Constitution came into force. A similar point was considered in an unreported case of this Court, Ramkumar Das v. Jagdish Chandra, S. C. A. No. 3 of 1949, D/- 4-4-1950 & it was held that Art. 133 has no application in such a case.

[8] We, therefore, direct that a certificate be issued that as regards amount of value & nature the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C. The petitioner is entitled to costs; hearing fee five gold mohurs.

A. F. A. D. No. 132 of 1948, D/- 13-4-1951.

(a) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 2 (7), 17 (1) (d) & 49 —Agreement to grant lease for 10 years contingent on premises being made fit for certain purpose—Creation of present interest for 9 months—Registration.

An agreement to lease, as distinguished from an agreement to grant a lease on a future date, must effect an actual demise & create a present & immediate interest in the land so as to come within the definition of a lease in S. 2 (7), Registration Act. A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 79, Rel. on. [Para 4]

The criterion to determine whether an agreement to lease creates a present demise is the intention of the parties. Case law Referred. [Para 4]

By an unregistered agreement dated 24-3-1940 A settled ('bandobasta Kariteohi') a cinema house with B with a right to enter therein & make it suitable for the purposes of cinema performances. On completing the repairs within a period of 9 months & on obtaining the necessary certificate of soundness A was to grant a lease of the house to B on certain rent for 10 years. A bound himself not to settle the property with anybody else within the said period of 9 months. In case B failed to make the necessary repairs within 9 months B was given the option to surrender the house without claiming any money spent, but in case he continued to make the repairs after the said period A was bound to execute the lease deed but was not liable to pay anything for the expenses of repairs.

Held that the agreement even if regarded as a lease within S. 2 (7) would not come within S. 17 (1) (d), Registration Act as B's right to remain on the land was confined to a period of 9 months. Hence it did not require registration. Even if it required registration it was admis-

sible in evidence under S. 49 for collateral purpose of explaining the nature of possession. [Para 5]

Anno. Reg. Act, S. 2 (7), N. 5; S. 17, N. 28 Pt. 3, N. 76; S. 49, N. 14, and 25.

(b) T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 52, 53A—Rights existing before suit not affected by S. 52.

Under S. 52, T. P. Act, protection is given only to the rights of the parties as they existed when the suit was commenced & find embodiment in the decree in the suit. Nothing done by a party during the pendency of the suit can affect the rights of any other party under the decree, but if a right exists in a stranger from before in relation to the property it will not be affected merely because the title to the property in pursuance of that right was perfected during the pendency of the suit. [Para 6]

Under an unregistered agreement A agreed to grant a lease to B of a cinema theatre at a future date provided B made the necessary repairs to make it fit for purpose of cinema shows within a period of 9 months. B entered into possession under the agreement to make the repairs. C who had notice of this contract took a lease from A of the theatre within the period of 9 months mentioned in the agreement between A & B. On A's failure to give possession C sued A for specific performance & obtained a decree. During the pendency of this suit, A executed a registered lease in favour of B in pursuance of the prior agreement. B then brought a suit against C for injunction restraining him from executing the decree against him.

Held that B's rights under the agreement remained unaffected by the subsequent execution of lease in C's favour. Hence the lease executed in B's favour in pursuance of the agreement was not hit by the doctrine of lis pendens. [Para 8a]

Held further that if B had been impleaded in C's suit for specific performance B could have been able to interpose the shield of S. 53-A, T. P. Act. The fact that while standing in this position B took a lease from A could not make his position worse than it was. B having retained the possession of the property was entitled to rely on it in resisting the execution of decree obtained by C. [Para 10]

Reuben J.—This is an appeal by deft. 1 against a decision of the Additional Dist. J. of Manbhum-Singhbhum, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia restraining deft. 1 from executing against the pltfs. respondents a decree obtained by him in Title Suit No. 395 of 1940 in the Court of the Additional Munsif, Purulia.

[2] The dispute relates to a building in the town of Purulia known as Pratap Natya Mandir & the premises appertaining thereto. This building is intended for the performance of cinematograph shows & admittedly belonged to Akhoy Kumar Sen (pro forma deft. 3), by whom it was transferred to its present owner Shreemati Radharani Dassi (pro forma deft. 2). The facts as found are that the cinema hall was formerly let to the proprietors of the Shankar Talkies, who held it for some years but relinquished it on failing to obtain from the Executive Engineer, Hazaribagh Division, a certificate of soundness necessary under the law for the holding of cinematograph shows therein. It was then taken by one Nagendra Nath Dutta, who was unable to make it fit for the purpose & surrendered it in March 1940. Pltf. 1, Raj Kishore Misra, then entered into possession under an agreement entered into on 24-3-1940 with deft. 2, which is in the following terms:

"I, the first party settle (the said theatre house) with you, the second party, on the following terms: That from to-day you shall, at your own cost, go on doing all works of repairs to the said house & of reconstructing the roof, walls, etc. in accordance with the Govt. rules regarding Cinema Houses. After reconstructing the house you shall apply to the Govt. authority concerned for a soundness certificate; & then I shall lease out (the house) to you for 10 (ten) years on a rent of Rs. 75 per month. You shall be in possession of the said Cinema House on monthly rent as a tenant. The rent shall in no case be less than Rs. 75 per month.

That within nine months from to-day you shall have to make the house fit for Cinema Show after completing all works (of construction). I shall not be competent to settle (the said house) with anybody else within the specified time. Should I do so, the same shall be null & void. On your demand for a pucca deed of lease after making the house fit for Cinema Show (House) within nine months, should I refuse to execute the deed, you shall be competent, by virtue of this agreement, to get the requisite deed executed with the help of the Court & you shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 75 per month. You shall be competent to deduct from the rent (payable by you) the amount that you shall spend from to-day in making the Cinema House fit & shall go on paying rent when your dues shall be satisfied.

Should you surrender the house on your being unable to reconstruct the same making it fit for obtaining the Soundness Certificate within nine months, you shall not be entitled to claim any amount of money from me. Should you not surrender the house on the expiry of the aforesaid time, & should you continue to make the house fit for a Cinema Show & spend money (on that account) & after completing the work should demand a pucca deed of lease from me, I shall be bound (to?) execute a deed of lease provided that you shall not be entitled to claim or deduct from the rent (payable by you) the amount that you shall spend from to-day for making the Cinema House fit for Cinema Show on the ground of compensating my loss due to your taking a longer time than the time specified in the agreement. Should I, the first party, make any breach of agreement within the time specified in the agreement, I shall be liable for the full amount of your loss caused thereby."

He made the necessary repairs & obtained a certificate of fitness on 12-11-1941 & obtained a registered lease from Smt. Radharani Dassi in favour of himself, pltf. 2 & one Rajendra Prasad Misra, who has since transferred his interest to pltf. 3, by which lease the Pratap Natya Mandir was settled with these persons for a period of ten years on a monthly rental of Rs. 75 with an option of renewing the lease for another ten years on the same terms. The lease was executed on 3-11-1941 & was registered on 15-11-1941.

[3] The suit was brought to resist an attempt by deft. 1 to take possession of the cinema hall in execution of a decree for specific performance of an agreement to lease this property obtained by him against deft. 2 in Title Suit No. 395 of of 1940 in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Purulia. That suit originated as a suit for the enforcement of a registered lease by deft. 2 in favour of deft. 1 dated 5 4-1940 on the allegation that, in spite of executing the lease in his favour, she did not give him possession. In Second Appeal No. 66 of 1943 disposed of on 6 5-1943, it was pointed out by their Lordships that the document relied on was not a valid lease, having been executed by deft. 2 alone, & the plaint was permitted to be altered into one for specific performance & a decree was given accordingly. The lease has now been executed as directed by the decree & deft. 1 is attempting to recover possession. Deft. 1 denied the existence of the alleged contract of 24-3-1940. According to him, this is an ante-dated document fabricated subsequently to his lease & his rights under his decree are unaffected by the pltf.s' lease of 13-11-1941, as it was obtained during the pendency of his suit. The Courts below have rejected his story about the fabrication & antedating of the agreement of 24-3-1940 & have held that when deft. 1 entered into the agreement of 5-4-1940 he had notice of the agreement of 24-4-1940 & knew of the pltfs' possession of the cinema hall.

[4] The main argument on behalf of the appellant is on this line: the pltfs. rely upon two documents, (1) the agreement to lease of 24-3-1940 & (2) the lease of 3-11-1941; the first is inadmissible for want of registration, & the second is affected by the rule of lis pendens & does not affect the rights of deft. 1 under his decree. Under S. 17 (1) (d), Registration Act, lease of immovable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent are required to be registered. Under cl. (7) of S. 2, a lease is defined to include "an agreement to lease". The meaning of this expression is now well settled. It must be an agreement which "effects an actual demise & operates as a lease" & "creates a present & immediate interest in the land" Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zamindari Co., 47 Cal. 485. It must be distinguished from an agreement to create a lease on a future date, Panchanan Bose v. Chandi Charan, 37 Cal. 808 & Bichardas Damodar v. Ahmedabad Borough Municipality, I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 529. It is not necessary to examine at length the several decisions which were cited before us. The cases in which the agreement was held to be a lease within the meaning of cl. (7) of S. 2 were all cases in which words of present demise had been used. The criterion in all the cases is the intention of the parties. Ramjoo Mahomed v. Haridas Mullick, 52 Cal. 695, Sanjib Chandra Sanyal v. Santosh Kumar Lahiri, 49 Cal. 507; Poole v. Bentley, (1810) 104 E. R. 66, Purmananddas Jiwandas v. Dharsey Virji, 10 Bom. 101; Harinath v. Promotho Nath, 25 C. W. N. 550; Nur Muhammad Veerjibhai Veelmahomed v. Natwar Lal, 45 ALL. 220 and Khodaijatul Kubra v. Krishna Pershad, A. I R. (17) 1930 Pat. 530.

[5] Let us examine the document in this light. It commences with the recitation that the first party settles "bando basta karitechhi" the theatre house with the second party & gives the second party the right to enter therein and to make the premises suitable for the purposes of cinema performances, & indicates that on the certificate of soundness being obtained the first party will lease the house to the second party on a certain rent for a certain time. It binds the first party for a period of nine months not to settle the property with anybody else. Apparently, after this period, the second party may make such a settlement but, if she permits the second party to continue in possession & to make the house fit for the purpose she will be bound to execute the deed of lease but will not be liable to pay the amount spent by the second party in making the house fit for use. For the period during which the second party will be in possession for the purpose of making the house fit, no payment by way of rent is provided for. The grant of a lease as such is contingent upon the premises being made fit for the purpose in view. All that the document can be said to entitle the second party to in this respect is a right on complying with the specified conditions to ask for a lease. On behalf of the appellant stress has been laid on the use of the word "settle (bandobasta karitechhi)" & the subsequent use of the term "surrender". These terms, it is urged, indicate the creation of a present interest in the property. This interest, however, is at best confined to the period during which it is contemplated that the second party may remain for making the property fit for the purpose to which it was to be put. The right of the second party to remain on the land for this purpose was confined to a period of nine months. Therefore, the agreement even if it is regarded as a lease would not come within the provisions of cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of S. 17 which requires the registration of leases from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent. For this reason, the document in question did not require registration. Even if it did, under S. 49 of the Act, it is admissible for collateral purposes. It would, therefore, be admissible to explain the nature of the possession of the pltfs. at the time of the agreement of 5-4-1940 on which deft. 1 relies.

[6] To deal with the second part of the contention on behalf of the appellant it is necessary to examine the effect of S. 52, T. P. Act. This provides that "during the pendency . . . of any suit or proceeding which is not collusive & in which any right to immovable property is directly & specifically in question the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any of the parties thereto under any decree or order which may be made thereunder except &c."

The protection is given only to the rights of the parties as they existed when the suit was commenced & find embodiment in the decree in the suit. Nothing done by a party during the pendency of the suit can affect the rights of any other party under the decree, but, if a right exists in a stranger from before in relation to the property it will not be affected merely because the title to the property in pursuance of that right was perfected during the pendency of the suit.

[7] I am supported by Bachan Singh v. Bijai Singh, 48 ALL. 221. In that case two pre-emption suits were filed & on the day when the second of these suits was filed one P. S. entitled to pre-empt equally with the pltfs. in the two suits purchased the properties from the defts. vendees. The High Court gave a limited application to the doctrine of lis pendens & held that P. S. was entitled to share as a pre-emptor along with the pltfs. If the principle had been applied fully the Court would have had to hold that P. S. having acquired the property during the pendency of the suit could not resist the successful pltfs., who should, therefore, have got a decree for pre-emption in respect of the entire property. This decision was followed in Malik Singh v. Shiam Lal, 118 I. C. 143, where the purchaser pendente lite was a preferential pre-emptor. Their Lordships pointed out that a person entitled to pre-empt may either come to Court & ask for pre-emption or he may avoid a suit by inducing the vendee to transfer the property directly to him. The purchaser pendente lite as a preferential pre-emptor had a right before the institution of the suit to pre-empt in preference to the pltfs & so his purchase during the pendency of the suit was not affected by S. 52. In Sharif Hussain v. Nur Shah, 123 I. C. 124, one Imam Bibi sold certain lands on 13-12-1900. A suit in pre-emption was brought by three persons who got a decree & made the deposit on 28-11 1902 from which date the rights of the vendee vested in them under O. 20, R. 14 (1) (b). In the meantime, between the decree in the pre-emption suit & before the deposit of the money, certain in reversioners of Imam Bibi's husband had instituted a declaratory suit against her without impleading the D. H. pre-emptors & obtained a decree in their favour on 13-1-1903. On the death of Imam Bibi, they sued for recovery of possession of the property. Their suit was dismissed by the High Court which observed that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to things coming into existence during the pendency of the suit & not where there is an existing right prior to the suit. Reliance was placed on a decision of a Single Judge reported in Bhag v. Ujagar Singh, 96 I C. 450, which was subsequently affirmed in Letters Patent Appeal in Bhag v. Ujagar Singh, 135 I. C. 48. The facts there were similar, the D. H. in a pre-emption suit having perfected his title by the deposit of purchase money during the pendency of the declaratory suit against the original vendee. Their Lordships observed that :

"the right to take over the bargain accrued to the defts. before the commencement of the suit for declaration brought by the pltf. & it has been held that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to the enforcement of a right which existed prior to the existence of the lis."

[8] The same principle was applied in Chinnaswami Padayachi v. Dharmalinga Padayachi, 139 I. C. 309, to the pendente lite purchase in execution of a mortgage decree. Krishnan Pandalai J., with whom Waller J., agreed, observed:

"With the greatest respect, I understand by lis pendens the rule by which by reason of a suit being pending about the rights to some property, subsequent dealings by the parties with that property so as to prejudicially affect the determination of these rights in that suit are invalidated. . . . In my view the opinion expressed by Mukherjee J., in Ram Sanchi Lal v. Janki Prasad, 134 I. C. 1, on the subject of lis pendens in mortgage suits is correct. It is that the rule only applies to transfers by the pltf. or deft. of their respective interests after the suit including transfers by Court sale in money decrees against either party. But it does not apply to previously existing transfers (including mortgages) or legal proceedings to enforce such transfers by those entitled."

This decision was followed by Venkatasubba Rao J., in Suramma v Surayya, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 585, where his Lordship observed :

"The reason for the doctrine is that but for it, 'interminable litigation might be the consequence.' The alienations aimed against by the rule (as the passages extracted above show) are those made during the pendency of the suit & not those which have been effected previously. If a certain right remains unaffected, the legal remedy to enforce that right must also continue. No suit, therefore, can operate as a lis pendens so as to affect the antecedent transfers which had come into existence prior to it ; the transfers being unaffected, it follows that the legal proceedings brought to enforce those transfers are likewise immune from the operation of the rule."

My reasoning is supported by Madhur Sah v. Thag Sah, 1 Pat. L. J. 455, where the pltf. suing for specific performance of sale by deft. 1 & for a declaration that a sale deed executed by deft. 1 in respect of the same property in favour of deft. 3 was not binding on him, obtained during the pendency of the suit a sale deed from deft. 1 in respect of the disputed property. The High Court held that he was entitled to succeed if he proved that his contract for sale was prior to the conveyance in favour of deft. 2 & that deft. 2 purchased with notice of the contract.

[8a] The question, therefore, is whether when the lease of 3-11-1941 was executed in their favour the pltfs. had any right in respect of the suit property which should get priority over the lease under which deft. 1 claims. It is important to remember that this lease was executed in favour of deft. 1 on 5-4-1940, within the period of nine months mentioned in the contract on which the pltfs. rely, & also that the finding is that deft. 1 took the lease with notice of the contract of 24-8-1940; hence, the rights of the pltfs. continued unaffected by the lease in favour of deft. 1. It has been suggested that at the time when the lease in favour of the pltfs. was executed no right to ask for a lease in pursuance of the contract existed. The argument is based on an observation which fell from me in the course of the hearing. The contract makes specific arrangements for two periods, the first a period of nine months from the contract, the second such period following the nine months during which the pltfs. might be left in occupation of the premises & permitted to complete the repairs. With reference to the first period it is provided that after the repairs are completed deft. 2 shall be bound on demand to execute a lease on a monthly rental of Rs. 75 & in the event of her doing so the other side may sue for specific performance. It also provides that the lessees shall be entitled to deduct from the rent payable the amount spent by them in making the premises fit for use. Then, coming to the second period, the agreement says that if the premises are surrendered after the period of nine months the grantees will not be entitled to any compensation on account of money spent in repairs. They will, however, be entitled to a lease if they are left in possession & complete the repairs again subject to the proviso that they will not recover anything on account of money spent in repairs. The particulars of the lease to be granted are not mentioned in this portion of the deed & there is no special mention that in the event of failure by deft. 2 to execute the lease the grantees will be entitled to specific performance. On a careful reading of the contract, I am satisfied that this division of the document between the two periods is merely to emphasise the difference in the conditions on which the grantees will be entitled to a lease according as the lease is given in one or other of the two periods. If it is given in the earlier period, the grantees will be entitled to recover the repair expenses. If it is given later, they will not be so entitled. As regards the other terms, the lease will be on the same terms, namely for ten years on a rental of Rs. 75 per month. These terms, it may be noticed, are specified in the portion of the contract which precedes the portions dealing with the two specific periods. The omission in the portion relating to the later period to provide for a suit for specific performance has, in my opinion, no significance. The power to enforce a contract does not depend on the existence of such a condition in the contract & it is clear from the contract that deft. 2 bound herself to execute a deed of lease within the second period if the grantees complied with the conditions specified therein.

[9] Next, it has been contended that the lease on which the pltfs. rely is not in pursuance of the contract. It is pointed out that whereas the agreement is with plff. 1 alone the lease was given to the pltf. & two other persons. The case of the pltf. was that pltf. 1 entered into the contract on his own account & on account of the other two persons. This case was not challenged before the Courts of fact & it cannot be challenged in second appeal. It is further pointed out that the contract contains a renewal clause for a further period of ten years & provides for adjustment out of the rents payable of an advance of Rs. 500 said to have been made by the pltfs. to deft. 2. These are merely additional terms & are not such as to justify a finding that the lease is not a transaction in pursuance of the contract.

[10] There is another way in which the right of the pltfs. to resist the execution of the decree can be looked at. On the findings of the Courts of fact, it is clear that when deft. 1 instituted his suit the pltfs. were in bona fide possession of the cinema hall on their own account & that deft. 1 was aware of this fact. Hence, on the position as it then was, the pltfs. were entitled to resist the execution of any decree that might be passed in the suit. The agreement on which deft. 1 succeeded in his suit was executed within the aforementioned period of nine months, & the suit itself was instituted on 30-9-40 within the period of nine months. On the finding, therefore, that deft. 1 had notice of the contract, the pltffs, if they had been impleaded as defts. in that suit, would have been able to interpose the shield of S. 53A, T. P. Act. The fact that while standing in this position the pltffs. took the deed of lease from deft. 2 cannot make their possession worse than it was. It was at the worst merely an attempt to better their position. The plffs. retained their possession of the property & are entitled to rely on it in resisting the execution of the decree obtained by deft. 1.

[11] Finally, it is commented that whereas the lease under which the pltffs. claim entitles them to remain on the property for a period of ten years from November 1951, the injunction granted to them is a permanent injunction & is not confined to the beriod of the lease. The fallacy in the argument is that in the suit we are not concerned with determining the period for which the pltfs. are entitled to occupy the suit property. The only issue is whether deft. 1 is entitled to execute his decree against the pltfs. & to evict them therefrom. The Court having held that he is not, the injunction has rightly been granted in a permanent form.

[12] For these reasons, I consider that the appeal has no merits & must be dismissed with costs.

Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been satisfied, the decree-holder should apply to the Court which passed the decree for the substitution of the legal heirs of the judgment-debtor. The executing Court to which the decree is transferred for execution cannot legally decide who is the legal heir who represents the estate after the death of the judgment-debtor. Where the decree-holder has not obtained any decision from the Court which passed the decree on this point and a person who was added as the judgment-debtor on the application of the decree-holder, raises an objection under S. 47 on this ground to the maintainability of the execution at his first appearance, the execution case is not maintainable: A. Jamuar J. — The miscellaneous appeal and the civil revision application have been heard together, as they arise out of the same order.

[2] I shall deal with the miscellaneous appeal first. The appeal arises out of an application filed in the Court below under S. 47, Civil P. C. objecting to the sale of certain lots mentioned in the talika in the execution case by one Prasadi Mahto who was added in column No. 9 of the application for execution at the instance of the decree-holder. The facts necessary for the decision of this appeal are these: The decree-holder had obtained a decree on 18-2-1946, from the Court of the Munsif of Bihar against one Mt. Chamni on the basis of a handnote. This decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Barh on 10-8-1948, for execution. On 7-9-1948, the decree-holder applied to the executing Court in the prescribed manner for the execution of the decree against Mt. Phulia and one Ram Charitar Mahto, as Mt. Chamni had died. Subsequently, the name of the appellant, Prasadi Mahto, was added as a judgment-debtor by an order dated 15-12-1948, on an application of the decree-holder, on the ground that, on the death of Mt. Chamni it was necessary to mention the name of Prasadi Mahton in column 9 of the execution petition. Thereafter, on 27-1-1949 Prasadi Mahto, having received notice, filed an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. to the execution of the decree against him on certain grounds mentioned therein, one of the grounds being that the execution case itself was not maintainable. The learned Munsif of Barh observed that the most important and the foremost question for the purpose of determining the maintainability of the execution case was as to who was the legal heir who represented the estate after the death of Mt. Chamni, and who was in possession of the properties including the properties under talika. The learned Munsif stated that the decision called for the determination of the question of legal heir, and that he, being an executing Court, could not legally decide the point, as such matters were within the province of the the Court which had transferred the decree to him. As the decree-holder had not obtained any decision from that Court on this point, the learned Munsif held that the execution case was not maintainable.

[3] As against that decision, the decree-holder appealed to the Court of the District Judge, and the appeal was heard by an Additional District Judge. He reversed the decision of the learned Munsif, and held that the application for execution was maintainable. But he remanded the case to the learned Munsif for the determination of the question whether the debt in respect whereof the decree in execution was passed had been incurred for legal necessity and whether as such the decree was binding on the estate of Punai Mahto who was the husband of Mt. Chamni.

[4] On appeal to this Court, it was argued that the order passed by the learned Additional District Judge was erroneous, as the original order of the learned Munsif of Barh dismissing the execution case as not maintainable was correct for the reason that the decree-holder should have applied to the Court which had passed the decree for the substitution of the legal heirs of Mt. Chamni.

[5] Sub-s. (1) of S. 50, Civil P. C. provides as follows:

"Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representatives of the deceased."

I have no doubt that this was the objection which was taken by Prasadi Mahto before the Munsif at Barh, as will appear from the order of the learned Munsif who heard the matter. On behalf of the respondent, it was contended that such an objection was not mentioned in specific terms in the petition of objection filed under S. 47, Civil P. C., by Prasadi Mahto, though an objection had been taken in respect of the maintainability of the execution. It is true that the objection in such specific terms is not to be found in the petition; but this was the matter which was undoubtedly argued before the learned Munsif since the learned Munsif has dealt with it as follows:

"The decision of this question necesssarily calls for the determination of the question of the legal heir. This Court being only an executing Court cannot legally decide them.

They are properly within the province of the Court which has transferred the decree to this Court. The decree-holder has not produced the decision of that Court on these questions and it appears that he has in fact not obtained any decision of that Court on these points..... It is clear, however, that the decree-holder cannot maintain the execution case against all the three persons mentioned by him in column 9 of the execution petition unless he obtains a decision of the transferring Court on the points stated above. I, therefore, on a consideration of all the facts, circumstances and the evidence set forth above, hold that the execution case is not maintainable."

This was the point before the learned Munsif of Barh, and this was also the point argued in the lower appellate Court. In my opinion, therefore, the mere omission to state the point in such specific terms in the petition of objection was no bar to the appellant raising the point in the Courts below.

[6] On behalf of the respondent, reliance was placed upon the decision in the cases of Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., 55 I. A. 227 and Debendra Nath v. G. A. Aratoon, 19 Pat. 838, for the argument that the appellant, Prasadi Mahton, should not have been allowed to raise this point of non-maintainability of the execution at all.

[7] Both the cases relied upon by the respondent, however, are, in my opinion, distinguishable. In the case of Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., 55 I. A. 227, it appears that the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution had passed an order for substitution of a certain person in place of a deceased judgment-debtor, and then sent the papers to the Court of the sale officer for holding the sale. Their Lordships then proceed to say as follows:

"During the sale proceedings the appellant made various objections from time to time both in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and of the sale officer (the Collector of the District). Amongst others, on 21-2-1921, he obtained a postponement of the sale for two months on the allegation that he wanted to effect a private sale of the property, and promised through his pleader not to put forth any objections relating to the proclamation or any other objections on the next date. The sale was postponed as the decree-holder's pleader accepted the terms offered.

"A postponement on similar terms was also obtained on 20-1-1923."

Their Lordships then proceed as follows.

"After the proceedings had been pending for three and a half years the appellant for the first time put in a petition before the sale officer on 10-4-1924, that the sale proceedings were illegal and without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the decree-holder did not get the name of the appellant entered in the decree of the Court executing the same, in accordance with the provisions of S. 50, Civil P. C. The sale officer referred the matter to the Civil Court—i. e., the Subordinate Judge of the Court of Hardoi—where the same petition was repeated.

"On 22-4-1924, the Subordinate Judge rejected the application for further postponement of the sale and to discontinue the execution proceedings."

Their Lordships upheld this order. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that in this case also it was the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution that had passed the order for substitution, and that such an order had been upheld. In my opinion, the reason for upholding that order was that there had been a waiver by the appellant appearing at the sale proceedings, and far from taking an objection regarding the non-maintainability of the execution, he had taken time for effecting a private sale of the property, and had also made a promise through his pleader not to put forth any objections in this connection. The appellant had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree had been transferred and he could not, therefore, be heard to object to the exercise of that jurisdiction later, as it would then be to permit a gross abuse of procedure.

[8] In the present case before us, however, the appellant had not submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution. There is no case of waiver. As soon as the appellant had received notice of the substitution, he appeared before the Court and at once took his objection regarding the non-maintainability of the execution case.

[9] The case of Debendra Nath Haldar v. G. A. Aratoon, 19 Pat. 838 is also distinguishable. That case followed the Privy Council case just referred to, and it was observed therein that an appellate Court ought not to interfere with an order under S. 50, Civil P. C., made by a Court to which a decree had been transferred for execution where the merits of the case are not affected by the irregularity. In the present case with which I am dealing, however, the objection taken by the appellant at his very first appearance was a substantial one affecting the merit of his case, and, in my opinion, it was rightly given effect to by the learned Munsif.

[10] For these reasons, I would allow the appeal with costs, and dismiss the execution case filed against the appellant.

[11] In this view of the matter, the civil revision application becomes infructuous, and it becomes unnecessary to deal with it.

Where the pltf. files a suit against deft. alleging that time was of the essence of the contract and the arbitration clause in the agreement is therefore not binding on him and the suit is stayed by the H. C. under S. 34, Arbitration Act, on an appeal from order of the lower Ct., the effect of the order under appeal is not finally to dispose of the right of the parties even though it decides a cardinal point in the case. A further order is necessary in order to determine the rights of the parties with respect to the matter in dispute which may terminate the suit one way or the other. Further the lower Ct. has to record the finding whether the arbitration clause is binding on the parties or not and the suit must be held to be a live suit. Even assuming that in view of the finding of the H. C. there is nothing left in the suit and that the lower Ct. is bound to dismiss the suit the order of the H. LAKSHMIKANTA JHA, C. J.: This is an application by the pltf. for leave to appeal to the S. C. from an order of a Bench of this Ct. dated 30-3-1951, directing the suit instituted by the petnr. to be stayed under S. 34, Arbitration Act. The relevant facts are these:

(2) The petnr. (hereafter referred to as the pltf.) is a Company known as the Gaya Electric Supply Company Limited, incorporated under the Companies Act having its registered office at Gaya. The Company held a licence, called the "Gaya Electric Licence", granted by the Province of Bihar for the supply of electric energy within the limits of the town of Gaya. On 23-6-1949, the Govt., for certain reasons, revoked the licence by a notfn. with effect from 9-7-1949. Thereupon the petnr., on 4-7-1949, instituted Title Suit No. 58 of 1949 for a declaration that the order revoking the licence was 'mala fide' & 'ultra vires'. This suit, however, was compromised & the Province of Bihar agreed to acquire the undertaking on certain terms & conditions & an agreement was executed by & between the parties on 28-10-1949. There was an arbitration clause in the agreement which provided that in case of any difference or dispute between the parties over the payment of balance which may be found due after valuation, such dispute shall be submitted to the sole arbitration of a single arbitrator who should be a high Govt. officer of the Provincial Govt. of rank equal to or higher than a Divisional Commissioner & his award shall be final & binding on both parties.

(3) In pursuance of the agreement the pltf. withdrew the suit on 25-10-1949, & the Govt. made payment of rupees five lakhs to the pltf. on account & took possession of the undertaking on 28-10-1949. It appears that the parties did not agree as to the valuation & thereupon the pltf. instituted Title Suit No. 83 of 1950 for recovery of possession of the undertaking & for certain other reliefs. The case of the pltf., in short, was that the Govt. committed breach of the agreement in that it failed to make any valuation of the undertaking within three months of taking over of the undertaking as mentioned in the agreement & failed to pay the balance of the compensation within this period, althogh the time mentioned in the agreement was of the essence of the contract.

(4) On 9-10-1950, the State of Bihar filed an application before the learned subordinate Judge of Gaya under S. 34, Arbitration Act, in order to have the matter in dispute referred to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement & prayed for stay of further proceedings in the suit. The learned subordinate Judge refused to stay the suit & rejected the application of the State of Bihar by his order dated 18-12-1950. The State of Bihar thereupon preferred an appeal to this Ct. which was heard by Ramaswami & Rai, JJ., who by their order dated 30-3-1951, set aside the order of the Ct. below & directed the suit to be stayed. The pltf. has, therefore, filed the present application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

(5) The judgment of this Ct. is one of reversal & the amount or value of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Ct. of first instance & still in dispute on appeal was & is more than Rs.20,000/-. Therefore, under Art. 133 of the Constitution leave can be granted if the order in question be held to be a final order.

(6) The contention of Dr. Sultan Ahmad, for the petnr., is that the order is final & leave should be granted as a matter of course, whereas the learned Advocate General contends, on behalf of the State of Bihar, that the application is not maintainable because the order is interlocutory as the rights of the parties have not been finally determined.

(7) In our opinion the order in question is an interlocutory order & the application is not maintainable. The expression "final order" has been interpreted by the English Cts., the Judicial Committee & the Courts of India, & its meaning is now well settled on authority. Brett, L. J. in 'Standard Discount Co. v. La Grange', (1878) 3 C P D 67 at p. 71, observed:

"No order, judgment, or other proceeding can be final which does not at once affect the status of the parties, for whichever side the decision may be given; so that if it is given for the pltf. it is conclusive against the deft., & if it is given for the deft. it is conclusive against the pltf."

In 'Salaman v. Warner', (1891) 1 Q B 734, Lord Esher, M. R. while interpreting the expression "final order" observed:

"If their decision, whichever way it is given, will, if it stands, finally dispose of the matter in dispute, I think that for the purposes of these rules it is final. On the other hand, if their decision if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but if given in the other, will allow the action to go on, then I think it is not final, but interlocutory."

Fry, L. J. in the same case remarked:

"If I conceive that an order is 'final' only where it is made upon an application or other proceeding which must, whether such application or other proceeding fail or succeed, determine the action. Conversely, I think that an order is 'interlocutory' where it cannot be affirmed that in either event the action will be determined."

Lopes, L. J. also in the same case said:

"I think that a judgment or order would be final within the meaning of the rules, when, whichever way it went, it would finally determine the rights of the parties."

The point came up for consideration before the Judicial Committee in 'Ramchand Manjimal v. Govardhandas Vishandas Ratanchand', (47 I A 124 at p. 127). In that case the trial Ct. granted a stay under S. 19, Arbitration Act of 1899, which substantially corresponds with S. 34, Arbitration Act of 1940, but on appeal the Ct. of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind reversed the order & refused a stay of proceedings. The Judicial Committee held that the order of the appellate Ct. was an interlocutory one. Viscount Cave, in delivering the judgment of the Board, observed, on the authority of the decisions of the Cts. in England, that "an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties". Explaining this case in 'Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassim & Sons', (60 I A 76), Sir George Lowndes said:

"The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If, after the order, the suit is still a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined, no appeal lies against it under S. 109 (a) of the Code."

In 'Hori Ram v. Emperor', (1939 F C R 159), Sulaiman, J. took the view that in cases in which the decision of the point in dispute either way did not result in finally disposing of the matter before the Ct. the decision did not amount to a final order. A similar view was taken by Kania, C. J. in 'S. Kuppuswami Rao v. The King', (1947 F C R 180), & he held: "It must be an order which finally determines the points in dispute & brings the case to an end." Applying the tests laid down in the cases noticed above, we are of opinion that the effect of the order under appeal is not finally to dispose of the rights of the parties even though it decides a cardinal point in the case. The suit is still alive because the order does not terminate the suit; a further order is necessary in order to determine the rights of the parties with respect to the matter in dispute which may terminate the suit one way or the other. Moreover, the case of the pltf. is that the time was of the essence of the contract, & that the arbitration clause is not binding because the Govt. failed to make any valuation of the undertaking within the period mentioned in the agreement. This is a point on which the subordinate Judge has to record his finding. Therefore, apart from any other consideration, if this point is still to be decided by the learned subordinate Judge, the suit must be held to be a live suit. Dr. Sultan Ahmad has strenuously contended that in view of the finding of this Ct., there is nothing left in the suit, & the learned subordinate Judge is bound to dismiss it. Even assuming that the contention of Dr. Sultan Ahmad is right, the order is still an interlocutory order. For, if an order granting a stay of proceedings is interlocutory, it cannot be said to be final if a stay is granted, because an order is final only when, whichever way it goes, it finally determines the rights of the parties. The rights of the parties in the case before us have not been finally determined in relation to the suit. Therefore, judged from any point of view, the order in question cannot be said to be final. Leave must therefore be refused. The application is accordingly rejected: hearing fee five gold mohurs.

A. F. O. D. No 505 of 1946, D/- 6-4-1951.

(a) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), Ss. 9, 37 and 82 — Bank purchasing order cheque from customer and crediting its amount to customer's account — Customer allowed to withdraw amount before clearance — Subsequent dishonour of cheque — Bank debiting customer with amount of cheque — Suit by Bank for recovery of amount of disputed cheque — Maintainability — Doctrine of merger or accord and satisfaction if applicable — Contract Act (1872), S. 37 — (Merger) — (Accord and satisfaction).

L drew a cheque for a certain sum on C Bank in favour of R. M. Firm which had a current account with B Bank. One of the partners of the R. M. Firm endorsed it in blank and the B Bank purchased it from him for its face value and credited the amount in the current account of the firm. On the same date the firm withdrew the amount of the cheque from their current account in the form of a draft. The cheque was subsequently dishonoured by the C Bank and thereupon the B Bank made a debit entry for the amount of the dishonoured cheque in the current account of the R. M. Firm. Subsequently B Bank instituted a suit on the dishonoured cheque against the partners of the R. M. Firm and L.

Held that as the B Bank obtained the cheque for consideration it became the holder in due course within the meaning of S. 9 and it did not act merely as a collecting agent. (1882) 19 Ch D 409; (1884) 9 A C 95; (1891) 1 Q B 435; (1903) A C 240, Rel. on. (Paras 6, 8)

Held further that in the absence of any evidence to show that there was sufficient bank-balance in the current account of the firm or that there was other sufficient security in the hands of the Bank, the mere fact that the Bank made a debit entry in the current account of the firm did not extinguish the right of suit on the dishonoured cheque by discharge of liability under S. 82. The right of suit was also not extinguished either by merger or accord and satisfaction. (1836) 173 E R 267 and (1894) 2 Q B 715, Rel. on. (Paras 13, 14)

Anno: Neg. Ins. Act, S. 9 N. 1; S. 82 N. 2 & 3.

(b) Merger — Doctrine of — Conditions for applicability.

The doctrine of merger only applies where a higher security is accepted in place of a security of lower operative power. For example if two parties to a simple contract embody its contents in a deed which they both execute, the simple contract is thereby discharged. But the doctrine is not applicable if the securities are of equal degree; as a bond taken for a bond or covenant; or a bond or covenant taken for payment of rent which is a speciality debt. (1851) 20 L J C P 102, Rel. on. The doctrine of merger will not be applicable unless the new security is between the same parties — a superior security given by a surety for the debt does not merge the debt as against the principal. RAMASWAMI, J.: This appeal is presented by deft. 4 Lachmi Narayan Beriwala against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah dated 23-9-1946.

(2) The pltf., Bharat Bank Ltd. brought the suit on the allegation that Ramballabh Das, deft 1, & Motilal, deft. 2, carried on a partnership in the name of Ramballabh Motilal for dealing in grain, that the two partners opened on 11-7-1945 a current account in the name of the firm with the pltf., that on 2-9-1945 deft. 4 drew a cheque Ex. 6 for a sum of Rs. 50,000 on the Commilla Union Bank to be paid to the firm Ramballabh Motilal, that on 4-9-1945 Motilal on behalf of the firm tendered the cheque to the pltf. after endorsing it in blank. The pltf. purchased the cheque from Motilal for its face value after deducting the bank charge & credited the amount to the current account of the firm

Ramballabh Motilal. On the same date, Motilal drew a cheque, Ex. 18, for a sum of Rs. 50,000 & obtained the amount in the form of a draft payable to the regional grain supply officer. Shortly after, the pltf. sent the cheque, Ex. 6, to the Commilla Union Bank for collection through its Patna branch but the cheque was returned unpaid on the 7th September with a note "effects not cleared". The cheque was again presented to the Commilla Union Bank on 21st September on which date the cheque was dishonoured with the intimation that the drawer had countermanded the payment. The pltf. thereupon sent a notice of dishonour to Ramballabh Motilal. On 26th September Ramballabh & Motilal appeared before the manager of the Bank & promised to pay the amount or to make arrangement with Lachhminarain Beriwala for its payment. On the same date Motilal filed an appln. in the court of the Dist. Judge for being declared insolvent. As the defts. made no payment in spite of demand, the pltf., brought the suit on the negotiable instrument for recovery of the sum of Rs. 50,375 inclusive of interest. Deft. 1 contested the suit on the ground that he had no knowledge of the cheque issued by Lachmi Narain Beriwala, that he did not present the cheque to the bank nor did he authorise Motilal to encash it. He alleged that Motilal, alone managed the affairs of the partnership. Motilal, deft. 2, admitted that he had presented the cheque to the bank & received the sum of Rs. 50,000 in the shape of a draft payable to the regional grain supply officer. But he denied that he had notice of dishonour. Deft. 4 alleged that he had drawn the cheque on condition that defts. 1 & 2 sent his railway receipt along with the permit for transport of 6,500 maunds of rice to his nominees, that the cheque would not be negotiated or presented to the drawee for payment till then. He contended that the cheque was issued not in the name of the firm but jointly in the name of defts., 1 & 2 & the cheque could not be cashed by either of them alone.

(3) The learned Subordinate Judge held that the cheque was issued in the name of the firm & Motilal alone could validly negotiate & endorse the cheque on the firm's behalf; that the encashment of the cheque was not conditional upon delivery of the railway receipt & the Govt. permit for despatch of 6,500 maunds of rice; that notice of dishonour was given to defts. 1 & 2 and that no such notice was necessary in the case of deft. 4 who had expressly countermanded the payment. The Subordinate Judge further held that the pltf. had become the possessor of the cheque for consideration & was "a holder in due course". The Subordinate Judge therefore granted a decree in favour of the pltf. against all the defts. who were made jointly & severally liable for the amount.

(4) Two questions were debated in this appeal, viz., (1) whether the pltf. was a holder in due course of the negotiable instrument, (2) whether the liability on the negotiable instrument was discharged when the pltf. debited the amount in question in the account of the firm Ramballabh Motilal on 19-9-1945.

(5) It is undisputed that the cheque, Ex. 6, was expressed as payable to Ramballabhdas Motilal & so was a cheque payable to order as stated in explanation (1) S. 13, Cl. 1, Negotiable Instruments Act. When Motilal endorsed the cheque in blank, it became payable to bearer according to explanation (2) of the same sub-section. S. 9 of the Act defines a holder in due course to mean "any person who for consideration became the possessor of a promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque if payable to bearer." The question, therefore, is whether the pltf. acquired the cheque for consideration in this case. In my opinion the evidence conclusively establishes that on 4-9-1945 the pltf. purchased the cheque from Motilal for cash & made credit entry in the account of the firm Ramballabh Motilal. (After discussion of the evidence the judgment proceeds:)

(6) On the first question, I hold upon the evidence that the Bank had obtained the disputed cheque for consideration, that the Bank became holder in due course & that it did not act as a collecting agent.

(7) This conclusion is supported by a 'catena' of authorities. In 'Ex parte Richdale; In re Palmer', (1882) 19 Ch D 409, it was held by the Ct. of Appeal that when a customer pays a cheque to his bankers with the intention that the amount of it shall be at once placed to his credit, & the bankers carry the amount to his credit accordingly they become immediately holders of the cheque for value, even though the customer's account is not overdrawn. At page 417 Jessel, M.R. states:

"Alfred Palmer paid the cheque to his bankers, & they placed the amount of it to the credit of his current account. The bankers were holders of the cheque for value; the moment they credited the amount of it to Alfred Palmer it became their property. Therefore, if the drawers had stopped the payment of the cheque on the 28th of April, still they could not have avoided payment of the amount to Alfred Palmer's bankers."

To the same effect is 'Maclean v. Clydesdale Banking Co.' (1884), 9 A C 95 in which it was held upon the evidence that the Bank took the cheque as holders for value. Lord Blackburn said:

"Now in the present case did the bank get the cheque in that way as a mere agent, & nothing else, or did they get it in order that they might have the property in it transferred to them & that they might become holders of it? The condescendence makes this averment: The said draft or cheque was indorsed by the said W. B. Cotton, & was by him delivered to the pursuers on or about 14-1-1882, on their paying to him the said sum of £265 2s. 6d., or placing the same to the credit of his account which was then overdrawn to an amount in excess of the said sum, & thereby extinguishing the said account to that extent."

The case was followed in 'National Bank v. Silke, (1891) 1 Q. B. 435, in which the question arose whether the pltfs. were holders of a cheque in due course & for value. At p. 439 Bowen, L. J. states:

"The case of 'Maclean v. Clydesdale Banking Co.' (1884) 9 App C. 95 makes that clear which to a mercantile man would have appeared clear without any decision that if a cheque is paid to a bank on the footing that the amount may at once be drawn upon, & it is drawn upon accordingly, the bank is a holder for value in due course."

The principle was reaffirmed in the important case 'Capital & Counties, Bank, Ltd. v. Gordon (1903) A. C. 240 in which bankers credited a customer with the amounts of cheques as they were handed in by him to his account, & allowed him to draw against the amount so credited before the cheques were cleared. The House of Lords held that the Bank did not receive payment as against for collection but received payment as holder of the cheque on their own account & so was not protected by S. 82, Bills of Exchange Act. At p. 244 Lord Macnaghten states:

"But the protection conferred by S. 82 is conferred only on a banker who receives payment for a customer that is, who receives payment as a mere agent for collection. It follows, I think, that if bankers do more than act as such agents they are not within the protection of the section. It is well settled that if a banker before collection credits a customer with the face value of a cheque paid into his account the banker becomes holder for value of the cheque. It is impossible, I think, to say that a banker is merely receiving payment for his customer & a mere agent for collection when he receives payment of a cheque of which he is the holder for value."

At p. 248 Lord Lindley states:—

"It was said by the applts' counsel, with some confidence that any jury of businessmen would find, as a fact, that the bank received payment of these cheques for Jones, & nothing more. All I can say is that I think it very likely they would do so if left to themselves without proper directions from the Judge, but that if proper directions were given then they would not be likely to go wrong. It must never be forgotten that the moment a bank places money to its customer's credit the customer is entitled to draw upon it, unless something occurs to deprive him of that right. Nothing occurred in this case to the knowledge of the bank which had any such effect. It appears to me impossible to say that under these circumstances the bank received payment of the cheques in question for their customer Jones."

(8) Applying the ratio of these authorities it is manifest in the present case that the pltf., Bharat Bank Ltd. was a holder in due course of the cheque for Rs. 50,000 presented by Motila..

(9) Learned counsel for the appellant referred to two cases: 'Akrokerri (Ashanti) Mines Ltd. v. Economic Bank', (1904) 2 K B 465, & 'A. L. Underwood Ltd. v. Bank of Liverpool', (1924) 1 KB 775. But these authorities are not of any avail to the appellant. In (1904) 2 K B 465 it was proved as a fact that the customer was not allowed to draw against the cheques until they were cleared. There was also evidence that when the customer opened the account he read & signed an application from which contained a notice that no bills would be discounted & that cheques would not be paid against until cleared. In the other case (1924) 1 K B 775 a customer of the Bank paid into his account some cheques to which he had no title. Immediately on his so paying them in, the bank credited him with the amounts of the cheques in their ledger, but there was no agreement between the Bank & the customer that he should draw against the cheques before they were cleared, nor did the customer in fact draw against the cheques until the Bank had received the proceeds. It was held by the Ct. of Appeal that apart from any question whether the bank had notice of any defect in the customer's title, they were not holders in due course, there being no evidence that they took the cheques for value. The mere fact that bankers credit a customer with the amounts of cheques before they are cleared does not make them holders for value; in order to entitle them to that character there must have been an agreement, express or implied that the customer should be allowed to draw against the cheques before clearance, & that agreement must have been acted upon. The material facts of the present case are manifestly different.

(9 a) Learned Advocate General then concentrated his argument on the point that the obligation on the negotiable instrument was discharged by the debit entry which the Bharat Bank made on 19th of September on account of the dishonoured cheque. It was argued by the learned counsel that there was discharge by merger, that the cause of action on the negotiable instrument was extinguished by a merger by operation of law. In my opinion it is impossible to accept this argument. For the doctrine of merger only applies where a higher security is accepted in place of a security of lower operative power. For example, if two parties to a simple contract embody its contents in a deed which they both execute, the simple contract is thereby discharged. But the doctrine is not applicable if the securities are of equal degree; as a bond taken for a bond or covenant; or a bond or covenant taken for payment of rent which is a speciality debt (Cresswell J. in 'Price v. Moulton', (1851) 20 L J C P 102). In the present case, there is no evidence that any grain of the firm of Ramballabh Motilal was retained in security to the Bank on the 19th September on which date the debit entry was made. No statement to this effect is made in the written statements. There is also another difficulty involved in the appellant's argument. Under S. 37, Negotiable Instruments Act, the maker of a cheque or promissory note is liable as a principal debtor & the other parties thereto including endorser are liable thereon as sureties for the maker. It is a well settled rule that the doctrine of merger will not be applicable unless the new security is between the same parties — a superior security given by a surety for the debt does not merge the debt as against the principal. It has been held for instance that a mortgage with covenant to pay the debt given by one of the makers of a joint & several promissory note will not merge the note as against the other maker 'Ansell v. Baker', (1850) 15 Q B 20 & 'Boaler v. Mayor', (1865) 34 L J C P 230. The argument of the learned Advocate General in this respect must therefore fail.

(10) It was then contended on behalf of the applt. that there was a discharge by accord & satisfaction as soon as the pltf. made a debit entry in the account after the cheque was dishonoured. This argument is groundless. It is established by modern authorities that not only the performance of a new promise but a new promise of itself, that is to say, a promise of something different from that which the debtor was bound to perform by the original contract will discharge the original cause of action (see for instance 'Morris v. Baron', (1918) A C 1). But there will be no accord & satisfaction unless there is proof that there was clear intention on the part of the creditor that he had accepted in satisfaction merely his debtor's promise. In the present case the defts. have not given evidence of such intention. No such allegation is made in the pleadings. On the other hand, it is clear from the evidence that when the cheque was returned the bank as an account transaction showed in the ledger that the firm was liable to the exent of the dishonoured cheque. This cannot mean that the bank gave up its rights in the cheque as against the firm or against the other three defts. The evidence on the contrary unmistakably indicates that the pltf. never intended to discharge the defts. from the liability upon the cheque. Even after the debit entry was made the pltf. was presenting the cheque to Commilla Bank for payment on 21st September (vide Exs. 4 to 4d). The letter, Ex. 9, also shows that the Arrah Bank was instructing the Patna branch to present the I. B. P. to the Commilla Bank & continue presenting it "till the latter definitely refused payment on some tangible ground". These facts establish that the bank did not give up its right on the negotiable instrument as against any of the defts. It is impossible to hold that the Bank gave up a good cause of action on the negotiable instrument exchanging it for the unsecured liability of the firm Ramballabh Motilal.

(11) There are authorities to the effect that a banker may sue upon a crossed cheque in his own name as a holder in due course though he has debited the customer in the account after the cheque was dishonoured. In 'Ryder v. Willet' (1836) 173 ER 267 . A drew a bill on B & indorsed it to a

Bank where he had an account. B accepted the bill but did not pay it. The Bank then entered it on the debit side of A's account. The state of A's account at the time of the entry & up to the action was against A. It was proved that the Bank had, on former occasions, allowed A to overdraw his account, though there was no agreement to this effect. It was held by Lord Denman C. J. that the facts did not prove a plea that the bank had received from 'A' £100-6 s in satisfaction of the bill.

(12) To a similar effect is the decision in 'Royal Bank of Scotland v. Tottenham,' (1894) 2 Q. B. 715, in which an action was brought against the deft. as drawer of a cheque drawn by the deft. to the order of Cecil Hambrough & indorsed by him, of which the pltfs. were holders, & which was dishonoured. The cheque was handed by Hambrough to Mrs. Monson, & sent by her to the pltfs. on August 7; & on the 8th it was received by the plffs. & placed, according to instructions, to her credit. The deft. gave notice to his bankers on August 10 to stop the cheque, & on August 11 the plffs. received notice from their London office reporting non-payment of the cheque on presentation. Upon receipt of letter, the manager debited Mrs. Monson's account with £250. It was held by the Court of Appeal that directly the bank had entered the cheque to Mrs. Monson's credit, & communicated the fact to her, they acquired a good title to the cheque & that the bank was entitled to recover full amount of the cheque from the defts.

(13) In the present case, I hold tha the plff. was a holder in due course of the disputed cheque, that the right of suit was not extinguished by merger or accord & satisfaction, that the liability was also not discharged under S. 82, Negotiable Instruments Act. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge rightly granted a decree in favour of the plff. & this appeal must be dismissed with costs with plff. resp.

(14) SARJOO PROSAD, J.: I agree. My learned brother has fully discussed the facts & the law involved in the appeal, & I have nothing to add usefully to that discussion. The only point which impressed me in the argument of the learned Advocate General was whether the liability of the maker under the cheque was discharged within the provisions of S. 82, Negotiable Instruments Act, by the debit entry made by the Bank in the accounts of Ramballabh Motilal, & whether the original liability under the cheque had been thereby innovated. It must be conceded that a debit entry is as much a payment from accounts as a credit entry is a payment in an account of the constituent of the Bank. If there had been sufficient amount in the bank-balance of Ramballabh Motilal, the cheque would have been satisfied by the debit entry & the liability thereunder extinguished. That, however, is not the case here. But it is contended by the learned Advocate General that there was sufficient stock of grains in the possession of the Bank to support the credit of Ramballabh Motlial. The onus to prove accord & satisfaction of the liability under the cheque was on the defts. & this they have not done. Our attention has been drawn to the admission of the manager of the Bank to show that on the date of payment of Rs. 50,000/- the Bank had certain quantity of grains of deft. 3 in stock. The manager, however, says that this was not sufficient to cover the value of the cheque. The defts. have not been able to prove to the contrary. Therefore, it is impossible to hold that the liability under the cheque was extinguished within the meaning of S. 82, Negotiable Instruments Act. Nor do I think that any question of contract arises in the case.

(15) The appeal must, therefore, fail, & I agree with my learned brother that it should be dismissed with costs.

K.S. Appeal dismissed.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 133 of 1949 D/- 12-10-1950.

Excess Profits Tax Act (1940) S. 6 — Standard profits — Assessment.

The business of the assessee was that of a cloth-dealer. There was no purchase or sale after the 31st March, 1944; there were no stocks left on that date; and all the employees were discharged before the 31st March, 1944. However, some realisations and some payments were made during the period from the 1st April, 1944 to the 1st July, 1944, and the accounts were settled during the period.

'Held' that on these materials the Tribunal was justified in coming to a finding that the business of the assessee discontinued after the 31st of March, 1944 and that the business did not run through the whole of the accounting year ending 31st July, 1944. SARJOO PROSAD J: The short point involved in this reference is "whether on the facts and circumstances of the case the Tribunal was right in holding that the assessee ceased to carry on any business after the 31st March, 1944."

(2) The application out of which this reference arises related to assessment of excess profits tax during the accounting year ending the 31st of July, 1944. The department held that the applicant's business was discontinued on the 31st of March, 1944, and did not run through the whole of the accounting year. Therefore, the minimum standard profits were computed up to the 31st of March, 1944, that is, for eight months, and this amount was deducted out of the profits of the chargeable accounting period, and on this basis excess profits were assessed. The assessee contends that the business continued up till the end of the accounting period. The Tribunal has come to a finding against him, and this finding is based upon certain factors mentioned in the statement of the case made by the Tribunal. The first is that it was admitted that there was no purchase or sale after the 31st March, 1944; second, that there were no stocks left on that date; and, third, that all the employees were discharged before the 31st March, 1944. It appears, however, that some realisations and some payments were made during the period from the 1st April, 1944 to the 1st July, 1944, and the accounts were settled during the period.

(3) Mr. S. K. Mazumdar for the assessee contends on the basis of this finding, namely, that there were some realisations of assets and some payments made during this period, that the business continued up to the end of the accounting period, and, therefore, the method for assessing excess profits-tax as adopted by the Department was erroneous. He relies upon a decision in 'South Behar Railway Co. Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue', 1925 A C 476, where it was observed on the facts of that case that the Company carried on business within the meaning of Section 52 of the Finance Act, 1920, and was liable to corporation profits-tax. Mr. Mazumdar contends that although in the case in question the railway had been relinquished to the Secretary of State and during the period of accounting the Company was doing no more than collecting the annuities payable to the Company under a certain contract, yet it was held that the business of the Company was going on. It is to be observed that the facts in that case were entirely different. Whether the Company was or was not carrying on business would depend upon the nature of the business which the Company had to carry on. Thereafter, the railway had been relinquished to the Secretary of State, the Company was in consideration of that relinquishment entitled to a fixed annuity to be paid half-yearly in lieu of the percentage of earnings payable under the principal contract. Therefore, it was held that the Company in collecting and declaring dividends was carrying on business during the accounting period. The case has, thus, no application to the facts of the present case. In this case, the business of the assessee was that of a cloth-dealer. Admittedly this business had ceased on the 31st of March, 1944, and there was no sale or purchase of any stocks, and even the employees had been discharged. On these materials the Tribunal was justified in coming to a finding that the business of the assessee discontinued after the 31st of March, 1944.

(4) Mr. Mazumdar for the assessee has referred to another decision 'In re Dagnall; Ex parte Soan', (1896) 2 Q.B. 407. That was a case arising under the Bankruptcy Law. A married woman had been carrying on trade separately from her husband. She sold the business in question, and shortly afterwards gave notice to her creditors that she was about to suspend the payment of her debts and then a bankruptcy petition was presented against her. On those facts it was held so long as her debts had not been discharged, she would be deemed to be still carrying on the trade on that date. Mr. Mazumdar very strongly relies upon certain observations of Vaughan-William, J., which are as follows:

"It seems to me that trading is not completed until you have performed all the obligations that the fact of trading imposed upon you."

He contends that the collection of dues and payments of money on account of the business were also obligations imposed upon the assessee by the trade which he had been carrying on, and, therefore, it must be assumed that because he performed these acts, the business was continued by him. The observations made in that case have to be considered in the light of the context. For the purposes of Bankruptcy law their Lordships assumed that the business was not closed until the debts had been discharged, and it was in that context that the observations were made by his Lordship. Having regard to the facts found by the Tribunal, it is impossible for us to say on this reference that there was no evidence on which the Tribunal could come to a finding that the assessee ceased to carry on his business after the 31st March, 1944. Therefore, the reference in the present case has to be answered in the affirmative, namely, that on the facts and circumstances of this case, the Tribunal was justified in holding that the assessee ceased to carry on any business after the 31st March, 1944.

(5) I must, however, observe that the facts stated by the Tribunal are to some extent vague and are not as full as they should have been. In any case, the material facts being there, I do not see any useful purpose would be served in directing a remand on this account.

(6) For the reasons stated above, I would direct that the reference should be answered in the manner stated above. The Department would be entitled to the costs of this reference. The hearing fee is assessed at Rs. 250/-.

(7) SHEARER, J: I agree.

(a) Stamp Act, (1899), Ss. 45, 61 — Application for refund of excess.

The party aggrieved can have his remedy by way of an appeal or revision only if the statute provides the same and such right cannot be inferred. S. 61 cannot refer to the refund of any stamp duty which might have been paid in excess by the person tendering the instrument into evidence. The Act provides a remedy in case a higher stamp duty or penalty has been paid, and that provision is to be found in S. 45. (Para 3)

(b) Stamp Act (1899), S. 61 — Application by private party.

The appellate Court or the Court of reference can revise the order under S. 61 only upon the application of the Collector or of its own motion. The private party who has paid the duty or the penalty has no 'locus standi' to make an application. This also suggests that section 61 has no application when refund of the excess duty or penalty is asked for. (Para 3)

C. P. SINHA, J: This is an application made by the plaintiff to an action, under section 61 of the Indian Stamp Act with a prayer that relief be granted to the petitioner against the order of the trial court admitting certain documents into evidence after impounding those documents and after having collected the stamp duty and the penalty on those documents.

(2) The court below by its order dated the 24th of January 1947 held that certain documents, which were proposed to be put in evidence, amounted to leases and that as such they were not properly stamped. Those documents were thereupon impounded and the Court ordered that those documents could not be taken into evidence until the proper stamp duty and the penalty were paid in respect of each of those documents. The petitioner came to this Court against that order in Civil Revision No. 52 of 1947, but that application was rejected by the order of this Court dated the 16th January, 1948. While dismissing that application, it was observed that section 61 in terms referred only to cases where a Court had made an order admitting an instrument into evidence as duly stamped or as not requiring stamp or upon payment of duty and penalty under section 35 and that, as the documents had not till then been admitted into evidence, section 61 had no application. It was further observed that at a later stage, if the penalty was paid and the documents were admitted, there might possibly be some scope for consideration under section 61. It appears that, after the application to this Court was rejected, the petitioner paid the stamp duty and the penalty asked for by the Court upon which the documents were admitted into evidence and, after having paid the duty and the penalty, the petitioner has now filed this application under section 61 of the Stamp Act for refund of the excess stamp duty and penalty paid by the petitioner.

(3) In my opinion, section 61 has absolutely no application to the facts of the present case. Section 61 is headed as follows: "Revision of certain decisions of Courts regarding the sufficiency of stamps". This means that in certain cases where the sufficiency of the stamps as levied by the Court, is in question, that can be revised by the Court to which an appeal lies or references are made by the first Court. The heading, therefore, quite clearly suggests that this section refers only to cases where insufficient duty or insufficient penalty has been paid. Section 61, clause (1) mentions that the appellate Court or the court to which reference lies from the first Court which had imposed the stamp duty or the penalty might of its own motion or on the application of the Collector take such order into consideration. The appellate Court or the Court of reference can revise the order under this section only upon the application of the Collector or of its own motion. The private party who has paid the duty or the penalty has no 'locus standi' to make an application. This also suggests that this section has no application when refund of the excess duty or penalty is asked for. Now section 61, clause (2) says that, if such Court, meaning thereby the appellate Court or the Court of reference, after 'such consideration', that is to say, after consideration as mentioned in sub-section (1), is of the opinion that either the instrument has been admitted without due stamp duty or penalty under section 35 or that the instrument required payment of a higher duty and penalty than those paid, such Court might record a declaration to that effect and determine the amount of duty with which such instrument was chargeable. This sub-section, therefore, refers back to the provisions of sub-section (1) and therefore these two sub-sections (1) and (2) must be read together. If they are so read, it is clear that (1) where the instrument has been admitted without payment of duty or penalty and (2) where less duty or penalty has been paid and more should have been paid, the appellate Court or the Court of reference should record a declaration to that effect and determine the proper duty or penalty to be paid upon such an instrument. After this is done, under sub-clause (3) of the section that Court has to send a copy of the declaration to the Collector for suitable action as provided for by sub-section (4) of the section. This section therefore cannot refer to the refund of any stamp duty which might have been paid in excess by the person tendering the instrument into evidence. Mr. De on behalf of the petitioner contends that, if there is power in the Court of appeal or in the Court of reference to levy a higher stamp duty or penalty, then it must also be within its power to order refund if any excess payment has been made. The short answer to that contention is that the party aggrieved can have his remedy by way of an appeal or revision only if the statute provides the same and such right cannot be inferred. I find, however, that the Stamp Act does provide a remedy in case a higher stamp duty or penalty has been paid, and that provision is to be found in section 45 of the Act. The view which I take is also in consonance with the view of the learned authors of the Indian Stamp Act, 5th edition, by Mulla and Pratt at page 155. Their view is thus stated:

"The sole object of this section is the protection of revenue and it does not affect the provisions of section 36.....The section only refers to cases of insufficeint duty and penalty. If excess duty or penalty has been levied the only remedy is by application to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority under section 45 within three months."

Mr. De also contends that his client was misled by the order of this Court already mentioned, but I see no justification for that contention either. Meredith J., with whom Agarwala, C. J. concurred, only said that at a later stage, after the penalty was paid, possibly there might be some scope for consideration under section 61. As I have already indicated, section 61 empowers the appellate Court or the Court of reference to consider the sufficiency of stamp duty paid or the penalty imposed after the document has been taken into evidence and, therefore, his Lordship did not say anything more than what was contained in the section itself and it cannot be said that by that judgment the petitioner was held entitled to apply for refund under this section. The language of the section is clear that it should not have given any reason to the petitioner to believe that that section provided any remedy in case excess payment of stamp duty or penalty has been made by the petitioner. Even if it be a fact that by that judgment the petitioner was led into the belief that he had his remedies under this section, that would not affect the provisions of the section itself. In my judgment, section 61 of the Stamp Act, under which the present application has been made, has got no application, and this Court cannot give any relief to the petitioner if he has paid any excess stamp duty or penalty.

(4) I would accordingly dismiss this application with costs to the State of Bihar, which I fix at two gold mohurs as the hearing fee.

Certain impartible estate in Bihar was under management of the Court of Wards. In a proceeding arising out of an application under Art. 226, Constitution of India, for a writ of mandamus upon the Board of Revenue, Bihar, or the State of Bihar, to withdraw from the management of the estate, it was contended that the provisions of the Court of Wards Act as also of the Indian Majority Act in so far as they purported to extend the period of minority of a person to 21 years had become void from the date the Constitution came into force, because those provisions were in conflict with Art. 14 of the Constitution. It was also contended that the petitioner had no reversionary or immediate interest in the impartible estate within the meaning of S. 7 of the Court of Wards Act and that the expression "reversionary interest" could not cover the right, if any available to the petitioner during the lifetime of his father.

'Held' that the proceeding in which the above contentions were raised and determined was a civil proceeding of the nature contemplated by Art. 133 (1): A I R (19) 1932 Cal 834, Disting; A I R (38) 1951 Pat. 29 (F. B.), Rel. on. (Paras 4, 7, 8, 9)

NARAYAN, J.: This is an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from a decision of this Court in Misc. Judicial Case No. 79 of 1951 which arose out of an application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India. The petitioner is the son of the late Maharaja Bahadur Guru Mahadvashram Prasad Sahi who was the last holder of the impartible estate commonly and compendiously known as the Hathwa Raj. On the 4th May, 1940, the late Maharaja Bahadur had made an application under section 6 (e) of the Court of Wards Act for being declared a disqualified proprietor, and on the 11th of May, 1940, the Court of Wards made a declaration that the Maharaja Bahadur was a disqualified proprietor, and on the same date a notification was issued that the Court of Wards had decided to take charge of the property of the late Maharaja Bahadur, and a direction was made that possession be taken. The present petitioner who is the eldest son of the late Maharaja Bahadur and his brother Brajeshwar Prasad Sahi were admittedly minors when the estate was taken by the Court of Wards. Acting under section 7 of the Act the Court of Wards purported to take charge of the person and the property of the two minor sons of the Maharaja Bahadur. The Maharaja Bahadur died on the 20th of January, 1951, and after his death the petitioner made an application to this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution, and his prayer was that a writ in the nature of mandamus or a direction or order be issued upon the Board of Revenue, Bihar, Patna, to withdraw from the management of the estate and to forbear from retaining charge of the estate, and a direction or order to that effect was also sought against the other respondents, namely, the State of Bihar, the Commissioner of Tirhut Division, Muzaffarpur, the Collector of Saran and the Additional Collector, Saran, who is now managing the Hathwa Raj under the direction and the supervision of the Court of Wards. This application was heard by a Bench of this Court, and it was dismissed on the '14th March, 1951'. The petitioner now prays that a certificate be granted to him as contemplated by Article 132 (1), Article 133 (1)(b) and Article 133(1)(c) of the Constitution of India.

(2) According to Article 132 (1), an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in the territory of India, whether in a Civil, Criminal or other proceeding, if the High Court certified that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of this Constitution. According to Article 133 (1) (a) an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court if the High Court certifies that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Court of first instance and still in dispute on appeal was and is not less than twenty thousand rupees. And according to Article 133(1)(c) an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order in a Civil Proceeding of a High Court if the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court.

(3) The learned Counsel appearing for the applicant contended before us that as the value of the estate known as the Hathwa Raj to which the applicant has succeeded on the death of his father is very much more than Rs. 20,000/- a certificate has to be granted under Article 133(1)(a). The learned Counsel further submitted that in view of the contention that has been raised by the applicant in this case it must be regarded as a case fit for appeal to the Supreme Court.

(4) The learned Government pleader who appeared for the State of Bihar contended in reply that the proceeding that was before the High Court cannot be regarded as a civil proceeding inasmuch as the Court of Wards assumed charge of the State of the late Maharaja Bahadur in the exercise of a jurisdiction which is essentially the jurisdiction of a sovereign power. The important point that arises for determination, therefore, is whether the proceeding that was before the High Court can be regarded as a civil proceeding. For determination of this question, it is necessary to know what were the questions raised and decided in the proceeding. It had been strenuously urged on behalf of the petitioner that as he had attained the age of majority in the lifetime of his father the State of Bihar or the Board of Revenue had no right to remain in charge of the estate after the estate had descended on him on his father's death. It was asserted by the petitioner that he was neither a joint proprietor of the Hathwa Raj estate during the lifetime of his father nor had he an immediate or reversionary interest in the property of his father nor was he possessed of any such property of which the Court of Wards could take charge or did, in fact, take charge under section 7 of the Court of Wards Act. The second important contention raised by the petitioner was that section 7 of the Court of Wards Act had been amended and re-enacted in a form which abrogated altogether the power of the Court of Wards to take charge of the person or property of a minor belonging to the family of a proprietor who had been declared as a disqualified proprietor on his own application. Lastly, it was contended that the extension of the minority period to 21 years would be in derogation of the fundamental rights of the petitioner to hold and possess his property and that this extension is in violation of the guarantees of the fundamental rights as indicated in Article 14 of the Constitution. These points were, however, decided against the petitioner, and it was further held that the remedy given by Article 226 was an extraordinary one and could be invoked only in exceptional circumstances by a person who made no alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise. Speaking for myself, I have not the least doubt that a proceeding in which the above-mentioned points were raised and determined is a "Civil Proceeding" of the nature contemplated by Article 133(1) of the Constitution.

(5) The expression "Civil Proceeding" has been defined in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, and the definition given there is:

"Is a process for the recovery of individual right or redress of individual wrong; inclusive, in its proper legal sense, of suits by the Crown."

In Halsbury's Laws of England the grant of a peremptory mandamus is described as a determination of the right according to the merits of a case. In Joseph Chitty's Treatise on the Law of the Prerogative of the Crown the learned author says that there must be a specific legal right, as well as the want of a specific legal remedy, in order to form an application for a mandamus and that this is substantially a civil remedy for the subject. In Stephen's Commentaries of the Laws of England it has been said that the action of Mandamus will only lie when the plaintiff has a right of action (not necessarily for damages) against the defendant and that the dividing line between the prerogative writ of mandamus and the statutory action of mandamus has not been clearly drawn but that the letter is sometimes used when it is desired to compel a local authority to levy a rate in order to satisfy the debt or other liability owing to the plaintiff. I should like to quote the following passage from the well-known book Dicey's Introduction to the study of the Law of the Constitution:

"The particular cases in which a party aggrieved by the decision of a State Court has a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States are regulated by an Act of Congress of 24th September, 1789, the twenty fifth section of which provides that 'a final judgment or decree, in any suit, in the highest court of law or equity of a State, may be brought up on error in point of law, to the Supreme Court of the United States, provided the validity of a treaty, or statute of, or authority exercised under the United States, was drawn in question in the State Court, and the decision of any State authority was drawn in question, on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision was in favour of its validity; or provided the construction of any clause of the Constitution or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under the United States, was drawn in question, and the decision was against the title, right privilege, or exemption, specially claimed under the authority of the Union.' (Kent, Commentaries, 1. (12th ed.) pp. 299, 300). Strip this enactment of its technicalities and it comes to this. A party to a case in the highest Court, say of New York, who bases his claim or defence upon an article in the Constitution or law made under it, stands in this position: If judgment be in his favour there is no further appeal; if judgment goes against him, he has a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Any lawyer can see at a glance how well devised is the arrangement to encourage State Courts in the performance of their duty as guardians of the Constitution, and further that the Supreme Court thereby becomes the ultimate arbiter of all matters affecting the Constitution."

(6) As was pointed out by his Lordship Mahajan J. in the 'Province of Bombay v. Kusaldas S. Advani', 1950 S C R 621, the expression "Sue" means the enforcement of a claim or a civil right by means of legal proceedings. His Lordship further observed that when a right is in jeopardy, and proceedings that can be adopted to put it out of jeopardy fall within the expression "Sue". The expression "suit" in the above quotation from Dicey's Law of the Constitution should, therefore, be given the meaning that has been given to the expression by his Lordship Mahajan J. Under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay could make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne, within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, by any person holding a public office, whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any corporation or inferior Court of Judicature, and the conditions to be specified before making an order under Section 45 are laid down in Clauses (a) to (e) of the proviso to the section. If an application is made by some person whose property, franchise or personal right would be injured by the forbearing or doing (as the case may be) of the act complained of, it cannot be urged that such an application is not an application for the redress of a civil wrong.

(7) The learned Government pleader, however, relied on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in 'Secretary of State v. Shreegobinda Chaudhuri', 59 Cal 1289, in which it was held that the jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Wards is the exercise essentially of sovereign power, and that a suit for damages does not lie against the Secretary of State for India in Council for misfeasance, wrongs, negligence or omissions of duties of managers appointed by the Court of Wards. In my opinion, this ruling has got no application in this present case before us in which it was strenuously contended by the applicant that the provisions of the Court of Wards Act as also of the Indian Majority Act in so far as they purport to extend the period of minority of a person to 21 years have become void from the date the Constitution came into force, because these provisions are in conflict with the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution. It is certainly open to a citizen of the State to contend that a particular provision of law in void because it conflicts with a particular provision of the Constitution of India and a proceeding in which such a question comes to be determined must be regarded as a civil proceeding. The petitioner also contended that he had no reversionary or immediate interest in the impartible estate of the Hathwa Raj within the meaning of Section 7 of the Court of Wards Act and that the expression "reversionary interest" cannot cover the right, if any, available to the petitioner during the lifetime of his father. A proceeding in which this and the other contentions raised came to be determined must be regarded as a civil proceeding, and in this connection I may also refer to Article 31 of the Patna High Court Letters Patent according to which any person could appeal to His Majesty from any final judgment, decree or order of this Court made on appeal or made in any final decree, judgment or order in the exercise of the original jurisdiction by the Judges of this Court .

(8) Recently, a Full Bench of this Court had to consider the question as to whether the aggrieved party in a Sales Tax case decided by the High Court has the right to apply for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, and Article 133 of the Constitution of India came to be considered by their Lordships (See 'Tobacco Manufacturers (India Ltd.) v. the State', 30 Patna 174. The majority decision is that any judgment which the High Court pronounces in regard to the question of law referred to it by the Revenue authorities is not a judgment in the technical sense of the term but merely a sort of opinion or advice given to the Revenue-authorities. Sarjoo Prosad, J., who delivered the majority judgment observed that the words "judgment" "decree" and "final order" are common to both the Articles 132 and 133 of the Constitution and that it cannot be doubted that Aricle 132 applies to all proceedings, civil and criminal. His Lordship further observed that the term "Judgment" in Article 133 has been used in the same sense as it was used in Section 205 of the Government of India Act and the dropping of the word "final" before the word "judgment" did not make any difference whatsoever. For reasons which are not relevant to the point raised and agitated before us their Lordships held that a judgment of the High Court pronounced on a reference under Section 21 (3) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act 1944 cannot be called a judgment within the meaning of Article 133 of the Constitution of India so as to give the aggrieved party a right to appeal to the Supreme Court and that the proceedings in the Sales Tax case are not civil proceedings within the meaning of Article 133 of the Constitution, but the principles indicated in the judgment undoubtedly go to support my view that a proceeding of the nature with which we are concerned in this case must be regarded as a civil proceeding. Shearer, J. who differed from the two other Judges observed that in construing any Constitution Act, the Courts are bound to give it a broad and liberal interpretation, and that for that reason the words 'judgment", "decree" and "order" in Article 133 (1) are not to be construed distributively. His Lordship further pointed out that the phrase "any judgment, decree or final order made in a civil proceedings" must be regarded as a single compendious phrase, embracing every decision in a civil proceeding which is not a final but is merely a preliminary or an interlocutory order. We are not here concerned with the question whether the expression embraces a decision which is a preliminary or an interlocutory order. Here we are concerned with the final order in a proceeding, and the only question is whether it is a civil proceeding or a proceeding of another nature. The view which has been taken by all the three Judges in this Sales Tax case leaves no room for doubt that a proceeding of the nature with which we are concerned in this present application must be regarded as a civil proceeding.

(9) There are certain other observations of Shearer, J., with which I find myself in respectful agreement, and they are as follows:

"The Constitution, it appears to me, proceeds on the assumption that proceedings are either civil proceedings or criminal proceedings. In England proceedings arising out of references made under fiscal statutes are governed by a special procedure and are heard by the King's Bench Division on the revenue side. Nevertheless, they are, I believe, regarded as a civil proceeding. It has to be remembered that the Constituent Assembly was legislating not for today, nor for tomorrow, but for an indefinite future, and it presumably realised that at some time or other a question might be raised as to whether a proceeding was or was not a civil proceeding. More particularly, it may perhaps have considered that such a doubt might arise regarding proceedings in connection with one of the writs which the High Courts are empowered to issue under Article 226 (1). In England, a doubt appears at one time to have arisen as to whether proceedings in 'quo warranto' were civil proceedings and Section 15 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1884, was in consequence, enacted providing that they should be deemed to be civil proceedings, whether for purposes of appeal or otherwise."

Thus, in my opinion, this Full Bench decision is a decision which lends considerable support, to the view that the proceeding arising out of the application of the present applicant for a writ of mandamus was a civil proceeding. In this view of the matter, I would grant leave to appeal under Article 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution, and it is no more necessary to determine whether a certificate should or should not be granted under Article 132 (1) or Article 133 (1) (c).

(10) In the result, I would allow the application and grant leave to the applicant to appeal to the Supreme Court against the decision in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 79 of 1951. The applicant's counsel prayed for expediting the matter, and the applicant is prepared to deposit the security and the necessary costs at once. After the deposit is made the matter should be expedited. and the paper-book should be prepared as early as possible.

(11) REUBEN, J: I agree. The fact that the proceeding in relation to which this petition has been filed was a proceeding under Article 226 of the Constitution does not by itself make Article 133 inapplicable. 'Bihar-Bukhtearpur Light Railway Co. v. District Board of Patna', S. C. Appeal No. 57 of 1950, related to such a proceeding. The Light Railway Co. had applied to this Court under Article 226 for a mandamus against the District Board restraining the District Board from taking physical possession of the Light Railway. At the hearing, the parties came to an agreement and the case was disposed of without an adjudication. In spite of the agreement, the District Board subsequently took possession of the Railway and the Light Railway Co. applied to this Court for a writ of contempt against the District Board for an alleged breach of an undertaking given to the High Court and for a mandamus to direct the District Board to restore possession of the Light Railway to the Company. The petition of the Light Railway Co., was dismissed by the High Court and leave to appeal against this order was given to it under Article 133, Clause (1), sub-clause (c) of the Constitution. It has been sought to distinguish that case on the ground that it was between private parties whereas in the present case the proceeding was directed against the State of Bihar in relation to action under the Court of Wards Act, that is action which it is empowered to take in its sovereign capacity (vide 'Secretary of State v. Shreegobinda Chaudhuri', 59 Cal 1289.) I cannot agree that the capacity in which the State is empowered to perform the action which is challenged will determine the nature of the proceeding in which that action is challenged. For instance, in the case just cited it was held that a Civil Suit would not lie against the State because the action taken by it under the Court of Wards Act was taken in its sovereign capacity. The suit, however, was a civil proceeding nevertheless. So also was it in 'East India Co. v. Syed Ali', 7 M I A 555, where it was held for a similar reason that the suit would not lie.

(12) In the Letters Patent of the Patna High Court there are provisions relating to the different kinds of jurisdiction which the High Court has authority to exercise, namely, civil jurisdiction, criminal jurisdiction, admiralty jurisdiction, testamentary and intestate jurisdiction and matrimonial jurisdiction. A provision for appeals to the Privy Council is contained in Clause 31 of the Letters Patent, similar to the provision in Clause (1) of Article 133 of the Constitution except that the limiting valuation is Rs. 10,000 instead of Rs. 20,000. The provision in the Letters Patent relates to "any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction." Similar provisions are contained in the Letters Patent of the other High Courts in India. The provisions for appeals to the Privy Council, therefore, were not confined to proceedings in the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary civil jurisdiction as defined in the Letters Patent. Taking this into account, I do not think the words "a civil proceeding" in Article 133 of the Constitution should be interpreted in this narrow sense. There is no reason why the words should not be interpreted in their natural sense as meaning a proceeding of a civil nature.

C. P. Sinha J. — These two sets of second appeals arise out of suits for bhauli rent and have been heard together because they were referred to a Division Bench & were ordered to be heard together, as they involved common question of law. These appeals were accordingly heard together and are being disposed of by this judgment. In second appeals Nos. 343 to 347 of 1948, the claim for bhauli rent was for the years 1352 and 1353Fs. There was plea of payment in each of the suits which gave rise to these appeals. The quantity and kinds of produce were also challenged. The first Court decreed the suits in part with proportionate costs by its judgment dated 15-4-1947. There were appeals to the lower appellate Court and the appeals were dismissed with costs on 15-12-1947. The second appeals to this Court were filed in the year 1948. After the institution of the rent suits, the tenants defendants had made applications for commutation of their bhauli rent into nakdi, under the provisions of S. 40, Bihar Tenancy Act, before the Revenue Court. The commutation proceedings came to an end on 20-3-1950 and the rents of the holdings in suit were commuted into nakdi. According to the order of the learned Revenue Officer, the commuted rent is to take effect from the fasli year 1353.

[2] An application had been filed under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P C., along with the schedule of the commuted rent, for taking this schedule into evidence in this appeals.

[3] The points taken in this set of appeals are, that so far as the decree for bhauli rent for the year 1353Fs. is concerned, it should be set aside on the ground that the rent has been commuted into nakdi by a Court of competent jurisdiction, since, 1353Fs, as already indicated, and secondly, that the documentary and oral evidence as produced by the plaintiffs-respondents, in support of their case of the kinds & quantities of produce, having been disbelieved, the Courts below have committed an error of law in giving a decree to the plaintiffs, at a rate higher than one admitted by the defendants-appellants. Point 1 is common to both sets of second appeals mentioned above and the decision on this point in these appeals will govern the other appeal as well.

[4] It has been argued for the appellants that under S. 40, sub-cl. (5), Bihar Tenacy Act, the Revenue Court had full jurisdiction to order the time from which the commuted rent is to take effect and therefore, if the Revenue Officer has ordered in this case that the commuted rent shall take effect from the year 1353Fs, the landlords are not entitled to get a decree for rent other than the rent commuted for that year and that this Court, as a Court of appeal having the powers same as the powers of the Court of first instance should take notice of the commuted rent, the order for which came into existence during the pendency of the second appeals. It has, however, been urged by the learned Counsel for the respondents. that the rights of the parties should be decided on the materials as they did exist when the rent suits were filed and that this Court should not take into account the order of the Commutation Officer, which was not in existence on the date of the suits.

[4a] The learned counsel for the respondents has relied upon a decision of a Bench of this Court in Chaman Singh v. Inderdeo, F. A. No. 118 of 1922) which is an unreported case. That decision, no doubt, gives some support to his contention, but, in my opinion, that judgment has not discussed the effect of the provisions contained in sub-cl. (5) of S. 40, Bihar Tenancy Act. Their Lordships held, without any reference to or consideration of subcls. (5) & (6) of S. 40, Bihar Tenancy Act, that the decision of the Revenue Court cannot affect the decree of the civil Court when the revenue Court took up the question of commutation after the institution of the present suit. As I have said above, S. 40, sub-cl. (5), B. T. Act, gives jurisdiction to the Revenue Court to fix the time from which the commuted rent is to take effect and S. 40, sub-cl. (6) says that the decision under sub-cl. (5) of S. 40 shall be final subject to appeal to the prescribed authority; in case of an appeal the appellate order shall be final. In this case, there was no appeal and therefore, the order under sub-cl. (5) of S. 40 of the Act became final between the parties. The decision, therefore, in the said first appeal can be distinguished on this ground. According to S. 107, Civil P. C., an appellate Court has the power to determine a case finally and it has the same powers

& has to perform, as nearly as may be, the same duties as are conferred and imposed by the Code on the Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein. Then again, under the provisions of O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C., the appellate Court has power "to pass any decree & make any order which ought to have been passed or made & to pass or make such further or other decree or order, as the case may require."

In view of these provisions contained in the Civil P. C., I have no doubt that the appellate Court to finally decide the case and pronounce upon the rights of the parties must take notice of the events subsequent to the filing of the suit & modulate its judgment accordingly.

[5] I am fortified in this view, which I take, by the judgment of their Lordships of the Federal Court in Shyamakant v. Rambhajan, 20 Pat. L. Tim. 473. In this case, the question that their Lordships had to decide was, whether S. 16, Bihar Money lenders Act (III [3] of 1938) was void as being repugnant to the provision of an "existing Indian law" within the meaning of S. 107, Government of India Act, 1935. The High Court had held that S. 16 of the Impugned Act, was ultra vires as it was repugnant to O. 21, R. 66, Civil P. C., the existing Indian law, within the meaning of S. 107, Government of India Act, 1935. When the appeal against the judgment was being heard by their Lordships of the Federal Court, it was brought to their notice that since the above decision of the High Court, the Bihar Legislature had repealed certain provisions of the impugned Act of 1938 & had substantially re-enacted them in the Bihar Money lenders (Regulations of Transactions) Act, 1939 (Act VII [7] of 1939); and that this Act had been reserved for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General; & that it had received His Excellency's assent & that it had come into force on 3rd May. By reason of the provisions of S. 107, sub-cl. (2), Government of India Act, 1935 the new Act could not have been challenged on the ground of its repugnancy to an 'existing Indian law' and it was, therefore, contended before their Lordships that as Ss. 13 & 14 of the new Act, which, in substance, re-enacted Ss. 16 and 17 of the Act of 1938, were retrospective in effect the appellant was entitled to take advantage of the provisions of the new Act & in that view of the matter, the discussion of the validity of Ss. 16 and 17 of the earlier Act was merely academic. Their Lordships, after having held that the new Act was retrospective in its effect, made the following observation :

"Accordingly, it only remains to consider whether this Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction can remit the case to the H. C. with a declaration that there shall be substituted for the judgment, decree or order of the High Court a judgment, decree or order which recognises the state of the law as it now exists without discussing the law as it existed at the time when the High Court had seisin of the case. We are of opinion that Ss. 205 & 209 (1), Constitution Act give us this power. There is no doubt that a High Court possesses such a power in dealing with appeals from Courts subordinate to itself ; see S. 107 & O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C, & we think that, thus in the absence of any evidence of a contrary intention it is to be assumed that the powers of this Court as a Court of Appeal are not less wide."

[6] I have underlined (here italicised) the important lines in the above quotation to emphasise that an appellate Court has the power to recognise the state of law as it exists at the time it is passing the judgment. Their Lordships also relied upon the Privy Council case in K. C. Mukherjee v. Mt. Ramratan, 17 Pat. L. Tim. 25 in which case their Lordships of the Privy Council did take notice of the newly enacted Ss. 26 (n) & 26 (o) which had come into existence during the pendency of the appeal before His Majesty in Council. If the appellate Court can take notice of a change in the law made during the pendency of the appeal or after the institution of the suit, then there is greater reason to hold that the appellate Court can take judicial notice of a final decree or order binding on the parties and affecting the matter in dispute. It must be held, therefore, that this Court as a Court of Appeal is entitled to take into consideration the order of commutation which was passed on 20.3.1950 during the pendency of these second appeals. That the Revenue Court under sub-cl. (5) of S. 40, has power to give retrospective effect to its order, is clear on the language of the section itself and it has been so held by a Division Bench of this Court in Enayat Khan v. Bipin Bihari, 10 Pat. L. Tim. 107. In this view of the matter, I do not feel bound by the observations made in the judgment of the first appeal aforesaid.

[7] The application filed by the appellants under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C. should, therefore, be allowed and the order and the schedule of the Commutation Officer should be admitted into evidence.

[8] It must, therefore, be held that the decrees for rent for the year 1353Fs. as passed by the Court below must be set aside and in its place decrees be substituted at the rate mentioned in the schedule aforesaid.

[9] The other point urged by the learned counsel for the appellants is that the Courts below have erred in law in passing a decree at a rate higher than the one admitted by the defendants after having disbelieved the documentary and oral evidence given by the plaintiffs. I have gone carefully through the judgments by which the oral evidence of the plaintiffs has been disbelieved. That being so, it cannot be said that finding of the Court below about the quantity & kinds of produce is not supported by any evidence on record. I would accordingly reject this contention of the appellants and hold that the decree of the Court below in respect of the arrears of rent for the year 1352Fs is well-founded and the judgment and the decree of the Court below must be affirmed to that extent. The result is that the appeals are allowed to the extent mentioned above in respect of the claim for arrears of rent for the year 1353Fs. In rent suit No. 156/46 (S. A. 343/48) the commuted rent is Rs. 16 per year for the holding; in rent suit No. 155/46 (S. A. 344/48) the commuted rent of the holding is Rs. 7-2-0, in rent suit No. 153/46 (S. A. 345/48) the commuted rent is Rs. 9-1-0; in rent suit No. 157/46 (S. A. 346/48) the commuted rent is Rs. 2-2-10 dams and in rent suit No. 154/46 (S. A. 347/48) the commuted rent is Rs. 5 4-10 dams. These figures have been given to us by the learned counsel for the appellants from the schedule and they have not been controverted by the other side. Office will, therefore, prepare a decree according to the above mentioned rent in the several appeals for the year 1353Fs. The appeals are, therefore, allowed to the extent indicated above, but, in the circumstances of the case, there will be no order for costs of this Court.

[10] Second Appeal 1942/48 arises out of rent suit No. 37/47 and was for the recovery of arrears of produce rent for the year 1354Fs. In this case, the rent schedule prepared after the commutation of rent by the Revenue Officer was filed during the pendency of the appeal in the lower appellate Court and prayer was made for taking this rent schedule as additional evidence in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge, while disposing of this part of the case says:

"The defence contention that the rent has been commuted into nakdi since the passing of the decree by the lower Court is not supported by evidence as the rent schedule could not be admitted into evidence in the appellate stage."

The Court below was entirely in the wrong in holding that this rent schedule which came into existence after the judgment of the first Court, could not be taken into evidence at the appellate stage. As I have said above while disposing of the other batch of second appeals, it is the duty of the appellate Court, under the provisions of S. 107 and O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C., to take into account any subsequent event which might affect the rights of the parties and which may have come into existence at or before the passing of the final decree by the appellate Court. I have held above that the landlords respondents cannot get a decree for produce rent after the rent has been commuted by the Revenue Officer. In this case also, the rent having been commuted into nakdi, the decree of the Court below for produce rent for the year in suit must, therefore, stand vacated and in its place the landlords will be entitled to get a decree for rent for the year in suit according to the rent schedule. The office will, therefore, prepare a decree for the year in suit according to the commuted rent as per rent schedule to be found on the record of the case.

[11] The appeal is, therefore, allowed, but in the circumstances of this case, there will be no order for costs of this Court.

Agarwala C. J. — These three Letters Patent Appeals are from a decision of Mukharji J. and arise out of three suits which were tried together. The suits were instituted by usufructuary mortgagees for recovery of rent, one of them being for part of the year 1350 and the other two for part of the year 1351. The defence was that the rent had been paid to the mortgagor. The fact that the mortgagor had been paid the rent is not in dispute. The only question is the effect of the payment to him.

[2] On behalf of the appellants, reliance is placed on the decision in Bibi Mukhduman v. Khairat Ahmed, 3 Pat. L. W. 245. The facts of that case were that A executed an ijara in favour of B and the latter's name was thereupon registered under the Land Registration Act as mortgagee. B, however, failed to obtain possession. Thereafter, the property was sold for arrears of rental and was purchased by C, whose name was registered as proprietor. B then sued the tenent for rent. The defence was that the payment had been made to C, and that as B was out of possession, he was justified in paying to C. It was held that the tenant was not entitled to resist the claim of B, for, although C was registered as proprietor, he was obviously not entitled to recover rent in view of the existence of a mortgage in favour of B, who was registered as mortgagee in possession. The facts of that case are indistinguishable from the facts of the present case. The respondents, however, rely on the decision in Jadoo Potedar v. Champabati, 23 Pat. 858 where, on a consideration of the provisions of S. 60, Tenancy Act and S. 79, Land Registration Act, it was observed that the effect of these two sections was that the moment a tenant produces a receipt, granted by a person who is registered as proprietor, manager or mortgagee of an estate or of his agent authorised to receive rent, that receipt is sufficient discharge for the rent, irrespective of who was in fact entitled to it. This observation, however, goes beyond the necessity of the case. The facts of that case were that the receipt had been granted by the Sadhaua Pataudar who was in possession. The observation referred to, therefore, must be regarded as obiter. The facts of the present case being similar to those of the case in Bibi Mukhduman v. Khairat Ahmad, 3 Pat. L. W. 245 I would follow that case, with the result that the decision of the learned Single Judge who decided these appeals must be reversed and the plaintiffs' suits decreed with costs throughout.

[3] Meredith J. — I agree. The decision in Bibi Mukhduman v. Khairat Ahmad, 3 Pat. L. W. 245 appears to me directly in point. It is a decision of a Division Bench of this Court and is binding upon us In any event, with respect, I think it is right. It seems to me that once the mortgagee is registered as in possession under S. 44, Land Registration Act, then as long as that entry stands, the proprietor is not entitled to realise rent. Nor is any one entitled to plead payment to him; because in substance his name as rent receiver must be regarded as displaced by that of the mortgagee in Register D and the proprietor is relegated to the position of a third person under S. 60. If he redeems the mortgage, it is his duty within six months to get the entry in Register D altered in his favour so as to displace that of the mortgagee, and it is the duty of the tenants not to pay him unless and until they find that the entry has been altered in this respect.

('46) F. A. No. 200 of 1946 (Pat.). [Pr. 6]

Judgment —This first appeal is by the plaintiffs in a partition suit. When the case was taken up, our attention was drawn to the fact that the Stamp Reporter had reported a deficit court fee due on the plaint. The stamp report was to the effect that a number of the properties sought to be partitioned stood in the names of two ladies, one of them grandmother of the parties and the other, defendant 4, the widow of one of the members of the joint family. Having regard to certain decisions of this Court, the Stamp Reporter said that it was necessary for the plaintiffs to displace the apparent title of the ladies before they could ask for these properties to be partitioned. The total consideration of the documents relating to these properties came to Rs. 19,223, and, the plaintiffs' share being one-third, the value of that share would be Rs. 6,407-10 8. Accordingly, he said that the plaintiffs had got to pay ad valorem court-fees amounting to Rs. 609 6-0 on the memo. of appeal in this Court and a further court-fee amounting to Rs. 487 8-0 on the plaint.

[2] The matter, on the objection of the plaintiffs, came before the learned Taxing Officer in regard to the reported deficit in this Court. He accepted the stamp report and called on the plaintiffs to make up the deficit. Instead of doing so, however, the plaintiffs amended the memo. of appeal cutting out the prayer for relief in regard to these particular properties, so that, so far as this Court was concerned the appeal in its amended form could proceed on the court-fees paid. But the matter of the deficit due on the plaint still remains, and under S. 12 read with S. 10, Court-fees Act, we have to deal with that matter before the appeal can be heard.

[3] In my opinion, the view taken by the Stamp Reporter and the learned Taxing Officer is quite correct, and is fully supported by Division Bench decisions of this Court which are binding upon us. The question came before a Division Bench in First Appeal No. 64 of 1923, and the Bench held that, so far as the properties sought to be partitioned stood in the name of strangers to the coparcenary, the suit must be regarded as a suit for declaration of title and consequential relief, and consequently ad valorem court-fees were payable. The matter was different in the case of properties standing in the names of members of the coparcenary.

[4] The question came again before a Division Bench in Banku Behary v. Chatur Pandey, 5 Pat. L. Tim. 655 : A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 640. The Bench referred to First Appeal No. 64 of 1923 with approval and reiterated that in regard to properties standing in the name of male members of the joint family no ad valorem fee was payable, but it was payable in respect of properties standing in the name of strangers, for, it was necessary for the plaintiff to displace the apparent title of those strangers.

[5] Our attention has been drawn to certain unreported decisions. One is in Civil Revision No. 188 of 1945. There two learned Judges reiterated the principle that, so far as properties standing in the name of strangers who are claiming the properties as their own are concerned, the plaintiff in a suit for partition must pay ad valorem court fees. They went on to observe, however, and this is relied on by the appellants, that the position is entirely different where the plaintiff alleges in the plaint that the properties, though standing in the name of strangers, belong to the joint family and the strangers are alleged to be mere benamidars or name-lenders. In such a case, they said, the plaintiff should not be required to pay ad valorem court-fees because the defendants, after being served with notice of the plaint, did not claim the properties as their own. In such a case, they said, the plaintiff was merely giving information to the Court as to what were the properties which he was seeking to partition. The possession and title to the properties are claimed by the plaintiff jointly with the other defendants.

[5a] With the greatest respect we find it difficult to follow this reasoning. The question of the court-fees has to be determined upon the frame of the plaint, and it is not permissible in deciding that question to look into the attitude taken by the defendants or the decision of the Court on the question of title. If such a test were to be applied, then, even according to this decision, ad valorem court-fees would be payable in the present case, because it appears that defendant 4, in whose name the properties stand, does in fact claim the properties as belonging to herself exclusively. That, however, as I have said, is not a proper test in determining this question. The decision of the Court of First Appeal No. 64 of 1923 is clear and binding upon us, and no view expressed by the subsequent Division Bench can alter that position. If any subsequent Bench considers the decision wrong, the only course is to refer the question to a Full Bench. But one Division Bench cannot be taken to have overruled another.

[6] The same remarks apply to the other case relied on First Appeal No. 200 of 1946. In considering the same question, the Bench in this case expressly purports to follow Banku Behary v. Chatur Pandey, 5 Pat. L. Tim. 655, but, if I may say so again with respect, the observation made are not consistent with the decision in that case. The learned Judges say that, while ad valorem court-fees are payable in regard to properties standing in the name of persons not members of the joint family, still, in so far as items of property standing in the names of two women, whose husbands are members of the joint family, are concerned, ad valorem court-fee cannot be required in view of the decision in Banku Behary v. Chatur Pandey, 5 Pat. L. Tim. 655. But in that case the Bench was referring to property standing in the names of the members of the coparcenary. In the present case the acquisitions were all made prior to 1938. There was no question, therefore, of female members of the family being members of the coparcenary. They might be members of the family, but they were strangers to the coparcenary. There could be no presumption in the case of properties standing in the name of such ladies that they were joint family properties, and clearly the plaintiffs could not get such properties partitioned without a prior decision on the question of title—without a decision that the females were not owners, but benamidars.

[7] For the appellants distinction is sought to be made between strangers to the family and female members of the family. But quite clearly the real distinction is between those who are members of the coparcenary and those who are not members of the coparcenary, and the ladies in the present case fall into the latter category.

[8] Our attention has been drawn to a decision of this Court, to which one of us was a party, in Ramautar Sao v. Ram Gobind Sao, I. L. R. 20 Pat. 780 in which it was pointed out that, while in the case of partition suit, which was actually in the nature of a title suit, ad valorem court-fees were payable, yet in applying this principle caution must be observed so as not to import into the plaint anything which it does not really contain either actually or by necessary implication. In construing a plaint the Court must take it as it is, not as it thinks it ought to have been. A relief not asked for cannot be imported so as to charge court fee thereon.

[9] That, in our opinion, is perfectly correct. But it is necessary to remember that the reference is to what the plaint contains either actually or by necessary implication. If a plaint by necessary implication contains a prayer for adjudication on a question of title, then clearly the proper court-fees must be paid for in respect of that adjudication. In the present case the prayer for adjudication on this question of benami is most clearly present by necessary implication. Indeed it might almost be called express. In para. 3 of the plaint it is recited that owing to the common ancestor, Babu Narain Singh, being a Government servant, transactions were not carried on in his name in spite of his being the karta, but properties were purchased in the names of the two ladies in question. Nevertheless, all the members of the joint family had been in possession of those properties, and those properties constituted joint family properties in which the plaintiffs had one-third share. Here is a quite clear allegation of benami, and in the relief portion of the plaint it is asked that on adjudication of the above facts the plaintiffs' share to the extent of one-third in the properties sought to be partitioned may be got partitioned by deputing a Commissioner. The plaintiffs have quite clearly asked for an adjudication of this question of title and indeed they had to get an adjudication of that question before partition of such properties could be ordered.

[10] The position, therefore, is that we must follow the Division Bench decision of this Court in which the matter was first expressly decided, and, apart from that, we have no doubt in our minds that in a case like this ad valorem court-fees are payable as held by the learned Taxing Officer.

[11] It is sought to challenge the correctness of the figures arrived at by the Stamp Reporter. But there is no substance in the contention that his figures are wrong. Para. 4 of the plaint says that the details of the properties in question are given in various schedules to the plaint, and it is added that there may be other properties which the plaintiffs do not know about and which it is obligatory on the defendants to disclose. The Stamp Reporter has simply added up the value of the properties specified in these schedules, and it is not said that there is any mistake in his addition.

[12] The reported deficit on the plaint is Rs. 487-8-0. This sum must be paid within one month from today, failing which the appeal will stand dismissed without further reference to a Bench. We feel that, as the appeal has been pending since 1945, it is not possible to allow any period greater than one month for making up the deficit.

A. F. A. O. No. 113 of 1948, D/- 28-2 1950.

(a) Houses and Rents—Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (III [3] of 1947), S. 11—Decree for ejectment obtained prior to Act—Execution of—S. 11 whether a bar.

Section 11 is a bar to the execution of a decree for ejectment obtained in a civil Court, even if it has been obtained before the Act had come into force for, the provisions of S. 11 (i) indicate that it applies to pending actions inasmuch as in express terms it protects a tenant from eviction in execution of a decree: A. (b) Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective operation of Act distinguished from interference with existing rights—Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble.

If an Act provides that as on a past date the law should be taken to have been that which it was not, that Act would be retrospective. However, the retrospective operation of an Act is one thing & interference with the existing rights is another. The latter deals with the question as to the ambit and scope of the Act and not the date from which the new Act is to be taken as having been the law.

When the question is whether a provision which prohibits the execution of certain decrees applies to all decrees or only such decrees as were passed after the Act was passed, the question falls in the latter class. [Paras 4, 8]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect—Pending actions.

When the law is altered during the pendency of an action the rights of the parties have to be decided according to the law as it stood when the action was begun unless the new statute shows a clear intention to vary such rights. [Para 8]

Ramaswami J.—The question which arises for decision in this appeal is whether the appellants are entitled to execute the decree for ejectment against the respondent with respect to a house in the town of Patna.

[2] The material facts are not controverted. In 1944, the appellants instituted a suit and on 22-4-1944 obtained a decree for ejectment and for arrears of rent against the respondent. The appellants applied for executing the decree but in view of certain objections taken by the respondent the execution was delayed. The latest contention of the respondent was that in view of S. 11, Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act (Act III [3] of 1947) the appellants cannot obtain possession of the house. The contention has been upheld by the lower Courts.

[3] In support of the appeal Mr. M. Rahman addressed the argument that the Bihar Buildings Control Act (Act III [3] of 1947) was not retrospective in its effect, that the appellants had instituted the suit and obtained the decree long before the date when the Act came into force and that the lower Courts ought not to have refused to execute the decree. Learned counsel referred to Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 in which the Full Bench expressly held that the definition of the word "tenant" in S. 2 (h) of the Act was not retrospective in its operation. In the order of reference Sinha and Mahabir Prasad JJ. noticed the conflict between Shiveswar v. Parmeshwar, 27 Pat. 1 and Sant Kuer v. Ganesh, 27 Pat. 695. In the former case, Manohar Lall and Imam JJ. held that Bihar Act III [3] of 1947 was not retrospective. In the latter case Imam and Narayan JJ. decided on similar facts that the provisions of Bihar Act III [3] of 1947 were retrospective. In the order of reference therefore the following question was formulated for the decision of the Full Bench whether the definition of the word "tenant" in Bihar Act III [3] of 1947 or the Bihar Ordinance II of 1946, which it "replaced is retrospective in its operation". All the Judges of the Full Bench answered this question to the effect that the definition was not retrospective. At page 59 the learned Chief Justice states :

"I must confess that I do not understand the purport of this question. Obviously the definition of 'tenant' in the Ordinance of 1946 and the Act of 1947 did not apply to the House-rent Control Order of 1942. Neither the Ordinance nor the Act purports to amend the definition of 'tenant' in the Order of 1942, either retrospectively or otherwise."

Meredith J. (as he then was) states as follows :

"Question (1)—I find nothing in the definition of 'tenant' or anywhere in the Act to make the definition retrospective. The wide definition, in my opinion, only comes into force with the Act. Section 11 of the Act is relied on. The first sub-section provides that : 'Notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary and subject to the provisions of S. 12, where a tenant is in possession of any building, he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise except' in certain specified cases. I do not think this should be taken to enact anything more than it expressly says, and what it says in effect is that from 15-3-1947, the tenant cannot be evicted, except under the Act, even in execution of a decree. That is to say, if a landlord has obtained a decree before that date, he cannot execute it after that date. If he has a suit pending on that date, then the Act will be retrospective in this sense only that the Court cannot give decree for eviction except under the conditions specified in sub-s. (1). That follows from the use of the words 'he shall not be liable to be evicted, which may be taken to mean that no decree for eviction shall be passed. If any decree is passed, it is useless because it cannot be executed."

As a member of the Full Bench I had also held that the definition of the word "tenant" in the Act was not retrospective.

[4] But the authority of the Full Bench case is of no avail to the appellants. For the question to be determined in this appeal is not whether S. 2 (h) of the Act is retrospective but whether the execution of the decree is barred under S. 11 (1), Bihar Buildings Control Act of 1947. Section 11 (1) enacts :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary and subject to the provisions of S. 12, where a tenant is in possession of any building, he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom whether in execution of a decree or otherwise. except—(a) in the case of a month to month tenant, for non-payment of rent or breach of the conditions of the tenancy, or for sub-letting the building or any portion thereof without the consent of the landlord, or if he is an employee of the landlord occupying the building as an employee, on his ceasing to be in such employment. . . ."

In construing this section it is of importance to notice at the outset that retrospective operation is one matter and interference with the existing rights is another. If an Act provides that as on a past date the law should be taken to have been that which it was not, that Act would, in my opinion, be retrospective. That is not the case in this appeal. The question is whether a certain provision of the Act affects the execution of all decrees or only some decrees, namely, decrees granted after the Act had come into force. The question is as to the ambit and scope of the Act and not as to the date as from which the new law, as enacted by the Act is to be taken to have been the law. In West v. Gwynne, (1911) 2 Ch. 1, Buckley L. J. states:

"Take the case of a contract to pay money upon the event of a wager, or the case of an insurance against a risk which an Act subsequently declares to be one in respect of which the assured shall not have an insurable interest. In such a case, if the event has happened before the Act is passed so that at the moment when the Act comes into operation a debt exists, an investigation whether the transaction is struck at by the Act involves an investigation whether the Act is retrospective. Such was the point which arose in Moon v. Durden, (1848) 2 Ex. 22 and in Knight v. Lee, (1893) 1 Q. B. 41. But if at the date of the passing of the Act the event has not happened, then the operation of the Act in forbidding the subsequent coming into existence of a debt is not a retrospective operation, but is an interference with existing rights in that it destroys A's right in an event to become a creditor of B."

[5] In the present case, the question is whether on the proper construction of S. 11 of the Act the right of the decree-holder appellants has been interfered with. The language of the section is perfectly general :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary where a tenant is in possession of any building, he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom whether in execution of a decree or otherwise."

The section has unqualified effect and there is nothing in the section itself to confine it to decrees passed subsequent to the Act. The term "tenant" in S. 11 ought also to be construed with reference to S. 2 (h) which is to the following effect :

"'Tenant' means any person by whom, or on whose account, rent is payable for a building and includes a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour."

Section 11 (2) of the Act is also important. It states :

"A landlord who seeks to evict his tenant under sub s. (1) shall apply to the Controller for a direction in that behalf. If the Controller, after giving the tenant a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the application, is satisfied that the tenant is liable to be evicted under the provisions of sub-s. (1), he shall make an order directing the tenant to put the landlord in possession of the building and if the Controller is not so satisfied he shall make an order rejecting the application."

It is manifest that this section creates a new jurisdiction and has provided a new procedure for eviction of tenants. In Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 the Full Bench indeed held that the civil Court has no jurisdiction in view of S. 11 of the Act to make a decree for possession. In my opinion, therefore, S. 11 of the Act is a bar to the execution of a decree, even if it had been obtained before the Act had come into force. The contention of the appellants in this respect must fail.

[6] Mr. M. Rahman made reference also to Shiveshwar v. Parmeshwar, 27 Pat. 1 in which a Bench of this Court held that the provisions of the Bihar House Rent Control Act of 1947 were not retrospective. But the material facts are to be distinguished. In that case the plaintiff had obtained a decree against the defendants for ejectment from the house and for arrears of rent. The suit was instituted on 3-5 41 and the decree was pronounced on 23-12-43. While the appeal was pending in the High Court the Bihar Buildings Control Act of 1947 came into force. On behalf of the appellants, it was argued that the decree ought to be set aside on the ground that they were protected by S. 2 (h) and also by S. 11 Cl. (1) (a), Bihar Buildings Control Act of 1947. The High Court refused to accept this contention on the ground that the provisions were not retrospective and held that the decree obtained by the landlord cannot be set aside. To my mind this decision is, with great respect correct upon the facts of that case; for it is manifest that S. 11 only bars the execution of a decree for ejectment, obtained by the plaintiff before the passing of the Act. This section does not warrant the High Court in appeal to interfere or set aside such a decree. In the present case, however, it is manifest that S. 11 (1) (a) is directly applicable and it must be held that the decree-holder cannot obtain possession of the house in execution of the decree. For these reasons, I should dismiss this appeal with costs.

[7] Narayan J.—I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother. The decree under execution is a decree for ejectment from a shop and it was passed on 22-4-44. The application for execution was registered as Execution Case No. 20 of 1944 and this execution case is still pending, though by virtue of an order passed in a suit brought by the judgment-debtor for setting aside the decree for ejectment the execution had been stayed for some time. The judgment-debtor filed an objection in this execution case to the effect that according to the provisions of S. 11, Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947, he is not liable to be ejected. This Act is in pari materia with Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Ordinance 2 of 1946 and sub s. 11 (1) of this Act lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in any agreement or law to the contrary and subject to the provisions of S. 12, where a tenant is in possession of any building, he shall not be liable to be evicted therefrom, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise except for certain reasons which have been mentioned in the section. Sub-s. (2) provides that a landlord who seeks to evict his tenant under sub-s (1) shall apply to the Controller for a direction in that behalf and the rest of the sub-section lays down the procedure which the Controller has to follow. If this section is applicable to the present case, the decree-holders cannot eject the judgment-debtor in spite of the decree for ejectment which they have obtained.

[8] The most important contention urged by Mr. Rahman on behalf of the decree-holder-appellants is that because this decree was passed in April, 1944 and because the decree-holders were awarded compensation and mesne profits for a certain period, the tenancy will be deemed to have terminated before this Act came into force and hence the Act has no application in this case. The learned counsel relied on a Full Bench decision of this Court in Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 50 to which decision my learned brother was a party. One of the questions referred to the Full Bench was whether the definition of tenant appearing in the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947, or the Bihar Ordinance 2 of 1946, which it replaced, is retrospective in its operation and protects the defendant. This question was answered by my learned brother in the negative who expressed the opinion that the definition of the word 'tenant' in the Bihar Act 3 of 1947 or Bihar Ordinance 2 of 1946 is not retrospective in its operation. Meredith J. (as he then was) referred to this question in the following terms:

"In this question we are also asked to say whether the definition of 'tenant' protects the defendants in the circumstances of this case. I do not understand why we are asked to say whether it is retrospective, for it appears to me that, independently of whether it is retrospective or otherwise, it does protect the defendants if they can show that they came within its terms."

The learned Chief Justice observed as follows so far as this question was concerned:

"I must confess that I do not understand the purport of this question. Obviously the definition of 'tenant' in the Ordinance of 1946 and the Act of 1947 did not apply to the House-rent Control Order of 1942. Neither the Ordinance nor the Act purports to amend the definition of 'tenant' in the Order of 1942, either retrospectively or otherwise. Whether the definition in the Ordinance was a protection for the defendants from eviction otherwise than in accordance with S. 11 (2), while the Ordinance was in force, and whether the Act of 1947 similarly protects the defendants, must necessarily depend on whether the defendants are 'tenants', a matter which the Division Bench has neither decided nor referred to us."

We are in this case primarily concerned with the interpretation of S. 11 (1) of the Act and the point which we have to determine is whether a decree for ejectment passed before the Act came into force can be executed after the Act has come into force. It is certainly a general rule that when the law is altered during the pendency of an action the rights of the parties have to be decided according to the law as it stood when the action was begun unless the new statute shows a clear intention to vary such rights. So far as this particular statute is concerned a careful reading of the provisions of S. 11 (1) indicates that it applies to pending actions. In express terms it protects a tenant from eviction in execution of a decree and this part of the statute has to be given effect to even if the decree in execution by which eviction of the tenant is sought was passed before the Act came into force. The word 'tenant' has been defined in S. 2 (h) of the Act and it includes a person continuing in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour. The judgment-debtor is the person who has continued in possession after the termination of the tenancy in his favour and Meredith J. in his judgment in the case of Kishori Lal v. Debi Prasad, says that whether the definition of the word "tenant" is retrospective or otherwise it does protect the defendants if they can show that they come within its terms. Reading therefore the provisions of S. 11 of the Act along with the provisions contained in S. 2 (h) of the Act we see no reason to differ from the view taken by the Courts below that the judgment-debtor is protected from eviction.

The State of Bihar — Appellant v. Amir Hasan—Respondent.

Govt. Appeal No. 7 of 1950, D/- 29-11-1950.

(a) Explosive Substances Act (1908), S. 5—"Possession" & "Control"—Meaning of.

"Possession" under the section means conscious possession but it need not always be manual possession, that is, possession by physically touching the incriminating object. 'Control' is a somewhat wider concept than 'possession' but there again the control must be actual control & not merely constructive or notional control. [Para 11]

Anno. Explosive Substances Act, S. 5, N. 1.

(b) Explosive Substances Act (1908), S. 5—Onus of proof—Evidence Act (1872), S. 106.

It is for the prosecution to prove conscious possession & actual control of the incriminating articles with guilty knowledge. It is only when such possession & control is proved that onus changes & it is then for the accused to explain his possession & control. [Para 11]

Anno. Explosive Substances Act S. 5 N. 1; Evidence Act, S. 106 N. 9.

(c) Explosive Substances Act (1908), S. 5—Possession or control by more than one person.

It is possible for more than one person to be in conscious possession or actual control of an incriminating object, but whether they are in such possession or not must be inferred from the facts & circumstances proved. [Para 11]

Das J.—This is an appeal by the State of Bihar against an order of acquittal recorded by the learned Ses. J. of Bhagalpur in respect of one Amir Hasan, aged about thirty-two years, who was tried by the learned Ses. J. for an offence under S. 5, Explosive Substances Act. The assessors who aided the learned Ses. J. were of the opinion that the respondent (Amir Hasan) was guilty. The learned Ses. J. did not accept the opinion of the assessors & acquitted the respondent. Three women, namely, the mother of the respondent, his wife & the wife of another member of the family, were also on trial before the learned Ses. J. They were also acquitted. The appeal against the order of acquittal when presented for admission in this Court, was not pressed as against the women accused persons, & the appeal was admitted only in respect of the respondent Amir Hasan. It may also be stated that the respondent Amir Hasan had an elder brother Abdul Hasan, who was also committed to the Court of Session. He was suffering from pthisis, & died about a month before the trial began.

[2] The facts found & not disputed before us are these. On 7-5-1948, at about 6 a. m. there was a raid by a police party on several houses in village Maheshmunda within the jurisdiction of Colgong police station. One of these houses belonged to the two brothers Abul Hasan & Amir Hasan. The house was north of a village lane & faced east. It was built of mud & consisted of two storeys. There were two rooms on the ground floor, one towards the north & the other towards the south, both of which opened on a verandah towards the east. There was a staircase leading to the upper storey where there was a hall partitioned by a wall in the middle. This wall had an opening without any shutter or door plank. The search was conducted by an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police, Biseswar Nath Rai (P. W. 1), in the presence of a Magistrate, Jagdish Narayan Sinha (P. W. 8) & two search witnesses, Etwari Mandal (P. W. 2) & Iswer Bind (P. W. 3). The police party consisted of the Assistant Sub-Inspector & some other constables. These constables, it appears, surrounded the house at about 5 a. m. but remained outside when the search was actually made. One Imtiaz Hassain, a brother of the respondent, was present at the time of the search. The womenfolk were inside the house, but the respondent was absent. There was evidence which was accepted by the learned Ses. J, that the respondent was seen in the house on the evening previous to the search.

[2] The search party first went to the second storey. The northern room in the second storey was searched, but nothing was found. Then, the southern room in the second storey was searched & four country-made bombs placed between the top of the eastern wall of the room & the thatch were recovered. The bombs were live bombs & of the size of cocoanuts. The prosecution led evidence to show that the bombs were capable of causing injury to life on explosion. After searching the upper floor, the search party came down to the ground floor & went first to the northern room. The women of the family who were in the northern room, were asked to go into the southern room, & this they did. In the northern room on the ground floor two country made bombs of a similar character were found inside an earthern granary. The search party then went on to the verandah & asked the womenfolk, who were then in the southern room, to go again into the northern room. The women had veiled their faces, & the Assistant Sub Inspector gave evidence to the effect that he suspected that the women were carrying something under their Saris. The women, however, were allowed to go into the northern room, & then the southern room was searched. Nothing was found there except the uniform of a constable minus the belt & the number badge. After this, the Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police sent for a woman in order to search the person of the women of the family. One Mt. Reshmi (P. W. 5) was called for the purpose & she searched the womenfolk. But nothing was found on their person. The search party then again went into the northern room of the ground floor & recovered ten country-made bombs, five of the bombs being found between the western wall & a bag of grains & the other five from under a wooden box close to the wall. Thus, all told, sixteen country-made live bombs were recovered from the house, four from the southern portion of the upper room & twelve from the northern room of the ground floor.

[4] The prosecution led evidence to show that the house in question belonged to the two brothers Abul Hasan & Amir Hasan. There was evidence of one prosecution witness to the effect that Abul Hasan was the malik of the house, being the elder brother. There was also evidence which was accepted that both the brothers were seen in the house on the day previous to the search & also on several days before that. I have already referred to the evidence that Amir Hasan was seen in the house in the evening previous to the search.

[5] The fact of the recovery of sixteen country-made live bombs in the circumstances mentioned above has not been seriously disputed before us. The learned Ses. J. accepted this part of the prosecution case & negatived a suggestion made by the defence that the bombs might have been planted in the house. He gave his finding in the clearest terms "Accordingly, I hold that there was no possibility of the planting of the bombs". As to the women accused, the learned Sessions Judge was rather doubtful of that part of the prosecution case which seemed to suggest that the women had removed some of the bombs from one room to another under their saris. I need not say anything more about this part of the case, as the acquittal of the women accused is not in question before us. With regard to the two brothers, the learned Sessions Judge felt the difficulty which has been felt by many Courts when some incriminating object is recovered from a house which is in the possession or occupation of more than one person. The learned Sessions Judge considered some of the decisions bearing on this question, and relying very largely on the Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court in Emperor v. Santa Singh, 26 Lah. 137, he held that though there was a strong suspicion against the respondent, the prosecution had failed to bring home the charge against the respondent.

[6] The learned Government Advocate has contended before us (1) that the learned Sessions Judge has not correctly applied the principles laid down in the Lahore Full Bench decision, (2) that the facts and circumstances proved by the prosecution bring home the charge against the respondent, inasmuch as they prove that the respondent was in conscious, actual and effective control of, at least, four of the country-made bombs, and (3) that the learned Sessions Judge failed to consider a statement of the respondent made in his examination before the committing Magistrate to the effect that the southern portion of the upper flat, from where four of the bombs were recovered, was his.

[7] The crucial question for consideration in this case is if the prosecution has been able to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the respondent was in conscious possession or actual and effective control of the bombs, or at least some of them, recovered from the house, with the necessary guilty knowledge. The difficulty which has arisen in this case has been the subject of judicial consideration in several decisions relating to offences punishable under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, or S. 5, Explosive Substances Act. A summary of these decisions will be found in Emperor v. Wasant Waman, I. L. R. (1945) Bom. 302, though that decision itself related to a case under R. 39, Defence of India Rules. The learned Government Advocate has referred to two decisions relating to R. 39, Defence of India Rules,—one is the Bombay decision cited above and the other is the case of Anantanath v. Emperor, 22 Pat. 549. In my opinion, the decisions relating to R. 39, Defence of India Rules are not directly in point. Sub-r. (2) of R. 39, Defence of India Rules, was so worded as to throw the onus on the accused persons, when any document containing a prejudicial report etc., was found in premises in his occupation or under his control. The important point of difference between S. 5, Explosive Substances Act and sub-r. (2) of R. 39, Defence of India Rules is this: in the Defence of India Rules the occupation or control of the premises in which the prejudicial document is found shifts the onus; whereas in S. 5, Explosive Substances Act, conscious possession or actual control of the incriminating object itself must be proved before the accused can be called upon to explain such possession or control. For this reason, I do not think that the decisions relating to R. 39, Defence of India Rules are of any help in the present case.

[8] There is no dispute that the house from where the incriminating objects were found in this case belonged to the two brothers Abul Hasan and Amir Hasan. It is now well-settled that, though there is a difference between the two concepts denoted by the words 'possession' and 'control', possession and control for the purpose of S. 5, Explosive Substances Act, mean something more than mere constructive or legal possession and control. As has been rightly pointed out by Harries C. J., in Santa Singh's case, 26 Lah. 137:

"possession and control required to constitute offences under the Explosive Substances Act and Arms Act must mean conscious possession and actual control: a man must know of the existence of something before he can be said to control it or have it under his control;"

in other words, there must be mens rea or guilty knowledge before a person can be convicted of possession or control of explosive substances. I thing that the wording of S. 5, Explosive Substances Act, itself makes this clear. The section uses the word 'knowingly' in connection with possession and control; it further states:

"under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he is not making it or does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object."

These words make it perfectly clear that before the onus shifts, the prosecution must prove conscious possession or actual control with a guilty knowledge.

[9] On the question whether more than one person can be in conscious possession or actual control of an incriminating object the Lahore decision is equally emphatic. Harries C. J. stated as follows:

"I do not suggest that the recovery of an article in a house occupied by a number of persons is proof of joint possession but that fact coupled with other evidence might establish such joint possession. All I desire to point out is that exclusive possession or control of any particular person is not required under these sections. The possession or control might well be possession or control of two or more persons."

If I may say so with respect, this is the correct view. Section 5, Explosive Substances Act, does not require exclusive possession, as was observed in some previous decisions.

[10] On the question of presumption, it is now well-settled that in cases where incriminating articles are recovered from a place in the occupation or possession of more persons than one and it is not possible to fix the liability on any particular individual, a Court is not bound to hold that the said article was in possession or control of the head of the family. It is also clear that S. 106, Evidence Act, has no application unless and until the prosecution has proved conscious possession or actual control with guilty knowledge. These propositions laid down in the Lahore Full Bench decision have now been accepted and approved by a Division Bench of this Court. In Sahendra v. Emperor, 26 Pat. 46, it was pointed out that ordinarily S. 106, Evidence Act, would not apply to cases of this sort; but it would only apply in such circumstances as where an article is found in a house in circumstances in which all the members of the house must have been aware of its existence. In Bheka Ahir v. Emperor, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 236, it was pointed out that the duty lay on the prosecution to adduce some evidence from which the inference could properly be deduced that any particular member, or, for the matter of that, the head of the joint family was in possession in the sense of conscious possession of the corpus delicti. It was also observed:

"Like all other criminal trials, the burden lies entirely on the prosecution and all the time on the prosecution, to show the guilty knowledge in any particular individual or the head of the joint family."

These views were again approved in Mohan Lahiri v. The King, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 243.

[11] From a consideration of the aforesaid decisions the following propositions clearly emerge: (1) The prosecution must prove conscious possession or actual control of the incriminating objects, remembering at the same time that possession need not always be manual possession, that is, possession by physically touching the incriminating object. 'Control' is a somewhat wider concept than 'possession,' but there again the control must be actual control and not merely constructive or notional control. (2) The prosecution must prove mens rea or guilty knowledge. It is possible for more than one person to be in conscious possession or actual control of an incriminating object, but whether they are in such possession or not must be inferred from the facts and circumstances proved. (3) When the aforesaid two conditions are fulfilled, then the onus changes, and it would be for the person in such possession or control, as has been indicated above, to explain his possession or control.

[12] Let us now come back to the facts of this case, and see how far the tests laid down above have been fulfilled. With regard to four of the bombs, it seems to me that there is no doubt that the respondent was in conscious possession or actual control with a guilty knowledge. These bombs were recovered from the southern portion of the Upper flat. Though the house itself belonged to the two brothers, the respondent himself admitted that the southern portion of the upper flat was his: therefore, these four bombs were recovered from the portion which was the respondent's. Mr Safdar Imam appearing for the respondent, tried to show that the respondent was a constable who lived away from the village, and when he came to the house, he lived on the ground floor only. He drew our attention to the evidence of Iswar Bind (P. W. 3) who said "Amir Hassan lives outside the village as he is in police service." He also drew our attention to the fact that the uniform of a constable was recovered from the southern room of the ground floor. There is, however, good evidence in the record, which the learned Sessions Judge has accepted, that the respondent was discharged from the Police Department some years ago, and that he used to go about as a fakir and do other business (vide the evidence of Tejnarain Misra, P. W. 6). Mr. Safdar Imam tried to explain the statement of the respondent by making a distinction between 'living' and 'owning.' I am unable to accept that explanation of the statement of the respondent. That statement shows clearly enough that four of the bombs were recovered from a portion of the upper flat which was the respondent's portion. I have already referred to the evidence that the respondent was seen in the house in the evening previous to the search. There is also evidence that his elder brother was suffering from pthisis for some months before the occurrence, and died after he had been committed to the Court of Session. The learned Sessions Judge has opined that the elder brother, who was a tubercular patient, might have secreted the bombs. It seems to me most unlikely that a person, who is suffering from pthisis and is on the verge of death, will think of secreting country made-live bombs in the house. After giving my most anxious consideration to the facts and circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the only reasonable inference from the facts and circumstances proved in this case is that the respondent Amir Hasan, the younger brother, who was formerly in police service, had kept at least those four bombs which were found in his portion of the house; the circumstances further show that he must have secreted the bombs between the wall and the thatch for another than lawful object. There is no evidence that any of the women occupied that portion, nor is it likely that any of them would secrete the bombs in the way they were secreted between the thatch and the wall. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that any hypothesis of planting by an outsider must be excluded in view of the facts and circumstances of this case.

[13] For the reasons given above, I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of acquittal, convict the respondent of the offence under S. 5, Explosive Substances Act, and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for three years.

A. F. A. D. No. 80 of 1948, D/- 2 8-1951.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 13—"Claimed"—Claim whether to be made in presence and knowledge of person to be affected thereby — Documents showing land in suit as rent-free fakirana grant—Admissibility.

The Legislature by using the language in S. 13 intended the operation of this section to be very wide. The word "claimed" used in S. 13 is not used in a narrow sense. The claims need not necessarily be made in the presence and to the knowledge of the person to be affected thereby. A claim can very well be made in the absence and without the knowledge of the person to be affected. [Paras 8, 10]

In a suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of possession and in the alternative for assessment of fair and equitable rent, the defendant pleaded that the land in suit was an old rent-free fakirana grant, and produced two documents, namely, a patta of the year 1905 and a sale deed of the year 1922 in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant mentioning the suit land as a rent-free fakirana grant. The plaintiff contended as these documents were not inter partes, he had no concern with any of them and that they were not admissible in evidence.

Held, upon an interpretation of the language used in S. 13 that these documents were admissible in evidence. A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 543, Dissent.; A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 1 (FB). Not foll.; A. C. P. Sinha J. — The plaintiffs have filed this appeal. They had brought the suit for recovery of possession and in the alternative for assessment of fair and equitable rent. The suit land is situated in village Gobindpur which is a part of the town of Laheriasarai, and is comprised in survey plot No. 961, khata No. 247, having an area of 1 bigha 2 kathas 4 dhurs. Formerly, plaintiffs 1 to 6 who had an eight annas share, had instituted this suit, and the Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga had been impleaded as defendant second party. Later on, the said Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga was added as a plaintiff. The plaintiffs' case was that the aforesaid plot was parti up to the time of the last earthquake in 1934, but, after the earthquake, with the permission of the plaintiffs, the Government had built temporary sheds over a portion of the plot. When things became normal, the Government sold the materials of the temporary sheds on the suit land in their existing condition and they were purchased by the defendant first party. The plaintiffs asked defendant 1 to vacate the land and remove the materials, but, instead of doing so, he started making alterations in the structures and did not vacate. There was also a prayer for mesne profits from 1937 to 1944.

[2] Defendant 1 contested the suit mainly on two grounds (1) that the suit was barred by limitation, estoppel, waiver and acquiescence, and (2) that plot No. 961, the land in suit, besides other plots, were given as a rent-free fakirana grant to the ancestors of Akal Sah and others a long time ago by the then maliks. It is the second ground of defence with which we are concerned in this second appeal.

[3] The first Court came to the following findings: — (1) that several documents, namely, Exs. F. G. to G. 3 and L to L-14, which date from as far back as 1905, show that the predecessors-in-interest of the defendant dealt with the suit land, and the documents mentioned this land as a rent-free fakirana grant; (2) that there stands a substantial building which must have taken at least a year to complete and that its appearance and other evidence on record left no room for doubt that it had been constructed more than 20 years ago; (3) that Mr. T. A. Freston I. C. S., the then District Magistrate of Darbhanga, sought the permission of the defendant to build temporary huts on the suit land after the earthquake (exhibits E series); (4) that respectable witnesses were examined on behalf of the defendant to show that they resided in the house on the land in suit as tenants more than 12 years ago; and (5) that in the Collectorate partition of the tauzi, which took place in 1939, the Batwara Deputy Collector found the possession of the defendant over the suit land and recorded his possession over it and disallowed the objection of the plaintiff second party, namely, the Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga (Exhibit L). After having found the possession of the defendant over the suit land, the learned 3rd Additional Subordinate Judge held that the defendant had acquired an indefeasible right to remain in possession of the suit land and that the plaintiffs' claim for possession was barred by time, estoppel, waiver and acquiescence. In regard to the question whether the suit land was a fakirana rent-free grant, the learned Subordinate Judge found that the defendant claimed a rent free grant to the knowledge of the plaintiffs for the first time in the year 1939 during the Collectorate partition and that, therefore, the suit having been brought within 12 years of that date, the plaintiffs' claim for assessment of fair and equitable rent was not barred and, in that view of the matter, a fair and equitable rent was assessed at the rate of Rs. 5 per katha. It is to be mentioned that the document filed by the defendant did not mention the plot number as 961, the plot in suit, but they mentioned plot Nos. 957 and 958, and the plaintiffs contended that those documents did not relate to the land in suit. But it was found on a comparison of the boundaries mentioned in those documents with the boundaries of the land in suit that those documents did in fact relate to plot No. 961.

[4] Against the judgment and decree of the trial Court, the defendant preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Darbhanga and the plaintiffs filed a cross-objection with a prayer that the plaintiffs should be given a decree for ejectment against the defendant. The appeal and the cross-objection were heard by Mr. Umakanta Prasad Sinha, Additional District Judge of Darbhanga, and, after having decided the question of onus which lay heavy on the defendant, he came to the conclusion that the land in suit was an old rent-free fakirana grant. He also affirmed the judgment of the 1st Court to the effect that the documents filed by the defendant, namely, the patta (exhibit F) dated 14-8-1905, by Akal Sah and Juman Sah in favour of Abdul Hakim, and the sale deed (Exhibit G-2) by Akal Sah and Juman Sah in favour of Moqim and Sadiq, the sons of Abdul Hakim and the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant, dated 28-2-1922, related to the land in dispute, namely, plot No. 961. The learned Additional Judge also dealt with documents subsequent to the documents mentioned above by which Abdul Moqim had mortgaged portions of the land in suit with the house thereon and also certain other lands to several persons from 17-2-1925 to 20 4 1929. It was also found that Abdul Hakim, since the date of the patta in 1905, continued in possession of the land in suit in his own right as fakiranadar and that prior to that year it was in possession of the fakiranadars Akal Sah and Juman Sah. There was a further finding that the defendant was all along in possession of this land and that the plaintiffs were never in possession at least since 14-8-1905, and the defendant is a purchaser from the sons of Abdul Hakim by the sale deed of the year 1929. Upon his findings mentioned above, the learned Additional Judge held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an assessment of fair and equitable rent and, in that view of the matter, allowed the appeal, rejected the cross-objection and dismissed the suit with costs.

[5] Two second appeals were filed in this Court —one by the Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga and the other by the plaintiffs 1 to 6. The Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga, however, did not press his appeal (Second Appeal 127 of 1948) and, therefore, it was dismissed.

[6] The only point pressed in this second appeal is that the documents Exhibits F and G 2, namely, the patta of the year 1905 and the sale deed of the year 1922 in favour of the predecessor-in interest of the defendant, and other documents relied on by the Court below mentioning the suit land as a rent free fakirana grant, were not admissible in evidence and, therefore, the judgment of the Court below was vitiated and unsustainable in law because these documents were not inter partes and the plaintiffs had no concern with any of these documents.

[7] These documents were admitted into evidence without objection and in the lower appellate Court also no objection was taken to the admissibility of these documents by the plaintiffs. The finding of the Court below, however, to the effect that the land in suit is rent-free fakirana grant, being an inference of law from the facts found, and the question whether the documents are admissible in law both being questions of law, can be taken in second appeal.

[8] It has been urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that the documents in question are admissible in evidence under S. 13, Evidence Act. Section 13, Evidence Act, runs as follows:

"Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant :

(a) any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognised, asserted or denied, or which was in consistent with its existence. (b) particular instances in which the right or custom was claimed, recognised or exercised, or in which its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from."

The question is whether the right of the defendant claiming a rent-free fakirana grant in the land in suit was either claimed or asserted by any transaction within cl. (a) of the section or whether such right was exercised by the defendant within the meaning of cl. (b) of the section. In my view, the language used in the section is wide enough to cover the present case. There is no doubt in my mind that the deed of lease of the year 1905 and the sale-deed of the year 1922 were both transactions by which the rent-free fakirana grant was asserted by the executants of those documents in respect of the land in suit and they are therefore, relevant facts both within the meaning of cls. (a) and (b) of the section. The illustration to the section as given in the Evidence Act is clear enough to uphold the view I have taken. The lease and the sale were both on the footing that the lessor and the vendor were transferring their interest in the suit land which, according to them, was a rent free fakirana grant. Learned Counsel for the appellants has relied upon the case of this Court in Jyoti Prashad Singh v. Bharat Shah, 15 pat. 260. This is a judgment of Agarwala J. (as he then was) with whom Varma J. agreed, and relying upon a Bench decision of three Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Brojendra Kishore v. Mohim Chandra, 31 Cal. W. N. 32, their Lordships held that the word "claim" in the section indicated "that the right is asserted to the knowledge and in the presence of the person whose right will be affected by the establishment of the claim", and also relied upon the following quotation from the Calcutta case : "The mere assertion of a right in a document to which the person against whom the right is asserted is not a party and of which he knows nothing is not to claim the right '. In my judgment, the scope and object of S. 13, Evidence Act, have been unduly restricted by this judgment although, as I have said, the Legislature by using the language in the section intended the operation of this section to be very wide. Ordinarily, we would have been bound by the Division Bench decision of this Court, but I find that there are other previous Division Bench decisions of this Court which were not considered by Agarwala J. If there is a Division Bench decision in this Court which has not been considered by a subsequent Bench decision of the Court, then, in my view, the authority of the previous Bench decision is not shaken. I would, however, like to consider the Full Bench case in Brojendra Kishore v. Mohim Chandra, 31 Cal. W. N. 32 on which this Patna case is based and some other decisions of this Court and other Courts. The facts of this Calcutta case were that the plaintiff in that case had sued for assessment of fair rent for the land in suit in which, he alleged, the defendants had only an occupancy right, and the defence was that the land was held rent-free. In support of their case, the defendants produced in evidence a kebala executed in 1874 whereby one of their predecessors-in-interest had purported to sell the plaint lands with other lands alleging that the lands were his nishkar brahmattar. There was a difference of opinion between Cuming J. and Mukerjee J. who heard the appeal in the first instance, and there was a Letters Patent Appeal which was heard by three Judges. It appears that both the Courts below had held that this kebala was a benami document. Cuming J. made the following observation :

"The Court has found that the sale was a fictitious one. I have considerable doubts whether the execution of a benami document by which nothing really passes can be called a transaction. It is obviously a fictitious transaction and as such would not come within S. 13. I am of the opinion that the kebala Ex. A, is not admissible."

And Mukerji J. on this part of the case held as follows :

"Now, whatever may be the correct view as regards the admissibility of the kebala or of its recitals, I do not think it can be ever urged that the recitals contained therein can go in evidence under S. 13 in view of the fact that the transaction was held by the Munsif to be a benami one, and the Subordinate Judge has not dissented from that view .... A transaction contemplated by S. 13 is a genuine and bona fide transaction, but a benami transaction which is one not meant to be acted upon is a fictitious transaction and in the eye of law is no transaction at all. Such a transaction, in my opinion, cannot be let in as evidence in proof of a right or custom."

In my judgment it is obvious that in this case the observation of their Lordships in regard to the applicability of S. 13, Evidence Act, was no more than obiter because both the learned Judges had held that the kebala was a fictitious document and that, therefore, it did not amount to a transaction. I, therefore, do not feel bound by the weight of the decision in this Calcutta case. Even in that Court there is a great difference of opinion as appears from the case reported in Kiran Chandra v. Srinath Chakravarti, 31 Cal. W. N. 135. In this case, one of the documents was Ex. A, a hibanama, executed by the predecessors-in-interest of the defendant which described the land as barhmotter. Another document was Ex. B which was a sale certificate by which the defendants had purchased the land at the sale and there was a third document (Ex. C), the writ of delivery of possession. This appeal had also arisen out of a suit for ejectment and the defence was that it was a rent-free barhmotter. Dealing with the admissibility of these documents, Chakravarti and Panton JJ. made the following observation :

"As to the second point raised by the learned Vakil, as I have already stated, no objection as to the admissibility of those documents was raised in either of the Courts below. Nor was it raised in the written grounds of appeal before this Court. It is difficult to see on what ground their admissibility as evidence can be questioned. The first document is a piece of evidence which shows the dealing of the property by the descendants of the original grantee as rent-free brahmottar land ; ....."

There is a recent Calcutta case, decided by a single Judge, reported as Rasik Lal v. Prasanna Kumar, 60 Cal. L. Jour. 569. In this case also, it was held that the documents in question, which were the title deeds of the defendants and to which the other side was not a party, were admissible in evidence under S. 13, Evidence Act.

[9] Now, coming to the decisions of our own Court, I find that the earliest case cited before us was the case of Sabran Sheikh v. Odoy Mahto, 1 Pat. 375 decided by their Lordships Coutts and Ross JJ. The head-note runs as follows:

"In a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed the land in dispute as their man land and the defendant claimed it as this jote, the plaintiffs produced an ekrarnama addressed by a third person to an ancestor of the plaintiffs in which the land in suit was described as man land. Held, that the ekrarnama was admissible under both clauses (a) and (b) of S. 13, Evidence Act, 1872".

This Bench decision was not placed before their Lordships who decided the case reported in 15 Pat. 260. There is another Division Bench case of this Court Keshava Prasad v. Brahmdev Rai, 18 Pat. 45. The question in this case was whether the recitals in a sale deed to which the plaintiff landlord was not a party were admissible under S. 13, Evidence Act. This was a case between landlord and tenant and involved the consideration of the provisions of S. 18A, Bengal (Bihar) Tenancy Act, 1885, which contained the following:

"Nothing contained in any instrument of transfer to which the landlord is not a party shall be evidence against the landlord of the permanence, amount or fixity of rent, area, transferability or any incident of any tenure or holding referred to in such instrument".

It was contended that under the provisions of S. 18A, Bengal Tenancy Act, the recitals in the sale-deed to which the landlord was not a party were not admissible in evidence. This contention was repelled and their Lordships held as follows:

'Section 18A is a rule of evidence which must necessarily apply to all proceedings taken after it came into force and it is applicable to recitals in a sale-deed of a prior date so that they are not evidence of title and cannot be used to prove a grant; it is, however, permissible to use the recitals not as evidence of a grant but to show the nature of the title that was being asserted and as transactions relevant under S. 13, Evidence Act, 1872, by which a right was claimed or asserted on some past occasion", and reliance for this proposition was placed upon a Calcutta case in Banwari Lal Singh v. Dwarkanath Missir, 29 Cal. L. Jour 577. It was further observed that in Bengal S. 18A had been amended and the following words were inserted in S. 18A, Bengal Tenancy Act, for Bengal: "notwithstanding anything contained in S. 13, Evidence Act". This decision again was not considered in the 15 Patna 260 case. Besides these Bench decisions, there were other decisions by single Judges of this Court, namely, Kameshwar Singh v. Ramji Misser, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat 685 by Dhavle J. and Thakur Kurmi v. Lalji Misser, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 81 by Mohammad Noor J. two eminent Judges of this Court who had taken the view that documents similar to the documents in the present case were admissible in evidence under S. 13, Evidence Act. There is one other decision of this Court in Ram Kishun v. Niranjan Pande, 14 Pat. L. Tim. 575 by Wort and James JJ. in which it is held that the right mentioned in S. 13 refers only to an incorporeal right. In this case, again the earlier decisions of this Court were not referred to.

[10] The documents to which exception has been taken by learned counsel on behalf of the appellants are no doubt documents to which the plaintiffs were no parties. But upon an interpretation of the language of the section and upon consideration of the authorities of this Court as also of the Calcutta High Court, I must hold that these documents were admissible in evidence and the Courts below were right in admitting those documents into evidence. The Calcutta case on which the 15 Pat. 260 case was based, in my judgment, takes a very narrow view of the meaning of the word "claimed" used in S. 13, Evidence Act. The claim need not necessarily be made in the presence and to the knowledge of the person to be affected thereby.

A claim can very well be made in the absence and without the knowledge of the person to be affected. That a claim can be made in the absence and without knowledge of the person to be affected thereby is well illustrated by the ceremonies connected with the right of pre-emption. The first ceremony is called 'talab-i-mua-thibat' or assertion or claim immediately on getting information of sale—the second is called 'tala-i ishhad' or confirmatory demand made on the land in presence of witnesses. It is clear, therefore, that 'claim' need not be made in presence of the persons affected thereby or in his presence.

[11] These documents in question are again documents of title of the defendant or his predecessors-in-interest, and I see no reason why these documents should not be admitted into evidence.

[12] No other point was urged before us, and, having rejected the only contention made in this Court on behalf of the appellants, I must hold that there is no merit in this appeal and it must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

[13] Das J.—I agree that the recital in the documents in question was admissible in evidence under s. 13, Evidence Act. The finding that the land in dispute was rent free is an inference of law from the facts proved, and can be agitated in second appeal. But in view of the facts proved in the case, I think that the Court of appeal below correctly drew the inference.

(a) Civil P. C (1908), O. 21, R. 15—Decree in favour of members of Joint Hindu family—Execution.

Rule 15 of O. 21 is an enabling one. It is not absolutely incumbent on the executing decree holder to state in so many words in the execution petition itself that the decree is being executed for the benefit of all the decree-holders. If it appears to the Court that the decree is, as a matter of fact, being executed for the benefit of all the decree-holders, it will allow the execution to proceed, even though such a statement does not find place in the application for execution. In the very nature of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family every transaction is, prima facie, for the benefit of all the coparcenary and all the members of the joint family, and, if, since after the passing of the decree, any one of the members shown as decree-holders has died, the other members automatically step into his shoes, and the decree executed by one of the members of the family must inure to the benefit of all. Where a joint Hindu Mitakshara family is concerned as decree holders, the application for execution by the leading members of the family cannot be said to be invalid, simply because it has not been stated in so many words that it is for the benefit of all the members of the joint family. Whatever rights a Hindu widow has in the decree under execution that right has got to be conserved for her benefit. A. I. R. (6) 1919 Pat. 286 and A. I. R. (b) Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (1937), S. 3 (2), (3)—Effect of.

The effect of the Act is to interpose the interest of Hindu Women's estate in a joint Hindu coparcenary, that is to say, so far as the coparceners themselves are concerned, the coparcenary continues as before the death of one of the coparceners: there is no disruption of the joint family. Hence, those members still continue to enjoy as amongst themselves the benefits of survivorship. But, so far as the widow of the deceased coparcener is concerned, she acquires in the interest of her deceased husband in the coparcenary property a Hindu women's estate, which she can get separated from the rest of the family by a suit for partition. B. P. Sinha J.—This is a judgment-debtors' appeal from the decision and order, dated 18th January 1949 based by the Subordinate Judge of Patna overruling their objections to the execution of the decree, under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[2] It appears that the respondents' family, which, admittedly, continues to be a joint Hindu Mitakshara family, obtained a decree on the foot of a simple mortgage bond. The preliminary decree was made final on 24th August 1938. The decree had been passed in favour of five persons, namely, (1) Nem Narain Singh, the karta of the family, (2) Haribar Singh, son of Nem Narain's brother, Jangi, (3) Rang Bahadur alias Madni, (4) Rameshwar, both sons of Nem Narain Singh, and (5) Nageshwar alias Rajniti, son of Haribar aforesaid. It appears that Rang Bahadur alias Medni aforesaid died sometime in 1939, leaving him surviving a widow and the other members aforesaid. By a petition, dated 16th September 1939, the Court was apprised of the fact that Medni, one of the decree-holders, was dead. That was done on the 22nd of August, 1945. The present execution case was instituted on the 1st February 1947, by Nem Narain Singh for himself and as guardian of his grand-nephew, Nageshwar, as also by Haribar and Rameshwar. Nem Narain himself died in July 1947. Nageshwar attained majority during the pendency of the execution proceedings.

[3] An objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. was filed by the judgment-debtors on the grounds (1) that Nem Narain Singh and Rang Bahadur alias Medni, two of the decree-holders died leaving behind them their respective widows, who became joint decree-holders along with the other members of the family, and that, in their absence, the decree could not be executed; (2) that, the preliminary decree having been amended, unless the final decree also was accordingly amended, the execution was not maintainable; and (3) that the valuation of the properties should be revised, as the last valuation was made as long back as 1940. These objections were overruled by the Court below. Hence this appeal.

[4] Before us, only one point has been pressed in support of the appeal, namely, that, the widows of Nem Narain Singh and Rang Bahadur Singh alias Medni not having been made parties to the execution proceedings, and the terms of R. 15 of O. 21 of the Code not having been complied with, the execution was not maintainable. So far as Nem Narain is concerned, he died after the filing of the execution petition, and his widow could not have been made a party to the proceedings at the time the execution petition was filed. But the position is different so far as the widow of Rang Bahadur is concerned. Rang Bahadur died in 1939, during the pendency of the first execution case. In the present execution case, the decree-holders filed the execution petition on behalf of the surviving co-parceners under the impression that it was not necessary to implead the widow of the deceased Medni. On behalf of the judgment-debtors, it has been contended vehemently that, under the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (XVIII [18] of 1937) as amended by Act XI [11] of 1938, the widow of the deceased decree-holder should have been impleaded as a party to the execution proceedings. It was also contended that the application, not being in terms of R. 15 of O. 21, was not maintainable.

[5] The facts of this case are not disputed on either side. It is an admitted fact that Medni died in 1939, leaving him surviving only his widow. It is also not disputed that the family still continues to be a joint Hindu Mitakshara family. Hence, in such a family, it is always open to the leading member as the karta of the family to represent the whole family in all transactions in Court or out of Court. But it was contended on behalf of the appellants that, though it was open to the mortgagees to sue through the karta of the joint family for the enforcement of the mortgage bond, as a matter of fact, all the male members of the family, that is to say, all the coparceners, joined in bringing the suit. Hence, it was urged, the suit was not by the karta alone in his representative capacity. Under the provisions of R. 15, any one of the several joint decree-holders may apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of all the decree-holders, including the survivors and the legal representatives of a deceased decree-holder, if any. Rule 11 of O. 21 of the Code has enumerated the details which have got to be stated in the petition for execution, and Rr. 12, 13 and 14 of O. 21 have also laid down the details to be filled in as regards the description of the property to be proceeded against in execution of a decree. Rule 15 of O. 21 is an enabling one. Ordinarily, all the persons shown in the decree as decree-holders would be entitled to execute the decree. But R. 15 has made it possible for one of the decree-holders to execute the whole decree, unless the decree itself contains any provisions to the contrary. The provisions of R. 15 apply to all cases where a decree has been passed in favour of more persons than one as joint decree-holders. If the decree itself indicates that, though a number of persons figure as decree-holders, their interests are clearly defined as to shares or as to amounts out of the total amount decreed, the decree may not be executed by any one of them as regards the whole, because it may be several decrees contained in one document. If there are several decree-holders, who have obtained a joint decree, they may be members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family or they may be complete strangers to each other. In the latter case, it will be incumbent upon any one of the decree-holders clearly to state in the execution petition that he is executing the decree in its entirety for the benefit of all the other decree-holders or for the benefit of the survivors and legal representatives of such of them as have died since after the passing of the decree. But, in the case of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family, though it may be desirable expressly to state that the decree was being executed for the benefit of all the others, it is not absolutely necessary that that should be so stated in the petition itself. As I read R. 15, it does not make it obligatory upon one of the decree-holders executing the entire decree to state in so many words in the execution petition that the decree is being executed for the benefit of all of them, because, in the very nature of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family, every transaction is, prima facie, for the benefit of all the coparcenary and all the members of the joint family, and, if, since after the passing of the decree, any one of the members shown as decree-holders has died, the other members automatically step into his shoes, and the decree executed by one of the members of the family must inure to the benefit of all. Rule 17 of O. 21 insists upon the requirements of Rr. 11 to 14 being complied with, and empowers the Court to reject the application for execution, if, upon opportunity being given to the applicant, the defects, if any, are not removed within the time allowed. Rule 17 does not speak of any particulars required by R. 15 to be necessarily incorporated in the application for execution. Hence, in my opinion, if the particulars required by Rr. 11 to 14 of O. 21 of the Code have been incorporated in the petition, it becomes an application in accordance with law. The provisions of R. 15 are meant to safeguard the interests of the decree-holders as also to ensure that the judgment-debtor, on making payment of the decretal sum, gets a full and valid discharge. Hence, it is for the Court, in each case, to satisfy itself that, where the decree has been, on the face of it, passed in favour of more than one person, it is being executed for the benefit of all of them. In order to do that, the Court has been empowered to make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application for execution. Hence, in my opinion, it is not absolutely incumbent on the executing decree-holder to state in so many words in the execution petition itself that the decree is being executed for the benefit of all the decree-holders. If it appears to the Court that the decree is, as a matter of fact, being executed for the benefit of all the decree-holders, it will allow the execution to proceed, even though such a statement does not find place in the application for execution. Ordinarily, of course, such a statement ought to find place in the execution petition itself, so that the matter is placed beyond all controversy. But the absence of such a statement from the execution petition does not necessarily entail the result that the application for execution becomes contrary to law. On first principles, therefore, and on an examination of the relevant provisions of the Code, it does not appear to me that the application for execution in the present case is not in accordance with law. Certainly, it is for the Court to lay down such conditions as would ensure the protection of the interests of such of the decree-holders as have not joined in the application for execution. In the present case, we have been assured by counsel for the decree-holders that they did not implead the widows of the deceased decree-holders aforesaid under the mistaken legal advice that those ladies, not being coparceners, need not be shown as decree-holders in the application for execution. On behalf of the appellants, great reliance was placed upon the Division Bench ruling of this Court in the case of A. J. Meik v. Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd, 4 Pat. L. Jour. 575 which lays down that a decree in favour of two persons jointly cannot be executed by one of them in respect of what he considers to be his share of the decree; nor can the whole decree be executed by him, unless he applies for execution on behalf of all the decree-holders or for the benefit of them all. That was not a case of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family. The decree-holders in that case were the Midnapur Zamindari Company and Mr. Mathesa; but only the Midnapur Zamindari Company applied for the execution of the decree, without stating that it was for the benefit of both the decree-holders. On a perusal of the execution petition in that case, their Lordships held that it was neither in substance nor in form an application within the terms of R. 15 of O. 21 of the Code. Naturally, therefore, they held the execution to be incompetent. But, in the present case, in the very nature of things, so long as the family has not disrupted, the application for execution must be deemed to be for the benefit of all the members of the joint family. A joint Hindu Mitakshara family is in the nature of a corporation, which owns all the property of the family as one body, and, so long as there has been no partition, no individual member can say that he has a particular share in the property. Each member's proprietary interest extends over the whole property. Hence, any dealing by any member of the family, provided he is authorised to do so, is a dealing in respect of the entire property. In the present case, the application for execution is in respect of the entire decree and on the assumption that it is for the benefit of all the decree-holders. Hence, in the circumstances of the present case, where a joint Hindu Mitakshara family is concerned as decree-holders, the application for execution by the leading members of the family cannot be said to be invalid, simply because it has not been stated in so many words that it is for the benefit of all the members of the joint family. The decision of another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mt. Nasiban v. Surendranath, 24 Pat. 485 relied upon on behalf of the appellants is also not clear on the question whether the decree-holders were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family. Hence, that decision is also equally distinguishable from the facts of the present case.

[6] It was further argued on behalf of the appellants that, as a result of the amendment of Hindu law by the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, the widow of Rang Bahadur acquired an interest distinct and separate from that of the coparcenary on the death of her husband. Hence, it was argued, the widow was a necessary party to the execution proceedings and her absence from the proceedings was fatal to the execution case. According to the provisions of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 3 of that Act, the widow of Rang Bahadur had the same interest in the decree as he himself had. But the nature of that interest is the limited interest known as a woman's estate. She has also been given the right to claim partition equally with a male member of the family. As I apprehend the effect of the Act, it amounts to interposing the interest of Hindu Women's estate in a joint Hindu coparcenary, that is to say, so far as the coparceners themselves are concerned, the coparcenary continues as before the death of one of the coparceners; there is no disruption of the joint family. Hence, those members still continue to enjoy as amongst themselves the benefits of survivorship. But, so far as the widow of deceased coparcener is concerned, she acquires in the interest of her deceased husband in the coparcenary property a Hindu woman's estate, which she can get separated from the rest of the family by a suit for partition.

[7] It was argued on behalf of the respondents decree-holders that the interest of such a Hindu widow is only an inchoate right which ripens into property only after she has chosen to get a partition effected, and that, so long as she does not choose to enforce this statutory right of partition, her rights are the same as before, namely of maintenance out of the joint family property. But it is not necessary to discuss this aspect of the question, because we are not called upon in this case to determine exactly as to what is the extent of the rights conferred by the Act upon the widow of Rang Bahadur. Whatever rights she has in the decree under execution, that right has got to be conserved for her benefit. In this view of the matter, in my opinion, it is not necessary to discuss a number of rulings which have been placed before us by Mr. Mahabir Prasad, appearing on behalf of the decree-holders.

[8] In this Court, the widow of Rang Bahadur has filed an affidavit to the effect that the present execution is for her benefit also, and that her interests are safe in the hands of the applicants for execution. Whatever the interest of the widow concerned may be in the decree, that interest can be safeguarded by providing that the money realised by the sale of the mortgaged properties shall not be made over to the applicants without the consent of the widow concerned, that is to say, if the widow of Rang Bahadur alias Medni makes an application to the executing Court to the effect that the money may be made over to the karta of the family, or to any particular member of the family, only then the decree would be deemed to be satisfied, and the judgment-debtors completely discharged from their liability.

[9] A further question appears to have been raised that, the final decree not having been amended in accordance with the preliminary decree, which was amended at the instance of the judgment-debtors by an order of this Court, the final decree was not capable of execution. But the judgment-debtors themselves should have got the final decree amended, if they were so interested. At any rate, the preliminary decree, having been amended, the final decree also must be deemed to have been amended accordingly, and the present execution shall not proceed in respect of any amount in excess of the correct amount determined in accordance with the amended preliminary decree. That will, in my opinion, protect the interest of the judgment-debtors.

[10] For the reasons aforesaid, and subject to the directions given above, the appeal is dismissed but, in the circumstances, without costs.
